Such is Rossini, the sublime miser! Seek elsewhere for the secret of such acts of generosity, without reckoning those he conceals from us, for he never thinks of ostentation. When, for instance, he is asked why certain external portions of his new habitation are completely sacrificed, he answers, in terms more energetic than it would do to write, that he did not build the house for the cockneys who might pass. Yet, while he neglects this striking part of a dwelling to which all Paris perform pilgrimages, we find him summoning, at a great expense, painters like MM. Samogia and Besteghi, from Bologna, to recall to his heart and eyes the internal hangings and decorations in the modern Italian style. As for the subjects of these paintings, what is the first thing we remark? Mozart being complimented in the box of the Emperor of Austria, at the Opera House in Vienna, on the night of the first performance of Don Juan. In another place, we have, as a pendant, Palestrina playing psalms to Pope Marcel, surrounded by his cardinals. Scattered about will be the portraits of Cimarosa, Haydn, Boïeldieu, &c.

Rossini might have found twenty architects eager to build him a palace; he preferred applying to a friend, who, without any pretention, will erect what the master terms his little country-house, redolent of the perfumes of Italy and the East.

M. Doussault, who has given up painting for architecture, felt what Rossini wanted: Florence without leaving Paris, and Paris villegiature. He has, therefore, given him balconies and attics, and sculptured models of torchieri with large rings, to which were fastened, in the old Florentine palaces, the hackneys and the palfreys of the guests and visitors. Being, too, a lover of colour, he thought that enamel and crockery ware, with their unchanging tints, might, nay even ought to, find a place on the facade of the house built for the musician of melody, the master-colourist, par excellence. This is a protestation against the systematic rejection of all painting in our architecture.

With regard to colour, does not the gardener's lodge at the entrance give us an exact idea of the least vulgar specimens of Oriental art, such as, with a few variations, is found in Wallachia and Moldavia, whence M. Doussault brought home the most poetic sketches?

But with all this talking about M. Doussault, we have strayed far away from our subject: we were discussing the Gallicized Semiramide, and the only official act of Rossini's which preceded and followed Méry's translation. As we have seen, Rossini gave Carafa every latitude in all that concerned the arrangement of the music, and his confidence was equally unlimited with regard to Méry's verses. Now the poet has translated so melodiously that the hearer might fancy he was listening to Italian, while the musician so well understood his mission as to respect the work in its slightest details.

But there was something that neither Méry, Carafa, M. Alphonse Royer, nor any of his friends could do, and that was to prevail on the celebrated master to go to a single rehearsal, far less to the performance. Nay, the Sunday before the first performance, Rossini introduced Carafa to all his friends as the author of Sémiramis, and reproached him with not being sufficiently excited on the eve of a battle.

Rossini would not even hear the Sisters Marchisio, either before or at the performance. At present, things are no longer the same; M. Alphonse Royer has resolved to give him this surprise in his villa at Passy; the author of Semiramide will be touched by the attention, and grateful for it. He is, indeed, the man of genius, who has bid the theatre farewell, and will in no way infringe a supreme decision, of which God alone possesses the secret.

Speaking of Semiramide, for he does not avoid the subject in conversation, Rossini informed us that he composed it in one month at Venice, adding that, in order to obtain the stipulated price, five thousand francs, for all his rights of representation and publication, he was engaged for six months in the most active correspondence.

This was the last work composed in Italy by Rossini. Up to that period his operas had not brought him in more than five hundred or a thousand francs each. Il Barbière was written and rehearsed in thirteen days for the modest pittance of five hundred francs! "It is true," said Rossini, "it is light music."

Rossini now came to Paris, and, during the same summer, bestowed on us two scores, that of Le Comte Ory and that of Guillaume Tell! Then, alas, the sublime idler abandoned himself to repose, even refusing while alive to witness the immortality of his works.

J. L. Heugel.

Modena.—The last Minister of Public Instruction, having been informed that there existed in the palatinate library of the capital of the duchy a collection of music of the 15th and 16th centuries, abandoned to the mice and worms, and that there was another collection, equally precious, belonging to the 17th century, in the National Palace, ordered the two collections to be united. Signor Angelo Catelani, maître-de-chapelle at the cathedral, and assistant conservator at the Library, a gentleman deeply versed in musical bibliography and literature, has been charged by Government with the task of making out a catalogue of these musical works. Among them are numerous productions of Stradella's, some of which are not known. The catalogue, enriched with biographical, bibliographical, and historical notes, is to be published.

THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

At a Meeting of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival Committee, held at Mr. Kerrison's house, Norwich, on Friday, the 27th day of July, 1860 (the Right Hon. the Earl of Albemarle in the Chair), the Right Hon. and Rev. the Lord Bayning, F. W. Irby, Esq., Dr. Copeman, Chairman of the Sub-Committee, F. J. Blake, Esq., Treasurer, the Rev. Precentor Symonds, F. D. Eaton, Esq., C. E. Tuck, Esq., J. B. Morgan, Esq., &c., &c., being present—the following Report from the Sub-Committee was read:—

My Lords and Gentlemen,—In conformity with the powers granted us by the last General Committee on the 29th of March, we have carried out to the best of our judgment and ability the following arrangements:—

1. A material alteration is being made in the organ to render it more suitable as an accompanying instrument, the expense of which will be shared equally by the city and the festival committees. The orchestra has also been altered so as to afford more room for the several performers, and at the same time to present a better appearance in the hall; and the conductor, as far as he can judge by the description sent him by our chairman, has expressed himself highly delighted with the alteration.

2. We have agreed with Mr. Gilbert to fit up the hall again, he having on the last occasion performed the work safely and well, the cost price amounting to £200.

3. We have also arranged with the various printers, their individual shares of printing the books and bills of the performances, and appointed a committee to superintend the arrangement for the ball. Mr. Weippert is engaged to lead the ball band, and an influential member of our sub-committee has strongly advised that, although we are not to have a fancy dress ball this year, gentlemen entitled to wear uniform should appear in it at the ball.

4. At our last meeting a discussion took place as to the propriety of having a portion of the side galleries unreserved for the evening performances, and the prices of admission reduced to 7s. 6d. On a division it was resolved by a majority, that it be a recommendation to the general committee, that five rows of seats in the side galleries (those nearest the wall) be unreserved, and the admission 7s. 6d. for the evening concerts only.

5. At your last meeting, in March, Miss Palmer, who had given complete satisfaction at the Bradford and Leeds festivals, especially at Leeds, where, it is stated, "she took, at very short notice, the contralto music of Elijah &c." was engaged; and an attraction to our evening concerts was secured, which we believe will give pleasure and instruction to many admirers of the instrument. We allude to the engagement of Miss Arabella Goddard, the celebrated pianiste, who will play a solo, a duet with our conductor on two pianos, and two concerted pieces, with instrumental accompaniments.

6. With respect to the Italian vocalists, we trust no disappointment will be felt by the public when we inform you that we have engaged Mad. Borghi-Mamo and Signor Belletti, and when it is considered that our evening concerts will be of a highly diversified character, consisting in part of cantatas such as "The May Queen," "Undine," &c., and "Armida," in which English singers are absolutely required, we feel that we have neither funds nor space in our hall to enable us to compete successfully with the Italian Operas in London, but with our magnificent band, our varied programme, and the excellence of the singers, both English and foreign, whose services we shall command at our approaching festival, we have no hesitation in saying that as far as concerts are concerned not even in London are we likely to be surpassed. In conclusion we must refer to another event which, to many of us, is a subject of regret. In several past festivals Mr. Hausmann has occupied the important post of principal violoncello, and had signed his engagement for the next, in the same capacity. Soon after this he hurried over to Hanover, on account of illness, and died at his father's house. Signor Piatti has accepted an engagement to supply his place, a circumstance which will no doubt be hailed with satisfaction, on account of the great eminence of this talented performer as a solo violoncellist. But when we remember the deep knowledge, as a musician, possessed by Hausmann, the strength and unerring certainty of his orchestral playing, the earnest desire he always exhibited to keep up a high tone of respectability and conduct in his profession, to say nothing of his love for Norwich, and the many friendships he made amongst us, we cannot but lament that we shall see him here no more. My lords and gentlemen, we must now again request a renewal of the confidence you have hitherto reposed in us, in the shape of a resolution empowering us to make such arrangements as we may deem expedient previous to the approaching festival.

(Signed) Edward Copeman, M.D., Chairman.

The Report having been received and adopted, on the motion of Lord Bayning, seconded by Mr. Irby, it was unanimously resolved that the Sub-Committee of Management be empowered to make such arrangements and engagements as they may think expedient previous to the approaching Festival.

Resolved,—"That M. Molique be invited to the Festival to conduct his new Oratorio, Abraham."

Thanks having been voted to the noble Chairman, the meeting separated.

BEETHOVEN.

From Dwight's Journal of Music.

In July, 1805, Cherubini arrived with his wife in Vienna, in order to write for the theatre an der Wien a new opera, Fániska, which was performed for the first time in February, 1806. The Cherubinis were of course well received by Beethoven, who held the composer of the Water-Carrier in great esteem, which was never very warmly reciprocated, and which led some people to the strange assertion that Beethoven, in his opera Fidelio, had taken the Italian's music for a model. It was in November, 1805, that the last-named opera made its appearance. The circumstances were not favourable. Although the female parts were well received, the male ones were so much the worse, the tenor having no voice, and the basso a very rough one, and no method. Besides, the nobility had left their residences, and among the masses a fear of the French soldiery prevailed, so that the audience at the performance of Fidelio consisted mostly of French officers. The opera was given three nights in succession, and the performance resumed only in March, 1806, under the title Leonore, and with some changes, as, for instance, the contraction into two instead of the former three acts; also the introduction of a new aria by Pizarro in C, because the singer of this part had resolutely refused to sing the old one in B flat. Further, a duo in C, between Leonore and Marcelline, with obbligato violin and violoncello accompaniment, as well as a comic trio between Rocco, Marcelline, and Jacquino were left out. Once more, on April 10, it was given, and then left to the dust in the library of the theatre, where it remained until 1814, when it was again performed for the benefit of three subordinate officials at the Imperial Opera-House. At this time, at Beethoven's own instigation, several alterations had been made. We quote his own words, written to Friedrich Treitschke, artistical manager of the theatre: "The history of this opera is the most troublesome in the world. With most of it I am dissatisfied, and there is hardly a piece where I have not made attempts to lessen somewhat that dissatisfaction."

The performance was to take place May 23d; on the day before was to be the chief rehearsal, but the new overture in E was not yet written. The orchestra was ordered to rehearse this overture on the morning of the performance. Beethoven did not arrive. After a long delay, Treitschke took a carriage to fetch him, but he found him still in bed, in a profound sleep. At his side was a goblet with wine and biscuit in it; the sheets of the overture were strewn over the bed and on the floor. A candle, burnt out, showed that he had been at work till late in the night. The impossibility of finishing the work was at once settled, and instead of the new overture, the one to Prometheus was played.

In the evening Beethoven conducted, with conductor Umlant behind his back, to make right what the master's inability to hear made wrong. The applause was great, and increased with every performance. The seventh, on July 18th, was given for the benefit of Beethoven himself. It was on this occasion that Rocco's air, "Gold is a fine thing," was performed for the first time, and the great aria of Leonore in E, with the three horns obbligato, appeared in an altered state, in which it has since remained.

It must be mentioned here, that the artists engaged to sing in this opera at that time performed their task admirably. Mad. Milder Hauptmann, one of the greatest dramatic singers Germany ever had, sang Leonore; Michael Vogel, Pizarro; and Weinmuller,

Rocco. Even the Italian Radochi, whose German was still worse than Vienna German generally is, in the tenor part of Florestan was entirely acceptable in voice, method, and figure. Unfortunately, soon after the successful resuming of Fidelio, Mad. Milder Hauptmann left Vienna in consequence of an engagement for life at the Royal Opera in Berlin, and the idea of giving the opera to any satisfaction became impracticable. It was at least eight years before it could be again performed. It may be just as well to mention here a remark in Beethoven's own handwriting, which was found amongst his papers: "The opera Fidelio, written anew, and improved in 1814, from March till May 15th."

THEODORE HAGEN.

Marriage.

On the 2d inst., at the parish church, St. Marylebone, by the Rev. George Eveyard, GEORGE WILLIAM, eldest son of GEORGE HAMMOND, Esq., of Portland-place, Southampton, to ADELAIDE, second daughter of W. H. HOLMES, Esq., of Beaumont Street, Marylebone, London.

Death.

On the 8th inst., Signor CIOFFI, the celebrated trombone player, after a protracted illness.

ERRATUM.—In the second leading article of last week's impression, for Jean Nepornall Hummel, read Jean Nepomuk Hummel.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1860.

A GERMAN work has recently been published, defining the position of music among the arts, its influence on society, and the thoughts and ideas of which it may and should be made the medium of expression. In this rhapsodical treatise, the musical composer is required to be an Admirable Crichton in respect of the profundity and extent of his acquirements. The political and philosophical history of the past is to be at his fingers' ends; the great social problems, the innate political tendencies which agitate the present, are to be probed and explored with keen research and undaunted application. Science is to be wooed, for all the treasures she has to lavish on the actual age, and for an insight of the wonders she has in reserve for the future. And when he has succeeded in converting himself thus into a walking encyclopædia, and an animated Zadkiel's Almanack, he is to pour forth this indigesta moles of lore, scientific, philosophic, politic, transcendental, abysmal, prophetic, neologic, translated into strains of celestial harmony that shall regenerate the world, and set it quarrying, sawing, cutting and fashioning—as to the music of Apollo's lyre—the stones wherewith to build the New Jerusalem. Music thus studied and thus interpreted, is henceforth to settle all our affairs, and direct all our proceedings. A running accompaniment of philosophical airs and argumentative harmonies supplied by our Sterndale Bennetts, Macfarrens, Balfes, Smarts, Benedicts, Loders, Wallaces, and Glovers, is to stand in the place of histories, pamphlets, treatises, leading articles, &c. In such a condition of things, Mr. Costa might aspire to be Prime Minister of England (a post in which he would, no doubt, feel himself quite at home), and the Parliamentary Session open with a Queen's Speech, expressed in a grand symphony executed by the Cabinet Ministers. As thus: First Lord of the Treasury, Primo Violino; Secretary for Home Affairs, Bassoon; Ditto for Foreign Affairs, French Horn or German Flute (according to circumstances); Secretary-at-War, Trumpet; Admiralty, Triangles; Chancellor of the Exchequer, Grosse-caisse; Board of Trade, Double-bass; India Board, Tam-Tam; Lord Chancellor, Scotch Bagpipe; Poor Law Board, Bones. Indeed, there is no reason why the debates in Parliament should not subsequently be managed after the fashion of an oratorio, with massive double-choruses to represent the Ministerial side and Opposition, chiming in between the solos of the principal orators.

We may be thought, in this exposition, to have extended the views of the German æstheticist somewhat beyond their natural consequences; but it is difficult to say where a man's pretensions will end who has once neglected the wholesome rule—ne sutor ultra crepidam, and is determined to apply his professional "leather" to the satisfaction of every necessity, and the performance of every function of life. We may take it for granted that those who would invest music with such universal attributes are themselves no musicians, either in heart or intelligence, and are, in fact, as much the enemies of the art they would raise so preposterously above its natural and essential province, as those who seek to detract from its high and ennobling character, and its sisterhood with the most intellectually inspired of the Muses. As an exemplification of the natural alliance between these two extremes, we find in a French periodical, devoted exclusively to musical interests, a criticism on the work we have mentioned, in which the French writer, answering the delusive aspirations of the German, reduces music to a mere frivolous pastime, a means of relaxation from all earnest purpose whatever, and its production, to a work almost of mere mechanical ingenuity. These two poles of opinion, between which lies the truth about music, have lately received a wide development, which would seem to indicate either a decadence in the power of appreciation, or a period of transition to some future unknown condition of the art. The latter, amidst the wide spread of musical taste and education which characterises the age, can hardly be considered otherwise than the true alternative. We are ourselves not going to venture on the hazy sea of musical metaphysics, but simply record our opinion, that music will never express anything but musical ideas, and that musical ideas can only be expressed in music. They are a distinct produce of the human mind, and a reflection of its activity, and, as such, cognate with every other thought and feeling of the soul and of the mind, though not interchangeable. The more widely cultivated the intellect of a musical composer, the stronger he will be in his especial capacity, and the music he writes will, doubtless, have something in it it would not have had without such general culture. Beyond this the world of music, and the other worlds of thought, admit no fusion—on peril of *con*fusion.

TO go back a little in our retrospect of pianoforte music and pianoforte composers. The age of Dussek was extraordinarily prolific and rich. Besides Dussek and Clementi, there were Steibelt, Woelfl, Kozeluch, Krumpholz, Eberl, and many others, among whom one of the most distinguished by the services he rendered to the instrument was John Cramer. All these produced sonatas. Dussek and Clementi wrote the largest number and the best; but Dussek had by far the greatest influence on his contemporaries. The characteristics of his style were salient and marked, while, like all men of genius,* he had mannerisms, upon which his imitators fastened exclusively, it being out of their power to copy the ideas that flowed from the springs of his inventive faculty—which, however, they, not seldom, either paraphrased, or stole outright.

Thus the world was deluged with good, bad, and indifferent imitations of Dussek. Among the good may be cited the sonatas and concertos of John Cramer, who, except in his inimitable Studies, has shown but little originality as a composer. Among the indifferent must be ranked the works of Eberl; and, still more indifferent, those of Kozeluch and Krumpholz, which are also trivial and meagre. The bad would be too numerous to mention; but some notion may be entertained of their quantity, when we state that they stood comparatively in the same relation to Dussek which nine composers out of ten who appeared in print in the second quarter of the present century, occupied in relation to Henri Herz and Thalberg, and which they now occupy and have occupied for many years in relation to Mendelssohn. These musicians, indeed, have many sins to answer for, in the facility they have offered to common-place "slop-composers" to exaggerate and batten on their mannerisms.

Clementi, whose general style was somewhat pedantic, and whose learning could not be borrowed, found few imitators; so few that we cannot tax our memory for a single example. Nevertheless, Clementi was decidedly an original thinker, and those who compare him with Mozart only declare their incompetence to understand either. Moreover, Clementi, at times, almost equalled the inspirations of genius itself, which, if we were writing an account of his works, we could prove by several examples.†

Steibelt was another original, and perhaps a genius, although his style is not so individual as that of Dussek, whom he occasionally equalled, if not surpassed, in his ordinary flights, but never approached in his highest inspirations. To illustrate this opinion, we may suggest that the concertos in E and E flat of Steibelt, known as the Storm and the Chasse, are equal, if not superior, to many of the earlier concertos of Dussek; but, on the other hand, in a far greater degree of inferiority does Steibelt's longest and most ambitious sonata—that in E flat, dedicated to Mad. Buonaparte—stand in relation to the Elegy, Op. 61, the Invocation, Op. 77, and other grand works of Dussek, which approach nearer to Beethoven than any sonatas for the pianoforte with which we are acquainted. Steibelt, however, was immensely popular, and many of his smaller sonatas may be safely taken as models. The pianoforte is, besides, indebted to him for a vast number of passages and effects of which later composers have availed themselves without acknowledgment. His studies, in spite of the strong resemblance of some of them to those of Cramer, are also as excellent as they are useful. The name of Steibelt, then, must always have an honourable place in the history of the pianoforte.

Woelfl was a composer of merit and a musician of more than ordinary acquirements. He was original, but his originality is somewhat affected. Many of his productions have achieved a high reputation among musicians, and more especially a sonata in a A flat, with a fugue. This sonata is decidedly a work of thought, but the fugue is quite as dry and laboured as it is ingenious. Woelfl enjoyed great consideration in his day, but his writings appear to have had very little influence on his contemporaries, to whom his peculiarities did not proffer a tempting store for petty larceny or wholesale theft. The sonata in F—or rather fantasia, since the first movement alone is in regular form—called Ne Plus Ultra, was his most celebrated work, and is that which is best remembered now. At the time it was composed its difficulty was regarded as immense. One of the variations on the popular air "Life let us cherish," in the last movement of the sonata, seems, by its skips of double octaves, to have anticipated a fantasia of Henri Herz on the romance in Méhul's Joseph. With all this, however, we are inclined to think that the greater part of Woelfl's compositions are likely to remain in oblivion, unless some future antiquarian shall valiantly step forward, and, with the spade and shovel of enthusiasm, exhume them from the grave in which they have long mouldered.

Of the other composers who flourished about this period there is little to be said. Their merits were small and their influence null. Some of them obtained a popularity as ephemeral as it was baseless. One of the most popular, however, and deservedly so, was Abbé Gelinek, who chiefly excelled as a writer of variations on favourite airs. He also wrote sonatas, but these were of little worth.* Another, a German composer, named Gaensbachen, enjoyed considerable fame, which such of his works as are extant by no means justified. One name, however, shone like a star in the midst of this cloud of obscurities. Pinto, an Englishman, who was cut off at the early age of twenty-one, gave every indication of becoming one of the most remarkable men of his day. His genius was undoubted. He played admirably on the pianoforte and violin; wrote with facility for both instruments, and, though so young, was a wonderful extempore performer. It is a disgrace to our publishers and musical amateurs, that neither the enterprise of the former, nor the curiosity of the latter, has compelled a republication of the printed works of Pinto, and the production of those that exist in manuscript. These sonatas for pianoforte solus, in A, C minor, and E flat minor,† which we have seen, are as full of beauties as the best of Dussek; while a set of vocal canzonets, which we have also had the opportunity of examining, might, without impropriety, be placed by the side of Haydn's well-known models. Besides these, a violin concerto and many other works exist in manuscript. It would, we feel certain, be a good speculation on the part of a music publisher, in these times of dearth, to print everything that remains of Pinto, whose death was a severe blow to the hopes of England as a musical nation. Who can say that a genius like Mozart's was not thus untimely quenched? Neither Mozart, nor Mendelssohn, the most surprising examples of precocious genius in the history of the musical art, gave earlier or more brilliant marks of originality and talent than George Frederick Pinto.

* By men of genius we can understand only those whose gifts of invention enables them to produce things that are at the same time original and beautiful.

† The sonata in B minor, Op. 40—one of the finest works ever written for the pianoforte; the Didone Abandonata (Scena Tragica), Op. 50, and many others.

* And "The Queen of Prussia's Waltz."—Printer's Devil.

† Messrs. Coventry and Co., Dean Street, introduced the first of these in the excellent compilation of pianoforte works, edited by Mr., now Professor, Sterndale Bennett, under the title of Classical Practice. Copies of the others are very rare.

THE ORGAN.*

NINTH STUDY.—THE LIMIT TO WHICH THE ORGAN MAY EXTEND ITS COMPASS IN HEIGHT OR DEPTH.

Every one is agreed in this, that the organ should be composed at the very least of the three distinct sounds corresponding with the three main divisions of the human voice, namely, of the three distinct sounds of the soprano, tenor, and bass voices. But beyond this we may ask how far is it necessary for it to be still further enforced with either a pelting hailstorm of shrill and almost imperceptible sounds in the treble, or with the deep-rolling thunders breathed forth by the enormous 32-feet pipes in the bass?

This is a question, which, if we are to believe Herr Seidel, our fathers have already answered for us. "The ancient builders," he says, "called a 16-feet organ a complete organ, and an 8-feet organ an organ only half way towards completion."

The absence of fixed ideas on this matter, as on so many others connected with the organ, has a tendency to produce various divergences in different directions from the true principles of their art amongst organ builders. One imagines that he has carried the art of building to its utmost limits, because he has added to the three main divisions of sound just alluded to, a series of other sounds so low that he has not only great difficulty in tuning the pipes meant to produce them, but also in producing from them what may be properly called a sound, or at least a musical sound at all, and he will at the same time draw your attention to the enormous size of his pipes, on which a vast sum of money has been expended almost to no purpose, with a self-complacency that causes you to smile. Another would have you think he has done great wonders, because he has for once condescended to enter the lists with the piano-maker, and has succeeded (to his praise be it said) in producing sounds so extremely high and thin, that amidst the other contending sounds of the organ, and the echoes of the church, they are reduced to the dimensions of imperceptible atoms, and all but annihilated. For ourselves, we do not for a moment believe that the glory of a skilful builder consists in his having made pipes which are either absurdly large, or absurdly small, and we shall consider that the object of these remarks has been fully gained if we can make organ-builders, and such as have the direction of these matters under their control, understand for once that it ill becomes an instrument of so dignified and religious a character as the organ, to imitate in its tones either a park of artillery on the one hand, or a musical snuff-box on the other.

To find then some reasonable mean between these two extremes of absurdity, we would again refer to what we have already said of the organ corresponding in its tones with the three main divisions of the human voice. A Swiss author, who is worthy of note, Herr Sulzer, writing on æsthetics, has said that "music is an imitation of singing." This dictum, applied to religious music, becomes mathematically exact and precise, for as regards the music of the theatre, far from being an imitation of the human voice, it plays a part which is for the most part wholly beyond its reach. It is there that certain effects, which belong to instruments only, rather than to that class of music which is purely vocal, are produced by a succession of myriads of notes, the very forms of which are wholly beyond the powers of the human voice. In the theatre these effects are in perfect keeping, for there all the resources of instrumentation and of sound are used with propriety for the due exaltation of things which are merely material; but in a church, where it is rather elevation of soul that is sought for, music will attain its end more by tempering even its lightest phrases with a certain amount of gravity, than by an indefinite variety of its forms, and an exaggerated use of its resources.

Now we find these principles of sacred music as first elements in the constitution of the organ itself, in so much that it is the only instrument capable of realizing the dictum of Sulzer, and of being, in the service of God, the imitation of singing.

The ancients of whom Herr Seidel speaks, and whom we shall never cease to praise, as having laid down the principles on which the organ, as specially devoted to the Christian worship, should be built, the builders, that is, of the 16th century, could, had they been so pleased, have themselves also so overlaid these same principles with a mass of very high or very low sounds as completely to have obliterated the principles themselves. At least they could have done so quite as easily as the builders of the present day,—builders that cannot now comprehend even their more worthy predecessors. But they were not pleased to do this. Had they done so, they would have entered upon a system of building, and probably they were aware of the fact themselves, which for once and for all would have severed the alliance between the organ and the massive voice of the peoples' song, and would have deprived it of those special devotional effects, with which the philosopher Montaigne was so much struck. Not that we mean hereby to express any admiration for a sceptic, for one of those men who is never sure of anything, but only to notice, that as regards the organ, Montaigne even gives up his scepticism, and that to him as well as to the builders of his day, the organ is but the more full realisation of that homage which we pay to God by the most intelligent of our organs, namely by the voice, which is the interpreter of our thoughts.

That the Germans, a people separated more than any others from the traditions of external religion, should have multiplied indefinitely those various sounds, which are either imperceptible on account of their extreme height, or unintelligible on account of their extreme depth, may be explained without their being taken for a model in every case. The Germans in giving organ concerts have done their best to take the organ out of its proper sphere, as an instrument devoted to the church service only, as they have also done their best to take the Gregorian chant, the only true model for all chants, out of their churches, and use it for other purposes, but, we repeat, there is no reason why we should imitate them in this. Nevertheless, the French have not only imitated the Germans, but have even surpassed them by incumbering the instrumentation of the organ with all sorts of aftergrowths, in giving it such an excess of brightness, and in causing it to aim at so great a variety of sounds, that they have given it at last a character that we may look for in vain in French organs of the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries, built after the ancient models;—the idea on the contrary that has never ceased to direct the German builders in the midst of all their vagaries being that the organ should at all times be such as is best suited for the accompaniment of the choral, the idea which makes it to be at one and the same time popular, religious, and universally useful. All the French organs, with very few exceptions, are shrill, horny, and nasal instruments, in fact of such a quality of tone, that were the orchestras of the theatres to adopt the same, the most indulgent part even of the audience would not have the patience to endure them.

But must it after all be said that the organ, though devoted to the purposes of religion, ought not to exceed even by a single note the ordinary compass of the human voice, of which it is the magnificent interpreter? We have answered this question from the very first line of the chapter, and we say again that the organ for the very reason that it is specially intended to be used as an accompaniment to the voice, has a right to ascend by at least an octave above and below the extreme notes of the same. We have said elsewhere, and we say it again now, that by accompanying we mean adding to a given piece of music a lower part, a foundation, that is, a ground bass, we also mean by it a like addition made to a piece of music by throwing over it an ornamental dress or mantle to the upper part or treble: in other words, we mean the art of supplying it no less with a superstructure than with a foundation. And if we examine again the mission of the organ as intended to supply religious symphonies, the domain of its sounds may be still further extended, without their at all losing themselves in the absurd extremes of the drama. But some one may object, were there not, even from the middle ages, such extremes in the higher sounds of the organ that to have the pipes producing them required then, as it does now, all the skill of an able tuner, such extremes for example as are to be found in the sounds of the doublette, the furniture, and the like. We answer, that undoubtedly there were, but that the very names of these stops, of which we shall see the full meaning later on, do of themselves answer the objections: doublette,* that which doubles in a higher a sound already found in a lower octave; furniture, that which furnishes a more substantial sort of nourishment to the general body of organ-tone;—such terms evidently imply that these same sounds, of which the august simplicity required by the church knew how to avail itself at all times to the best advantage, were by no means intended to sing alone, but to form in combination with other stops a foundation tone, and to impart to it what builders call roundness, point, or body.

* From L'Orgue, sa connaissance, son administration, et son jeu, by Joseph Regnier.

To come however to the point—what shall be the limit to the compass of the organ, at what note higher or lower should it stop? To answer this we say that the art of organ building, even as applied to religious purposes exclusively, is not limited to a few notes more or less either way, but that its limits must be determined by the ordinary rules of common sense. All that we object to is that that which we think we may well call a false musical scale, a series of sounds, that is, which the ear of the people cannot appreciate, should be used for these purposes. Thus an eminent professor of natural philosophy † has pointed out to the Academy of Sciences the limits between which are comprised the high or low musical sounds which are perceptible to the human ear. After the contradictory observations of the English, German, and French savans, he has presented the Academy with the results of certain experiments of his own, which go to prove that a perfect chord formed by him in the ragged regions of the musical scale, as the journalist calls them, who gives an account of his proceedings, cannot be calculated by ordinary means, nor indeed by any means but such as are purely scientific. Now it is well known that scientific men appreciate sounds only by the number of the vibrations, and according to them the lowest bass sounds which the ear can appreciate, are those only which are produced by from 14 to 32 vibrations in a second, and according to the professor quoted above, the highest treble sounds which the ear can appreciate, are those only which do not require more than 73,000 of such vibrations in a second for their production. If a sufficient amount of musical sound, and distinctness of intonation, can be attained at either of these two extremes, we do not consider they exceed the limits to which the organ, considered only as an instrument for accompanying the liturgical services of the church, may extend its compass in either direction.

A POSTHUMOUS OPERA BY MOZART.

About a year and a half ago the Operngesangverein of Herren Lichtenstein and Ferd. Schmidt, in Frankfort-on-the-Maine, performed for the first time (in all Germany perhaps), an opera until then unknown, by Mozart, L'Oca del Cairo,—The Goose from Cairo. It produced a great impression upon all present, and is well worth a detailed account. There are, indeed, already accounts of it, for instance, in Nissen's Biographie Mozart, p. 476; and, more recently, in Otto Jahn's admirable work, Vol. IV. pp. 162, 172, in the preface to the published pianoforte edition, there is also the necessary information; but it is not everyone who possesses these works, and, consequently, the following facts and dates may not be unwelcome to our readers.

We are accustomed, and with justice, to call Mozart's music incomparable. This appellation is doubly appropriate; first, as concentrated criticism, and secondly, as a literal fact, for all the pictures he created, from the ghostly voice of the Commander, or the presentiments of the Last day (the Requiem), to the babbling of such a person as Despina; from the graceful lays of Belmont, to the frivolity, sparkling with humour, of Figaro; from the Jupiter Symphony to the "Sterbendes Veilchen" ("Dying Violet") invariably bear in themselves the impress of the noblest simplicity, and consequently, we cannot institute a comparison between his compositions and any others, for in no others do we find so spontaneously present this fundamental quality of Mozart's mind and style. While therefore, in these respects, Mozart's music may on the whole be termed incomparable, it cannot fail to surprise us, in the case of the opera under consideration, that, as far as light and graceful pertness is concerned, there is a great deal that approaches the Italian buffo style, and, now and then, borders on Rossini; nay, prepares, so to speak, the way for him, without, however losing aught of real depth, or, amidst the most jovial humour, of feeling and grace. I could not produce any particular example in actual notes of this similarity, but it is the total impression of the music which called forth the comparison.

Now for the historical dates of our opera. After Die Entführung aus dem Serail had achieved its triumphs, and, in 1782, the Italian Opera was again opened at Vienna, Mozart yearned for a really comic libretto, which he at last got, after a long search in the shape of our Oca del Cairo, from the author of Idomeneo, the Abbé Varesco, in Salzburg. During Mozart's stay at that place, from July to October, 1783, the opera was begun in common, as is proved by one of Mozart's letters, of the 10th December of the same year, sent from Vienna to his father in Salzburg, and in which he begs him "to do all in his power so that the libretto may turn out well."

Among Mozart's papers, which, as we know, the Hofrath A. André possesses in Offenbach, there is the first act, completely finished, and written in Varesco's own hand, as well as a full prose sketch of the contents of the other two acts. For the first act Mozart composed two duets, two airs, a scene in recitative, a quartet, and a grand finale with chorus. These plans and sketches belong, therefore, to the first act. The list of personages is as follows:—

Don Pippo, Marchese di Ripasecca, inamorato di Lovina, credutosi vedovo di.
Donna Pantea, sotto nome di Sandra, sua moglie.
Celidora, loro unica figlia, destinata sposa al Conte Lionetto di Casa Vusta, amante di
Biondello, gentiluomo rico di Ripasecca.
Calandrino, nipote de Pantea, amico di Biondello, ed amante corrisposto di
Lavina, compagna di Celidora.
Chichibio, maestro di casa di Don Pippo, amante di
Auretta, cameriera di Donna Pantea.

With respect to the plot, it will be sufficient here for us to give merely the leading points as they are shortly mentioned by Otto Jahn in the pianoforte edition:—"Don Pippo (bass), an arrogant inflated fool, has locked up, in an inaccessible tower, his daughter Celidora (soprano), whom he wishes to marry to Count Lionetto. Imprisoned with her is her maid Lavina (soprano), whom Don Pippo himself wishes to marry. He has, however, entered into an agreement with Biondello (primo amoroso), Celidora's lover, that he will give him his daughter, provided, within a year, he can get into the tower. Biondello has formed a league with his friend Calandrino (tenor), the lover of Lavina and a skilful mechanician, the servants Chichibio (bass-buffo) and Auretta (soubretto) being won over to their interest. The time of action is the last day of the year. An attempt made by the lovers to throw a bridge over the tower fails in the first finale. But Calandrino has made an artificial goose large enough for a couple of persons, who can set the machinery in motion, to get inside. This is sent to Pantea, who, disguised as a gipsey from Cairo, is to exhibit it as a great wonder. Hopes are entertained of inducing Pippo to show the goose to the young girls, and thus enable Biondello to penetrate into the tower. In return for this, Calandrino stipulates that his friend shall procure him Lavina's hand. The stratagem succeeds, for Don Pippo, who thinks to increase the splendour of his own nuptials by the exhibition of such a wonderful thing, allows the goose to be brought into the girls. When all the characters are assembled, Biondello comes out of the goose, Pantea proves to be Pippo's wife, who has long been supposed dead, and — everybody is happy."

If any body is desirous of further information respecting the second and third acts, we refer them to the above-mentioned fourth volume of Otto Jahn's Mozart.

It would be an unnecessary task to dwell upon the excellencies and defects of this subject, for, as Mozart set to work on it with such earnestness, when in his twenty-seventh year, the numbers we possess are calculated to invest the text with augmented interest. Herr Julius André says in his preface, "I would particularly call attention to the duet in A major, between Auretta and Chichibio, to the quartet in E sharp major, and to the finale in B flat major, as they contain masterly touches, and, even in their incomplete form, may be placed by the side of the best pieces in his other operas (to which I add especially his Figaro). Mozart himself says in a letter that 'he is perfectly contented with Chichibio's buffo air, the quartet, and the finale; that in truth he is pleased with them, and that he should be very sorry if he were doomed to have written such music for no purpose.'" By this, he means that alterations are still required in the libretto. He proceeds to suggest the desired improvements himself, a sufficient proof how greatly he was taken by the opera, and how desirous he was of seeing it produced. It is a remarkable fact that both the basses lie very high; this is strange, coming as it does immediately after the low pitch of the bass part employed so advantageously in the part of Osmin. Had the barytone been then "invented," we may suppose Mozart would have given the higher bass part this title. No less remarkable is the quartet, on account of the distribution of the voices (two sopranos and two tenors), a distribution on which the bass is not at all missed. But what was there difficult or impossible for the genius of Mozart? Let the reader call to mind the wonderful construction of the quartet of the three Genii and Pamina in Die Zauberflöte!

* Doublette in French organs is a fifteenth in English organs.—Note Ed.
† M. Despretz. See the National for 30th April, 1845.

Among the posthumous musical sketches of Mozart, there are several separate sheets, which may be considered preparatory attempts for several of the pieces in our opera. Several, however, are already so complete, that there would, we should say, have been but little to add, when they were fairly written out. It is also probable that Mozart had already settled the appropriate harmony, and the intermediate instrumental music, although we find merely hints in the rough drafts. The most convincing proof of this is furnished by an air of Biondello's, in B flat major, although it is treated in the most cursory manner. Herr André has placed a fac-simile of this sketch before the pianoforte edition, and, on account of its almost totally illegible character, added a clean copy. Every artist, possessing any antiquarian taste, will be thankful to him for this, since the air is not to be found among the pieces written out at length, and the sketch itself is certainly worthy of being rescued from oblivion. We here surprise the master in the very act, as it were, of creation. Again, this sketch proves to us that Mozart used not to compose the various pieces of his operas in the order in which they came, but selected certain ones, just as the situations struck him for the moment; a glance at the libretto sets this beyond a doubt.

An analysis of the pianoforte edition would prove too long a task. I only repeat, therefore, that the genial dash and the careful working out of these pieces are on an equality with each other. The finale of the Annual Fair, particularly, overflows with dramatic effects; the study of the vocal score, with its polyphonic and contrapuntal arguments, here becomes equally interesting and instructive for both masters and scholars. If the tumultuous rising to a climax of the last presto in B flat major (for six voices and independent chorus) on the words "Holla, zu den Waffen, Leute," produces such a grandiose effect even on the piano, how much more striking would the effect be on the stage, and with a full band?

My authorities are altogether silent with respect to the German translator. His version is, however, mostly satisfactory, as the verbal expression goes hand in hand with the musical, while correctness of rhythm, with a few trifling exceptions, is carefully preserved. Lastly, with regard to the pianoforte edition, which conveys a clear notion of the original plan, Herr André had not the slightest reason to excuse himself, and to give "every one" the option of arranging the pianoforte accompaniment ad libitum, according to the hints given in the book. Whoever examines attentively the instrumental sketches on the score will not acknowledge only the difficulty, but also the discretion, with which Herr André has proceeded on his task. The thanks of every one of Mozart's admirers are due to Herr André, not simply for the idea of practically preserving this work to posterity, but also for cleverly carrying out that idea.

What can be said in nuce about a work of this importance is sufficient to direct general attention to it. Many other societies, imitating the example set by the Frankfort Operngesangverein, help to spread this composition, which, alas! is impracticable on the stage. May this relic, after a slumber of seven-and-twenty years, be resuscitated, and in the concert hall, as well as in the domestic circle, meet with the reception it deserves.

C. Gollmick.

RECEPTION TO WILLIAM VINCENT WALLACE AT NEW YORK.

(From the New York Musical World).

A very agreeable ovation was tendered to this estimable gentleman and composer, at the music rooms of Wm. Hall and Son, Broadway, on the evening of July 11. A pleasant gathering of artists, critics, and connoisseurs were present to welcome Mr. Wallace. Selections of choruses from Lurline were sung by members of the Mendelssohn Union and others, with excellent effect. Mrs. Cooper, Miss Hawley, Messrs. Geary and Werneke sang the incidental solos connected therewith in a most creditable manner. Mrs. Mozart gave the Troubadour song, which was encored. Mrs. Brinkerhoff sang the "Spell" from Lurline, and "Scenes that are brightest" from Maritana. Mad. Bouchelle sang Wallace's "Cradle Song." Mr. Millard was warmly applauded in a tenor song, likewise Mr. Simpson. Mr. Massett sang one of his own composition, "You'll remember me." The accompanists, Messrs. Bergé and Schmidt, lent their effective aid. There was but one feeling in regard to the music of Lurline—it was pronounced to be Mr. Wallace's most popular opera. A handsome collation was provided, to which the guests did ample justice. Capt. Vine Hall, of the Great Eastern, who had been present, was called for, but had left the company a short time previous. Mr. James Hall responded for him, and made some interesting remarks in regard to Mr. Wallace's career in this country since his first visit, which was some twenty years ago, when music was less appreciated than at present. Want of space prevents our giving Mr. Hall's sentiments at length, but we cannot forbear placing before our readers this pretty toast to Lurline—

There is one who appears to have been forgotten on this occasion; yer her praises are on every tongue. It is a lady whose syren voice has, during the last few months, charmed many thousands, from the prince to the peasant, and whose song is echoed from the throat of many a fair warbler over the whole world of music.

Meyerbeer kept his Prophet caged for years, yet Wallace, whose gallantry has been the theme of many a song, with cruelty more refined, kept Lurline, a water nymph of surpassing beauty, whose soul was song, chained in darkness for ten long years. Even now his unrelenting hand holds in bondage the fair maid of Zurich, and the chaste and lovely—the parson's daughter falsely accused as the Amberwitch.

Let us hope that justice may be speedily done this fair daughter of his genius—Lurline.

Mr. Wallace, with considerable emotion, thanked those present and absent for the many kind expressions of regard he had ever received in this country; and which he expected to leave again in a few days, to be absent for some time; his passage being already taken in the Persia for Europe—his wife and family remaining with us. Mr. Wallace has our best wishes for his health and success.

[Our readers must not forget that Mr. Wallace, since the above "reception," has returned to London, and has already proceeded to Wiesbaden.—Ed.]

Mlle. Finoli.—The journal Il Pirata, published in Turin, chronicles, in terms of enthusiastic eulogy, the début, at the Teatro Alfieri in that city, of the Signorina Giuseppine Finoli in the character of Rosina in Rossini's celebrated opera Il Barbière. The performance appears to have been a most successful one, and at the close of the opera the fair débutante was vociferously recalled to receive the congratulation of the audience. Our readers will remember the young lady as occupying a prominent position at our various public concerts a year or two ago—she was engaged by Mr. Lumley, when he was manager of Her Majesty's Theatre; but for some unexplained reason did not appear. The Italian critic speaks in strains of the highest encomium of the quality of her voice, method, and dramatic power.

Letters to the Editor.

THE JULLIEN FESTIVAL.

Sir,—We have received the enclosed letter, which perhaps you will kindly insert in your next impression. The gross amount realised at the doors, balconies, &c., was upwards of £1,000.

Yours, &c.,

Surrey Gardens, Aug. 5. CALDWELL and BISHOP.

"Messrs. Caldwell and Bishop.

"Gentlemen,—Madame Jullien has requested me to tender you her most sincere thanks for your kindness and liberality in placing the Royal Surrey Gardens and the whole of your company at her disposal on the occasion of her benefit, on Tuesday, 31st July last. As you are well aware, it was a great success; and I am sure you will be gratified to learn—together with the artistes who gave their services, and the newspapers who inserted the advertisements free of charge—you have been the means of enabling Mad. Jullien to add a very considerable sum to the 'Jullien Fund.'—I am, Gentlemen, yours, &c.,

"S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

"50 New Bond Street, Aug. 6."

Sir,—Several papers have announced, on the authority of the Orphéon, that M. E. Delaporte has just tendered his resignation as President of the Choral Societies of Paris. As the papers in question have omitted giving the causes of his resignation, it becomes necessary shortly to mention those causes. M. Delaporte has renounced the title which entails on him certain responsibilities towards the authorities, because the Committee of the Association has, for some time past, pursued a path in which it is impossible for lovers of order and men tenacious of their dignity to follow them.

After founding, in 1855, the Association of the Choral Societies of Paris, and devoting to it, from that period, his time and labour, in the most disinterested manner, M. Delaporte retired voluntarily in the month of May last, before a turbulent and sterile opposition, which now exerts a lamentable influence over the Committee. M. Delaporte's resignation in no way changes the position he holds with regard to the Choral Societies of the Departments; we desire no better proof of this than the striking success of the London and Paris festivals. He is still the recognised and popular chief of the Orpheonists of France.

L. F. VAUDIN.

CHURCH ORGANISTS.

Sir,—Some papers upon this subject in the columns of a periodical devoted chiefly to music, and also an article in Punch, entitled "Saint Cecilia and Saint Helen," drew attention, not long since, to the Salaries of Organists, and the exclusion of female candidates. It would appear, however, that the facts stated in the papers alluded to have been but little heeded; for in the Times of Saturday, June 10th, appeared the following advertisement:—

"Organist wanted for the Parish Church of West Hackney.—The duties will be morning, afternoon, and evening attendance on Sundays, Christmas-day, Good Friday, on Thursday evenings, and on public festivals and fasts. The organist will be required to give instruction in psalmody to the school children attending the church. The committee reserve to themselves, under professional advice, the right of making the selection among the candidates. Salary, £40 per annum. Applications to be sent in to the Rev. ———, West Hackney, not later than the 25th of June. Ladies are not eligible."

Forty pounds a year, and females excluded! This advertisement is only one of a number, and presents a context, not a sequel, to the evils arising from mistaken economy and unfair exclusion. The exposition of the duties imposed exhibits to notice about 220 attendances, performances, and instructions, for a salary of £40 a year, or fifteen shillings and fourpence per week. The calling of a church organist has, indeed, reached a low point in the estimation both of the clergy and of church-goers. Humble as it may be, the appointment is, by parish officials, deemed too high and too important for the gentler sex, and therefore females are excluded.

For fifteen shillings and fourpence per week, doubtless, the committee will obtain, under professional advice, superior masculine talent, and the successful candidate will be expected to appear respectable and to exist on forty pounds a-year, or to eke out his income by other means. Parish financial economy is noted for being maximus in minimus, and, in general, churchwardens' annual accounts exhibit such a heavy total of expences, that we are reminded of Falstaff's tavern bill, and say,—

"O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack."

Modern custom may be advanced in favour of this economy and exclusion, and thus, parsimony and illiberality be presented to the church-goers as a plea for scanty remuneration to the male, and unfair conduct towards the female organists. Custom,—the idol of fools and the plague of wise men,—has, in the present age, excluded women from nearly every suitable and remunerating employment;—has degraded her to be the gaudy priestess in that temple of ruin, the gin palace, and is gradually obstructing her path to virtuous independence. This augmenting custom is an unmerited and unmanly insult offered to our mothers, sisters, and wives; it is treating the sex as inferior beings; it is both unchristian and un-English like, and calls loudly for the sympathy and aid of our popular writers, whose powerful pens would be nobly employed in checking the progress of this increasing public evil.

A SEAT-HOLDER AT A DISTRICT CHURCH.

M. VIEUXTEMPS, the celebrated violinist, is at present in Paris.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE is advertised to be let.

HERR WILJALBA FRIKELL, the great Russian necromancer, is at present at Carlsbad.

HORBURY, NEAR WAKEFIELD.—On Tuesday last, nine candidates competed for the post of organist at the parish church, before Mr. Barnby, of York, when Mr. W. H. Hopkinson, of Birstal, near Leeds, professional pupil of Mr. Spark, was the successful competitor.

LEEDS (From a Correspondent). — Mr. Spark commenced a series of performances on the Town Hall organ last Saturday, which are to be continued every Wednesday and Saturday, until October. There were about 700 persons present, notwithstanding the prevailing wet, and the performance gave great satisfaction. The programme included Mendelssohn's grand prelude and fugue in D minor; selections from Lucrezia Borgia; and the overture Le Cheval de Bronze. On Wednesday there was again a good attendance, including many professors of music, when Mr. Spark gave the overture to Oberon, a most effective selection from Meyerbeer's L'Etoile du Nord, and some organ compositions. The organ is now in excellent order, and its orchestral resources seem to be almost unlimited.

LIVERPOOL. (From our own Correspondent). — The sixth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, which took place on Tuesday, was attended by a numerous and fashionable audience, the anxiety to hear Mad. Csillag, Mr. Gye's new prima donna, being doubtless the principal attraction, though the other artistes engaged—Signors Tagliafico and Neri-Baraldi—are well known here, and popular. Having had opportunities of hearing Mad. Csillag at the Royal Italian Opera, it is but just to state that no fair opinion of her talents can be formed from what she sang on Tuesday night. Mad. Csillag is essentially a dramatic singer; her voice is a mezzo soprano, full in the low notes, but somewhat worn in the higher register; and her style of singing is grand and severe, for she has been trained in opera-houses in Austria and other parts of Germany, where the classical chefs d'œuvre of Beethoven, Gluck, Cherubini, Weber, and other great masters, are constantly performed. This style of vocalism, after the melodious and sympathetic singing of the Italian school, is not likely to please a mixed audience, the majority of whom admire tune more than anything else; and we were not, therefore, astonished at the cool reception awarded to Mad. Csillag's delivery of two great arias from Mozart's Clemenza di Tito and Weber's Euryanthe, both sung in foreign languages, and no translation given. The audience, therefore, with very few exceptions, had no idea of what emotions the singer was expressing; and this fact, combined with severe hoarseness, rendered the performances of Mad. Csillag a disappointment. In the "Miserere" scene from the Trovatore, she was enabled to display her dramatic and vocal talents to better advantage; and we hope that, when she next visits Liverpool, her selection of music will be more judicious (as regards the popular taste), and her health much improved. There can be no doubt that Mad. Csillag is an operatic vocalist of the first class, and for her own sake we regret that she made her début in Liverpool under such a combination of unfavourable circumstances. Signor Tagliafico either as an actor or a singer is always correct; and both in tragic or comic characters he is sure to give satisfaction. His voice is sonorous and somewhat hard, and though an apropos selection at the present time, his aria "O toi Palerme," from Les Vêpres Siciliennes, was not of a taking character, being one of the most laboured of the composer's melodies for a baritone, a class voice, for which he has written some of his most delightful morceaux. In the well-known Figaro song, "Largo al factotum," Signor Tagliafico sang with so much spirit and vivacity as to evoke an encore; and in a duet from L'Elisire d'Amore, with Signor Neri-Baraldi, he also displayed comic humour and vocal facility. Signor Neri-Baraldi is a singer who can always be listened to with satisfaction. He sang "Spirto gentil," from the Favorita, and "M' appari tutto amor," from Marta; the latter was encored. Signor Neri-Baraldi's best effort, however, was the tenor music of the "Miserere" scene from the Trovatore. The band played three overtures—Beethoven's Leonora, Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream, and Mozart's Seraglio. We only heard the two first, which were performed most efficiently, the pianos and pianissimos—particularly in Mendelssohn's exquisite musical fairy tale—being given with infinite delicacy and precision. The chorus sang Rossini's wonderfully brilliant and jubilant chorus, "Belus we celebrate," from Semiramide, a four-part song, "The deep repose of night is ending," by Mendelssohn, Horsley's well-known choral glee, "See the chariot at hand," and a very dull and spiritless madrigal, "Flora now calleth forth each flower," by J. S. Smith. Of these the exquisite four-part song of the great German composer pleased most.

BLIND SCHOOL, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—The music pupils of this valuable Institution opened their new organ on Monday last, when they performed the following selection under the direction of their master, Mr. Edwin Barnes, who deserves great credit for the manner in which his pupils performed such works.

PART I. Hymn CXCVI. From Embossed Music, Tune "St. Anne's;" Organ, Solo,* "Comfort ye my people" (Handel); Organ, Pedal Fugue* on St. Anne's Tune (J. S. Bach); Anthem, "In Jewry is God known" (Dr. Clarke); Organ, Solo,* "Quoniam Tu Solus"—No. 1 (Haydn)

PART II. Overture*, "Messiah" (Handel); Anthem, "Praise the Lord" (Scott); Organ, Solo*, Quintett (Biery); Organ, Solo*, Fugue in G (Leo); Organ, Solo*, Hallelujah Chorus (Handel); National Anthem.

Pieces marked * performed for the first time at these concerts.

The performance gave much pleasure to a numerous and fashionable auditory.

ELIZA LUMLEY.—(From an occasionally foreign contributor).—Eliza Lumley is a beautiful young lady who has had the advantage of a good success. She sings well, and for a beginner we may say she sings very well. She has disposition for the art, and with assiduity will succeed in a great degree. Miss Lumley was applauded and repeatedly recalled. * * * Miss Lumley has a decided contralto voice, and, besides talent and disposition for music, a passion for the art, and particularly for Italian song, which will conduct her to the arena to which she aspires. She sang the aria from the Italiana in Algeri, and the famous rondo from Niobe. Miss Lumley, although not yet showing mature study, sang with infinite grace this most difficult music, displaying flexibility, grace, and precision. She was much applauded, and recalled. * * * * Miss Lumley executed the scena from L'Italiana in Algeri, and the cavatina from Niobe, abounding with grace, agility, and excellent vocalization, for which she was repeatedly recalled.

MAYENCE. —— July 22 The first day of our musical festival is over. The performance of Israel was most admirable, and delighted every one. Among other artistic visitors we may mention Herren Taubert and Stern, from Berlin; Ferd. Hiller, from Cologne; C. Reiss, from Cassel; Schindelmeisser, from Darmstadt; Hagen, from Wiesbaden; Scholz, from Hanover; C. A. Mangold, from Darmstadt; Rühl, from Frankfort; Giehne, from Carlsruhe; Joachim and Brahms, A. Jaell, Pauer (London), J. Becker, Dr. A. Schmidt, J. Ruff, H. Neel (Paris), &c.—Extract from a Private Letter.

OPENING OF A NEW ORGAN IN DUBLIN.

THE largest church organ in Ireland was opened on the 1st inst., in St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church, Dublin. This new instrument, the tone of which is of the finest character, is from the establishment of Messrs. John White and Son, Dublin. The following are the details:—

GREAT ORGAN, C C to G, 56 Notes.

No. of Stops.			Feet.
1	Bourdon	wood	16
2	Tenoroon	metal	6
3	Great open Diapason	„	8
4	Open Diapason	„	8
5	Viol di Gamba (German)	„	8
6	Stopped Diapason	wood	8
7	Clarabella Flute	„	8
8	Great Principal	metal	4
9	Principal	„	4
10	Twelfth	„	3
11	Fifteenth	„	2
12	Doublette	„	1
13	Sesquialtra, 3 ranks	„	1⅓
14	Clarion	„	4
15	Posaune	„	8

PEDAL ORGAN, C C C to F, 30 Notes.

1	Pedal Diapason	wood	16
2	Pedal Principal	metal	8
3	Pedal Trombone	„	8

SWELL ORGAN, C C TO G, 56 NOTES.

1	Double Diapason	wood	16
2	Open Diapason	metal	8
3	Stopped Diapason	wood	8
4	Principal	metal	4
5	Twelfth	„	3
6	Fifteenth	„	2
7	Doublette	„	1
8	Echo Dulciana Cornet	„	1⅓
9	Oboe	„	8
10	Cornopean	„	8

CHOIR ORGAN, C C to G, 56 NOTES.

1	Double Diapason	wood	16
2	Stop Diapason, Bass	„	8
3	Stop Diapason, Treble
4	Dulciana	metal	8
5	Gemshorn	„	4
6	Flute Solo	wood	4
7	Piccolo	„	2
8	Cremona	metal	8

COUPLERS

1 Swell to Great
2 Pedals to Great
3 Pedals to Choir
4 Swell Duplex
5 Sforzando Coupler
6 Tremblant

SUMMARY.

No. of Stops	Great Organ	15	Pipes	828
„	Swell	10	„	672
„	Choir	8	„	378
„	Pedal	3	„	90
„	Couplers	6
Total of number Stops		42	Pipes	1968

The Case, in Grecian Order of Majestic Design.

DIMENSIONS.

25 feet high.
16 „ wide.
12 „ deep.

It contains three complete sets of manuals and grand pedal organ, with a full front of speaking pipes, richly gilt. The most recent mechanical improvements, with new inventions, have been introduced in this organ.

THE CONGRESS OF THE BARDS OF WALES.

The Eisteddfod, or Congress of the Bards of Wales, commenced on Tuesday morning, in the ancient castle of Denbigh. The proceedings were of the most animated character. The ancient town of Denbigh was crowded from an early hour with equestrian and pedestrian visitors, and the railway from Rhyl also brought a large number of persons from that pretty watering place and other towns on the line. At ten o'clock a procession was formed at the Town Hall, and thence wound slowly through the streets up the steep ascent to the castle, preceded by an excellent band. In the large court-yard of the castle, surrounded by the ivy-crowned ruins of a building famous in song and story, the immense pavilion in which the meeting was held was placed. The procession arrived, when the leading members took their places shortly after the appointed hour, and the pavilion was very speedily thronged by a dense crowd of persons, many of whom were compelled to remain standing during the day. Owing to an unexpected detention in London, on parliamentary business, the president of the association, Sir W. W. Wynn, Bart., M.P., was unable to be present. The bards appointed to conduct the meeting were the celebrated Talhaiarn and Clwydffardd. The Grand Eisteddfod was formally opened by the reading of the following proclamation in Welsh and English: "The truth against the world.—In the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty, the sun approaching the autumnal equinox, at the hour of noon, on the 7th day of August, after due proclamation of a year and a day, this Gorsedd is opened within the Castle of Caledfryn-yn-Rhos (now called Denbigh), in Gwynedd, with invitation to all who may assemble here, where no weapon is unsheathed against them, and judgment will be pronounced upon all works of genius submitted for adjudication, in the face of the sun—the eye of light.—The truth against the world."

The chair was then taken pro tem. by Sir Hugh Williams, who opened the proceedings in a stirring address.

Mr. Griffiths, harper to Lord Llanover, Llanover Court, Abergavenny, performed an admirable solo on the harp, and was rapturously applauded.

Mr. John Owen (the well-known Owen Alaw) then sang the Eisteddfod national song, in which he was accompanied on the harp by Mr. Ellis Roberts, harpist to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The audience joined in the Welsh chorus of the song, and the effect was very impressive.

Talhaiarn then referred to the manner in which the proceedings would be conducted. He hoped that all who intended to take any part in the proceedings would observe the rule laid down, that nothing must be said which would cause religious, political, or barbic dissensions. (Cheers.) No good could arise from such disputes, and speakers must do all in their power to avoid them. One of the fundamental laws of the gathering was, "Let the eloquent be eloquent, where no weapon shall be unsheathed against him." That was a very good maxim, but, like others, it might be carried too far, and even eloquence on a wrong subject might lead to discussion, and liberty might become license. (Cheers.) Let them be as patriotic as they chose, for they might well be proud of their beautiful country. (Cheering.) They had only to step outside the tent and they had a splendid view of the magnificent valley of the Clwyd, teeming with loveliness; and that was only one of many such valleys. They were surrounded by glorious old mountains, which they could point to with pride and pleasure, where they could find scenery enchanting to the eye and the heart, where nature had scattered beauty with a lavish hand. (Applause.)

Mr. Williams, of Rhyl, then gave a solo on the harp.

Several poetic addresses were delivered, and

Mr. John Andrews Lloyd, of Liverpool, announced the decision of the judges on the best musical composition on Welsh psalm metre. He stated that the committee had received 131 contributions, some of which contained gross violations of the simplest rules of harmony; others were indifferently good; and others, again, were worthy of being included in any collection of psalm tunes in the principality. He thought the result of the competition showed that the Welsh had a right to exult in the fact that they were eminently and essentially a musical nation. (Cheers.)

An oration in English was then delivered by the Rev. Mr. Griffiths, of Neath.

A competition of bands, in which the Denbighshire Militia, the Carnarvon Militia, and the Denbighshire Yeomanry Cavalry bands took part, was decided in favour of the latter, and the leader was invested with a ribbon by Lady Williams. The best essay on "Female Education" was then adjudicated upon, and the committee awarded prizes to each of the three competitors. Mrs. Manuel, of Llanover, Abergavenny, was one of them, and she was duly invested with a ribbon and badge, amidst the plaudits of the assembly.

Amongst the "works of genius" submitted for adjudication were several pairs of Wellington boots, and the prize was awarded to W. Williams.

A Welsh oration followed, the orator being Mr. W. Owen (Llew Llwys), who spoke with great animation and humour, and elicited frequent and hearty peals of laughter.

Several other awards of prizes brought the afternoon's proceedings to a close, and the Eisteddfod was adjourned until the evening, when a concert took place in the pavilion.

The proceedings closed on Friday.

MUSIC AT ST. HELLIER'S.

By Napoleon Jersey.

(Verbatim et literatim.)

Wednesday evening witnessed a grand concert of sacred and miscellaneous music at the Queen's Assembly Rooms. The vocalists were the same distinguished artistes as those who so ably executed the Messiah in the morning, accompanied by Signor Randegger on the harmonium, and Signor Zerbini on the grand pianoforte. The first part consisted of a selection of gems from the Messiah. The chorus "And the glory of the Lord" formed the commencement, after which Mr. E. Galer sang "Comfort ye," and "Every Valley," with equal effect to his performance in the morning. "He shall feed," and "Come unto me," were given by Miss F. Reeves and Madame Rudersdorff in the flowing and graceful style of those sweet compositions. Mr. Thomas again executed "Why do the nations?" with its full vigour of musical declamation. Mad. Rudersdorff subsequently gave the solemn sentences of "I know that my Redeemer liveth," with the inspiration of a sacred Muse, and the accent of an earnest mind. Great as this high vocalist is in operatic and secular music, in the sacred form of the divine science she is transcendent. The glorious Hallelujah Chorus again crowned the whole with its majestic harmonies. For ourselves, and we think for the public, we must thank Mad. Rudersdorff and her talented company for bringing to our insular doors the essence of music, administered with essential genius. The second part of the concert was opened with a glee, "The Fisherman's Good Night," a composition by that eminent English master, Sir H. Bishop, which was nicely sung. Miss F. Reeves sung "A Lowly Youth," by Wallace, with easy grace. Mr. E. Galer gave Hatton's ballad "Good bye, Sweetheart, good bye," in the true ballad style. Mad. Rudersdorff next sung "Il Bacio," by Arditi, in her highly artistic manner. Mr. Leggatt next performed a fine pianoforte solo on Mr. Donaldson's new grand piano. The piece by Oesten founded on a Spanish theme, showed the capabilities both of the pianist and the instrument to great advantage. The performer evinced much ability and promise of attainment; the instrument, both in the hands of Mr. Leggatt and Signor Zerbini, proved itself to be clear and powerful in tone, as well as elastic in touch, and we hear that it has been pronounced by Mr. Coward, organist of the Crystal Palace, to be a very excellent instrument. As a desideratum for concerts long wanting, it is an acquisition to the place. Mr. Thomas next sang Signor Randegger's new sea song, composed for him, "There's nothing like a Fresh'ning Breeze," with true sea emphasis. We must compliment the accomplished conductor on his production of a veritable English sea song. It was properly applauded and encored. Miss F. Reeves then sang a semi-comic song by G. A. Hodson, "If I could have my way," with such arch expression, that it was loudly encored. A very elegant song by our friend Herr M. Lutz, "Under the Linden Tree," was beautifully sung by Mr. E. Galer, and most properly encored. Mad. Rudersdorff next sang the favourite old Scotch ballad, "'Twas within a mile of Edinboro' Town." Her humorous Scotch vein gave the old song a freshness that was much admired, and led to an encore. Mr. Cooper, the able manager of the company, who is known in London as a musical and literary lecturer, sang a comic song, "The Old Bachelor," with so much humour, that it was loudly encored. The glee, "All among the Barley," concluded a highly artistic and very pleasant concert.

WORCESTER, UNITED STATES. — Three resident musicians have formed a "Beethoven Trio Club," and are studying the trios of Beethoven and other composers, with profit to themselves, and we hope, sometime it may prove, to the public as well. We recall with pleasure an attendance upon one of their rehearsals one of these bright summer mornings — just the time to listen, to a work so full of fresh, enlivening beauty as Mozart's Trio in G, which we heard with several of Beethoven's — including a very beautiful one in E flat. In the range of trio-music the greatest composers gave utterance to some of their finest thoughts, and in their reading we trust our friends of the Club will find such treasures that they may be induced to lay them before the many friends of classical music in Worcester.—Worcester Palladium.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS for VOLUNTEER and COUNTRY BANDS.—BOOSEY and SONS beg to state that they have made arrangements to supply BRASS and REED INSTRUMENTS, of the very best description, at the lowest scale of prices. Band-Masters and others are recommended to forward a list of Instruments required, for which they will receive an estimate of cost by return of post.
Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

CHURCH ORGANS.—FORSTER and ANDREWS, Organ Builders, Hull, have a number of SECOND-HAND ORGANS for sale, which they have taken in exchange, built by Bevington, the late J. C. Bishop, Lincoln, Parsons, Bryceson, Holdich, &c.—For price and particulars, apply to Forster and Andrews, Organ Builders, Hull.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC
Published this day.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER.
SOUVENIR DE NAPLES, Fantaisie Originale, performed before the Queen... 5s

ASCHER.
LES CLOCHES DU VILLAGE, Fantaisie ... ... 3s.

KUHE.
ROBERT LE DIABLE, Fantaisie ... ... 3s.

BERGER.
NOTRE DAME, Romance, illustrated ... ... 3s.

MADAME OURY.
SANTA LUCIA, Transcription ... ... 3s.

Boosey and Sons, 28 Holles Street.

SONGS BY J. L. HATTON.

	s.	d.
COME BACK, ANNIE	2	6
THE GOOD OLD DAYS	2	6
IT WAS FIFTY YEARS AGO	2	6
THE BIRD OF SONG	2	0
THE MAID I LOVE HATH MANY A GRACE	2	0
DON'T COME TEAZING ME, SIR!	2	0

Boosey and Sons, 28 Holles Street.

SONGS BY "CLARIBEL."

	s.	d.
JANET'S CHOICE	3	0
JANET'S BRIDAL	2	6
DREAMLAND	3	0
I REMEMBER IT	3	0

Boosey and Sons, 28 Holles Street.

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System of
MUSICAL INSTRUCTION; and as a NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Students, who, as soon as competent, will receive appointments to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Pianoforte	Mr. WRIGLEY. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola...	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute	Mons. DE JONG.
Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo...	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.
Military Drill and Callisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. D. ELDER.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for his first or second Orchestra.

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist.

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.
Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board and lodging, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.
Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.
For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.
Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening. C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish.
Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, August 11, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 33 SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped SURREY GARDENS.—Monster Concert, Monday next.

Unprecedented Attraction for One Evening.—On Monday, August 20th, a Grand MONSTER CONCERT and MILITARY FETE, under the direction of M. EMILE BERGER, when the following extraordinary combination of Talent will appear:—Vocalists—Soprani, Mad. PAREPA, Miss BANKES, Miss ELIZA HUGHES, Miss SUSANNA COLE, Miss CHIPPERFIELD, Miss R. RANOE, Miss E. CAMILLE, Mad. GILBERT, Miss MEDORA COLLINS, and Mad. WEISS; Contralti, Miss POOLE, Miss LEFFLER, Miss CLINTON, Miss KATE RANOE, and Miss M. WELLS; Tenori, Mr. GEORGE PERREN, M. DEPRET, Mr. JOHN MORGAN, Mr. FIELDING, Mr. WALBANCK, Mr. MELCHIOR WINTER, and Mr. GEORGE TEDDER; Bassi, Mr. WEISS, Mr. GRATTAN KELLY, Mr. WALWORTH, Mr. PATEY, Mr. T. DISTIN, Mr. W. DISTIN, Mr. LAWRENCE, Mr. LEONARD, Mr. BARTLEMAN, Mr. LUIGI MONTGOMERY, and Mr. ALLAN IRVING. Instrumentalists—Violin, Mr. VIOTTI COLLINS; Flute, Master DREW DEAN; Cornet (of the Crystal Palace), Mr. J. LEVY; Horn, Mr. BENNETT GILBERT; Pianoforte, M. EMILE BERGER. Conductors—Messrs. RANDEGGER, GANZ, LANGTON WILLIAMS, ALFRED GILBERT, KINGSBURY, SCOTSON CLARK, LAUTER, GEORGE CASE, SYDNEY NAYLOR, Dr. JAMES PECH, and M. EMILE BERGER. The grand Orchestra of 50 Performers will be greatly augmented for the occasion. Leader, Mr. J. W. TURLWALL; Conductor, Mr. HENRI LAURENT. Also an additional Brass Band, which will perform during the Afternoon in the Grounds; and the Band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. D. GODFREY, which will perform a grand selection of Military Music during the unprecedented attractions of the above Entertainment. The Monster Concert will begin at 6 o'clock, and the grand performance of Military Music will take place in the Second Part at 8 o'clock. The Gardens will be open at 3 o'clock, with the Comic Fairy Ballet, the Ohio Minstrels, the Great Conjuror's Tricks, &c. After the Monster Concert, a grand Double Display of Fireworks, and Dancing on the New Mammoth Platform.—Admission to the whole of the Performances, One Shilling.

SURREY GARDENS.—The GRENADIER GUARDS

BAND (by permission of Col. the Hon. J. Lindsay), under the direction of Mr. D. Godfrey, will perform a grand selection of military music at the concert on Monday next, August 20th. Admission 1s.

WORCESTER TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL and Meeting of the Three Choirs, for the Benefit of the Widows and Orphans of Clergymen of the diocese of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, to be held in the Cathedral, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, September 11, 12, 13, and 14, 1860, under the especial patronage of

Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the PRINCE CONSORT.
His Royal Highness the PRINCE of WALES.

Tuesday Morning.—First Part of the CREATION, and the whole of ST. PAUL.
Wednesday Morning.—The LAST JUDGMENT, and a Selection from JUDAS MACCABÆUS.
Thursday Morning.—ELIJAH.
Friday Morning.—The MESSIAH.
On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday Evenings.—GRAND MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT, in the College Hall, including Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, Gade's Erl King's Daughter (first time in England), Selections from the Works of Weber, from Oberon, and Lurline, Overtures to William Tell, Euryanthe, The Ruler of the Spirits, Midsummer Night's Dream, and Beethoven's Grand Symphony in D, No. 2.
Friday Evening.—A BALL in the Guildhall.
Principal Vocalists.—Mad. CLARA NOVELLO (her farewell appearance at Worcester), Mad. RUDERSDORFF, Mad. WEISS, Mad. SAINTON-DOLBY, Miss M. WELLS, Mlle. PAREPA, Mr. SIMS REEVES, Mr. MONTEM SMITH, Mr. WEISS, and Signor BELLETTI. Conductor, Mr. DONE.
The Band and Chorus will comprise 300 performers.
Detailed programmes of the performances, including railway and general arrangements, may be obtained on application to Rev. R. Sarjeant, Hon. Secretary, 10 Edgar Street, Worcester.

THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, on Monday,

Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, September 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, in St. Andrew's Hall, under the Patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, H.R.H. the Prince Consort, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, and other members of the Royal Family.
On Monday Evening, September 17, Haydn's Oratorio, THE CREATION.
On Wednesday Morning, September 19, Handel's DETTINGEN TE DEUM, and Spohr's Oratorio, THE LAST JUDGMENT.
On Thursday Morning, September 20, Herr Molique's new Oratorio, ABRAHAM (first time of performance), and Mendelssohn's Psalm, AS THE HART PANTS.
On Friday Morning, September 21, Handel's Oratorio, THE MESSIAH.
THREE GRAND MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS will be given on the Evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, September 18, 19, and 20, including Professor STERNDALE BENNETT'S May Queen, GLUCK'S Armida, and BENEDICT'S Undine (first time of performance, composed expressly for this Festival).
Principal Vocal Performers—Mad. CLARA NOVELLO (her last appearance in Norwich), Mad. WEISS, Miss PALMER, Mad. BORGHI-MAMO, Mr. SIMS REEVES, Mr. WILBYE COOPER, Mr. SANTLEY, Mr. WEISS, and Signor BELLETTI. Solo Pianoforte, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. Solo Violoncello, Signor PIATTI. Leaders of the Band, M. SAINTON and Mr. H. BLAGROVE. Organist, Mr. HARCOURT. Chorus Master, Mr. J. F. HILL. Conductor, Mr. BENEDICT.
On Friday Evening, September 21, a GRAND DRESS BALL, in St. Andrew's Hall, the band (of 30 performers), being conducted by Mr. Weippert.

ROGER KERRISON, } Honorary
J. B. MORGAN, } Secretaries.

FLORAL HALL, COVENT GARDEN.

LAST WEEK BUT TWO of MR. ALFRED MELLON'S CONCERTS. Last Two Nights of His Highness PRINCE GEORGE GALITZIN. Band of Eighty Performers, and Chorus of the Royal Italian Opera.

In consequence of the great success of Miss Parepa and Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Mellon has secured their services for the remainder of the series.

The Programme for Monday and Tuesday next will comprise:—Selections from the Works of the Great Masters, Overtures, Grand Operatic Orchestral Selection; Vocal Music sung by Miss PAREPA and Mr. WILBYE COOPER; Instrumental Solos; New Orgareff Quadrille, Hersen Valse, and Kosiow Polka, the compositions of Prince Galitzin, by whom they will be conducted, &c. &c.

The Chorus of the Royal Italian Opera are engaged, and will appear on Wednesday next, August 22, and on the three following evenings. On the same evening will be performed, for the first time, the Isabella Waltz, composed by Alfred Mellon.

Conductors, Prince Galitzin and Alfred Mellon. Promenade, 1s.

MISS THERESA JEFFERYS, MRS. WINN,

MESSRS. MONTEM SMITH, WINN, R. BLAGROVE, and T. HARPER, will commence a Tour on the 24th of September next, and may be engaged for Oratorios, Concerts, &c.—Apply to Mr. T. Harper, 34 Argyle Street, Euston Road, London, W.C.

GLASGOW CITY HALL SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS.

The Seventh Season opens on 1st September proximo. The Subscriber will be glad to hear from first-class Artistes and Tour Concert Parties visiting Scotland or the North of England in the course of the season.
Glasgow Abstainers' Union, 118 Union St., Glasgow. JAS. LAWSON, Sec.

A BRILLIANT PIANISTE requires an immediate ENGAGEMENT;

she would not object to go as Daily Musical Governess in a School or Family. Excellent references.—Address R., 28 Holles Street.

ORGAN METAL PIPES for SALE.—Great Organ:

Open Diapason, Gamut, G; Principal, c c; 12th, c c; 15th, c c; Dulciana Tenor, c. Swell Organ: Principal Tenor, c; Open Tenor, c; 15th Tenor, c.—G. Cope, 50 Tottenham-Court Road.

CHURCH ORGAN for SALE, built by Schwarbrook; has Three Sets of Keys and Pedals, enclosed in a richly-carved Oak Case. May be seen and heard in Trinity Church, Coventry.—For price and particulars apply to Forster and Andrews, Organ Builders, Hull.

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting LIVERPOOL will find it advantageous to engage the services of

LEE, NIGHTINGALE, & CO.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Mail, and Liverpool Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, and NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

PUBLISHING in about Twenty Numbers at 1s. each;

Post Free for Thirteen Stamps. No. 1, just ready, THE TRUE SCIENCE OF MUSIC, by D. C. HEWITT. To be had of the Author, 2 Swinton Street, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

FERRARI'S WORK

ON

THE VOICE AND SINGING,

Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,

DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,

And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.
"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.
"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER PENNY

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System of

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION; and as a NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Students, who, as soon as competent, will receive appointments to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Pianoforte	Mr. WRIGLEY. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute	Mons. DE JONG.
Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. D. ELDER.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for his first or second Orchestra.

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist.

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board and lodging, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Critical and Biographical Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.—The Athenæum of July 28 says:—"This is a very handsome publication. The price is cheap, the page is clear, and the type is good. A careful preface by Mr. Davison serves as Overture to these Mazurkas, and, as far as criticism and analysis go, is competent and well reasoned out."

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, published every Month. 100 Numbers are published, containing Grand Selections from all the best Operas, Quick Steps, Polkas, Quadrilles, Waltzes, &c., arranged for Large Brass Band, 7s. each, and for Small Band, 4s. each. A very liberal allowance to the profession. List of contents gratis.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRASS BANDS.—BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL contains Quick Steps, Troops, Marches, &c., printed in large type on small paper for pasting on Cards. Each Number contains Four Popular Marches, price 7s. for Large Band, and 4s. for Small Band.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEW NATIONAL SONG (Compass D to F♯), price 2s. 6d.—"COME, JOIN the SOLDIER BAND," Half-price (post free) of the Composer, W. T. Belcher, 153 Ashted Row, Birmingham. London: J. H. Jewell, Great Russell Street.—"Will please from its vigour and originality."—ERA.

THE FORSAKEN. Ballad. Composed expressly for Mad. Catherine Hayes, by Virginia Gabriel. Price 2s. C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU," New Song by BALFE, composed expressly for Mr. SIMS REEVES, and sung by him with the greatest success, is published, price 2s. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 5s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S newest and most popular Ballad is "I love YOU," composed expressly for him by Balfe. "I love you" was sung by Mr. Reeves, and enthusiastically encored, at Mr. G. W. Martin's Concert, Exeter Hall, Mr. Lindsay Sloper's and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts, St. James's Hall, and will be sung at Mr. Balfe's Benefit Concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens, and at the Crystal Palace Concerts. London, published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by J. W. DAVISON, "Rough wind that moanest loud" (sung by Mr. Santley at the Monday Popular Concerts); "Swifter far than Summer's flight," (sung by Miss Palmer at the Monday Popular Concerts); "False friend, wilt thou smile or weep," Beatrice's song in the Cenci (sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby, at the Monday Popular Concerts, St. James's Hall); are published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

The above Songs form Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of Vocal Illustrations of Shelley.

"Mr. Santley was encored in one of the thoroughly picturesque and poetical settings of Shelley, by Mr. J. W. Davison, mentioned a week or two since. His song, 'Rough wind that moanest loud,' is a thoroughly good song."—Athenæum.

"Madame Sainton-Dolby's greatest efforts were called forth by Mendelssohn's Night' song, and Mr. J. W. Davison's 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep' (from Shelley's 'Cenci'), to both of which she did the amplest justice. The latter work is one of the most poetical and beautiful of the 'Vocal Illustrations of Shelley,' composed by Mr. Davison many years ago, and which, though rarely heard, possess far more sterling merit than nine-tenths of the most admired songs of the day. A more intellectual treatment of the words could not well be imagined. Mr. Davison has completely caught the spirit of the poetry, and heightened its beauty by the potent charms which belong only to the sister art. 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep,' sung to perfection by Madame Sainton-Dolby, was enthusiastically applauded."

Morning Post, April 26, 1860.

Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening. C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven am. till Twelve p.m.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent).

Aug. 16, 1860.

In due order of rightful precedence I will open my budget with the doings of the Grand Opéra. The performances since my last have been divided between Semiramis and Robert le Diable, with the two débutantes, Mad. Vandenheuvel Duprez and Mlle. Maria Sax, whose successful first appearance, in the parts of Isabelle and Alice respectively, I recorded last week. The former is to make her second trial in the character of Marguerite (Les Huguenots); the latter in that of Rachel (La Juive). Last night, it being the fête of the Emperor, a gratuitous performance was given according to usage. The opera was Pierre de Medicis, and Mad. Ferraris made her first re-appearance, since her absence, in the part of Diane. A song of jubilee was executed on the occasion, the words of which were written by M. Cormon, and the music composed by M. Aimé Maillard (author of the opera of Gastibelza). Mlle. Carlotta Marchisio is studying the part of Mathilde in Guillaume Tell, and Mlle. Barbara Marchisio, the contralto, that of Azucena in the Trovatore. Early in September we are promised the Prophète, with Mad. Tedesco as Fidés. I do not remember whether I have already mentioned that M. de St. Georges had concocted a grand ballet especially to bring into relief the talents of Mlle. Livry, the young ballerina who has so quickly bounded to the pinnacle of fame. The music is composed by M. Offenbach, and the scene is said to be laid in the wild and picturesque regions of Circassia. The rehearsals are being actively carried on, and one hears great things of the opportunities which the principal character will give to Mlle. Livry for the display of her powers as a pantomimist no less than a danseuse.

The performance of L'Etoile du Nord last week at the Opéra Comique attracted a large audience, and Mad. Ugalde, as Catherine, made a marked impression. She was called before the curtain both at the end of the first act and at the close of the opera. It is reported that the manager of this establishment has had a manuscript sent him by MM. Nestor Roqueplan and Victorien Sardon (author, this latter, of Les Pattes de Mouches). The title is said to be La Villa Medicis, and there is a still further rumour that the name of the ex-manager of the Opéra Comique is only a mask beneath which is concealed that of one of the lady stars of the Théâtre Français, though which of them, in precise fact, deponent-Rumour sayeth not. To add to the piquant peculiarities of this mysterious production, the subject is said to be entirely imaginative, and the music is to be supplied by two composers. M. Faure is back again in Paris, and so pleased with his success in England that he is determined henceforth to devote himself entirely to the Italian lyrical stage. Several very advantageous engagements have already been submitted to his consideration. Meanwhile it is given out here that Mr. Gye has secured him for the next three years. This may be news to you. Another comic opera is talked of as having been accepted by M. Beaumont, to be called Les Recruteurs, the words by M. Amedée de Jalliais, the music by M. Léfebure Wély, organist of la Madeleine.

A competition of "Orphéons" having been announced to take place on the 12th at Tonneins (department of Lot et Garonne), M. A. Elwart, whom you may remember as the author of the curious "God save," distributed gratuitously at the Crystal Palace, consented, at the invitation of the Committee, to preside over their choral demonstration, in which above five and twenty societies are said to have taken part. Apropos of this subject, among the numerous publications to which the famous visit of the Orphéonists gave rise, two are said to be really worth reading; viz. "Le Voyage Comique et Orphéonique de trois mille Français à Londres," by Benjamin Gastineau, and "Le Festival de Londres et l'Orphéon Dunkerquois."

The Concert Musard will in another week or so strike its tent and depart from the Champs Elysées, where it has so valiantly distinguished itself in the cause of popularising the taste for good music. Among the achievements for which it is especially entitled to take credit is the production of Spontini's overture to Olympia, the Schiller-Marsch of Meyerbeer, and Flotow's overture, entitled Pianella.

I have had another letter from my friend at Baden-Baden, who describes the musical and theatrical activity of that happy corner of the globe as still on the increase, and no wonder; the golden showers which are ever raining over that European Eldorado foster a succession of dramatic and operatic pieces, all of which are hailed with uniform enthusiasm. The hissing serpent of criticism has no place in this paradise of poets and minstrels, where none having been tempted to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and of evil, the most benevolent smiles of approval greet every production in turn. Even the journalists who record these ceaseless triumphs dip their pens in the purest rose-water. The most severe and jealous Aristarchus would in a short time find himself gradually succumb to the relaxing influence of such a state of things. All the starch would be taken out of him, and the critical furrows of his brow be ironed out into a glassy smoothness, reflecting the facile enjoyment and bespoken smiles of all around. Among the works submitted to this pleasant ordeal is an opera by M. Gounod, the libretto of which is written by MM. Michel Carré and Jules Barbier. It is entitled La Colombe, and founded on the tale of Boccacio and La Fontaine, in which a falcon, metamorphosed into a dove, plays a principal part, and is kept by a young Florentine nobleman, under the name of Sylvia, in memory of a lady beloved. The story is followed pretty closely, except that the authors have taken the liberty to introduce another bird into the dramatis personæ, namely, a parrot, who, the property of the fair Aminta, is eagerly coveted by the fair Sylvia, her rival. The latter repairs to her lover, on whose assistance she knows she can reckon, even at the cost of his life The young man, to conceal his poverty, orders the dove to be killed and served up to table. His servant, another Caleb Balderstone, contrives to prevent the sacrifice, and when Horace and Sylvia have finished their meal, it is disclosed that the parrot, and not the dove, has supplied their repast. The subject is an odd one, and reminds us of that of the famous "song of sixpence," except that only one bird is "baked in a pie." However, of course it was wonderfully successful—poets, composer, singers—among whom were Roger, Bolanqué, Mesdames Carvalho and Faivre—all were crowned with the laurels which Baden refuses to no one. If there be anything more than usually substantial in this bubble from the Brunnens of Baden it will assuredly find its way to Paris, and then you shall have a more full and particular account of its merits, if it possess any out of the duchy of its birth. M. Benazet's new theatre is progressing rapidly. All the principal portions of the shell are up, and there is every hope of getting the roof finished before the winter. By the beginning of 1862 it is expected that the decorations of the interior will be in a state of completion. The celebrated theatrical machinist, Muhlendorf of Mannheim, who was called in to assist in the getting up of Le Pardon de Plöermel at the Opéra Comique, is to be charged with the machinery department. The inauguration of the theatre is to take place for the season of 1862, when an opera by Hector Berlioz will be produced.

From Madrid, I have heard that the Oneute will open on the 1st or 2nd of October. The troupe engaged by the manager numbers the following artists in its ranks:—Prima-donnas, Mesdames Julienne Dejean, Charton Demeur, Sarolta, Meric-Lablache, and Calderon; Tenors, MM. Fraschini and Mori; Barytones, MM. Giraldoni, Marra; Basses, MM. Bouché and Manfredi; buffo comico, M. Rovere. My informant adds the piece of intelligence, that the Queen of Spain has just conferred the order of Charles the III. on M. Alard, the French violinist, with the rank of Officer.

An Italian journal, the Trovatore, states that the number of singers of both sexes now in Italy amounts to 1,730. This aggregate is composed of 410 prima-donnas, 330 tenors, 280 barytones, 160 basses, 50 buffos, &c. In addition to these, Italy is blessed with 1,670 dancers, male and female, namely, 480 premières danseuses di rango francese, 220 premières danseusés di rango Italiano, 110 principal male dancers, 970 dancers of both sexes, of middling character (in their profession of course), and 40 ballet-masters.

As I have broached statistics, let me complete the dose by giving you the usual monthly return of the receipts in Paris, from theatres, concerts, public balls, and other entertainments. They amounted to 932,813 francs 79 centimes, being less by 87,356 francs 43 centimes than in the month of June.

To return to Italy, there has been a committee formed in Florence for the erection of a monument to Cherubini. Among the members of this committee, which was set on foot by Professor Ferdinando Morini, are the Duke di San Clemente, the Marquis Pompeo Azzelino, and Professor Edoardo Fantacchiotti, which last is to be intrusted with the execution of the monument. This homage to the memory of the composer is the more graceful as Cherubini had made France the country of his adoption.

The artists hitherto engaged by Maestro Fabricca for the opera at Lisbon, are Mesdames Gazzaniga, Malaspina, Elisa Hensler, Emilia Bellini, MM. Antonio Agresti, Neri Baraldi, and Antonucci. Among the operas which will be given is Le Pardon de Plöermel, which, by the way, is also to be done at Madrid, with Mad. Charton Demeur, and at almost all the principal theatres of Europe. Meyerbeer is now become, from Parisian only, cosmopolitan. A propos of the Franco-Teutonic maestro, a M. Ratisbonne, journalist, wishing to be superlatively complimentary to Rossini, made the following poetical parallel between the two chiefs of the modern lyrical drama—

LE JUGEMENT D'APOLLON.

Devant le Dieu de l'Harmonie
Luttaient deux hommes de génie
Les ayant entendus, il dit — "Par Jupiter
"Le plus grand musicien du monde est Meyerbeer."
"Meyerbeer!"—répartit une voix ironique—
"J'avais bien cru, pourtant, m'appeler Rossini."
"Attendez"— dit le dieu—"car je n'ai pas fini;
"Et vous, cher Rossini, vous êtes la musique."

Query — Is not the workman greater than the work? — the musician greater than the music; and therefore, oh Ratisbonne! Meyerbeer greater than Rossini? Besides making Rossini fish for the compliment, the compliment itself is an "awk stroke."

So much for a specimen of bad taste; now for an example of good sense, which we should do well to imitate in England. A vacancy for a violoncello having occurred in the orchestra of the Grand Opéra in Paris, there is to be a competition held to-morrow, and the vacant desk is to be possessed by the successful candidate. Why does not Mr. E. T. Smith vacate every stool in his orchestra and re-man them by the same safe process, entrusting the result to the verdicts of a special jury of English musicians.

The long talked of marriage of M. Henri Wieniawski with Miss Isabella Bessie Hampton, niece of Mr. George Osborne, the composer, was duly celebrated last Tuesday, at the Church of St. André (Cité d'Antin).

You may inscribe in your obituary the death of a violoncellist, M. Anton Traeg, of Prague, and M. Nicolas Joseph Mathieu, Professor of Music at Louvain.

While on the subject of deceased musicians, I am reminded of a fact which perhaps has not reached you, namely, that the musical library left by Professor Fischoff, of Vienna, has been bought for the library at Berlin. This rich collection contains no less than 3,978 pieces.

THE CONCERT SEASON.

ANOTHER London season has closed. The termination of the London musical season and the London season itself are one and the same thing, for the flight of families from town by the end of July, always as decided and important a movement as the migration of certain sections of the feathered race, leaves musical societies without patrons, and concert-givers without supporters. The season now concluded has been a brief and busy one. The majority of the musical performances were given between the 1st day of May and the last of July, and a mere statistical account of these will be interesting, as showing what an extraordinary amount can be got through in so short a time, and what a large quantity of patronage must be bestowed on the art to which these columns are devoted, it being admitted that each concert was attended by a goodly number of the public.

The list of actual societies comprises the Sacred Harmonic, Musical, Amateur Musical, Orchestral, Philharmonic, Vocal Association, Leslie's Choir, Society of British Musicians, Tonic Sol-Fa Association, London Orchestral Association, and Bach Society; to which may be added the following societies, classes, or institutions, not under the management of a committee:—Monday Popular Concerts, Hullah's Concerts, New Philharmonic Concerts, English Glee and Madrigal Union, Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society, Whittington Club Concerts, Beaumont Institution Concerts, The "Arion," London Quintett Union, London Glee and Madrigal Union, Jas. Robinson's Choir, Henken's Choral Class, St. George's Choir, Dando's Quartett Concerts, Professors' Concert Union, Peckham Musical Union, Purcell Club, Musical Union; not to mention the charitable institutions, such as the Royal Society of Musicians, the Royal Society of Female Musicians, the Society of British and Foreign Musicians, and the "Sons of the Clergy" Society, all of which have given performances in aid of their respective treasuries. Of the foregoing, perhaps, the Monday Popular Concerts have had the most continued success. With the exception of such Mondays as were claimed by the New Philharmonic Concerts—the locale, St. James's Hall, being the same—they ran weekly from the beginning of November to the beginning of July, and the audiences were invariably good. Chamber music of the very best description was presented, its execution being entrusted to the first artists, and some instrumentalists new to this country were introduced, one of whom, Herr Becker, has already become deservedly popular as a soloist, and as a leader of the stringed quartett. Liberality in the engagements, a carefully graduated and moderate scale of admission prices, and programmes of commendable brevity, as well as intrinsic excellence, have been the distinguishing characteristics of the direction, and the result is as gratifying to us, as observers of the progress of the art, as it must be to those interested in the speculation.

Amongst the most important of the orchestral concerts must be mentioned those given by Mr. Hullah, at St. Martin's Hall, as instances of individual enterprise rarely met with. With the aid of but one manager, Mr. Secretary Headland, Mr. Hullah gives performances only surpassed in magnitude by those of the Sacred Harmonic Society, while the scheme is so much the more satisfactory, as it embraces both secular and sacred music, both instrumental and choral performances; while there is no hesitation on the part of the conductor to produce untried works, or such, at least, as are unknown in this country. We note that the following complete works have been given during the past season of these concerts:—An oratorio, John the Baptist, by Hager, of Vienna; Gounod's Grand Mass, Handel's Messiah (twice) and Judas Maccabeus; Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Rossini's Stabat Mater, Haydn's Creation, and Macfarren's May Day. Dr. Wylde, too, must be specialised for enterprise. His New Philharmonic Concerts have been very liberally managed, and warmly supported. His attention has been chiefly directed to the efficient performance of great orchestral works, and he has introduced Spohr's wonderful symphony, "The Power of Sound," but he, like Mr. Hullah, has a chorus attached to his institution, and he has, moreover, presented some of the best solo vocalists, during the series of concerts, to his subscribers. The Sacred Harmonic Society, whose business-like management is, or should be, the envy of all musical institutions, has given twelve concerts, independent of the soiree d'invitation issued to the Orphéonistes during their visit. They commenced the season last year with Spohr's Last Judgment and Mozart's Requiem, and followed with the customary Christmas performance of the Messiah. Since the turn of the year they have given Handel's Samson, Judas Maccabeus, Israel in Egypt, Dettingen Te Deum, and a repetition of the Messiah in Passion Week, Haydn's Creation and Seasons, and Mendelssohn's Elijah (twice) and Lobgesang, besides taking important part in a Mendelssohn festival at the Crystal Palace on the 4th of May. The Philharmonic Society has prospered, under the direction of the accomplished Doctor and Professor Sterndale Bennett, and the Queen attended one of the concerts, an honour which she omitted last year, to the great disappointment of every one concerned. The Musical Society of London has been peculiarly successful, and has arrived at its limit as regards the number of members. The concerts, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon, have been uniformly excellent, and a very clever cantata by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, entitled Christmas, was introduced at one of them and very well received. A brilliant conversazione brought the season to a close. The Vocal Association has given but one concert with orchestra. The others have consisted of choral music interspersed with songs, &c., with pianoforte accompaniment, and one of these, at which some of the leading artistes from Her Majesty's Theatre assisted, went off with particular éclat. A conversazione was given, which to those who had attended the similar entertainment given by the Musical Society of London last year, looked somewhat of an imitation, so strong a resemblance was there in most of the details, but, as there are not many subscribers common to both societies, this was perhaps not of much consequence. Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir gave a very small number of concerts. We believe they were limited to four, if we may except a performance given for the purpose of enabling a valuable and energetic member of the choir, who had suffered from commercial reverses, to complete his musical education. This kind act on the part of an association consisting chiefly of non-professional ladies and gentlemen, met with a liberal response on that of the public, and we hear that a goodly amount was realised. The paucity of the concerts was the subject of general remark; and it might be supposed that the unfrequency of performance was a sign of failing strength, while the fact is, that, as the choir contains many substantially commercial members, these really cannot devote the time necessary for the rehearsals which Mr. Leslie very properly enforces previously to every concert. Four or five concerts in a season would not seem to be any great tax upon even a business man's time, but in previous seasons we recollect that Mr. Leslie overran the constable as regarded the number of concerts, and we expect worked the members so hard that they would not agree to meet this season except for a minimum number of performances. Next year, doubtless, we shall see the balance restored, and the happy medium of about eight concerts arranged. Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir is a most important institution. Taking the variety of the programmes into consideration, it is the best part-singing to be heard in the world.

We regret to have heard so little of the Bach Society. The wonderful success of the Passions Musik performance at St. Martin's Hall, two years ago, the subsequent execution of some selections from the same at the Leeds Festival, and the well-received introduction of a song from it at one of the Monday Popular Concerts (first season), should have encouraged the Society to give at least a repetition of the work, if not other sacred compositions of the sublime master. The London Orchestral Association does not seem to have achieved anything beyond the holding of one or two meetings for the transaction of preliminary business, but it is satisfactory to note that the society preserves its existence. The Orchestral Society, too, has been rather quiet. Its conductor, Mr. W. Rea, has been appointed organist to the Town Hall at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and as he can scarcely be expected to conduct telegraphically, we suppose sone one must have been appointed in his stead. We should think there was room for a good society for the practice of orchestral music. The Amateur Musical Society has thriven. Interest therein is spiritedly maintained, and there are always plenty of subscribers without necessity for appealing to the public. These are the only concerts in London where full dress is really indispensable. The Society of British Musicians, which, though heard little of now-a-days, has not relinquished the most important feature in its mission—viz., the representation of MS. orchestral compositions, by native authors, has given a trial of new works, and the Royal Academy of Music has exhibited its students in a short series of concerts, in which full band and chorus have been employed.

Turning to chamber music, we find that the Monday Popular Concerts have by no means absorbed the quartett-loving public. The Musical Union has been duly patronised, and two new associations have sprung up, while Mr. Dando's quartett concerts (excellent affairs, that deserve to be better known) have maintained their position. The new establishments referred to are the London Quintett Union and the Professors' Concert Union, the former with Mr. Willey for leader, the latter with Mr. Henry Blagrove. Each has given three or four concerts, and with tolerable success. The Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts has also combined some agreeable performances of chamber music with its soirees. The Whittington Club Concerts and the Beaumont Institution (the latter amongst the most spirited in the metropolis) have met with considerable support.

The choral concerts not yet noticed have been given by the London Glee and Madrigal Union, the English Glee and Madrigal Union, the St. George's Choir, Mr. James Robinson's Choir, and Mr. Henken's Choral Class. The first of these has been singularly successful, having given upwards of 100 concerts.

Amongst notable successes must be classed Mr. Gye's concerts in the Floral Hall, while the prosperous career of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed (aided latterly by Mr. John Parry), of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Paul, and of the Christy's Minstrels, which last hav vied with the other "entertainers" in alluring first-class audiences, should not pass unnoticed.

Amongst all this extraordinary success, it seems strange to us to have to chronicle three failures in the shape of opera, a species of entertainment admitted to be most attractive in the present day. English opera was started at Drury Lane by Dr. Pech, and the doors closed in a week. French opera was essayed for a longer time by M. Laurent at the Lyceum, but with ill result; and a frantic dash at English opera (with two works on the same evening!) was recently made at the Surrey Theatre, the career being likewise brief. We sincerely regretted the stoppage of the French performances; they were far from perfect, but they were considerably less imperfect than the other speculations just named, while the charm of the operettas introduced was remarkable. Offenbach's Mariage aux Lanternes provoked as much applausive enthusiasm as we ever heard in an English theatre, and we are at a loss to understand why so fresh and pleasant an institution as this French opera could not be made to pay. The Drury Lane failure did not surprise us. The band and chorus were good, and the principal artists commendable, but Dr. Pech should have confined his exertions to the management, being in no way fitted for the office of conductor. At the Surrey some good works were brought forward, but the band consisted of about twelve performers, and as neither of them could conveniently manage more than one instrument at the same time, the effect was naturally and decidedly meagre. Allusion to opera reminds us of the brilliant success of Lurline, produced in such excellent style by the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company at Covent Garden, while we may remark upon the brilliant career of this troupe as one of the features of the season.

The musical doings at the Crystal Palace, which should be reckoned amongst those of the metropolis, have been important. Six opera concerts, supported by some of the best artistes of Her Majesty's Theatre, have been given; Mlle. Piccolomini has appeared at three of the Saturday concerts, and the Tonic Sol-Fa Association and the Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society, who measure their singers by thousands, have set thrice their number of auditors wondering at the excellent training of the children. The very striking execution and exquisite tone of the Orphéonistes are yet fresh in the recollection of our town readers and such provincial perusers as had the good luck to visit London and Sydenham during the last week in June, and the brazen strains of the competitive bands last month may be adverted to as a remarkable contrast to the afore-mentioned delicate choralism. Add to these the Mendelssohn Festival, consisting (musically) of a performance of Elijah by 2,500 executants, a concert by the Yorkshire Choral Union, one by the Vocal Association with 1,000 voices, and two performances of the May Queen, and one of Mendelssohn's Son and Stranger, and it must be admitted that the Crystal Palace has not been behind in the representation of the divine art.

The list of concert-givers during the past season is worth publishing:—Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Aguilar (2 concerts), Miss Eleanor Armstrong, Master Allison (2), Mr. Balfe (3), Miss Laura Baxter, Mad. Behrens, Mr. H. Baumer (3), Mr. Benedict, Mr. R. Blagrove (2), Signor Bucalossi, Miss Emma Busby, Signor Campana, Mr. H. Carvill, Mad. Celli, Miss Chipperfield, Mr. Scotson Clark, Miss Cole, Miss Corfield, Miss Cronin, Mr. Cusins, Master Dean (3), Herr Deichmann, M. Depret, Mad. De Vaucheran, Miss De Villar, MM. Douay and Poussard, Mr. Eayres, Herr Engel and M. Lefort, Mr. Field, Mr. G. Forbes (4), Master Fox, Prince Galitzin (2), Herr Ganz, Miss Susan Goddard, Mr. Howard Glover (2), Herr Goldberg, Herr Greebe, Miss Emma Green (2), Mr. Charles Hallé, Mr. J. L. Hatton, Herr Holzel, Miss Fanny Huddart, Mr. Allan Irving, Miss Theresa Jefferys, Master Ketten, Herr Kuhe, Miss Lascelles, Mr. Lazarus, Miss Leffler, Mad. Lemmens, Mr. Lester, Miss Levesque, Herr Lidel, Mr. Martin (2), Mr. John Macfarren, Mr. McLeod, Miss Messent, Herr Moliqne, Mr. Monk, Herr Nabich, Mrs. Alexander Newton, Mr. Nickinson, Herr Oberthur, Mad. Paez, Miss Palmer, Herr Pauer, Signor Pezze, Signor Piatti, Mr. and Mrs. Pratten, Miss Poole, Mad. Puzzi, Mr. Ransford, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Brinley Richards, Mad. Rieder, Herr Ries, Mlle. Rubini, Mr. George Russell, Mad. Sainton (4), Mr. Charles Salaman, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Miss Steele, Mlle. Sedlazek, Mlle. Speyer, Miss Spiller and Miss Mackenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Tennant, Mr. John Thomas, Mr. Harold Thomas, Mlle. Valentin, Miss Van Noorden, Mlle. Vaneri, Miss Louisa Vinning, Miss Eleanor Ward, Mr. Langton Williams, Mr. Melchor Winter and Mr. B. Wells, Miss Eleanora Wilkinson, Miss Louisa Kapp Young, Signor Zisca. It makes our head whirl to think that we should have attended the greater part of these concerts, and we have yet to add the Drury Lane Promenade Concerts, an amateur performance of Mendelssohn's Antigone at Campden House, a concert by blind musicians at Hanover Square, and concerts for the benefit of the London Blind Society, a literary gentleman, Mad. Jullien, the family of the late Mr. R. Brough, the Society of British and Foreign Musicians, the Middlesex Volunteer Artillery, and the St. John's (Islington) Roman Catholic Schools. The majority of the concerts have been well attended, but what has gratified our critical senses still more has been the very remarkable fact, that scarcely a programme has appeared without at least one classical instrumental piece, a sign that a better order of music is not only tolerated but actually required.

The calm which generally succeeds such a storm of musical performances has been disturbed by a series of promenade concerts, in the Floral Hall, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon. It seems scarcely necessary to say that Mr. Alfred Mellon's name as conductor is a guarantee for the excellence of the orchestral playing, and as to the possibility of obtaining sufficient support for such an undertaking, out of the regular London season, there are still multitudes in town wanting amusement, and ready to flock to entertainments of so high a character as those announced.

MY CHURCH.

DEAR FRIEND,—Have you a little time on your hands, and will you devote it to a visit with me to my church? Come, then, let us jump into this train, and in a few hours we shall see its towering spire and comely proportions standing like a giant amid the surrounding ancient houses, where dwell the slow inhabitants of the quiet, resigned old town. Alight we now, and let us descend this eminence, from which you observe yon picturesque scene, spreading out beneath our feet. How beautifully is it varied by hill and dale, and how peaceful and calm does everything around us seem, so that we well-nigh forget the busy world we have left behind us. Let us make the best of our way through the streets, for there is little worth our time to be seen beside my church. Here it is, then. Let us enter the palisaded and far-stretching grave-yard, in the midst of which towers in holy majesty the venerable structure. We will not stay to count that numerous row of windows, for (as a recent itinerant critic remarked) they confound and dazzle our minds by their number and brightness. We will enter at once the sacred fane. I am not skilled in the technical terms of architectural lore, so will not seek to describe in that phraseology the beauty and order of the place. But is not the coup d'œil at once imposing and noble, as we stand with our backs to the altar, and note those two immense lines of majestic pillars running parallel to the gallery, where that noble organ sits like a king enthroned? Above his head soars a cherubim in shining robes, with a golden trumpet at his lips, and a scroll at his feet on which is inscribed, "O praise the God of Heaven," and a host of little cherubs are smiling down upon him. You would scarcely suppose I have heard that cherubim play upon his trumpet. I have, however. It is many, many years since. Thus it was. The choir was practising one night preparatory to the ensuing Sunday service, and the old musical king's voice called me into my church, and asked me what I thought of his harmony? To which I replied, I liked it very much indeed; when he kindly invited me to stay till the practice was ended. Accepting the invitation, I sauntered to the steps of the altar and sat down to hearken to my good old friend, as he led his joyous family on in the conduct of the service. Whilst in a state of ecstasy, brought about by the spirit-arousing strains of the combined vocal and instrumental harmony, fixing my eyes on the cherubim, but dimly seen from his giddy height above the partial light, I observed he was lustily joining in the music upon his trumpet, which caused the entire building to reply in echo, and startled from their recumbent posture the quaint old ladies and gentlemen of long-forgotten ages, who crouched in every nook and corner amid the lofty beams and rafters. Whilst looking with surprise at the odd grimaces these queer folk incessantly were making, my attention was suddenly arrested by a rustling noise of silks and satins, accompanied by the clattering of arms and spurs throughout the entire building, and on looking down I perceived that my church was now literally crammed with the worshippers of bye-gone days, clad in all the varied costumes from the time of the great Alfred to the present period; and their rich voluminous body of harmony, which at once assimilated with the already almost overpowering ocean of sound, is indelibly impressed upon the tympanum of my ear. Whilst lost in amazement at these novel sights and sounds, I observed approaching towards me a tall and noble figure, wearing a loose flowing garment, composed of the skins of wild beasts. His finely formed head was uncovered, and his hair flowed in clusters of dark curls, completely enveloping his massive shoulders. His countenance beamed with intelligence, and, with his patriarchal-looking beard, formed at once a study for the philosopher or artist. In his hand he held a helmet, gorgeously inlaid with gold and precious stones. Suspended at his side was his sword, whose scabbard glittered with costly gems; whilst on the superb shield depending from his left shoulder, I thought I descried, in ancient Gothic characters, the word "Guthrum." As he drew near, I summoned up courage to address him, and, rising and making my obeisance, I said, "I believe I have the honour of saluting the noble Dane who formerly governed the kingdom of East Anglia?" "The same," he courteously replied; and went on, in tones which harmonised delightfully with the great ocean of music around, to recount his visit to our island home for the purpose of enslaving it; but said he rejoiced to think he had suffered defeat at the hands of the magnanimous Alfred, who, after converting him to Christianity, honoured him by giving into his hands the government before alluded to. Pointing to an antique tomb in the south aisle of the church, where he said his ashes peacefully reposed till the last trumpet shall sound, he bowed and withdrew, and was soon lost to me among the assembled multitude. Seized with an irresistible desire to look more closely upon these spirits of the dead, I proceeded to shape my course down the centre aisle, where I presently observed a lovely lady, who, through some mysterious power, I knew to be the wife of Theodore Palæologus, of Pesaro, in Italy, who was descended from the Imperial line of the last Christian Emperors of Greece, and married the sweet damsel from this town. He died in 1636. Hearing, in another direction, a voice, joining in the anthem then performing, of surpassing richness and body of tone, I looked to whence it came, and was delighted to see it was from none else than the venerable Rowland Taylor, formerly rector of this parish, and who suffered martyrdom in Mary's reign. He stood, his face radiant with happiness, and a halo of glory surrounding his snow-white head, and sang triumphantly. Whilst gazing with mingled awe and reverence on the time-honoured martyr, the music for an instant entirely ceased, and I noticed that the singers were hastily leaving their places in the gallery, when the organist—ah! he was an organist! You should have seen his portly person, and rugged, strongly-marked countenance, and his grizzled hair. He looked like an educated lion, and played exactly as a lion would play if taught to finger (claw) the keys. Well, this learned monarch of the forest attacked the king of instruments on this occasion, who, in defence, sung out the Hallelujah Chorus in so majestic and overpowering a style, that eventually the lion felt himself beaten, and desisted again. Yet those two potentates loved each other, and were firm friends for more than half-a-century. And the brave old lion had a whelp who has long since grown to be the very image of the old lion, and has himself done battle with the self-same king of harmony for a quarter-of-a-century since the old monarch was summoned hence; and should he carry on the contest even longer than his venerated sire, he will finally be beaten by the strong-lunged king, who still sings as vigorously as he did before my great-great-grandfather listened to his heaven-directing notes. But I was saying the old lion at length gave in to the harmonious king. Yes, and as the last note of the chorus died away in the night air, the cherubim slackened his trumpet from his lips, and the visitors from the other world disappeared momentarily, as if by magic, and I made the best of my way out of the old church, chilly and faint, to seek my home, the fire, and my supper. This was the only occasion on which I remember to have heard the cherubim blow his trumpet. And now you can amuse yourself by looking over the very numerous monumental brasses and stones, many of them quaint, some touching, and all speaking in tones that may be rendered into the same words as those forming the lines (now obliterated, I remember,) under the sun-dial. Let me recite them to you:—

> "Where now you stand the time to spy,
> Who knows how soon you there may lye;
> Both time and place are monitory
> That you and they are transitory.
> Heaven is our temple, death the porch,
> Christ is the way, his word our torch.
> Here let us walk while we have light,
> Too late begins our work at night."

But hark! it is the whistle of the locomotive, which, like time and tide, stays for no man. Bidding the dust of my fathers for many, many generations past, and my dear old church (Ecclesia Sanctæ Mariæ) another hasty but not unfelt farewell, return we now, dear friend, to the bustling cares of busy life again. And let us not entirely forget when there, the power of music to summon up old memories, and whose tremendous and sublime office it is destined to be, to summon, at the final consummation of all things, every soul who has ever breathed the breath of life on the face of the universe, to stand before the Judge of all! . . . . "Had-LEE!" shouted an Eastern Counties Railway official in my ears, and up I jumped, and found my friend fast asleep by my side. We had but just arrived at our destination, and I remembered we had only at present visited my church in a dream.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

A MORE useful officer does not belong to the managerial staff of the Crystal Palace than Herr Auguste Manns. In a great measure the musical department is under his direction; for though he has nothing to do with the monster undertakings, which—now as the commemorations of the centenary of Handel's death, now of the fiftieth anniversary of Mendelssohn's birth, now as the celebration of the genius and life of a Scotch poet, now as the quasi-political, thoroughly fraternal and artistic reception of some thousands of French "Orphéonists"—are organised with so much energy and spirit by Mr. Bowley, "General Manager," the bonâ fide musical entertainments, exercising a legitimate influence on the prosperity of the institution, depend almost exclusively for their success upon the exertions of this gentleman. The Saturday Concerts during the winter months provide an attraction in the absence of which the visitors to Sydenham would, in all likelihood, be numerically diminished. How ably, and on what healthy principles, these concerts have been conducted need hardly be insisted on. Herr Manns, in fact, may challenge any and all of the metropolitan societies on the score of the great works he has revived, and the interesting novelties he has produced. He has recognised the merits of every school, and no thoughtful producer, whatever his claims to notice, has been overlooked. Thus, while Beethoven and Mozart are allotted their appropriate places, Schumann and Wagner are accorded frequent (too frequent?) audiences. Towards this show of eclecticism Herr Manns is possibly in some degree impelled by a very pardonable egotism. He has a compact and excellent band of instrumental performers, whose achievements in the winter season are almost as much a talk among musical circles as the quartet and sonata playing at the Monday Popular Concerts. In this band Herr Manns reposes unlimited confidence. He believes it capable of solving any problem, however difficult—from the ninth symphony of Beethoven to the overture constructed on a Chinese melody, which Weber composed (together with a march and other pieces) for Schiller's Turandot. Strong in this faith, he has submitted to his orchestra all sorts of tasks; and it is only fair to say that his confidence has never been misplaced. In December, January, and February, the loss of the Philharmonic Concerts, of those of the New Philharmonic, and the Musical Society of London, is more or less atoned for by the Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace, in the progress of which (thanks exclusively to Herr Manns) more interesting performances of orchestral music are to be heard than the three societies together could by any possibility—in accordance with the exigencies of their separate constitutions—bring forward within the same interval of time. Not, however, to proceed further in this matter, the weekly performances, directed by Herr Manns, during four or five of the gloomiest months of the year, constitute one of the features not only in every sense creditable to, but conferring a particular distinction on the Crystal Palace, which it would be well if it could earn, with equally solid claims, in other departments.

On Saturday afternoon a concert was held in the name of Herr Manns, who had no reason to complain, as other musical speculators have done, time out of mind, that his benefit took place in the "Dog days"—for never did the star "in ore majoris canis" exercise its traditional prerogative more "gingerly" than in A.D. 1860. The weather was cold, and thus by no means propitious to an entertainment celebrated in a glass house—some eight miles as the train jogs, or some six as "the crow" flies, from this warm and (under the actual meteorological conditions) comfortable metropolis. Nevertheless such were the attractions put forth by Herr Manns, that a large concourse of amateurs, defiant of wind and weather, were assembled in the music-room of the Crystal Palace before the hour advertised for commencement. We shall not attempt to criticise. Enough that the programme was more than sufficiently attractive to sustain the reputation of the concert-giver. Among other novel points was Mozart's operetta, entitled Der Schauspiel-Direktor (the Theatrical Director—L'Impresario—"The Lumley," in short), which, containing an overture and some vocal pieces, was composed to satisfy a whim of Joseph II. of Austria—Mozart's indulgent but not over munificent patron. The light and sparkling overture had more than once tested the powers of Herr Manns' little orchestra; but the vocal music was heard for the first time at the Crystal Palace. Having been written at the time for wholly exceptional voices, possessed by singers, moreover (especially in the instance of the two ladies), with talents no less than voices "apart," it was agreeable to find four modern artists (three of them English)—viz., Miss Parepa, Miss Eleonora Wilkinson, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Signor Belletti—so capable of realising the conceptions of the immortal musician, who rarely abandoned his beau idéal of art to exhibit the peculiarities of individual performers, and whose dereliction in the present case may be possibly explained by the nature of the plot submitted to him at the instance of the Emperor Joseph, and of which the following is an outline:—

"A manager, endeavouring to organize an operatic troupe for a provincial theatre, has invited performers to call at his office and give specimens of their powers. The operetta introduces Signora Argentina, assuring the manager she is the greatest singer of the day, and, as a test of her ability, executing the aria, 'Caro amante il cor mi dice.' While her last notes are being uttered appears a rival, Signora Dulcinea, who, convinced the manager will confess her the greatest prima donna, sings her favourite solo, 'Suonar gia l'ora io sento addio.' Pleased with both, the perplexed impresario finds it impossible to decide which it will be best to accept. This state of things gives rise to a lively trio, in which each of the ladies alternately urges her claims and contradicts those of her rival, peace being at last made by the interference of Signor Ruosignuolo, tenor, who expresses fear that, unless matters are arranged, there will be ruin, not only to all prospect of success, but to the voices of the rivals. Unfortunately, the calm thus produced is but temporary; again each lady urges her supremacy, the tenor counselling peace and quietness, 'Ehi! piano, piano, calando, decrescendo, piano, pianissimo!' The manager at last settles the question satisfactorily, by engaging both ladies. While they and Ruosignuolo are congratulating each other on this turn of fortune, they are joined by Signor Buff, who boasts that he is the first 'buffo' of the company, because his name only wants an O to vindicate his claim to the title."

What Mozart did with this—three quarters of a century since—every one knows who knows anything of Mozart and his music, although Herr Manns seems to have thought that no one knew anything about it beyond the musical precincts of the Crystal Palace. The active and intelligent musical director of that establishment, however, is to be thanked for bringing forward such a petit chef d'œuvre (which, though familiar to many, is still unfamiliar to the majority) on the occasion of his benefit-concert. Equally grateful must connoisseurs have felt for Weber's very rarely performed overture to Turandot, which if not one of the best is at least one of the most curious and original of that great master's works. The same composer's Polonaise in E, and Liszt's fantasia on the skating music of the Prophète—executed by Herr Klindworth, a skilful and thoroughly accomplished pianist of the modern school; three very clever and interesting compositions by Herr Manns himself—a violin concertino, played by Herr Pollitzer; a ballad ("We met, 'twas in the silent bower"), sung by Miss Parepa; and a march, entitled "The British Volunteer; some part-songs by the St. George's choir; vocal pieces, allotted to Miss Augusta Thomson, Mlle. Von Kettler, and M. Agniez (a highly promising singer); and Beethoven's great overture to Leonora (Fidelio, No. 3), made up the sum total of a programme in all respects worthy of Herr Manns' acknowledged research, and conducted by him with his accustomed vigour and talent.

ALBONI THE "COSY."

(From the London correspondence of the Liverpool Albion.)

LIKE certain of our sublunary luminaries of the lucus a non lucendo order, the eclipse seems to have changed its mind, and to have come back here for a long time this evening, so as to make up for its shortcomings the other day. Darkness, and nothing but darkness, except the lightning, has been visible all the afternoon. Gas turned on at five o'clock; blinds pulled down at six; fires poked up at seven; and wintry etceteras thence till bedtime; rain, of course, descending all the while in a way sufficient to give a mermaid the rheumatism. Pleasant this at the tail of the dog days; —days that would be improperly so called, indeed, were it not for the number of sad dogs on two legs who are going mad, not with heat, but want of it, not with the sun, but because there is no sun; and whenever there is a moon the man in it seems to have hydrocephalus, or water on the head, and looks idiotic enough to be polled M.P. for Marylebone. As to the cold, perhaps a more conclusive proof could not be given than this: — On beholding Alboni, as Fatima, in Oberon, at Her Majesty's Theatre, clothed in scarlet velvets and flamingo satins, and wearing a turban with folds enough to serve as a wine-cooler in Sierra Leone, instead of exclaiming "Good gracious!" and going into a Turkish bath perspiration at the apparition, you simply feel how comfortable she looks in being able, in virtue of natural advantages, to dispense with crinoline, and yet remain quite a la mode as to circumferenciality. And your satisfaction at the contemplation of so substantial a subject is enhanced by the conviction that the honey-throated syren herself is obviously as cosy as a turtle, of which she is a fac-simile; at least the turtle would be of her were it placed in a perpendicular position. But that would certainly not be a la mode; for uprightness is quite antiquated, and crooked ways alone suit the bent of these sinister times, wherein left-handedness is profitable and therefore respectable.

To Correspondents.

ERGO.—Assuredly not.

TANTUM.—By all means.

DELTA.—The Carillon National, which the unfortunate Marie Antoinette was so fond of singing, and which accompanied her to execution, began as follows:—

Ah! ça ira, ça ira, ça ira,
Le liberté s'établira.
Ah! ça ira, ça ira, ça ira.
Malgré les méchants tout réussira.

REVIEWS.—Our reviews of new publications will be resumed in our next number.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1860.

SINCE the closing of the Royal Italian Opera, there has been a remarkable silence in all the music halls and opera houses of London. At the beginning of July we had two Italian Operas open, and considered ourselves fortunate if there were not more than a brace of concerts to attend every morning and evening. Now, Covent Garden and Her Majesty's Theatre are both shut, Exeter Hall is given up to missionaries and reformed drunkards—the intemperate apostles of teetotalism—while in the Hall of St. James's no sweet sounds are heard save the occasional popping of Champagne corks, and that music so dear to Sganarelle (and to M. Gounod) the ever-welcome glouglous de la bouteille.

Qu'ils sont doux,
Bouteille jolie,
Qu'ils sont doux,
Vos petits glougloux!
Mais mon sort ferait bien des jaloux
Si vous étiez toujours remplie;
Ah! bouteille, ma mie,
Pourquoi vous videz-vous?

Or as some facetious Latinist has rendered it, with more regard for sense than for sound:—

Quàm dulces
Amphora amœna,
Quàm dulces
Sunt tuæ voces!
Dum fundis merum id calices,
Utinam semper esses plena:
Ah! ah! cara mea lagena,
Vacua cur jaces?

In the South of London, at the distant Surrey Gardens, and at Sydenham and other provincial places, there have been concerts even during the last week, but also there have been days in this said week (ending August 11th) when "not a drum"—nor any other musical instrument—"was heard," with the exception, of course, of barrel organs, which, however, strictly speaking, cannot be classed as musical instruments at all. A Londoner attending the Crystal Palace Concerts just now would have to go a very long way for a very little music, though Mlle. Parepa and Mlle. Artôt have been singing there these latter Fridays. Letters from Sydenham, moreover, inform us that Mozart's Impresario has been recently performed at the Crystal Palace Theatre, which possesses a stage and a proscenium, but which is sadly in want of scenery, dresses, and above all of a license from the Lord Chamberlain. A theatre in which no one acts is of use for all sorts of purposes, but a theatre in which an affectation of acting is kept up, and in which, costumes and scenery being wanting, no dramatic illusion can possibly be produced, is an absurdity, and to us a terrible annoyance—not to say an awful bore. Let the vocalists sing as much as they please, and the more the better, of Mozart's Impresario, and of Mendelssohn's Son and tranger, but if they will take our advice (and otherwise we will not listen to them) they will abandon all histrionic pretensions in executing the music of those operas at the Crystal Palace Theatre, as that theatre exists at present. Such exhibitions are like rehearsals minus the interest of novelty which usually belongs to a rehearsal when an amateur of some experience takes the trouble to attend one. An opera or any kind of drama performed without scenery, and by actors in plain clothes, is as ridiculous a spectacle as that of dancers dancing without music; and a comic opera represented in such a fashion excites in us only the bitter laughter of contempt. Fortunately there is Strange (who still lives in spite of the castigation we once administered to him in these columns), and we confess that, as things are now managed at the Crystal Palace, we prefer the "Impresario" of the refreshment room to the Impresario of the sceneless, costumeless theatre.

But even these musical performances that we so much object to only take place on rare occasions, and when they do, no one knows much about them in London—in London, where it is understood that after the 31st of July all voices worth hearing must be silent, and that no sounds, either of trombone, ophicleide, cymbals, Chinese drum, or any kind of musical instrument must meet the ear.

In the midst of this silence a voice has arisen in the Floral Hall, the voice of one Mellon, crying to us from the Garden! De floribus clamavit, and who has not listened to the well-speaking Alfred, assuring us in his own persuasive style that his glass concert-room, of which the panes make vibratory response to every note, is admirably constructed for sound? Good for sound? why it is as excellent in that respect as our own Crystal Palace, or as that vitreous edifice of our neighbours, called the Palais de l'Industrie.

And now there is to be an end to this period of utter dulness, to this bad, soundless interval between the summer and winter seasons. The autumn of our discontent is to be rendered joyful by the strains of such music as can be made by singers like Parepa, or by players like those who compose the orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera. Ten days ago it was supposed that neither for love nor for money could good music be heard again in London until the winter season had fairly commenced. Love alone could scarcely enable one to hear much good orchestral music even now (unless some very attractive young lady, such as ——— could cause an entire band to become simultaneously and harmoniously enamoured of her), but it can be done for money, and at prices ranging from five shillings down to only one.

Is it not kind of Mr. Alfred Mellon and generous of Prince Galitzin to give us concerts of overtures, airs, operatic selections, polkas, and even solos on that charming instrument the cornet at a time when we have scarcely recovered from a prolonged and twofold attack of Italian opera, and are just expecting a serious festival, with another one still more trying "looming in the distance?" to use a tiresome expression which Disraeli is supposed to have invented long since, and which every wretched scribbler, including ourselves, persists in making use of as if it had only just occurred to him. Yet it is of these concerts that we must speak, and we are sure His Highness and His Esquireship will believe us when we say that we are not disposed to exaggerate their merits. Nevertheless, fiat justitia! May the Floral Hall tremble, may every pane in its glass roof be smashed rather than that we should in any way conceal the truth in this matter. London is dull, and our ears are weary, but Mellon's concerts are good. Operatic selections, in which the soprano airs are given to the bassoon and the bass airs to the piccolo, are irritating, but there are no better solo players than those belonging to Mellon's orchestra at the Floral Hall. The cornet even when played on the top of an omnibus is a nuisance, but without a cornet solo no promenade concert is considered complete. What sort of food are polkas and waltzes for one who has just risen, fatigued if not satiated, from the divine banquets of Mozart, and for whom even the light and exquisite dishes of Rossini have no longer any attractions? Nevertheless, Prince Galitzin's polka is excellent, and does honour to "Koslow," after which it is named, and which (to blend geographical instruction with criticism) is one of the principal towns in the government of Tamboff, where the composer habitually resided, and where he formed his celebrated choir. Similarly admirable is his "Herzen Walts," though, as regards the title, we must say that Mr. Herzen always seemed to us far too serious, not to say ferocious a republican, to suggest any notion of such an agreeable and harmless occupation as waltzing. Of equal merit, we have no doubt, is the Prince's new Russian quadrille — but in the meanwhile why does this composer, with the high abilities he has proved himself to possess, confine himself altogether to the production of dance music?

In conclusion shall we tender our thanks to Mr. Alfred Mellon and Prince George Galitzin for giving us these vocal and instrumental concerts in the middle of August? Well, not personally and speaking from our own heart, for we would rather just now be in the Highlands, or in the Tyrol, or in Paris, or even in Kozlow itself than in or near Covent Garden; but as representatives of the public we think we may say that we are really very much obliged.

IN the enumeration of those who obtained a high reputation by their contributions to the pianoforte, it would hardly be just to omit the name of FERDINAND RIES, a distinguished and voluminous composer of the Moscheles' period. Ries was one of the few who enjoyed the honour and advantage of Beethoven's counsel. A man of great industry and talent, he wanted nothing but genius to conduct him to the highest results. But invention and imagination were denied; and Ries, like others before him, strove to make up in quantity for what was lacking in quality. He composed in every style. Oratorios, operas, symphonies, quartets, and chamber music of all forms and varieties, came from his pen with equal readiness. It was a matter of indifference to Ries what he undertook. He would set about an oratorio, a symphony, or an air with variations with the greatest nonchalance. He possessed the facility which is mistaken for genius by those who have not the gift of analysis, to so great a degree that it led him into twaddle and prolixity almost as often as it enabled him to accomplish good things. His amazing ease of production militated against his fame. Nevertheless, being a cultivated musician, whatever Ries gave to the world would stand the test of critical examination, and, if accused of exuberance and insipidity, could not be condemned for clumsiness. Thoughtful and ambitious, much and rapid as he wrote for the publishers, Ries had always time to devote to a class of compositions for which those gentlemen are known to entertain an instinctive aversion. In the midst of his teaching, his public playing, his occupations as Kapelmeister and conductor at some of the great musical meetings in Germany*, symphonies, concertos, quartets, would issue from his portfolio as regularly and in as quick succession as though his whole time had been taken up in manufacturing them. Ries loved his art, and it was no fault of his that he did not influence it in a greater degree. He had all the will to do great things, and entertained a full conviction that what he wrote was for all time and would entitle him to a place beside the great masters. But unhappily it was not for him to decide upon this matter; his cotemporaries thought differently of the merits and influence of his works, and, now that he is no more, posterity has put the seal upon their verdict.

The pianoforte compositions of Ferdinand Ries are very numerous, and may serve as well as anything else to help us to a general estimate of his talent. He wrote concertos, sonatas, trios, duets, and smaller pieces of almost every denomination. He was a first-rate pianist, and his music naturally presents much that is interesting, and more that is eminently useful, to the student of the pianoforte. He was thoroughly acquainted with the sonata form, and has left many excellent proofs of his knowledge. There is, however, a certain dryness about his works which prevented them from being popular while he lived, and has since consigned the greater part of them to oblivion, although Ries has not been dead many years. The most celebrated of his larger compositions for the pianoforte is the concerto in C sharp minor, which is even now frequently used as a piece for display. There are some very fine ideas in this concerto which abounds in difficult bravura passages that require a great command of the instrument to play effectively. The opening is grand and passionate, and the whole of the first movement good—perhaps the best effort of the composer. The slow movement and rondo are much inferior, and the instrumentation, after the first tutti, presents very few points of interest. The Studies of Ries are admirable as manual exercises*; and, for a brilliant morceau in the popular style, his fantasia on "Those Evening Bells" is, perhaps, as good in its way as anything of the kind that has been produced. The sonatas of Ries are all well written, and, in spite of a tendency to redundant detail, may be consulted with advantage both by pianist and composer. In none of them, however, do we find indications of those high qualities which entitle their possessor to rank among the composers of real genius.

* Ries was conductor of the triennial festival of the Rhenish cities of Aix-la-Chapelle, Cologne, and Dusseldorf, for some years. In 1835-6 he shared that office with Mendelssohn, who selected Dusseldorf, while Ries chose Cologne.

Aloys Schmidt, a German musician who resided many years at Frankfort, and Kuhlau, a flute-player, both deserve mention among the pianoforte writers of the epoch. The former, a professor of deserved eminence, is chiefly known by his Studies, which should be diligently practised by all who wish to acquire mechanical proficiency. The latter, in some duets for flute and piano (the best things of the kind extant), has shown a great familiarity with the sonata form, in which he writes with fluency, clearness, and effect.

Marschner, a popular and well-known dramatic composer, has written some sonatas for the pianoforte, which, like his operatic music, smells strongly of Weber, whose mannerisms even are exaggerated by the composer of Der Vampyr. These sonatas, nevertheless, are worth perusal, although they are written so awkwardly for the instrument, that we are led to conclude Marschner was not a pianist.

Reissiger, and his trios, are well enough known by all amateurs to save us the necessity of dilating on their merits, which lie not very deep beneath the surface. They are good show pieces, and that is all. Pianist, violinist, and violoncellist, can each shine to his heart's content, without any prodigious amount of exertion, or any extraordinary display of skill. Hence their extensive popularity. Their form, however, is clear, and though the ideas are poor and the general style commonplace, the interest attached to the sonata form is so inevitable that even musicians can listen to these trios with some degree of interest. This must be our excuse for mentioning Reissiger, who, except as a manufacturer of easy pieces for amateurs, has had very little influence on the art, and has no claim to be ranked among the great composers for the pianoforte.

Among the successful imitators of Mendelssohn we should have cited Kufferath, a pianist and composer of some distinction, resident at Brussels. Kufferath has written some excellent Studies, which develope with great success many of the peculiarities of the modern style. Their practice cannot fail to promote the acquirement of that mechanical facility which is indispensable to those who desire to excel as public players.

* A set of Six is published at Chappell's, New Bond Street.

THE RAIN CONCERT.

Millions of tiny drops
Are falling all around;
They're dancing on the house-tops,
They're hiding in the ground.

They are fairy-like musicians,
With anything for keys,
Beating tune upon the windows,
Keeping time upon the trees.

A light and airy treble
They play upon the stream,
And the melody enchants us
Like the music of a dream.

A deeper bass is sounding
When they're dropping into caves;
With a tenor from the zephyrs,
And an alto from the waves.

O, 'tis a stream of music,
And Robin "don't intrude,"
If, when the rain is weary,
He drops an interlude.

It seems as if the warbling
Of the birds in all the bowers,
Had been gathered into rain drops
And was coming down in showers.

Dwight's Boston Journal.

SPONTINI.*

Towards the end of July 1831, there was a rehearsal, in the concert-room of the Theatre Royal, Berlin, of Marschner's opera, Der Templer und die Jüdin, which was to be given on the 3rd August, the birthday of the late king. The principal artists, the chorus, and the band were all assembled, and the worthy G. A. Schneider was the conductor. Among the small number of persons present as audience, was the amiable and estimable Prince Anton Radziwill, a clever artist and friend of art. The rehearsal had commenced some considerable time, when a peculiarly distinguished individual appeared in the room, and, advancing with a light silent step towards the Prince, held out his hand to greet him. Although by no means tall, the slim aristocratic figure of the new-comer seemed to exceed the ordinary height. Prince Radziwill cordially shook hands with the gentleman, who was a stranger to us, and who wore white trousers, a white waistcoat, and a white cravat, a rather light-blue dress-coat, decorated with orders, shoes and gaiters. A person connected with the theatre, to whom we were indebted for our admission, informed us that the individual who had just entered was Spontini. We should much sooner have supposed him to be an old French nobleman of the Faubourg St. Germain, an Italian Colonel in private clothes, the Spanish Ambassador, or the President of the Cortes, than a musician. After we had had an opportunity of observing him more nearly, we recollected that, a considerable time previously, we had seen a portrait, which represented the author of the Vestalin, as a young man of some twenty odd years. The likeness between the picture and the original before our eyes was certainly not striking, but still there was a faint resemblance in some of the features.

Of all the portraits of Spontini, a Parisian lithograph by Grevedon is the best known, and is still to be found in the possession of many of the celebrated composer's admirers. Grevedon has, however, so idealised the head, that he may be said to have overstepped the right of the portrait-painter to treat his subject as favourably as possible. Spontini had a peculiar, imposing, and intellectual, but by no means a handsome face; his form was thin, but his carriage noble and aristocratic, while his manners were pleasing, though not, properly speaking, affectionate and engaging.

Neither he nor his wife, formerly a Mlle. Erard of Paris, by whom he never had any children, and whose conduct, like his own, was most exemplary, ever felt at home during a residence of more than two decades in Berlin. With regard to the German language, each of them learned just enough to speak on those matters which more especially concerned his or her position.

* From the Berliner Musik-Zeitung.

Spontini himself knew about sufficient German to say the most indispensable things, when he was perfectly calm, at rehearsal; but, as soon as he became excited—which he very easily did—he spoke French, and Möser, who, when the General Music-Director conducted the performance, always acted as leader, or the operatic stage manager, Carl Blum, was obliged to undertake the task of dragoman.

Of "Madame Spontini"—Spontini never called his wife otherwise—it is related that, in the course of twenty years she hardly managed to pick up a hundred German words, all relating to household matters, and the fact that she had all her own body linen, as well as that of her husband, washed in Paris and not in Berlin, excited among the matrons of the latter city who heard of it the greatest astonishment. It must, however, be admitted that Spontini's linen was always incomparably white and fresh, while his invariably white cravats, and more especially the so-called "father-murderers" (vatermörder)* reaching up to a level with the nostrils, and which, as we remember hearing from his own lips, he wore of this size "for the sake of warmth," attained a certain comical celebrity in Berlin. He produced the impression of a Grand Seigneur from the Faubourg St. Germain, and we are inclined to doubt that, even had he made himself perfectly master of the German language, he would ever have succeeded in becoming popular and sought after in the musical and social circles of Berlin. In the first place, he was really a man of too great intellect to be understood by the majority of those persons who, from the time he entered on his duties, thought they must attack him "in the interest of German art," and, in the next place, he was, with justice, too proud to descend to an intimacy with individuals of merely moderate abilities, and flatter those whom he thoroughly despised.

If we are not mistaken, Spontini first came to Berlin in 1819. Among the persons who approached him with admiration and attached themselves to him was the genial E. T. A. Hoffmann, Kammergerichtsrath, who died, we think, in 1823—greatly to Spontini's disadvantage—and, consequently, could not protect him from the storms which one after another broke over his head. The circle of Spontini's intimate friends was a very limited one, particularly in a musical point of view. It was only with such persons as were masters of French that he could discourse freely without assistance; consequently, with one person who in purely Berlin musical and social circles was a most important and leading man, we mean old Zelter, an intimacy, such as should exist between colleagues, was completely out of the question.

Zelter was a very long-headed and practical man. Even his rudeness, since proverbial, was mostly cunning calculation. There was scarcely another person in the city so well acquainted with, and so able to form an opinion on, the social and artistic affairs of Berlin as he was. Had it been possible to establish between him and Spontini friendly relations such as became two colleagues, he would have found means to protect the General Music-Director against all the storms and plagues prepared for him by envy, falsehood, and calumny.

Two younger men, as musicians towering far above Zelter, Bernhard Klein and Ludwig Berger, were not on a more intimate footing with Spontini; nay, the former, equally worthy of respect, both as an artist and a man, was, after the production of his opera, Dido, the small success of which was put down to the account of the General Music-Director, placed in a very painful position towards the latter. Neither Spontini nor Bernhard Klein, a thoroughly noble-minded man, was to blame for this misunderstanding, but solely and wholly some of Klein's friends, who pushed the just admiration they entertained for his musical capabilities—in many respects very considerable and highly cultivated—to the conviction, totally destitute of any foundation, that he must, in addition to everything else, necessarily be a great operatic composer.

Among Spontini's most intimate associates—and this is a characteristic fact—there never was any pre-eminent Berlin artist; there were only two or three musical dilettanti, ready to expire with endless admiration—either real or affected—for him. These persons, seated at his well-served table, used to regale him with the coarsest flattery, and think proper to deceive him continually as to the real feelings and opinions of the musical public in Berlin. After one of the most absurd pieces of calumny, namely, that Spontini had not composed Die Vestalin himself, had found credit, it was an easy task to sow other lies about him among the people, and these lies fell upon equally good ground. Some of them were, for instance, to the effect that he, being a foreigner, either excluded all the operas by German composers from the repertory, or when, despite his great power, he could not prevent the production of one now and then, that he knew how to arrange matters so that the work should have no success.

(To be continued.)

* Anglice: "Collaro." I have been informed in Germany that the reason why these apparently harmless articles of dress were branded by so sanguinary an appellation as "Father-Murderers"—perhaps "Parricides" would be more elegant—was that some wicked young men, wishing to get rid of their father, but fearing to employ arsenic, the knife, or any other of the usual means of assassination, prevailed on their too confiding progenitor to wear immense shirt collars, so stiff that they absolutely cut his throat. I give the legend as I heard it, but I do not think I would vouch for its truth.—J. W. B.

FLORAL HALL.

At this dreary period of the year, midway between the summer and winter season, the paucity of musical entertainments of any pretension or character has been much felt by that unhappy section of Londoners who are prevented, by business or other causes, from leaving this wilderness of bricks and mortar and tasting the breezy freshness of the seaside, the bracing atmosphere of the moors, or invigorating themselves by aught in the shape of change of air. For one month, at least, this hiatus seems likely to be filled up, and following in the steps of the late M. Jullien, Mr. Alfred Mellon has successfully inaugurated a series of concerts on a scale which bids fair to be attractive to the public, and let us also hope remunerative to the entrepreneurs. An orchestra of some eighty members, comprising the pick of the famous band of the Royal Italian Opera, together with a selection from the chorus of the same establishment, in addition to solo vocalists of reputation, had the effect of drawing together a thoroughly appreciative audience, who welcomed our talented English conductor with a degree of enthusiasm that is only accorded to special favourites upon special occasions. The National Anthem, of course, took the initiative, and was followed by a remarkably fine performance of Mendelssohn's overture, Ruy Blas; to this succeeded the scena, "Ah me, he comes not," from John Barnett's too-much-neglected opera, Fair Rosamond, given with remarkable energy by Miss Augusta Thomson. The somewhat hackneyed, albeit effective, part-song of Pearsall's, "Oh who will o'er the downs so free," and Mendelssohn's ever-charming "O hills, O vales of pleasure," were both re-demanded and repeated, while the elegant, sparkling, and original Herzen Valse of Prince Galitzin, admirably conducted by the noble composer, and Mr. Hughes's ophicleide solo, "Il mio tesoro" were both loudly applauded. The admirable execution of the "Scherzo and Storm" from Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony made us regret that Mr. Mellon should have given this movement only, and not the symphony in its entirety, as the effect is utterly destroyed by its isolation from the body of the work. With the experience of the Monday Popular Concerts, where week after week crowded audiences are found, who not only sit out, but thoroughly enjoy the quartets and other chamber music provided for them, Mr. Mellon need not fear that a symphony, whether of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, or Mozart, is too long for the British public, who, thanks to the late M. Jullien, have shown themselves quite as ready to do justice to these grand works as the more aristocratic listeners of the Philharmonic or other high-priced Societies; and when we remember what triumphs the Orchestral Union achieved under Mr. Alfred Mellon we can only again express our regret, not unmingled with surprise, at the mutilation of such a masterpiece, and trust we shall not have future cause to complain of so grave an offence against the giants of art at the hands of one who so thoroughly understands and venerates them. The overture to Zampa brought the first part of the concert to a spirited close. A selection from the Favorita, with solos for cornet-a-pistons, flute, ophicleide, violin, and violoncello, commenced the second part. Miss Parepa was encored in the cavatina from Mr. Alfred Mellon's Victorine, repeating the last movement, and also gave again the second verse of "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," in answer to the demand for its repetition. In obedience to the unanimous desire of the audience, Prince Galitzin repeated the "Sanctus" of Bortniansky; but the second performance was so indifferent that it resulted in nothing less than a break-down, which the audience, however, treated very good-humouredly, and upon the Prince stopping the chorus and recommencing, testified their approbation by hearty applause. The stirring and delicious Kozlow Polka, by Prince Galitzin, was also repeated, making no less than five encores out of seven pieces. The concert concluded with the splendid and brilliant finale of Glinka's opera Life to the Tzar. We need hardly add that the appearance of the hall was most elegant, and afforded unqualified satisfaction to all present.

At the second concert (on Tuesday) the attendance was very good, especially in the cheaper part of the hall, and everybody seemed to enjoy the light and gay appearance of the glass-house, brilliantly lit up as it was by jets of gas, tastefully as fancifully arranged. The conductors were again Prince George Galitzin and Mr. Alfred Mellon, who by turns wielded the baton of command over one of the finest bands this country can boast; and the singers were Mlle. Parepa and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. The principal orchestral pieces were Mendelssohn's overture to Ruy Blas, the Scherzo, Storm, and (on this occasion) Finale, from Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony; Hérold's overture to Zampa, and an "operatic selection" from Donizetti's Favorita; solos as before. The two overtures were played to perfection, and as much may be said, in most respects, for the operatic selection.

"The performance of Beethoven's music," says the Morning Post, "was less satisfactory. We did not like to hear the oboe solo in the scherzo played in considerably slower time than that in which the movement had been started by the conductor, firstly, because it is the duty of every orchestral player—even M. Barret—to obey the baton; and secondly, because the time indicated was quite correct. Neither were we at all pleased with the rendering of the last movement marked allegretto, but taken up at a rate of speed more fitly described as allegro assai, and which made the distinct performance of certain passages (those, for instance, in which the basses repeat floral figures previously assigned to the violins) utterly impossible."

The only pieces conducted by Prince Galitzin were the already popular Herwen Waltz and Surprise Polka, composed by himself. The latter was unanimously redemanded. A really wonderful performance by Mr. Hughes upon that unwieldy and ungrateful instrument the ophicleide, and Mlle. Parepa's well-known version of the "Shadow Song," were likewise encored. Great applause was also elicited by Mr. Wilbye Cooper in Donizetti's "Una furtiva lagrima;" and his execution, with Mlle Parepa, of Verdi's duet, "Parigi, O cara," evoked another demand for repetition. On the whole the concert was highly interesting, and it must be admitted that such entertainments as this are a real boon to the musical public at the present (in every respect) "dull" time of the year.

The performances on Thursday evening were distinguished by a new quadrille on Russian airs, the composition of Prince Galitzin. The quadrille possesses the elements of popularity, the tunes being highly original and piquante, and the setting most admirable and striking. The introduction of the National Russian Hymn at the end, of course, does not belong to the quadrille proper, being employed merely as a finale to the whole piece. The new quadrille was received with immense favour, and the last figure unanimously encored.

The attendance has increased greatly since the first night, and will, we have no doubt, increase still further, when the excellence of the programme and the completeness of the band are more widely known. It deserves to be especially noticed that the performance on that night opened with Beethoven's symphony in C, No. 1, the entire work, and that the audience were delighted beyond measure with each particular movement, the finale eliciting the greatest enthusiasm.

Apropos of Prince Galitzin and the Floral Hall Concerts, we beg to quote the following remarks from the pages of our cotemporary, the Morning Chronicle:—"What gave greatest éclat, however, to the attractions was the announcement that Prince George Galitzin, the illustrious Russian amateur, whose name has already grown into a household word with the London musical public, had proffered his assistance to Mr. Mellon, and volunteered to conduct a part of the programme in the first eight concerts, placing at his (Mr. Mellon's) disposal several pieces of his own composition. Prince Galitzin is described in the bills—with no flattery, be it understood—as 'a nobleman whose lifetime has been enthusiastically devoted to the study of music, and who, whether considered as a composer or as an orchestra conductor, might well lay claim to rank among the most accomplished professors of the day.' Such, indeed, is the fact; and perhaps the history of music does not present a second instance of a man of such high position among the nobles of the land foregoing all the honours and dignities of his rank, and placing himself as a simple labourer among simple artists. The reception accorded to Prince Galitzin proved unmistakeably that the public appreciated his exertions in the good cause, convinced that a real artist only could make such sacrifices."

UNIFORM MUSICAL PITCH.

[The following circular has been forwarded for signature to the principal members of the Profession.]

Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, Adelphi, London, W.C.—The Council of this Society, desirous of remedying the inconvenience resulting to musical practice from the prevalent uncertainty of Musical Pitch, called together a Meeting of Musicians, Musical Amateurs, and Musical Instrument Makers, in the month of June, 1859. At this Meeting, after protracted discussion, a unanimous Resolution was passed, declaring that the adoption of one uniform Musical Pitch was desirable, and with a view to determine what this pitch should be, a Committee was appointed to make investigation and to report. This Committee, after careful consideration, made their Report, showing the results of their investigations, and the same was laid before a General Meeting, held at the Rooms of this Society, on the 5th of June, 1860; and the Meeting, after a full discussion, Resolved:—"That the Pitch of 528 vibrations for C be recommended for universal adoption in this country."

We, the undersigned, Musicians, Musical Amateurs, and Manufacturers of Musical Instruments, desire to express our full concurrence in the above Resolution, and our intention, individually, to use and to promote the adoption of this Pitch, so far as lies in our power.

[We are of opinion that the names of the musicians and connoisseurs who attended the Meeting at which the above decision was adopted, should be added to the circular, as a testimony—for those who were absent, if not able to be present, and whose signatures are demanded — of the weight that should be attached to it.—Ed. M. W.]

Madame Jullien starts on Wednesday for a tour in the provinces, which is to last three weeks. She will be accompanied by Prince George Galitzin and a numerous and efficient orchestra, together with the band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. Godfrey. Should the weather be favourable, Mad. Jullien will doubtless have bumpers in all the large towns, where the name of her lamented husband is a household word.

Mr. Willert Beale, the enterprising impresario, besides the party of artists to include Mad. Clara Novello, in her farewell tour, is organising a party for Mad. Grisi's farewell series of concerts; and also a brilliant company of vocalists, in which will be found Mad. Gassier, Mad. Viardot Garcia, Signor Graziani, the eminent barytone, and Signor Ciampi, the young buffo vocalist, who caused such a sensation, during the past season, at Her Majesty's Theatre.

Foreign.

Boulogne-sur-Mer—(From a Correspondent).—A grand concert, organised by Herr Alexander Reichardt, the popular tenor, was given at the Etablissement des Bains in this attractive watering-place, on Monday evening. The rooms were crammed to suffocation. The programme was as follows:—

Première Partie.

Marche du Songe d'une Nuit d'été, exécutée par MM. Benedict, Hargitt, Engel et Paque . . . . . Mendelssohn
Aria: Ah quel Giorno (Sémiramide), chanté par Mad. Alboni . . . . . Rossini
Solos d'Harmonium { A. La Prière du Chasseur } exécutés p. { B. La Marche Garibaldi } M. Engel. Engel
Duo, Un Soave (Cenerentola), chanté par Mad. Alboni et M. Reichardt . . . . . Rossini
Solo de Piano sur des mélodies irlandaises, exécuté par M. Benedict . . . . . Benedict

Deuxième Partie.

Souvenirs de Spa, fantaisie pour violoncelle, exécutée par M. Paque . . . . . Servais Variazioni di Rode, chantées par Mad. Alboni . . . „
Solo d'Harmonium, sérénade de Don Juan, exécutée par M. Engel . . . . . Mozart
Romance (demandée) (Thou art so near and yet so far), chantée par M. Reichardt. . . . . Reichardt
A. Romance, Rosemonde { exécutés sur le violon- { Schubert
B. El Saleo di Xerès (Bolóro) { celle par M. Paque { Paque
Brindisi, Il Segreto (Lucrezia Borgia), chanté par Mad. Alboni . . . . . Donizetti

As may be gathered from the programme, a more interesting and more admirable concert of the miscellaneous kind had not been presented to the Boulogne public for years. Of course the grand centre of all attraction was Alboni, whose advent constitutes a veritable festival here, and whose annual, bi-annual, or otherwise periodical visits are looked forward to as special events in the annals of the seaport, and excites more commotion among the inhabitants and strangers than would the appearance of any living person, except perhaps Garibaldi himself. In short, Alboni is an immense favourite at Boulogne, and when she sings you may depend upon an overflowing audience. Need I tell you or your readers what effect the great soprano-contralto produced on her hearers. Look at the pieces allotted to her. Rossini should have heard her sing the magnificent air from his own Semiramide, which he must have composed — pre-composed — for her by intuition. What voluptuous vocalism, what large phrasing, what rounded elocution, what honey-sweet notes, what unpremeditated art! But the enthusiasm excited by this transcendent display of singing was even surpassed by Rode's air and variations, in which Alboni literally drove the multitude frantic, the excitement being only appeased by a repetition of the last variation. The brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia elicited another encore, which the great artist accepted with infinite good humour, though well nigh over-fatigued with her previous exertions. In the charming duet from Cenerentola, "Un soave," Herr Reichardt exhibited his talent as a Rossinian singer to the greatest advantage, and, indeed, I never heard him sing more gracefully. It is no small praise for any singer, male or female, to sing with Alboni and not be "snuffed out." In his own English ballad, which has obtained so much success in London, Herr Reichardt was unanimously encored, and repeated it in French, which appeared even more than in the original version to delight the audience.

The instrumental music was excellent, and Mr. Benedict particularly distinguished himself in his own fantasia on Irish melodies, which he executed with great brilliancy and effect. The other performances, too, were received with more or less favour, M. Paque and Herr Engel being entitled to unqualified commendation for their very fine playing on their respective instruments. In short, to finish where I commenced, a more thoroughly delightful and enjoyable concert has not been given at Boulogne for a long while.

On Wednesday the 22nd, Alboni is engaged to appear as Rosina in the Barbière at the new opera here, and on the 25th as Leonora in La Favorita.

Spa.—The concert given by Vivier, assisted by Mlle. François and Franco-Mendes, came off on the 10th instant. On the 22nd inst. we shall have a festival that will make some little stir, for it will be given in honour of a new promenade that the Ædiles of Spa have baptised the "Promenade Meyerbeer." The resolution was proposed to the authorities, by M. Servais, in the following terms:—"Among the celebrated visitors who honour our city with their presence, there is none who has been more faithful to us, none who is surrounded by more universal glory than Meyerbeer, one of the greatest artists of the age. During thirty-two years that the illustrious master has come to Spa, our mountains, of which he is so fond, have inspired him with more than one of those songs, energetic and gentle in turn, which constitute the delight of the musical world. We may, therefore, without temerity, claim a right to call this brilliant genius in some degree ours; for it is generally known that there is not one of his productions, from the popular and ever young Robert le Diable, to his latest creation, Le Pardon de Ploërmel, which did not first germinate, or which was not developed, among us. The "Promenade Meyerbeer" will call to mind, at every step, the works of the great master—in one place, the repose of Alice; in another, Bertram's bridge; farther on, the cascade of Ploërmel, the grove of Dinorah, etc. This monument, hewn out of nature itself, will not suffer the fate of many other monuments, apparently more solid; far from suffering through the injury of time, it will enjoy the advantage of increasing, and becoming green again every spring. It will be like the eternally beautiful music of Meyerbeer to whom you consecrate this memento." The communal council adopted unanimously the proposition of M. Servais.

Berlin.—On the 19th of July, the anniversary of the death of Queen Louisa of Prussia, there was a funereal solemnity celebrated in the Luisen-Kirche, when fragments of St. Paul, The Messiah, and Mozart's Requiem were performed. The celebrated prima donna, Mad. Jachmann-Wagner, has left for Warsaw, where she is engaged for a series of performances. Orphée aux Enfers, by Offenbach, has attained its thirtieth night.—On the 2nd inst., the performances were resumed at the Royal Opera-house, Hoguet's ballet of the Wonderful Lamp being selected for the occasion.

Mayence.—The first concert of the Mittelrheinisches Musikfest took place on the 22nd inst. The concert hall was filled as early as 11 a.m., and soon afterwards the King of Bavaria, together with the Grand-Duke and Grand-Duchess of Hesse-Cassel, appeared and took their places in the box constructed for their use. The solemnity then began immediately with the overture which Beethoven wrote, in 1822, for the fêtes of the Emperor of Austria. Israel in Egypt followed, and, like the overture, was executed with a degree of precision and spirit which electrified the audience. Nearly all the pieces were encored. At one o'clock, after the concert, there was an excursion on the Rhine. The performers and their guests embarked on board four steamboats gaily decked-out with flags, a fifth having been reserved for the King of Holland, the King of Bavaria, the Grand-Duke, Grand-Duchess of Hesse-Cassel, and the persons of their suite. Each vessel had a band of its own, and the harmonious armada set off in the midst of music and the report of artillery. All along its course the people on the banks greeted it with loud cheers, and several smaller boats, filled with singing associations, joined in. On its return at 10 o'clock, p.m., there were discharges of rockets from various points, and a brilliant party at the Grand-Duke's terminated this magnificent entertainment.—The second concert of the festival took place on the 23rd. Among other pieces, Beethoven's symphony in C minor, and Mendelssohn's Walpurgisnacht were performed. The bass solo was sung by Herr Stockhausen. This celebrated singer was present among the audience and kindly volunteered to act as a substitute for Herr Kindermann, seized with a sudden hoarseness. It is almost superfluous to add that the public manifested very warmly their appreciation of his conduct, by volleys of applause, in every way deserved. At the conclusion of the concert, the cheers of the audience and the flourishes of the band greeted Herr Marpurg, who had organised and directed the festival with as much talent as zeal.

Berne.—The festival here lasted two days. For artistic singing the "Harmony" of Zurich gained the first prize. The other prizes were awarded to the Liedertafeln of Bâle, Berne, Coïre, and St. Gall. For male popular singing, Rapperswill carried off the first prize, and Bâle the second.

Vienna.—The distribution of prizes given to the pupils of the Conservatory has taken place. During the last academical year, 336 pupils have followed the course of instruction; of these, 7 have received silver medals. In addition to the latter, there have been 21 prizes given away, while 72 pupils have been "honourably mentioned."

Salzbourg.—Foremost among the musical institutions here is the Mozarteum, a reunion of salaried artists, under the direction of the composer, Herr Faux, who play, on Sundays and festivals, masses, vespers, litanies, and other pieces of religious music by Mozart, Beethoven, Joseph and Michael Haydn, Hummel, Aiblinger, Eybler, Drobisch, Nikolaï, and Reissiger. Herr Faux has himself written a mass remarkable for its style, as well as a litany in C major for four voices and orchestra. There is, too, the band of the collegiate church of St. Peter, though it has lost somewhat of its former fame, which attained its apogee in 1842—50. During these eight years, the Chevalier Neukomm used to spend his summer with a friend of his youth, the Abbé Nagenzaun, and direct the performance of his own works at St. Peter's. The Chapter have got some of his compositions in MS.

Ems.—This town is, at present, the rendezvous for the aristocracy of all the countries of Europe. A brilliant concert was lately given by Henri Herz, Mlle. de la Morlière, and Mlle. Marie Cruvelli. Herz performed a grand concerto and three of his finest fantasias. Mlle. de la Morlière was most artistic and successful in two romances, the brindisi from Herculaneum, and the serenade of Gil Blas. Mlle. Cruvelli sang a grand air from Mozart's Titus, and two other pieces. We had previously heard, at the Kursaal, the brothers Lionnet, Alfred Jaell, Louis Jung, and Mad. Burde-Ney. We are expecting Vivier, Geraldi, Piatti, Mesdames Cambardi, St. Urbain, &c. Offenbach left a few days since for Paris. He came here for rest, but he found means to finish his three-act comic opera, Le Roi Barkouf, words by Scribe and Boisseaux, which will soon be put in rehearsal.

ROSSINI AND HIS IMITATORS.

(From Hogarth's Musical Biography and Criticism.)

Mosè in Egitto was brought out at Naples in 1818. In this piece Rossini has attained an elevation of style which is not to be found in any of his other productions. The choruses are grand and majestic. The sublime prayer of the Hebrews, when preparing to cross the Red Sea, was an after-thought. Notwithstanding the transports with which the opera, in general, was received, the attempt of the machinist to represent this scene never failed to excite the risibility of the audience. This continued during the first season.

"The following season," says M. Stendhal, "this opera was resumed with the same enthusiastic admiration of the first act, and the same bursts of laughter at the passage of the Red Sea. The following day, one of my friends called about noon on Rossini, who, as usual, was lounging in bed with a dozen of his friends about him; when, to the great amusement of everybody, in rushed the poet Tottola (the author of the drama), who, without noticing any one, exclaimed, 'Maestro! I have saved the third act!' 'Well, what have you done, my good friend?' replied Rossini, mimicking the half-burlesque, half-pedantic manner of the poor son of the muses: 'Depend upon it they will laugh at it as usual.' 'But I have made a prayer for the Hebrews, before the passage of the Red Sea,' said the poet, pulling a bundle of papers out of his pocket, and giving them to Rossini, who immediately began to decipher the scrawl. While he is reading, the poet salutes the company all round, whispering every moment in the composer's ear, 'Maestro, I did it in an hour.' 'What! in an hour!' exclaimed Rossini. 'Well, if it has taken you an hour to write this prayer, I engage to write the music in a quarter of the time: here, give me a pen and ink.' At these words, Rossini jumped out of bed, seated himself at the table en chemise, and in eight or ten minutes composed this sublime movement, without any piano, and without minding the chatting of his friends. 'There,' said Rossini, 'there is your music; away about your business.' The poet was off like lightning; and Rossini jumped into bed, and joined in the general laugh at his parting look of amazement.

"The following evening I did not fail to repair in good time to San Carlo. The first act was received with the same transports as before; but when they came to the famous passage of the Red Sea, the audience showed the usual disposition to risibility. This, however, was repressed the moment Moses began the new and sublime air, 'Dal tuo stellato soglio.' This is the prayer which all the people repeat after Moses in chorus. Surprised at this novelty, the pit was all attention. This beautiful chorus is in the minor key; Aaron takes it up, and the people continue it. Last of all, Elcia addresses the same vows to heaven, and the people answer. At this moment they all throw themselves on their knees, and repeat the same prayer with enthusiasm; the prodigy is wrought; the sea opens, to present a passage to the people. The last part of the movement is in the major key. It would be difficult to give an idea of the thunder of applause which resounded from every part of the theatre. The spectators leaned over the boxes to applaud, exclaiming, 'Bello! bello! O che bello!' Never did I behold such an excitement, which was rendered still more striking by its contrast with the previous merry mood of the audience."

The present Italian composers are mere imitators of Rossini, and are much more successful in copying his defects than his beauties. They are, like him, full of mannerism; with this difference, that his manner was his own, while theirs is his. They occasionally produce pretty melodies, a faculty possessed, to some extent, by every Italian composer, however low his grade; but in general their airs are strings of commonplace passages, borrowed chiefly from Rossini, and employed without regard to the sentiment and expression required by the scene. Their concerted pieces are clumsy and inartificial; and their loud and boisterous accompaniments show a total ignorance of orchestral compositions. This general description applies to them all.

THE KINGDOM OF MUSIC.

Some years ago a German newspaper published the following list of dignitaries and officials in the above empire:—

Mozart—King.
Gluck—Prime Minister.
Mehul—His First Secretary.
Handel—Minister of Worship.
Haydn—Lord Chancellor.
Beethoven—Generalissimo.
Cherubini—Minister of Public Instruction.
Bach—Minister of Justice.
Weber—Intendant of the Opera.
Spohr—Master of the Chapel Royal.
Mendelssohn—Director-General of Concerts.
Paer—Conservator of the Collection of Antiquities.
Meyerbeer—Court Banker (!)
Rossini—Crown Jeweller.

[It appears to us that Weber should have been the "Crown Jeweller," in which case Rossini might have been made Poet-Laureate. We should also approve of these appointments:—

Verdi—Master of the Ordnance.
Sterndale Bennett, G. W. Macfarren } Commissioners of Woods and Forests.
Balfe—Director of the Board of Trade.
Alary—Head Cook.
The Christy Minstrels—Palace Sweeps.]

The Brough Memorial Fund.—In furtherance of the Brough Memorial Fund, the London Savage Club are about to make a provincial tour, including Liverpool, Manchester, and probably some other towns, for the purpose of giving amateur dramatic performances. As yet the announcements are slight, stating little more than the facts that the performances will be given at the end of August, and that at Manchester the performances will commence with Charles XII. followed by Robert B. Brough's Crinoline, and a popular Burlesque by members of the Savage Club; together with a prologue written by Charles Swain, Esq. Mr. Charles Millward superintends the local arrangements, which, we are told, will contain the burlesque of The Forty Thieves, and it is hinted that amongst the amateur performers the following names will be found:—J. R. Planché, W. B. Jerrold, G. A. Sala, Leicester Buckingham, F. Talfourd, H. J. Byron, A. Halliday, and others.

LONGFELLOW TO G. B. ALLEN.

(Authentic.)

Cambridge, October 15, 1855.

My Dear Sir,

I have had very great pleasure in receiving from you a package of music of your own composition, and beg you to accept my best thanks and acknowledgments for it. The sacred music I have not yet had a chance to hear, as it requires an organ to do it justice; but the other pieces I have listened to with great satisfaction. They are full of beauty and sentiment, and you have succeeded wonderfully in translating my words into the universal language.

For this kindness I have already sent you my thanks through the gentleman who forwarded the parcel to me from New York, but I wish to do it once more, and directly to yourself, and therefore trouble you with these lines.

Believe me very truly yours,

Mr. George B. Allen. Henry W. Longfellow.

Brilliant Musical Conundrum.—Result of the charming summer weather.—(From a demented correspondent.) Why would our first English basso and the Liverpool prima donna make the most sensible duet? Because they would be both Weiss and Whitty (wise and witty).—Oh!

Her Majesty's Theatre.—Among the works to be produced during the English opera season at Her Majesty's Theatre, is Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris, with Mlle. Parepa, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Santley, as vocalists. Several new artists are talked of as likely to appear, and among the tenors we hear that Mr. Swift is promised, after an absence from England of some two or three years, during which time he has been pursuing his studies and meeting with engagements on the continent.

Italian Opera in Paris.—For the coming Italian winter season in Paris, it appears that neither Mad. Borghi-Mamo nor Signor Tamberlik is engaged. Signor Mario and Gardoni are, however, to be of the company, so is Signor Pancani, another new tenor. Mesdames Penco and Alboni will also re-appear.

Adelphi.—Mr. Boucicault and Miss Robertson (Mrs. Boucicault) have been engaged by Mr. Webster, and will appear in a new drama by Mr. Boucicault, at the commencement of the winter season. Mr. and Mrs. Boucicault are at the present moment in Paris.

Leeds.—The deputy town-clerk read the following letter from Mr. Spark, the recently appointed organist of the Town Hall organ:—"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your resolution of July 4th, appointing me to the important office of organist to your Town Hall. I beg to tender the Council my sincere thanks for the appointment, and I have only to add that, in accepting the office, it will be my earnest duty, and also my pride, to employ whatever abilities I possess to justify the award of the judges in the recent competition, and your decision in my favour; and, as a townsman, I hope to maintain, and, as far as lies in my power, to seek to raise the high musical position Leeds already honourably occupies." Mr. Newton read some correspondence which had taken place on a statement made by him at the meeting of the Council when the appointment of Mr. Spark as organist was proposed. At that meeting Mr. Newton read a letter from Mr. Hirst, of King Street, Edge Hill, Liverpool, which stated that Mr. Spark had been seen in Liverpool in company with one of the judges (Mr. Best) a short time after they had been selected, and before the competition for the office of organist commenced. The correspondence now read referred to that matter, and the principal point in it was a letter from the Mr. Hirst alluded to, acknowledging that he was in error in stating that Mr. Best and Mr. Spark were seen together after the appointment of the judges. He had since ascertained that it was some time before, namely, in April; and he regretted the error which he had made, and the misunderstanding occasioned by it. Mr. Newton added that it was exceedingly satisfactory to him to find that Mr. Spark got his appointment by honourable competition. He felt it due to the Council, to Mr. Spark, and to Mr. Best, to make the facts of the case known. (Hear, hear.)—Leeds Intelligencer.

Floral Hall.—The most attractive concerts that are being given now are those of Prince Galitzin and Mr. Alfred Mellon at the Floral Hall. These take place every night, under the joint conductorship of the two eminent musicians just named—that is to say, Prince Galitzin conducts his Kozlow Polka, his Herzen Waltz, a "Sanctus" by Bortniansky, and the finale to Glinka's opera Life for the Czar; while overtures, airs, operatic selections, and fragments of symphonies are performed under the guidance of Mr. Alfred Mellon. It will appear strange to many persons that, after the remarkable and excellent concerts given by Prince Galitzin at the St. James's Hall, he should now confine his attention for the most part to dance music. Polkas and waltzes can, unfortunately, be composed by persons of all nations, though it is not every nation that can produce a Strauss or a Labitzky, a Jullien or a Musard; but the true Russian music that Prince Galitzin introduced us to at St. James's Hall possessed marked peculiarities, and, in character as in form, was quite new to an English audience, as it also would have been to an audience of Frenchmen or Germans. If there is to be a Russian element in the concerts at the Floral Hall (and if not, why does Prince Galitzin's name appear in connection with them?), surely a genuine mazourka, in the style of the one (Glinka's) played by Miss Arabella Goddard, would be a more appropriate contribution than either a waltz or a polka. We may suggest, too, to Mr. Alfred Mellon that the charming air sung at the Russian concert by Mlle. Parepa would at least be found more novel than "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," which most of us must have heard of once or twice by this time. Nevertheless, Mlle. Parepa was encored in Mr. Balfe's too popular ballad, and she was also called upon to repeat Victorine's grand air from Mr. Mellon's opera of that name. The band engaged for the concerts is, with a few exceptions, that of the Royal Italian Opera. The chorus is also from that establishment. In other words the chorus and band are admirable.—Illustrated Times.

Death of Miss Vandenhoff.—Our readers will learn with regret that Miss Vandenhoff has gone from amongst us, and "will be no more seen." As the representative of the highest range of the drama—that of the classical Greek drama, Miss Vandenhoff was without a rival: she was the original Antigone on the English stage, and Sheridan Knowles found the benefit of her quiet and chaste style of acting in the production of The Love Chase: to the character of Lydia she imparted that delicacy of feeling and of womanly grace that raised it from the level of which it has recently assumed in other hands, a sentimental young lady. This opinion was expressed by the author himself to the writer of these lines. We copy the following paragraph from a Liverpool paper:—"We announce, with deep regret, that Miss Vandenhoff (Mrs. Swinbourne) died in Birmingham on Tuesday last. She was the daughter of Mr. Vandenhoff, the celebrated tragedian, and was herself an eminent actress. She was born in Liverpool in 1815. About three years ago she married Mr. Swinbourne, an actor of some repute, but the union, we fear, was not a happy one. Our readers need not be told that the deceased was an accomplished and beautiful creature, full of genius and fine feeling, and that she was as good as she was fair. In the classical drama she had no equal, for in her face was realised the dreams of Grecian artists. She was, we believe, an only daughter, and doted on by her afflicted father."—Theatrical Observer.

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.

Composed by Brinley Richards.

EVANS'S

ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

MAY BE HAD IN

EVERY POSSIBLE VARIETY,

WITH

GERMAN PEDAL REEDS (TWO OCTAVES AND A THIRD)

WITH AND WITHOUT PERCUSSION ACTION,

AND

WITH SINGLE AND DOUBLE ROWS OF KEYS,

AT PRICES FROM

Ten to One Hundred and Forty Guineas.

ALSO WITH A SELF-ACTING WIND APPARATUS.

THE HARMONIUM AT 10 GUINEAS

Possesses the same superior tone and touch that characterise all Evans's English Harmoniums, and is admirably suited for a Chapel or School-room. It is in a handsome solid French-polished Oak Case.

THE HARMONIUM AT 65 GUINEAS

(WITH DOUBLE ROW OF KEYS)

Is the most perfect instrument ever manufactured. The demand for this Harmonium being so great, orders should be always sent in good time to prevent disappointment.

Full particulars of Evans's English Harmoniums may be had of

BOOSEY AND SONS, 28 HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by George Andrew Spottiswoode, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by John Boosey, at the Office of Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, August 18, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 34 SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire,

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at the ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System of

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION; and as a NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Students, who, as soon as competent, will receive appointments to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Pianoforte	Mr. WRIGLEY. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola...	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute	Mons. DE JONG.
Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo...	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. D. ELDER.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for his first or second Orchestra.

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist.

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board and lodging, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

MAD. LAURA BAXTER begs to announce that she will give a SERIES of PERFORMANCES of SACRED and MISCELLANEOUS VOCAL MUSIC during the ensuing Season. Mad. LAURA BAXTER will be assisted by eminent artists, and also by her Amateur and Professional Pupils. Communications to be addressed to Mad. LAURA BAXTER, at her Residence, 155 Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, September 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, in St. Andrew's Hall, under the Patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, H.R.H. the Prince Consort, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, and other members of the Royal Family.

On Monday Evening, September 17, Haydn's Oratorio, THE CREATION.

On Wednesday Morning, September 19, Handel's DETTINGEN TE DEUM, and Spohr's Oratorio, THE LAST JUDGMENT.

On Thursday Morning, September 20, Herr Molique's new Oratorio, ABRAHAM (first time of performance), and Mendelssohn's Psalm, AS THE HART PANTS.

On Friday Morning, September 21, Handel's Oratorio, THE MESSIAH.

THREE GRAND MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS will be given on the Evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, September 18, 19, and 20, including Professor STERNDALE BENNETT'S May Queen, GLUCK'S Armida, and BENEDICT'S Undine (first time of performance, composed expressly for this Festival).

Principal Vocal Performers—Mad. CLARA NOVELLO (her last appearance in Norwich), Mad. WEISS, Miss PALMER, Mad. BORGHI-MAMO, Mr. SIMS REEVES, Mr. WILBYE COOPER, Mr. SANTLEY, Mr. WEISS, and Signor BELLETTI. Solo Pianoforte, Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. Solo Violoncello, Signor PIATTI. Leaders of the Band, M. SAINTON and Mr. H. BLAGROVE. Organist, Mr. HARCOURT. Chorus Master, Mr. J. F. HILL. Conductor, Mr. BENEDICT.

On Friday Evening, September 21, a GRAND DRESS BALL, in St. Andrew's Hall, the band (of 30 performers), being conducted by Mr. Weippert.

ROGER KERRISON, } Honorary
J. B. MORGAN, } Secretaries.

EASTERN OPERA HOUSE.—PAVILION THEATRE, Whitechapel. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN DOUGLASS. Open every Evening with English and Italian Operas. Supported by artistes of great celebrity. Theatre re-decorated and re-constructed. Four first-class Tenors engaged—Signor GIULETTI, AUGUSTUS BRAHAM, Signor SOLIERE, and W. M. PARKINSON—with a most popular prima donna of the day. Mad. LANCIO, Signor RUGGIERO, Signor RULETTI, Signor MORENO, Signor LUCINE, Mr. O. SUMMERS, Mr. R. MORROW, Mr. LISLE, Mr. E. ROSENTHAL, Mad. SEGUIN, Mad. VANINI, Mad. YETLAND, and Miss A. LONG. Band and Chorus of nearly One Hundred Artists. Conductors, Signor VERO and and Mr. ISAACSON. Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday, NORMA (by the English Company); to conclude with a Musical Drama. Tuesday and Friday, LUCIA DE LAMMERMOOR (by the Italian Company). Prices as usual, notwithstanding the great expense.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON THE VOICE AND SINGING,

Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,

DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,

And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

GLASGOW CITY HALL SATURDAY EVENING CONCERTS.—The Seventh Season opens on 1st September proximo. The Subscriber will be glad to hear from first-class Artistes and Tour Concert Parties visiting Scotland or the North of England in the course of the season.

Glasgow Abstainers' Union, 118 Union St., Glasgow. JAS. [illegible]

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting Liverpool will find it advantageous to engage the services of LEE, NIGHTINGALE, &c.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, and PAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

NEWSPAPER STAMP 1d. PENNY

MR. C. B. WESSEL,

IN retiring from business, begs to express his sincere thanks to the Musical Profession and Trade for the support so liberally accorded to the establishment carried on under the title of Wessel and Co., and hopes the same favour may be extended to his successors, Messrs. ASHDOWN and PARRY, who, during upwards of twenty years have taken an active part in the management of his business.

ASHDOWN & PARRY

HAVE the honour to announce that they have succeeded to the business heretofore carried on by Messrs. WESSEL and Co., and hope by constant attention to the wishes and requirements of their customers to deserve and obtain a continuance of the support rendered to the late Firm.

18 Hanover Square, London, July 1860.

BRASS BANDS.—BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL contains Quick Steps, Troops, Marches, &c., printed in large type on small paper for pasting on Cards. Each Number contains Four Popular Marches, price 7s. for Large Band, and 4s. for Small Band.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, published every Month. 100 Numbers are published, containing Grand Selections from all the best Operas, Quick Steps, Polkas, Quadrilles, Waltzes, &c., arranged for Large Brass Band, 7s. each, and for Small Band, 4s. each. A very liberal allowance to the profession. List of contents gratis.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

TO ALL TEACHERS of the PIANO.—The most infallible and expeditious Guide to a knowledge of Music and Pianoforte Playing is HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. 265th Edition, price 4s.—Published by Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, London; and to be had of every Bookseller and Musicseller throughout the Kingdom.

COMPLETION of CALLCOTT'S HOLY FAMILY, Sacred Melodies from the Great Masters. Arranged for Piano by W. H. CALLCOTT. First, Second, and Third Series, each, Piano Solo, 5s.; Duet, 6s.; Accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, 1s. each separate Part.—N.B. Robert Cocks and Co. have recently acquired the Copyright of the Second and Third Series of this highly popular work.

COMPLETION of CALLCOTT'S ADORATION, Popular Sacred Melodies. Arranged for Piano by W. H. CALLCOTT. First, Second, and Third Series, each, Piano Solo, 5s.; Duet, 6s.; Accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, 1s. each separate Part. Each Work has a beautiful Illustration, printed in Oil Colours by Baxter, and is exclusively published by ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, London, W.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"WHEN THE MOON IS BRIGHTLY SHINING." Molique's favourite Serenade, sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. This beautiful Song is now published for Tenor, Mezzo-Soprano, or Baritone Voice. Price 2s. 6d. London: Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Critical and Biographical Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.—The Athenæum of July 28 says:—"This is a very handsome publication. The price is cheap, the page is clear, and the type is good. A careful preface by Mr. Davison serves as Overture to these Mazurkas, and, as far as criticism and analysis go, is competent and well reasoned out."

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

SIMS REEVES'S newest and most popular Ballad is "I love YOU," composed expressly for him by Balfe. "I love you" was sung by Mr. Reeves, and enthusiastically encored, at Mr. G. W. Martin's Concert, Exeter Hall, Mr. Lindsay Sloper's and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts, St. James's Hall, and will be sung at Mr. Balfe's Benefit Concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens, and at the Crystal Palace Concerts. London, published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

THE FORSAKEN. Ballad. Composed expressly for Mad. Catherine Hayes, by Virginia Gabriel. Price 3s. C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.

Composed by Brinley Richards.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU," New Song by BALFE, composed expressly for Mr. SIMS REEVES, and sung by him with the greatest success, is published, price 3s. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by J. W. DAVISON, "Rough wind that moanest loud" (sung by Mr. Santley at the Monday Popular Concerts); "Swifter far than Summer's flight," (sung by Miss Palmer at the Monday Popular Concerts); "False friend, wilt thou smile or weep," Beatrice's song in the Cenci (sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby, at the Monday Popular Concerts, St. James's Hall); are published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

The above Songs form Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of Vocal Illustrations of Shelley.

"Mr. Santley was encored in one of the thoroughly picturesque and poetical settings of Shelley, by Mr. J. W. Davison, mentioned a week or two since. His song, 'Rough wind that moanest loud,' is a thoroughly good song."—Athenæum.

"Madame Sainton-Dolby's greatest efforts were called forth by Mendelssohn's Night' song, and Mr. J. W. Davison's 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep' (from Shelley's 'Cenci'), to both of which she did the amplest justice. The latter work is one of the most poetical and beautiful of the 'Vocal Illustrations of Shelley,' composed by Mr. Davison many years ago, and which, though rarely heard, possess far more sterling merit than nine-tenths of the most admired songs of the day. A more intellectual treatment of the words could not well be imagined. Mr. Davison has completely caught the spirit of the poetry, and heightened its beauty by the potent charms which belong only to the sister art. 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep,' sung to perfection by Madame Sainton-Dolby, was enthusiastically applauded."

Morning Post, April 26, 1860.

Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening. C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

Reviews.

Exploring a pond of musical minnows and sticklebacks (vulgo, "tittlebats), pretty little fish, darting and glittering in the shallow depths (pardon! reader), or splashing about near the surface, of the water, the live-long day, we first lay hands on—

Twenty-two Two-part School Songs, by J. F. Borschitzky (author)—as taking and easy as any of this gentleman's compilations for the use of his "Elementary Singing-Classes." They may be sung by soprano and tenor, or by alto and bass, with ad libitum accompaniment for pianoforte, or bass. On the last page will be found rules for the pronunciation, and explanations of the meaning of the Italian terms employed by M. Borschitzky in his work. With this handful of minnows we are well pleased, though they present no unusual tints, or combinations of tints, to admire, being, indeed, ordinary minnows.

Long Life to the Queen, by Waldemar Malmené, of Necton, Norfolk (Darken and Colsey), is a bold stickleback, in the shape of a national song, with pianoforte accompaniment, inscribed to the volunteer riflemen of England. The words, by Horatio Nelson (auspicious name), are good, and the music of Mr. Malmené, of Necton, Norfolk, so free and skilfully conducted (although the tune be not as new as it is vigorous), that he might fairly change his nom de guerre to *Bien*mené. He might then try his hand at engendering perch.

Fantasia on "Annie Laurie," by Charles Weisbecker (Wessel and Co.*), though still appertaining to the minnow tribe, is a long, brown, lanky minnow, without one variegated tint to relieve its dull monotony, the simple tune of "Annie Laurie," flaunting in arpeggios up and down the key-board of the piano, and such-like uncongenial finery —voilà tout. We like not such minnows, and care but little to englobe them.

The London Rifle Brigade March, by Edwin Ould (Joseph Williams), may be coupled with the stickleback of M. Waldemar, Mal (bien) mené, possessing in a great measure the same qualities that win praise for its proposed companion, while just as deficient in originality.

To leave the minnow-pond; Comrades in Arms, chorus for four male voices, composed by Adolph Adam, written and edited by George Linley (Boosey and Sons), is an English version of the celebrated Enfants de Paris, sung with unbounded applause by the Orpheonistes at the Crystal Palace. The difficulty of adapting English words to the melody has been surmounted by Mr. Linley with his accustomed skill. Les Enfants de Paris was one of the contributions of the French choristers, which created the most marked sensation at the recent festival in the Crystal Palace, being invariably encored. Its great success fully warranted its publication in an English dress, and Mr. George Linley may be fairly congratulated on having accomplished his task so well.

To return to the minnow pond; L'Adieu—by Charles Weisbecker (Wessel and Co.*)—a so-styled "melodie" for the pianoforte, though lachrymose, is thoughtful, and is by no means inexpressive. The omission of an accidental, here and there, is not, however, calculated to diminish the uncertainty of the performer about the precise key in which he may be playing—a difficulty created by M. Weisbecker himself, who seems to have been moved with a desire of exhibiting a species of coquetry between E flat and B flat. As an example we may point to page 5, where (line 2, bar 5), an A appears without the appropriate flat, which oversight is repeated notatim in the succeeding bar. L'Adieu may be likened to a minnow bereaved and disconsolate, for some piscatory reason, known exclusively to the "finny" and "scaly" tribes.

More minnows!—but pretty creatures, and therefore not unwelcome. This time we take up another handful, in the shape of a first instalment of Twenty-four short pieces in all the Major and Minor Keys, by Alfred Beddoe (B. Williams)—which, but the shelves of the pianoforte studio are already so rich in études and all sorts of "exercises," some of them undeservedly neglected, might be of some service. The twelve pieces before us are so good for the most part, that those who try them through will doubtless give a hearty welcome to their twelve brothers and sisters who are to follow. Had they been long (not lengthy), instead of "short," we should have thought still more of them, and have forborne classing them in the category of "minnows." Indeed one or two of them—No. 3, a graceful allegretto in B flat; No. 5, another graceful allegretto in A; and best of all, Nos. 6 and 8, a very interesting allegro in E flat minor, and a scarcely less interesting allegro assai in G sharp minor, almost rise to the dignity of carp. At the same time, No. 12, a Cradle-Song (a pianoforte composer without his "berceuse" is becoming a rara avis), may be accepted as one of the gentlest and most engaging of minnows; while there are other little fish in the selection well worth catching by the tails. But we have alluded to carp, and time presses.

* Query, Ashdown and Parry.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Aug. 22, 1860.

I will begin this week by giving your readers an opportunity of reading a letter which all the papers here have been printing, addressed by General Bonaparte to his friend Talma, a few days before the 13 Vendémiaire. It is a very remarkable letter, and has produced quite a sensation here both in literary and political circles. Here it is:—

"I have fought like a lion for the Republic, my good friend, Talma, and in return she lets me die of hunger. I am at the end of my resources; that wretch, Aubry, leaves me on the pavé when he might make something of me. I feel in myself strength enough to cut out Generals Santerre and Rossignol; and cannot they find a corner of La Vendée or some other place where I can be employed? Thou art happy! thy reputation depends on no single individual; two hours spent upon the boards bring thee face to face with the public, who are the dispensers of glory. We soldiers must purchase it on a vaster stage on which we are not always allowed to appear. Regret not thy position; stay in thy theatre. Who knows if ever I shall appear again upon mine.

"I saw Monvel yesterday; he is a thorough friend. Barras makes me fine promises; but will he keep them? I doubt it. Meanwhile, I am at my last penny. Have you a few crowns at my service? I shall not refuse them, and will assure you of their reimbursement out of the first kingdom I shall conquer with my sword. My friend, how happy were the heroes of Aristotle! They depended not on a Minister of War!

"Adieu, thine entirely,
"Bonaparte."

I stated in my last what was not quite correct, namely, that Pierre de Medicis was played at the opera on the gratis night for the Emperor's fête. So it had been anounced; but as I was not present, having neither time nor inclination to figure in the mob who besieged the doors seven hours before the performance, I was not aware the opera was changed for Robert le Diable, an old favourite on these occasions. Considering that this popular chef-d'œuvre of its composer has been got up with entirely fresh dresses and scenery, that the two successful débutantes Mad.

Vandenheuvel Duprez and Mlle. Marie Saxe sang in it, and that the exchange was Meyerbeer vice Poniatowski, the plebs could hardly complain, though faith had not been kept with them. The author and composer of the cantata sang on the occasion, under the title of "Le Quinze Août," M. Cormon and M. Aimé Maillart, have been decorated with the order of the Legion of Honour. The solos in this piece were sang by M. Dumestre, the baritone. Saturday last there was a performance for the benefit of the suffering Christians of Syria. Semiramis was the opera, and Mad. Ferraris made her re-appearance in the ballet.

The gratuitous performance at the Opéra Comique was quite a brilliant affair; for the public on these occasions are always treated, as though they were the flower of Parisian connoisseurship. The opera was Fra Diavolo, in which M. Montaubry reappeared, after a short absence, and Mad. Faure played the part of Zerlina, which she does so prettily. Condere sang in Maitre Pathelin, and a cantata de circonstance, "Vive l'Empereur," was performed, the words of which are by M. Beaumont, and the music by M. Jules Cohen.

There is a new work in preparation here in three acts, which for the present bears the title of Une Révolte dans l'Inde. The principal parts are to be played by Mad. Ugalde and M. Crosti. The Part du Diable is also being rehearsed for Mlle. Monrose, who is to play Carlo Broschi. Le Docteur Mirobolant, by M. Eugène Gautier, will be produced towards the end of the month. A pretty little opera, by MM. Cremieux and Caspers, entitled Ma Tante dort, originally brought out at the Théâtre Lyrique, is to be transplanted here. Mad. Ugalde, Mlles. Revilly and Bousquet, and MM. Mocker and Ponchard will play in it. Thus you see the new manager, M. Beaumont, does not go to sleep over his task, and, while he finds time to write loyal and patriotic odes, does not neglect the main chance.

The Théâtre Lyrique is preparing to commence its next campaign on the 1st of September. Several novelties are in hand. In the first place, there is Crispin Rival de son maître, a comedy of Lesage, which has been sliced into two acts by M. Henri Berthoud, and wedded to music by M. Sellenick. Two comic operas in one act are also ready, viz.: Une bonne Nuit, composed by M. Aristide Hignard, and Astaroth, the music whereof is by M. Debillemont. Besides these are to follow two grand works, one by MM. Scribe and Clapisson, the other by MM. Cormon and Aimé Maillart, before mentioned. Mad. Viardot remains a member of the company at a salary of 3000 francs per month (£120). She will appear again in Orphée, and it is intended to get up another opera of Gluck's for her, either Alceste or Iphigénie.

Besides the fortunate author and composer whom I have just mentioned as having received the decoration of the Legion of Honour, a complete batch of literary and musical celebrities (more or less) has been enrolled in that swellest of mobs. In this motley list M. Revial, professor of singing at the Conservatoire, and M. Martin, secretary of the Imperial Opera, and M. Delaporte, the luckless Garibaldi of the Orpheonist invasion, figure cheek by jowl with Léon Laya, the distinguished author of Duc Job, and with Gevaert, the very clever (Belgian) composer of Quentin Durward and the Billet de Marguerite. M. Paul de Saint Victor shines also as an homme de lettres in this, for the most part, ragged regiment, with which Falstaff would most certainly have refused to march through Coventry, and which in the present state of the French press, although "food for powder," have no chance of being, as they deserve to be, "well peppered."

To pass to another distribution of honours, the Conservatorium of Music in Vienna has just awarded its annual prizes. The number of pupils who studied in this institution during the year was 336. Of these twenty-one obtained prizes, seventy-two were honourably mentioned, and seven had silver medals allotted to them. With so large a number of competitors it may be imagined that the struggle for distinction was proportionately arduous. Connected with the same subject of well-earned distinctions is the presentation, by the Lieder-Tafel of Mayence, of a diploma of honorary membership to Stockhausen the baritone.

My correspondent at Baden informs me that Hector Berlioz is busy preparing his festival performances which constitute the next exciting occasion to which the mob of pleasure-seekers there are eagerly looking. I have just received also a programme of a concert lately given at the Kursaal, at Hamburg, for the benefit of the local charities. Vieuxtemps, who possesses a chateau villa near this gamblers' paradise, was among the artists, as was also M. A. Jaell, the pianist, and Mad. Cambardi, who sang the cavatinas from Norma and the Trovatore.

I told you of a new opera which had been sent in to the Opéra Comique by MM. Roqueplan and Sardon, under the title of La Villa Medicis, concerning which it was rumoured that M. Roqueplan's name stood for that of an actress of the Théâtre Français. M. Battu, the father of the late Léon Battu, now comes forward to claim as his son's, if not the piece itself, the title, which, he says, was that of an opera offered by Léon Battu to M. Roqueplan when he was director of the Opéra Comique. M. Battu admits that the MS. of his son's work was duly returned to him, but merely calls on the ex-manager not to use his son's title to avoid all suspicion of plagiarism. If it be a mere question of using a title, which has nothing very remarkable or original about it, there was scarcely any ground for this paternal interference. If, however, there has been unfair play, it is another matter altogether, and in that case we shall hear more about it.

I forgot to mention, while referring to the doings at Baden, that, on the occasion of the success of his opera of La Colombe, M. Gounod, being besieged with complimentary addresses, delivered himself of a short speech of thanks, in which he regretted his inability to express his gratification in cette belle langue Allemande, and promised he would at once set to and learn German against the next occasion when he should have to manifest his delight at a German compliment. People think this was rather a rash promise, and that the eminent composer had better hire an interpreter, and devote the time necessary to mastering the language of horses to the composition of new works. It is difficult to say which would be most profitable to the world of these two courses.

There is an account in the Belgian journals of the festival performance of Haydn's Seasons by the Société Godefrid of Namur. The king and the Royal family were present, and were received on their entrance with the most demonstrative marks of enthusiasm. M. Royer de Behr then read an address which was also loudly applauded. The performance commenced with a symphony Sur des airs Nationaux, by M. Hanssens, the well-known conductor of the orchestra at the Théâtre de la Monnaie. This was succeeded by a trio from Il Matrimonio Segreto, the effect of which was in a great measure lost from the vastness of the concert-room. The oratorio of the Seasons was then commenced according to a French version by M. Royer. The solo vocalists were, Mlles. de Aynssa, MM. Carman, and Depoitier.

I hear that the prima donna, Mad. Maria Palmieri, has just made an engagement with the Pyne and Harrison management to sing at Covent Garden, from October next to March, 1861. She is to appear in the Trovatore, in English, of course.

APROPOS OF THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

Monique's Oratorio, "Abraham."

The life of Abraham is singularly fertile in dramatic incidents. The persons in Herr Molique's Oratorio, which will be performed at the Norwich Festival for the first time, are Abraham, Sarah, Hagar, Isaac, two angels, and a messenger, giving opportunity for employing the following voices:—Soprano solos—Angel, Hagar, Isaac; Alto solos—Angel, Sarah; Baritone solo—Abraham; Bass solo—Messenger. In addition to these there is a tenor (solo) to whom no fixed character is given. After the first chorus "Blessed is the man," Abraham is commanded in a recitative to depart from his country; in answer to which he has an air wherein he prays for guidance from the Lord. The departure of the Patriarch is then narrated in a short recitative, by the tenor; after which we have a quartett, "Go in peace." Another tenor recitative announces the arrival of Abraham in Canaan, and also God's promise to give him and his posterity the land. This is followed by an air, blended with chorus, in which Abraham and his people acknowledge the mercies of God towards them. Another tenor recitative continues the narrative, by relating in a few bars the strife which had arisen between the herdsmen of Abraham and the herdsmen of his brother Lot. Abraham then appeals to his brother in the air "Let there be no strife I pray thee between me and thee." An angel then appears to Abraham and promises him a son who should be called Isaac, and a posterity whose number should be as the stars and as the sand upon the sea-shore; after which, the people, in a chorus, again exalt God for his goodness. Up to this point, Abraham has been exhibited basking in the sunshine of prosperity; but now a cloud begins to overcast the scene. A messenger arrives with tidings of a war between certain kings and other kings "from the cities of the plain," of a battle that had just been fought in the vale of Siddim, of the capture of Lot and all his effects, and of his own solitary escape to tell the tale. This news is conveyed in recitative. The previous recitatives are necessarily merely narrative, but here scope for declamation is afforded. The messenger had been an eye-witness of the calamity which he relates; he comes breathless with haste and reeking from the fight; he has the passion and ardour with which men love to bring intelligence of evil. To Abraham this report is as a touch of Ithuriel's spear. In a brief recitative, followed by a spirited air, he excites his people to arm for the rescue. Then follows a choral prayer invoking aid from on high. After this a tenor solo briefly relates the success of the expedition in which Abraham recovers "Lot and his goods, and the people," their return being painted by means of a military march. Abraham offers up thanks to God in a recitative, and the people pour out their gratitude and praise in a grand chorus, which terminates the first part of the oratorio.

It will be seen that there has been a slight transposition of events for the sake of introducing variety into the musical composition. Thus the announcement of the birth of Isaac, which follows the captivity and rescue of Lot in the history, is made to precede it in the Oratorio; but this was necessary in order to relieve the monotony which must have been produced by giving all the solos to male voices.

The second part opens with an air (allegretto) for a soprano voice, "I will extol thee, my God." The promise that Abraham should be "A father of many nations," is now repeated in a recitative (tenor), and the consequent expression of gratitude and joy is allotted to a trio for alto, tenor, and bass, the characters being left to the imagination of the audience. A bass recitative, followed by a fiery chorus, then denounces divine wrath upon the cities of the plain. This introduces the memorable conference between the Almighty and Abraham, in which the latter intercedes for the devoted cities. An angel (soprano) is the vehicle of communication, and the dialogue is carried on in recitative. In a recitative which follows (alto) the Lord is described as looking down to see if there were any righteous, and the negative response is given in a plaintive air. This delay to strike is finely imagined and equally well expressed. It is the lull before the storm. A terrific chorus immediately follows, descriptive of the raining down of brimstone and fire from the portals of heaven. The chorus ends with a lento movement—a sinking, as it were, into the stillness of death. After the destruction of the guilty cities the scene is changed. A tenor recitative relates the birth of Isaac and the "mockery" of Hagar's son—which paves the way for a dramatic duet between Sarah and Abraham, wherein the latter vainly strives to appease the anger of his wife. Abraham, being commanded by an angel, in a soprano recitative, to hearken unto the voice of Sarah in the matter, a tenor recitative relates how he dismissed Hagar and her child to wander in the wilderness. A chorale follows, "Commit thy way unto the Lord." Then a tenor recitative, preceded by a descriptive symphony, narrates the anguish of Hagar when "The water was spent in the bottle," and when "She cast the child under one of the shrubs," that she might not see him die. Hagar gives vent to her agony in a pathetic air. She is comforted by an angel. God opens her eyes and she sees a well of water. The lad is saved and dwells in the desert, God having promised to make of him "A great nation." The grand chorus "Great is our Lord," which follows the relation of these events, may be supposed to celebrate the preservation of Hagar and her child, though the words have only a general meaning. The story now approaches the severest trial and grandest climax of Abraham's life. God, by the intervention of an angel (in an alto recitative), commands him to get into the land of Moriah for the purpose of offering up "His only son Isaac." Abraham exclaims, in recitative, "The joy of my heart is ceased;" this is the prelude to a scene wherein resignation, grief, and passion struggle in turn for mastery; the storm bursts at last, subsides into a feeling of deep despondency; but this very despondency shows that Abraham, though he questioned the fulfilment of the promise concerning Isaac, did not flinch for a moment from his resolve to execute the command which he had received. He is counselled and comforted, it may be by a friend, in the tenor air which follows, "Pour out thy heart before the Lord." The air is followed by a few bars of recitative, tenor, announcing Abraham's departure, and leading into the pathetic dialogue which really took place between the father and his child. Abraham and Isaac have then each an air in which they supplicate for mercy. The angel of God interposes, in an alto recitative, and renews the promise of the divine blessings. Abraham and Isaac pour forth their gratitude in a duet, after which a few bars of recitative (Abraham) lead into the grand chorus, "Great and marvellous are thy works," which concludes the oratorio.

It will have been seen from the above sketch, that the libretto does not pretend to give the life of Abraham entire. His duplicity in twice passing off his wife as his sister is judiciously suppressed. He is, however, exhibited as a saint, as a warrior, and as a great sufferer. Scope is afforded for the delineation of human passion in almost every phase, from triumphant joy to a sorrow that borders upon despair. The incidents are striking, varied, and picturesque, calling all the powers of the orchestra into play.

Mr. Benedict's "Undine."

This cantata has been written expressly for our festival, by the conductor, Mr. Benedict. Undine, a water-spirit, has left her home and her companions on account of her love for Hildebrand, lord of a castle on the bank of the Danube. Kuhleborn, the principal kinsman of Undine, disapproves of this attachment, suspecting that the mortal lover will prove unfaithful. Nor are his suspicions ill-founded, for Hildebrand no sooner returns to his castle, than, regardless of Undine, he espouses a lady named Bertalda. To avenge the wrong thus done to his race, Kuhleborn summons all the spirits of the waters, who destroy the castle and its owners, while the gentle Undine bewails the fate of her unfaithful lover. It may be remarked that in order to render the contrast between the two female characters as complete as possible, Bertalda is supposed to be a lady of rank, and not as in De la Motte Fouque's beautiful tale—the daughter of a fisherman. After a short overture in F major and minor, the cantata begins with a plaintive chorus in D minor for the female voices. This is interrupted by a bass solo in G minor allotted to Kuhleborn. The burden of the chorus is then taken up again, and the whole concludes in an animated strain describing the life of the Naides, in which the male voices join. This is succeeded by a recitative of Hildebrand and Undine, whose song in E flat with harp obligato, explaining her origin and fears that her lover might forsake her, follows next. It is accompanied by a chorus of invisible spirits (soprani and alti). A short canon between the lovers and Kuhleborn in A flat precedes the scena and aria of Hildebrand, who first dwells on the happiness he would have found with Undine, in a slow movement in B flat, "From worldly cares and toils afar." A march heard in the distance, and announcing the arrival of Bertalda, changes the course of his feelings, and in a spirited allegro, "Loud sounds the trumpet," he expresses his determination to free himself from the trammels of ignoble repose and to follow his destiny, leading henceforth the life of a knight and a hero. The march which had been faintly heard during Hildebrand's air is now approaching. Bertalda (contralto) arrives, being received by a wedding chorus in E flat. Her song, in B major, speaks of her anticipations of happiness as future mistress and sovereign lady of the castle; this leads to a duettino in G, "Happy day," between Bertalda and Hildebrand. Undine, comes to warn the happy couple; she is willing to renounce her love, if Hildebrand will forsake Bertalda. A quartett in C minor, embodying the contending feelings of Undine, who still clings to her faithless swain; of Bertalda, who treats the bold intruder with scorn and contempt; of Hildebrand, who is divided between his feeling of remorse and his love to Bertalda; and of Kuhleborn, who vows vengeance for the insult offered to a kindred spirit; leads to a bass scena with chorus of ocean spirits, who at the summons of their master, bring death and destruction upon all the inmates of the castle in a fierce chorus of D minor. Undine is carried away by her companions, bewailing the sad fate of her lover, and deploring that her immortality prevents her from joining him in death. Gradually the sound of her voice grows fainter, and with her soft lament—at last vanishing—the cantata terminates.

The Norwich Musical Festival.

The Triennial Musical Festivals are of so much importance to the trade, to the charities, and to the musical reputation of the city, that we can scarcely touch upon a theme of greater local interest than that of the approaching Festival. We have carefully watched the progress of the various arrangements, and have no reason to fear that the final result will disappoint the just expectations of the public. If we gave implicit confidence to the reports of the Committee, we might be tempted to think that a better programme could not possibly have been concocted, or better engagements have possibly been made, than those which they have effected. But, to compare small things with great, a Festival Committee is something like a Cabinet — every member being bound to defend a policy which no one totally and individually approves. This must ever be the case in the very nature of things. If it were a sum in arithmetic which the Committee had to work, each and all would bring out precisely the same answer; but in the Arts, as in Politics and in Religion, different men will always see the same thing with different eyes. The point which recommends a programme to one man, will render it distasteful to another. All will, of course, profess a zeal for good music; but all will not agree as to what is, or what is not, good. Neither does this impugn the truth that there is a fixed standard of excellence. First-rate compositions will appear with different force to hearers of different temperament; nay, even to the same hearer in different moods of mind. What is light will not please him who is melancholy; nor what is grave, him who is gay.

With respect to the engagement of principal singers, the course to be taken may seem more easy. The best are more easily discerned; and only the best, it may be said, should be selected. But, unfortunately, singers are not more exempt than others from the evils belonging to mortality. They may break down under sickness or fatigue, and would certainly break down if the same weight were thrown upon them for a week which they could easily sustain for a concert. Moreover, the exigencies of an oratorio frequently require duplicates of the same class of voice, and subordinate parts can be successfully taken by subordinate singers. Hence the necessity for securing numbers; hence, too, the call for an outlay which renders some exclusions a matter not of choice but of necessity.

Enough has been said, we think, to show the uninitiated, that the management of a Festival is a work of no little difficulty; that an approximation to perfection is all that can fairly be expected; and that faults, real or fancied, if sought, will readily be found. It concerns the public, however, to know how far these important celebrations are entrusted to competent hands. The personal weight and worth of the individuals who serve upon a Festival Committee, should go for nothing, if, through ignorance, or recklessness, or disregard for the authority of a responsible conductor, they fail in their duty to the art, to the charities, and to the public. Now, there is happily a test of universal application, whereby the efficiency or non-efficiency of the management may be ascertained — we mean the test of comparison. The bills and engagements for the present Festival may easily be compared with the bills and engagements of those that are past. They may also be compared with those of other places. If, upon the whole, making due allowance for difference of circumstances, they pass uninjured through this ordeal, then we say that the Norwich public will have reason not only to be satisfied, but thankful to those noblemen and gentlemen through whose disinterested services our Festivals have attained their high reputation. We have made the comparisons to which we allude, for ourselves, and therefore fearlessly invite others to enter into a similar examination. In some points, the balance may be against us; in others, it may be for us; but upon the whole—and it is only upon the whole that a conclusion of any value can be formed—we say without hesitation, that the approaching Festival will leave old Norwich where it finds her—in the first rank.

We have expressed ourselves with some freedom respecting the duties of Festival Committees, for we feel that they owe grave duties to the public. But duty between human beings is reciprocal. The public have also a duty to perform. When urging privately the engagement of this or that first-rate singer, we have been met by the unanswerable argument, that "if all desirable engagements should be made, the Hall would fail as a vessel of capacity." In other words, if filled at every performance, the expense of producing such a result would be so great, that the return would leave no surplus for the Charities. But the Hall has never been filled, or anything like filled, at every performance. This may be in part owing to the impossibility of rendering every performance equally attractive; but it is doubtless in part because the few have had to do the duty of the many. The support of so great a boon to trade, to art, and to charity, is, without question, the duty of all who have it more or less in their power to afford it. We have ceased to put faith in predictions of failure, but that which we desire is triumphant success. A city so famed for its musical love, should be equally famed for its musical patronage.

Politically, Norwich has no enviable reputation, and in manufactures its ancient prestige is scarcely sustained. We need some redeeming characteristic, some excellence which may secure us a place in history. Our musical pre-eminence give us this; and we must jealously preserve it, or Norwich may hereafter be known only as a city which, once famous, gradually lost everything which conferred on it an honorable distinction.—The Norfolk and Norwich Mercury.

The Original of "Fra Diavolo."—The real name of the Neapolitan robber, Fra Diavolo, was Michael Pozzo. He was in early life a stocking maker, and was subsequently a friar. While acting in the latter capacity he joined a band of outlawed banditti in Calabria, and eventually became their leader. In the double character of robber and priest he offered his services to Cardinal Ruffo, who at that time was the head of the party in favour of the Bourbons of Naples, and through the influence of the Cardinal, although a price had been previously set upon his head, he obtained a pardon and a pension of 3,600 ducats, with which he retired from public and "professional" life to a small estate that he had purchased. From this retreat, however, he was soon called by the Bourbons, who on Joseph Napoleon ascending the throne, again availed themselves of his services. In 1806 he made a descent, with a large body of banditti and recruits, at a place called Sperlonga, where he threw open the prisons, and was joined by a great number of the lazzaroni. After a severe action, however, he was taken prisoner and summarily executed — a fate which he is said to have met with the most disdainful indifference. He was, in his way, a kind of Robin Hood, and many romantic tales are told of his chivalry and gallantry.

Letters to the Editor.

VOLUNTEER BANDS.

Sir, — Lord Elcho's excellent letter has directed the attention of the public to the difficulties which may affect the permanence of the Volunteer movement, and, among other points, the great expense of military bands has been adduced as an argument against their formation in Volunteer corps.

Captain Murray has explained the manner in which an excellent band for ordinary regimental purposes may be formed with very little expense and with incontestable advantage. May we also be permitted to adduce the case of the corps to which we have the honour to belong (the Robin Hood Rifles) as another instance of the facility and inexpensiveness with which this may be accomplished? The band consists of thirty-seven amateur and professional performers. Their services are entirely gratuitous. The cost of the uniform has been defrayed by a separate subscription, entirely distinct from the funds of the battalion. The instruments, which cost about 160*l*., were purchased at the bandsmen's own expense. The members are all attested in the different companies, and they are under an engagement with the bandmaster, Mr. Turpin, whose services also unpaid, to give him six months' notice when leaving the band. They play for practice twice, and in the castle grounds belonging to the corps once a week, and hold themselves at the disposal of the colonel for marching out, &c., when required.

In addition to other advantages, we believe that the formation of these Volunteer bands (which in this neighbourhood is all but general) will be the means of spreading the love of music more generally among us, and we think that there are few volunteers who have marched to the inspiriting strains of a military band who will not join in the hope expressed by Captain Murray that "unpaid bands may become as general as they are possible."

We have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servants,

John Patterson, Lieutenant, 3d Company.
William Tindal Robertson, M.D., Hon. Secretary, Band Committee.

Nottingham, Aug. 22.

UNIFORM MUSICAL PITCH.

Camp, Colchester, Aug. 22, 1860.

SIR,—In your impression of the 18th inst., you inform your readers, under the head of "Uniform Musical Pitch," that the pitch is at last settled; of course it is an immense boon to musicians of all kinds and denominations. But although you tell us that the pitch is of 528 vibrations for C in the time decided on, that is of very little use to those who are not possessed of the necessary instrument for determining and calculating vibrations of sounds; if you will kindly state in your columns where a fork, guaranteed to be of the correct pitch, may be obtained, you will be conferring a great favour on all musicians in the provinces, and on

Your obedient servant,
"Do."

A DAY OF DEVOTION.

August 21, 1860.

SIR,—I was present last Thursday evening at the rehearsal at Exeter Hall, of Mr. H. Phillips's new Sacred Cantata, entitled A Day of Devotion, Miss Wilkinson and Miss J. Wells taking the principal soprano and contralto parts. The introductory symphony descriptive of the dawn of morning, the stirring of the people, the shepherd's horn, and singing of birds is very characteristic, and a tenor solo and chorus which follows—"O glorious day when we from earth shall soar,"—produces a very solemn and religious effect. Miss Wilkinson executed in a most brilliant manner a very difficult bravura—"Now let the pealing organ sound his praise,"—and Miss Wells, a sublime recitative and air that followed,—"Such is thy life so pictured in this scene." Some of the chorusses are very striking, particularly the last but one,—"I hear God in the tempest and the silent hour of night,"—the concluding chorus, with a fine declamatory tenor song preceding it, winding up the cantata in a most devotional and spirited manner. This little notice, if you will be kind enough to insert, is but a just tribute to Mr. H. Phillips as an English composer, and one who all his life has borne so high a reputation in connection with the sacred school of music.—I am, your obedient servant,

E. H.

[We shall be glad to be able to endorse our correspondent's prayer.—ED.]

THE CONCERT SEASON.

GENTLEMEN,—In the list of persons who have given Concerts, in last week's MUSICAL WORLD, the name of Miss Cecilia Summerhayes, who gave the third concert of the Professors' Union, at the Beethoven Rooms, on June 22nd, was omitted; will you kindly insert it in the next week's number.

I am, Gentlemen, your obliged,
LOUISA SUMMERHAYES.

MATHEMATICAL THEORY OF THE MINOR SCALE.

SIR,—From my previous letters it will be understood that the primary sounds or bases of any scale or key are those of the tonic, dominant and subdominant; and it is evident that as these sounds have their peculiar characteristics, the primary chords, or triads, having these sounds for their bases, and from which the sounds of the scale are derived (see MUSICAL WORLD, April 21st) must possess the same characteristics. In the derivation of the major scale it was not necessary to enter into a consideration of this, on account of the fact of the primary major chords being wholly constituted of positive harmonics from their respective bases; their harmonic bases are the same as their fundamental bases, and consequently the character of the chords with reference to their bases is uniform and unchangeable. With the sounds of the primary minor chords, however, it is different; their fundamental bases do not correspond with either their positive or negative harmonic bases, hence the chords have not the simplicity or permanency of character which appertains to the major chords, and which difference, if it affect their characters as tonic, dominant and subdominant, must certainly be taken into consideration if we would arrive at the true sounds of the minor scale. The chord of the tonic, which is the basis of the scale, must of necessity have the same character as the scale; hence, in the minor mode, the chord of the tonic is minor. The chord of the fifth of the scale must, as dominant, always be major; thus G leads to C, which is the primary basis, or fundamental bass, of either the major or minor primary chord of C, as seen in the systems of sounds; but this G, as dominant, and the nearest positive harmonic of C, and most nearly related to it, is the harmonic base, not of the minor chord, but of the major chord, of G, as is evident by a reference to the first part of my last letter, on the theory of harmonics; therefore the dominant chord must always be major. Moreover, the sounds of this chord being also positive harmonics of C, lead more directly to that base, G being the nearest negative base of C; but the sounds of the minor chord lead to the positive harmonic base E♭, or through that sound to others still more remote, and to which E♭ is the negative base; whence the character of the dominant chord is evident. The chord of the subdominant has the same character as the tonic. This last sound is equally related to the major and minor chords of the subdominant; but the subdominant being a sound leading in the opposite direction to that of the dominant, the minor chord of the subdominant leads direct to the minor of the tonic, and the major of the subdominant to the major of the tonic: thus the sound A♭ in the subdominant chord of F minor leads direct to E♭ in the minor chord of the tonic C, it being its nearest positive harmonic; the sound A in the major chord of the subdominant leading to E in the tonic. These facts are evident from the general principles of harmonics as detailed in my last; and the relation of these chords will be seen in any of the diagrams which contain the sounds of which the chords are composed. In the minor mode, therefore, the chords of the tonic and subdominant are minor; the dominant alone is major. Arranging the sounds of these primary chords in their order above the base, according to the magnitude of their ratios, we have the following:—

C	D	E♭	F	G	A♭	B	C
1	8/9	5/6	3/4	2/3	5/8	8/15	2
	T	S	t	T	S	(TC)	S

which are the true sounds of the minor scale, whether ascending or descending, being the only sounds of the primary chords, or triads, of the tonic, dominant and subdominant, the primary basis of every scale or key. The letters T, t, and S, as before, respectively represent the major tone 8/9, the minor tone 9/10, and the diatonic semitone 15/16, C is the chromatic semitone 24/25, S and C are together equal to the minor tone.

Variations of the Minor Scale.

It is requisite to notice the distinction between the chord having the dominant sound for its fundamental bass, and the chord or triad of the dominant; the chord having the 5th of the scale for its fundamental bass may be either major or minor, but as a dominant chord, that is, a chord leading immediately to harmonies connected with the tonic, it must always be major, thus in the scale of C, the sound G may be the fundamental bass of either a major or minor chord, but the major chord alone is dominant, and leads to the harmonies connected with C, that is, to the derivative chords of the system F. Also with respect to the chord of the subdominant, though it is minor in the minor mode, yet when the sounds of either the major or minor chord of the subdominant are combined with those of the dominant, they partake of the character of this last chord, forming the chords of the dominant 7th, 9th, &c., and lead to harmonies connected with the tonic (see MUSICAL WORLD, May 26). These variable characters of the chords in the minor mode give rise to similar changes in the scale, thus in the descending scale of C minor, the sound B, derived from the dominant chord, not necessarily leading to tonic harmonies, may be changed to B♭, the minor 3rd of the chord of G (not B♭, the dominant 7th of C), but which sound belongs more correctly to the minor scales of G and D. This change makes the descending scale

C	B♭	A♭	G	F	E♭	D	C
2	8/9	8/9	3/4	3/4	8/9	8/9	1
	t	T	S	T	t	S	T

The intervals of this scale do not correspond with those of the descending major scale of E♭, as by many is supposed to be the case; the sound F in the above scale being nearer to E♭ than in the major scale by the difference between a major tone and a minor tone; as will be seen on comparing the order of the intervals with those of the major scale in Musical World, April 21st. In the same letter was noticed the division of the scale into two equal parts, now each of these parts has its distinctive character: thus the sounds C D E in the first portion of the scale of C major are derived from the primary chords of the tonic and dominant; but the sounds G A B, in the second portion of the scale, may be derived from the dominant and subdominant (G belonging equally to the chords of the tonic and dominant), in this case the combined sounds having a dominant character, as before observed, lead to the tonic C, which may be the basis of either the major or minor chord; in this manner, when the three first sounds of the second portion of the ascending scale of C minor are accompanied by the dominant harmony, A may be substituted for A♭, making the ascending scale as follows:—

C D E♭ F G A B C
1 ⅛ ⅛ ⅛ ⅛ ⅛ ⅛ 2 :
T S t T t T S

but the sound A in this scale, the major 9th of the dominant chord, is properly the 6th of the major scale of C, and is not the true 6th of the minor scale, any more than A♭, the minor 9th of the dominant chord, would, by parity of reasoning, be the 6th of the descending scale of C major.

The comparative ratios heading the last diagram in my last letter should be 1/1, 15/16, 8/9, instead of the reverse order, which I must have inadvertently given. I ought also to explain that these ratios refer to the relative pitch of sounds, nominally the same, which appear, or which would appear in an extension of the three different columns.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,
W. H. Parkinson.

Cheetham Hill, Manchester,
Aug. 17th, 1860.

Notice.

The Musical World may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

Advertisements are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1860.

JOHN FIELD, who resided for many years at St. Petersburg—as indolent as Dussek and as eccentric as Steibelt or Woelfl—wrote some concertos, a few sonatas, and a vast number of less important works. These, though exhibiting a certain smoothness of character and graceful peculiarity of trait, or passage, admirably suited to the finished manner of playing which eminently distinguished their author (a disciple—we cannot think otherwise, although Field being an Englishman,* we should rejoice to proclaim him original—of Cramer) are not remarkable either for depth or variety of invention. Field deserves mention, nevertheless, if only for the extensive influence produced both by his playing (his many accomplished pupils—among whom, like Dussek, he boasted his Prince Ferdinands—to wit) and his music, sufficiently meritorious in its way, on a vast number of contemporaries.

* John Field—"Russian Field," as he was nick-named—was, we believe, born in Ireland.

Cipriani Potter,† another Englishman, and one far more illustrious than Field, has distinguished himself in every branch of composition; and to his influence as a master must be chiefly, if not wholly, attributed the remarkable progress which this country has made of late years in musical intelligence. But, although Mr. Potter has left nothing untouched, and nothing, we may surely say, "unadorned," especially in the department of instrumental music, it is of his pianoforte music alone that we have at present to speak. Mr. Potter is as thorough a master of the sonata form as Mozart himself, with a power of development no doubt derived from the great Beethoven, who, struck with his quickness and feeling, did not disdain to afford him his invaluable counsels. The specimens Mr. Potter has given us of the sonata for pianoforte solus (at least the printed ones) are not numerous, and are only published in Germany. Yet they are of such a solid kind, that, although sometimes wanting in fancy, they may with safety be constituted as models. Mr. Potter's Studies (two books) are justly esteemed among the very best of elementary works. Of his concertos, although, we believe, he has composed many, not being printed we are unable to speak advisedly; but some rare occasions of hearing them performed by the composer have unfolded their merits so plainly as to make us the more regret the impossibility of possessing them.

From men so gifted and so thoughtful we must take a great leap to descend upon such a level flat of commonplace as that occupied by Frederic Kalkbrenner, whom we notice simply because, as a pianist and a professor of the pianoforte, he has exercised considerable influence. His studies, possessing little musical merit, are decidedly useful; besides which, they facilitate certain mechanical peculiarities that, in the present age of executive wonders, are almost indispensable. As a composer Kalkbrenner had neither originality nor learning. His style, if style it may be termed, was a melée of the exuberances of Dussek and his cotemporaries, the unmeaning extravaganza of some of the modern fantasia-mongers, and the brilliant scale-passages of Henri Herz. We can find no vestige in the entire catalogue of Kalkbrenner's work, either of individual thought or musical ingenuity. True, some of his pieces attained an ephemeral popularity; but, of them, the variations on "Rule Britannia"—which are not so ingenious and scarcely more brilliant than those of Dussek‡—constitute a prominent example. We need hardly say, that such compositions cannot possibly have any influence on the progress of the art. Kalkbrenner essayed his talents in concertos and sonatas; of the former we need not speak—they are not worth the pains; of the latter we have a better opinion. We are acquainted with three of them:—that in A flat, generally known as the "Left-handed Sonata;" that in A minor, dedicated to Cherubini (!); and that in F minor. The first and second are the best by many degrees, and have some really beautiful passages, besides being, for Kalkbrenner, wonderfully symmetrical. The last, except a slow movement in C major, fantastically styled "The Song of the Quail," contains nothing above mediocrity. Yet, as Kalkbrenner is unanimously admitted amongst the most notable persons who at a recent period devoted themselves to the progress of the pianoforte, we have necessarily included him in our catalogue raisonnés.

† Chief for many years of the Royal Academy of Music—master of Professor Sterndale Bennett, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, and other eminent musicians.

‡ It may be noted here that Kalkbrenner in his Pianoforte Tutor, while attempting to undervalue, betrays most extraordinary ignorance of the works of this great composer—speaking of his "Consolation" (a short theme with variations in B flat), as his most remarkable work!

Of Henri Herz, who still lives and belongs to our immediate times, we need say little. Singular as it may appear, he adopted the Fall of Paris, of Moscheles, not only as a model for a single piece, but as a foundation of a new school, which he developed as far as it could go. But Herz brought with him a lively fancy, an inexhaustible facility in the invention of graceful, elegant, and natural passages, and a knowledge of music by no means contemptible. How popular this writer has been (and is)—what a fortune he has proved to the music publishers—what a boon to young ladies in the drawing-room, and what a torture to their visitors—what an invaluable stock of display for pianoforte teachers incapable of executing better music—and what a universal favourite with all, musicians as well as amateurs—everybody knows. To say more of Henri Herz would be superfluous; to say less would have been unjust. Nor should we quit him so soon but that, as far as our knowledge goes, he has not written one sonata for piano solus, nor do his concertos evidence any extensive acquaintance with, or profound attachment to, the sonata form—the great test for all composers. Before leaving him, however, we must say one thing in favour of Henri Herz, which is wholly apart from the influence, good or bad, his music has exercised, or continues to exercise, on pianists and composers for the piano. Out of the large number of works he has written we do not remember a single instance of ennui produced by the execution of one of them, great or small. As much cannot be said of many composers. Although compelled to deny him a place among the really great men who have benefitted and advanced the art, we cannot, with any show of justice, number Herz among those whose ignorance renders them pitiable while their assumption makes them intolerable.

Czerny, the most voluminous writer for the pianoforte of whom the whole history of the art makes mention,* must be content with this distinction, as the only one that has induced us to introduce his name here. He was a musician of some acquirement, and a professor of acknowledged merit. He lived a cotemporary of Henri Herz, and has written a great many pieces in imitation of that original, which by some might be accepted without suspicion as the compositions of Herz himself. He was a resident at Vienna while Beethoven flourished, with whom he was on intimate terms of acquaintance, and has written a great many pieces in imitation of that original, which nobody would, under the most difficult circumstances, accept as the compositions of Beethoven. Czerny has imitated almost every cotemporary, almost every predecessor, and, had he the gift of foresight, in all probability he would have imitated some composer yet unborn. Luckily for posterity he did not possess that gift. The sonatas of Czerny—which are frequently wound up into interminable fugues, based on interminable chromatic themes—are not sonatas, and, but for the title-page, no one would surmise the classical intentions of the composer. We are pleased to be able to say, that we neither know nor care whether Czerny has written any concertos, but we have heard more than 300 of his miscellaneous pieces, and have no desire at present of seeking to hear any more.

Charles Mayer and Prixis may be classed together, the first as a very good, the last as a very bad composer of pianoforte music. Mayer, we believe, lives in Russia; Pixis is dead many years. The influence of Mayer, who cannot boast of as much originality as musical knowledge, has been to improve the taste of his hearers, and the music of his cotemporaries; that of Pixis, who can boast of quite as little originality as musical knowledge, has been to spoil one and the other. We know of no sonatas by either; but we know of some very excellent studies (good music to boot) by the first, and we know of some exceedingly poor fantasias (bad music to boot) by the latter. Both are cited by competent authorities as men of note in what chiefly regards the art of composing, and playing on the pianoforte. The former we accept without hesitation; the latter we have named only to question his right to the distinction.

* We believe—thank heaven we have no practical experience of the fact—that the works of Czerny pass Op. 1100 ! !

A FEW weeks ago we called attention to the folly and bad taste of a gentleman (we forget his name) who wrote a querulous letter to The Times on the subject of singers' salaries, and especially about the enormous sums paid to them for attending festivals. No one in this country, where there is such an immense amount of competition in everything, is much overpaid, and certainly not singers and musicians. We remember reading some years ago in a French journal, that in Gluck's time the entire expenses of the Académie Royale, including the salaries of singers, dancers, chorus, corps-de-ballet, orchestra, costumiers, tailors, and scene-shifters, did not amount to half what was being paid to Mlle. Sophie Cruvelli alone for her services as first soprano. But was Mlle. Cruvelli, as a singer, worth more than twice as much as all the singers at the Opera in Gluck's time put together? That is the real question, and we have no hesitation in answering it in the affirmative. The vocalists for whom Gluck was condemned to write were notoriously incapable, so much so, that at a supper where it was arranged that he should meet Piccini, and where the two rivals became convivial, the German said to the Italian: "These French people amuse me; they want us to compose songs for them, and they don't know how to sing."

Nor do any of those people know how to sing, or care an atom for singing, who are astonished and amazed that some of the prizes of life should occasionally fall to the lot of a great singer. The envious, if nothing else will console them, should reflect that if there were no great temptations in art, we should not have nearly so many great artists, by which the envious themselves, and all who have not the temperaments of mere brutes, would suffer. It is a sad thing, no doubt, that men and women who cultivate such a divine art as music should care for such a common thing as money. But bishops, who show us the way to heaven, are not insensible to its advantages; neither are generals whose first thoughts are of defeating the enemies of their country; nor judges whose chief care is that the law shall be rightly administered. We have all heard of great writers making their thousands a year, and of one great historian receiving a cheque for twenty thousand from his publisher, which he doubtless pocketed as prosaically as a banker or a broker on settling day. For our part, we rejoice that just now those who do the best things in this world occasionally meet with a fair amount of worldly success, and are enabled to leave something behind them besides a good name. We hear in the present day of painters, writers, singers, and musicians, making their fortunes; there are even poets and composers who are largely remunerated; and of all these successful ones it is quite a mistake to suppose that the most successful are those connected with the musical profession and the opera.

Formerly actors and operatic singers gained smaller salaries; but they led easier lives, enjoyed longer careers, and had fewer expenses. When a tenor has to shout John of Leyden's Morning Hymn at the top of his voice, and to yell Manrico's Song of War at the risk of cracking his A, surely he deserves to be better paid—(not that the performance is more difficult, but because it is more dangerous) than if he had only to warble the airs of Cimarosa and Rossini? Singing the music of Meyerbeer and Verdi he knows that his notes, if not his days, are numbered, and charges accordingly.

Then think how a modern tenor has to regulate his diet, to protect his valuable chest and throat from all possible and impossible draughts; to eat nothing but boiled fowl when all London sets him down as a glutton; to drink nothing but weak claret and water, when by universal consent he is a flaming fiery drunkard. You get your feet wet, are hoarse, and are well the next day. The tenor gets his feet wet, is hoarse, is not well the next day, and as long as he is unable to sing, not only loses his money, if he happens to be a concert singer, but is usually regarded as an impostor, because he frankly and conscientiously declines to torture the ears of the public he has been in the habit of delighting. In short, the tenor is as delicate as a soprano, who is as delicate as a singing bird in Australia, where singing birds will not live.

Then there is the question of expense. Singers who receive the highest salaries have usually to travel a good deal and to spend a considerable amount of money on their costumes. In the old Italian comedy, the Doctor, Scaramuccia, Arlequino, Lelio, Vespenã, &c., played a thousand different pieces in the same dress; and if they had to go from one town to another each could carry his stage wardrobe under his arm. At present a tenor or prima donna of renown cannot go from one capital to another without being accompanied or preceded by several tons of luggage, of which the mere transport — from London, we will say to St. Petersburg, from St. Petersburg to Paris, from Paris to Madrid, from Madrid to New Orleans, and from New Orleans through New York back to London—costs more every year than was given annually to a singer in the days when singers could not sing.

Those vocalists and musicians who do not belong to the Opera at all have still their expenses in the way of dress, and very heavy ones in the way of travelling, if they happen to possess great reputations, and to be in the habit of accepting engagements to appear at provincial concerts. These are secondary reasons why they should be well paid; the chief, however, of all being that their talent naturally commands a high price, and that they have a right to obtain for it its full market value, as the first-rate barrister who gets fifty pounds with his lying brief, or the celebrated doctor who takes a consultation fee of nearly as much from his dying patient. Indeed, it is only in connexion with music that this right is ever questioned; but people seem to think that in the musical profession high salaries should not be tolerated; moreover, that the habitual charges of eminent artists may without any sort of impropriety be first disputed, then disapproved of, and at last publicly outraged and condemned.

The above reflections and remarks have been suggested to us by some very offensive passages in the report of the Norwich Festival Committee, in which, after a brief and insufficient account of the arrangements for the forthcoming season, reasons are assigned for the non-engagement of several popular vocalists. "At your last meeting," says the report of the sub-committee, which the chief committee has just adopted "our difficulties respecting Mad. Sainton-Dolby were laid before you, and it was decided that a difference of sixty guineas between her and Miss Palmer would be more than we should be justified in acceding to. The latter singer had given complete satisfaction at the Bradford and Leeds Festivals, especially at Leeds, where, it is stated, 'she took, at very short notice, the contralto music of Elijah, &c., with so much success, that Miss Dolby's inability to fulfil her engagement was scarcely regretted.' We have therefore engaged Miss Palmer, and this has enabled us to introduce another attraction into our evening concerts, which we believe will give pleasure and instruction to many admirers of the instrument—we allude to the engagement of Miss Arabella Goddard the celebrated pianist, who will play a solo, a duet with our conductor on two pianos, and two splendid concerted pieces with other of the choicest instruments of our band."

Now, what possible right have the Norfolk committee men to tell Norwich, and through Norwich all in England who take an interest in Norwich proceedings, that Miss Palmer will sing at a festival for sixty pounds less than Miss Dolby? Artists have their fixed terms like the members of other professions, and they are not regulated solely and entirely by the artist's talent, but to some extent by his or her reputation, which is the result of the exhibition of talent during a certain number of years. Under the impression, no doubt, that they are benefiting Miss Palmer, these impertinent Norwichers are really injuring her, for most persons will conclude that if Miss Palmer asks for a given number of performances £60 less than Miss Dolby, she is necessarily inferior to her in that proportion—a proposition which, out of respect to both ladies, we shall not consider. On the other hand we trust Miss Dolby's beautiful voice will survive the assertion, so readily adopted by the business-like critics of Norfolk, that at Leeds "her inability to fulfil her engagement was scarcely regretted." Not regretted by whom? The statement of a few interested and offended committee-men, belonging to a county which is chiefly notorious for its marshes, its murders, and the fatness of its turkeys, is surely not important in a matter of this kind. We know whether Miss Dolby's inability to sing the contralto music of Elijah would be regretted at Exeter Hall, and if she is not appreciated at Leeds and at Norwich, all we can say is that we have no doubt she, on her side, does appreciate Norwich and Leeds. Some day the gallant Norwich committee will speak of Miss Palmer as they now speak of Miss Dolby, and after weighing her in their clumsy balance against some other contralto, will declare that she has been found wanting; that she is only £40 or £50, but certainly not £60, better than her rival (the appearance of rivalry being in the most unbecoming manner got up by the Norwichers themselves); and finally if she does not choose to sing at Norwich for less than she is in the habit of receiving elsewhere, her absence will not be regretted.

Shall we speak of the envy, both of taste and of figure, that occurs in other clauses of the report — as, for instance, in this one :—"We have therefore engaged Miss Palmer, and this has enabled us to introduce another attraction into our evening concerts, which we believe will give pleasure and instruction to many admirers of the instrument — we allude to the engagement of Miss Arabella Goddard the celebrated pianist, who will play a solo, a duet with our conductor on two pianos, and two splendid concerted pieces, with other of the choicest instruments of our band." No; for our space is limited. Still we must protest our inability to understand the arithmetical method of the Norwich committee when they inform us that the non-engagement of Miss Dolby, by which they save sixty pounds, enables them to retain the services of Miss Arabella Goddard—whose terms must be considerably more than sixty, unless, out of love of Norwich, she consents to play for much less than a pianist of her reputation ever accepted before.

THE OPÉRA COMIQUE.

(Translated from "Le Ménéstrel.")

The history of the Opéra Comique is in some measure the history of music in France. Sprung from the wedlock of comedy with song, in other words, of the two most popular forms of literature and music in this country, it was a style of production which could not but be highly successful among us. At a time when the talent of the poet Quinault was indispensably necessary to insure the acceptance of the scores of Lulli, music crept timidly under the form of ariettes into comedies of a mixed character. In proportion as the taste for, and knowledge of, this art became implanted in our habits, it acquired a higher degree of importance on the stage, and from a secondary rank, such as it occupied in the works of Duni, and even of Monsigny, we find it taking possession of the foremost place, commencing with the score of the last twenty years. We may consider, it seems to me, the Troqueurs of Dauvergne, and Zampa, the immortal masterpiece of Herold, as the Alpha and Omega of the style of which I am about, as best I may, to trace the history.

It was in the first half of the foregoing century that certain French musicians, De Gilliers and Mouret* and some others, took up the idea of substituting in vaudeville pieces, melodies of their own invention, to the hackneyed times (airs de Pont Neufs) formerly introduced into them. These airs, which the public found it easy to retain in their memory, obtained an immense success, especially those which Gilliers had introduced into a prologue, entitled Les Dieux de la Foire, and represented at the theatre of La Foire St. Germain, in 1724. The success of these vaudevilles was such that the Opera took umbrage at it. They then hit upon the singular notion of letting down from the ceiling, suspended to a string, large placards on which were copied the words of the song; the actor gesticulated the appropriate action, the orchestra played the tune, and the spectators sang. This naturally could not last; the public at first came in crowds to the theatre to protest against an edict apparently so unjust; but such a system destructive of all illusion did not continue long.

The managers then agreed to pay a subvention to the Opera, in return for which they were allowed to introduce new ariettes into their comedies. This subvention was continued down to the revolution of 1830.

The first opéra comique, written in a regular and special manner as such, was played in 1753.

Part the First.

18th Century.

I.

DAUVERGNE AND DUNI.

Inspired by the buffo operas which an Italian company had represented in Paris, Dauvergne wrote the music for the comedy of Les Troqueurs, the words of which were by Vadé.† This piece, which must be regarded as the first opéra comique, had a colossal success, and deservedly.

Although the framework of the libretto is simple enough, the couplets are wittily rhymed, and well cut out for music. The score is feebly instrumented, and yet the accompaniments are superior to those of several of the works of that time, to the Devin du Village, for example, brought out only one year before Les Troqueurs.

Among the most interesting pieces should be mentioned the duo, "Troquons, troquons," in which the motive, repeated in imitations by the two singers, is very comical in effect. The same may be said of the quatuor which follows it, "Eh, non, c'est moi qui serai ton mari!"

Dauvergne was born in Clermont in 1713, and was the son of a violin teacher of that town, from whom he received his first lessons of music. He came to Paris in 1729 to complete his education, was received into the king's household as a violinist, and subsequently made himself known in 1732 as a composer by his opera, Les Amours de Tempé. His only opéra comique was Les Troqueurs. Afterwards he worked only for the Opera. He bought the post of master-composer of the king's music, and band-master, places which he filled up to 1790. Driven from Paris by the republic, he retired to Lyons, where he died Feb. 12, 1797.

Thus was the style created: a Frenchman was its inventor, an Italian was destined to bestow on it a higher degree of musical importance. It was the Neapolitan Duni, who improved on the creation of Dauvergne.

Born on the 9th of February, 1709, at Matera, a small town in the province of Otranto, Egido Romualdo Duni had acquired a certain amount of fame by about a dozen operas, played mostly with success in Italy, before he came to France. He had passed through his studies under the direction of Durante, in companionship with Jomelli and Pergolese. He travelled, in order to make known his talents, in Germany, France, and England. His operas were sung at Naples, at Rome, at Milan, at Venice, and at Genoa, where he made the acquaintance of Marshal Richelieu, who, after hearing one or two of his works, pressed him to write for the French stage. Having read while at the court of Parma the opera comique à vaudevilles of Favart, Ninette à la Cour, he thought the subject a pleasant one, and wrote new music for the couplets. The piece was represented in 1755, and the libretto writer, Anseaume, was induced, on hearing it, to confide to him a little piece in two acts, and in verse, called Le Peintre amoureux de son Modèle (1757).

With the same writer he composed Le Docteur Sangrado, in one act (1758); L'Ile des Fous and Mazet (1761); Le Milicien (1763); L'Ecole de la Jeunesse (1765); and La Clochette (1766).

These pieces, however, did not obtain so much vogue as those written in collaboration with Favart: La Fille mal Gardée; La Plaideuse, ou le Procès (1763); La Fée Urgèle, represented for the first time the 4th of August, 1765, with immense success (considered the masterpiece of the composer*); and, lastly,

* Grimm, nevertheless, says: "The music of Urgèle is rather old-fashioned and weak, but in other respects full of finesse."

Les Moissonneurs, composed in 1768, and which was also received with great favour.

To complete the list of the most remarkable works which he conferred on the Opéra Comique we must cite Le Rendez-vous (1763), the words of which are by Legier (?); Les Sabots (1768); and Thémire (1770).

The poem of these two last, or, at least, Thémire, was due to the imagination of a man far superior to the usual collaborators of Duni. The latter was in the habit of complaining that Favart only left in his comedies the smallest space possible for music, and that Anseaume, who, before turning author, had filled the very humble office of prompter, furnished him too frequently with the most insignificant material. He coveted the collaboration of Sédaine; and it was thus he obtained his desire.

The poem of the Sabots, the subject of which was borrowed from an old song, was by Cazotte. Duni did not think it good and resolved to get Sédaine to touch it up: but the latter, who, as Grimm expressed it, was wedded to Monsigny, and thought he should be doing an indelicate thing to give a libretto to any other musician. One day Duni said to Sédaine, who, before constructing pieces for the stage, had begun a builder, "that he had a staircase which threatened to come down with a crash, and that he wished in repairing it to give it a more agreeable form, and would be glad therefore to have his advice about it." After dinner he sang to him on his harpsichord without affectation the first air of the Sabots. Sédaine thought it pretty, and asked to see the piece; this was precisely what Duni desired. Sédaine pronounced the piece a bad one, gave a few words of advice, promised to superintend the alteration of the staircase, and returned in a few days to see the workmen. Duni sang to him another air from the Sabots; Sédaine altered the words, corrected the first scene, and returned home persuaded he had only come about the staircase. By degrees, as the steps rise one above the other, properly supported, the piece is put into a better shape from beginning to end, so that with the exception of the first air, not a single word of Cazotte's remained. Sédaine discovers in the end, that without being aware of it, he has been writing a piece for Duni, who pleasantly remarked, that it had cost him a flight of stairs to get a pair of Sabots.

* De Gilliers, born in Paris, 1667; died ibid., in 1773; he was a violinist, and wrote the music to the comedies of Regnard and Dancourt. Mouret, his pupil and imitator, born at Avignon, in 1683, and died mad at Charenton in 1738.

† A grotesque poet, author of La Pipe Cassée, an "epi-tragi-fish-faggi-heroi-comical" poem.

A short time afterwards, Sédaine gave him the opera of Thémire, the last successful opera of Duni.

This musician is entitled to our esteem, since to his name belongs the credit of having founded a style of opera which was hereafter to immortalise and render popular the works of French composers. Certainly his small scores do not shine by the richness of their instrumentation, or their harmonic combinations; they even contain gross faults, which induce one to ask what he could have learned in the school of Durante; but it must be remembered that he wrote for unskilled executants, whom modulations or a succession of chords would have disconcerted.

In the Fée Urgèle, for instance, there are romances of a most graceful simplicity. We must not seek in it for effective concerted pieces, because it should be borne in mind that at that time an opera comique was merely a comedy with ariettes.

He died in Paris, where he had fixed his residence for many years, on the 11th of January, 1775.

The successes of Duni had stimulated the ambition of the French composers. Monsigny and Phillidor competed with him, and soon left him far behind.

(To be continued.)

PROFESSIONAL SINGING IN CHURCHES.

We (Leeds Mercury) have reason to know that a letter has been addressed by the Bishop of Ripon to an incumbent, in consequence of his lordship's attention having been directed to an advertisement, which stated that, at the re-opening services of a church in the diocese, a Miss W—— had been engaged to sing select pieces of music. His lordship says:—

My Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to the form of notice in which the sermons to be preached at the re-opening of —— church, on Sunday last, the 5th inst., were publicly announced, I allude particularly to the advertisement that a professional singer, Miss W——, had been engaged to sing select pieces of music during the service. I consider such an announcement as this highly objectionable, nor can I refrain from marking my strong disapproval of it. The church of God is not the place to which crowds of persons ought to be attracted to hear professional singing. Performances of this kind belong to other places altogether, and it is a profanation of a church to convert it into a place of attraction for the lovers of fine music to attend for the purpose of hearing select pieces of music by eminent musical performers. I object to all singing in churches in which the congregation in general cannot take part; and, above all, I object to the announcement of any musical performers by way of inducement to the public to attend a particular service. I will thank you, therefore, in future to use your authority to prevent any repetition of the circumstance to which this letter refers. I doubt not you entirely agree with me in the belief that to attempt to swell a congregation by an advertisement of professional singing may succeed to attract a crowd together; but it is a course wholly unworthy of a minister of Christ, and very ill-adapted to promote the glory of God, or the spiritual edification of the people.

I am, my dear sir, very faithfully yours,

R. Ripon.

The following is the reply of an incumbent to the Bishop's letter:—

My Lord,—I am in the receipt of your letter of the 9th inst., wherein, with your usual courtesy and Christian urbanity, you refer me to an irregularity in the notice announcing the re-opening of my church, after its having undergone extensive repairs.

To say that I was not a consenting party to the artistic singing on that occasion would be obviously wrong, since every incumbent, as you justly observe, is amenable to the law for the mode of conducting public worship in his church; and I feel deeply grieved that the persevering obstinacy of others in authority should have wrested from me a reluctant consent to a procedure complained of by your lordship—opposed to the religious instincts of right-minded people, and one to which, as my flock can attest, I am intensely averse.

It is sometimes urged, in extenuation of an act questionably expedient, that "the end justifies the means," by which on a former occasion I was induced to give my sanction to a kindred act, during the fifteen years of my incumbency; but although every fence was erected at the time, in the selection of an excellent clergyman to join me in the service, and by a discourse matured and adapted to such an assembly from myself, yet I freely confess I felt most painfully that the solemnity of the service was compromised, and resolved on no account to yield to the suggestion of others, or to allow any pecuniary emergency in which the churchwarden might be involved, to repeat it. The occasion to which I allude was in 1852, and the object of introducing aid, foreign to the beautiful and unambitious singing for which my church is characterised, was to mitigate a debt, which in his official capacity, and solely for the comfort of the parishioners, the churchwarden had unhappily contracted.

Your lordship will now probably ask why a procedure of which I expressed my disapproval should have been repeated; the reply to which is found in my delicate state of health, and consequent suspension from parochial duty; in other words to the delegation to others of a work which otherwise would have devolved upon myself, viz., of adapting the expenditure upon the fabric to the actual receipts, and of leaving undone unnecessary embellishments until money was lawfully obtained to meet them. Regardless, however, of the means of securing receipts, the expenditure was incurred, and my consent to a course, wrung from me by the churchwarden and curate, the latter of whom employing in the attainment of his purposes more persistency than delicacy, whilst I was menaced by the former on non compliance, with the immediate dismissal of the labourers from the fabric; thus my consent was obtained, but under a written protest in the possession of that officer.

I am not easily coerced into a line of action which reason, much more religion, disapproves, though flexible enough to harmless prejudices. I view, therefore, the constraint put on me at a time when the issue of my illness is scarcely held doubtful, as unmanly and ungenerous; and would hope that, if the parties imposing it had even faintly realised my susceptibility on the subject, they would have desisted.

Your lordship's surmises are correct; I neither saw a copy of the original bill, know at this time the purport of it, nor was I aware of the assistance to be rendered by the Bradford Church choir—to which there could be no objection—until shortly before their arrival; and so far from countenancing the proceedings, I requested my family NOT to attend the service.

I am much annoyed that justice to myself demands these strictures (which are made in no unfriendly spirit), on the indiscretion of an officer who has subserved the local interests of this church in a manner unexampled by his predecessors in office; and hope that for the future, the conscientious scruples of a minister of Christ will not be lightly esteemed by such, nor be made to bend to mere secular emergencies; the zeal, assiduity, and untiring energy he has enlisted in the discharge of his offics are known to the parishioners, and within these limits I feel personally his debtor.

I have only to add that, irrespective of episcopal authority, for which I have a sacred and profound respect, I shall protect the House of God in which by His grace I have been called to minister from every irregularity, much more profanation.

R. H. D.

The Parsonage, Aug. 16.

The Lord Bishop of Ripon replied as follows:—

My Dear Sir,—I write a single line to assure you how entirely I acquit you of any responsibility—under the circumstances—for the unseemly notice of which I complained in my last letter to you. I very much regret that your churchwarden or any others in authority, should have taken advantage of your weak state of health to do what they must have known you would clearly disapprove; but no blame of any sort attaches to you in the matter. That it may please God to restore you to health, if it be His will, and to grant you abundantly of the comfort of His grace, is my sincere desire.

Believe me, my dear Sir, very faithfully yours,

R. Ripon.

Palace, Aug. 14, 1860.

BROUGH MEMORIAL PERFORMANCE AT LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

No theatre ever presented a more brilliant and animated appearance than the Liverpool Amphitheatre did on Tuesday night, on the occasion of the Brough performance. Every part of the house was crowded; and many parts seemed to hold about twice as many people as they could in any sense of the word accommodate. The entertainment was worthy of the audience. First came Douglas Jerrold's admirable comedy, Saint Cupid, played entirely by Liverpool amateurs; and, though these gentlemen would be quite willing, no doubt, to be considered only the bush to the good wine of the eminent Londoners who mainly contributed to the evening's delights, we must in common honesty record that they acted quite as well as the "Savages." Mr. Cummins, as Sir Valentine May, and Mr. Robert Crompton, as Queen Bee, especially distinguished themselves. To this followed, after a very brief and business-like interval, the great joint-stock burlesque of The Forty Thieves. Mr. Planché and his numerous confederates have illustrated so many proverbs, that they may be forgiven for belying one; and certainly in this instance the many cooks did not spoil the broth. Each cook was a cordon bleu; and almost every inch of the miscellaneous dish was piquant and delicious. The puns — some of them by reason of excessive goodness, and some by reason of unsurpassable badness — were most extraordinary. It was sharp work for the ears and the mind to catch them as they were rattled off line after line; and, if for a moment we were tempted, by any touch of unusual and unexpected good acting, to pay slight attention to the words, the laughter of those around immediately awakened us to the consciousness that some jeu de mot, either excellent or execrable, had been perpetrated. Mr. Talfourd, author of burlesques too numerous to mention, and too well-known to need mentioning, bore off the palm. He played the part of Morgiana, and a more telling make-up, or a more silurient or spiky performance we have too infrequently witnessed. Mr. Byron, too, played Ali Baba with extreme unction and points. Mr. Leicester Buckingham and Mr. Hollingshead were inconceivably ludicrous, as the Captain of the Forty and his lieutenant; and a very hard counter hit was made by Mr. Falconer — whose stage management also deserves special praise — in the character of a drunken cobbler, who, with a peculiarly unbecoming disregard of fitness and time, expressed in the chastest impossible Irish some very popular technicalities touching the present state of Naples. The burlesque included some capital bouncings — terpsichorean, not literary — by Mr. Talfourd, and wound up with a pathetic appeal for the kind consideration of the audience, which appeal contained one pun, at least, manufactured expressly for the occasion. "What!" said the writer, passionately, "come to Liverpool and find no mercy?" (Mersey.) Before dismissing this part of the performance, we must pay a passing compliment to the rank and file of thieves who took their parts and gesticulated them, as it were, most feloniously. The burlesque was followed by the exquisite dance, the "Pas de Miroir," which was rapturously received. Mr. Leicester Buckingham, whose admirable delivery of Mr. Sala's soaring and ferruginous prologue earlier in the evening also deserves to be noticed, now gave Robert Brough's poem, "Lady Godiva," with great taste and expression. The performances wound up with the old farce of the Lottery Ticket, in which Mr. Talfourd again distinguished himself by a most extraordinary make up as Wormwood, and a rendering of the character, which once seen can ever be remembered. Thus terminated an evening which will long be borne in mind by theatrical connoisseurs as a fit memorial of a talented humourist, presented by his compeers and successors in the art he so adorned. The performances realised a clear profit of £150.

Foreign.

M. E. Delaporte.—By a decree, dated the 6th of this month, and issued at the suggestion of the Secretary of State, M. E. Delaporte has been named a Knight of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour. This high mark of distinction, accorded to the artist who founded the prize-contests of the Orpheons in France, and, for twelve years, has consecrated all his energies to the propagation of choral singing, is pregnant with meaning, and will exercise a favourable influence on the future of the above institutions. In decorating M. Delaporte, Government decorates the Orpheonists of France; it renders a striking act of justice to the man and his work, and imposes silence on his detractors. Government is a good judge in matters of honour. While proclaiming the new knight, in the person of M. Delaporte, and saluting the cross thus bestowed on merit, the Orpheonists of France will proclaim their glorious principle, and salute the triumphant history of their progress. In the acts of peace, as in the field of battle, the decoration of the flag is the glorification of the idea—the advancement of the chief is the exaltation of the army. The banner of the French Orpheons, rendered illustrious by the festivals of Paris and London, and valiantly displayed at the various performances in the provinces, will always be firmly held aloft by the men who have fought under its patriotic mottoes. It will occupy a conspicuous position in all the pacific manifestations of our national spirit.—J. F. Vaudin.—From the Orphéon.

Cologne.—Professor Derffel, from London, has been staying here some days on a visit to his relations, and has afforded us a great treat, at several private parties, by his masterly performance of his own compositions. Ferdinand Schiller's Loreley—the principal part being sung by Mad. Offermann Hove—created an almost unexampled degree of enthusiasm at the musical festival at Arnheim in Holland.

Hanover.—After sending in his agreement with the Grand Opera in Paris, Herr Niemann has obtained a one-year's leave of absence, with no other condition than that of taking part, if desired, in the performances on the birthdays of the king and queen, and other festive occasions. Herr Niemann is engaged, for one year, by the manager of the Grand Opera, for the sum of about 72,000 francs. His engagement commences on the 1st September.

Leipsic.—A monster concert has just been given in honour of the well-known song-composer, Carl Zöllner. It was got up by all the Männergesangvereins, comprising 500 members. It was highly successful, and the attendance very numerous. The Hymn for a chorus of male voices (words by Herr Müller von der Werra, composed by Ernest II., Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha) was enthusiastically encored. It is intended to purchase, with the proceeds of the concert, a present, long since deserved, for Zöllner, who is now absent from here.

Frankfort-on-the-Maine.—The starring engagement of the tenor, Herr Niemann, who sang in Tannhäuser, the Prophète, and the part of Max in Der Freischütz; the performances of the Italian Operatic Company, under Herr Merelli; and, lastly, the admirable pianoforte playing of Herr Aloys Schmitt, Capellmeister at the court of Mecklenburg, infused into our town an amount of musical life, which even the fine summer-weather was incapable of interrupting.

Stockholm.—Mad. Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt arrived here on the 17th June, by the steamer Swea, with her husband and two children. It is her intention to spend the summer at a villa in the environs. A large number of her admirers gave her a most enthusiastic welcome.

Malines.—The Journal de Malines announces the suicide of M. Mathein, professor of music. M. Mathein threw himself across the rails, at the arrival of the train from Antwerp. His body was found horribly mutilated. The legs were completely severed from the body, and the head crushed. He was unfortunately addicted to intemperance.

Numerous letters of congratulation have been addressed to M. Eugene Delaporte, by the Orpheons and choral societies of France, on his nomination as Knight of the Legion of Honour. Most of these letters are signed by all the members of the society whence they come. In our next number we shall return to the subject.—L'Orphéon.

Italian Singers and Dancers.—An Italian journal, the Trovatore, states that the number of professional singers of both sexes now in Italy amounts to 1730. This aggregate is composed of 410 prima donnas, 330 tenors, 280 baritones, 160 basses, 50 buffos, &c. In addition to these, Italy has 1670 dancers, male and female.

Mad. Viardot is about to turn her genius, experience, and science to account by assisting to edit a selection of the best classical vocal music of the Italian, German, and French schools, with directions as to style, accentuations, colouring, &c.

Lola Montez not Dead.—Lola has recovered sufficiently from her severe attack of paralysis to be removed to Astoria. She is as yet scarcely able to lift her hand, and there is little or no hope of her ultimate recovery.—New York Herald.

Floral Hall Concerts.—It would be difficult to find out whether the bad weather has or has not benefited the very capital musical entertainments so unexpectedly provided by Mr. Alfred Mellon, in the spacious and magnificent saloon adjoining the new Covent Garden Theatre, at this slack and back season of the year. That the dismal damp evenings have prevented many from attending at the Floral Hall there can be no denying. But the wet has also detained thousands in London who had all except packed up their things, for Brighton, Bognor, Hastings, Margate, Ramsgate, Scarborough, Bath, Bristol, Dover, or any of those fashionable, semi-fashionable, or demi-semi-fashionable resorts, sea-board or inland, which entice metropolitans from home in the dog-days,—or, indeed, as it has been raining "cats and dogs" for the last two months—in the cat-and-dog days, as it might be called. Mr. Alfred Mellon must not, therefore, grumble and anathematise the pluvial gods like a farmer or a cricketer, since the ill-season makes as much for him as against him. Moreover, why should he grumble, when the attendance increases nightly, at least it did up to Monday and Tuesday last, on which nights we happened to be present, when an immense crowd assembled on both occasions. We cannot confidently attribute the increase on both nights to the engagement of a new bravura singer—Mr. Mellon is partial to bravura singers—in the person of Mlle. C. de Tifiensée, an expert vocaliser, but no very dangerous rival, we fancy, to Mlle. Parepa. Indeed, we incline to think, that if Mr. Mellon was particularly desirous of adding to his prima-donna stock, he should have looked for a simple ballad-singer, to contrast with his two prima flourishers, Misses Parepa and Thomson. He did no such thing; he procured flourisher No. 3 instead, whereby he was not greatly enabled to vary the vocal character of the programme. Mr. Wilbye Cooper, too, has been added to the singers, which proves to us unmistakably that Mr. Alfred Mellon has a notion of managing promenade concerts very different from what poor Jullien had. Jullien seldom or never engaged more than one singer, and that one was almost invariably a balladist. The announcement of the two last nights of Prince Galitzin made, no doubt, the special attraction of Monday and Tuesday. It was to be regretted, therefore, that the illustrious amateur-conductor was compelled to leave town on Wednesday, having been retained by Mad. Jullien to conduct the Jullien Festivals, about to be held on a large scale in the most important towns of the United Kingdom. This was why his highness was compelled to go, although, no doubt Mr. Alfred Mellon, no less than Mr. Alfred Mellon's audience, would have preferred his stay. On Wednesday, to make some amends for the Prince-conductor's absence, the entire choral force of the Royal Italian Opera was drafted into the performance, and a new waltz, yclept "Isabella," composed by Mr. Alfred Mellon, introduced. If anybody asks us what we think of the new dance composition of Mr. Mellon, we may aver, without the slightest pretension to a pun, that it is a bella waltz, which we trust may be understood and appreciated without explanation. To-night will be a Mendelssohn night—that is, the first part of the selection will be dedicated to the works of Mendelssohn; while, to please the Goths, the second part will be miscellaneous. The Mendelssohn programme is first-rate.

Provincial.

The Jacobowitch Family had the honour of giving a private concert at Townley Hall, the seat of Colonel C. Townley, on Tuesday, August 21, before a brilliant assembly of the highest aristocracy. The above party was honoured by the Colonel with a testimonial of the approbation and pleasure the audience derived from the evening's performance.

Plymouth.—A brief opera season has been inaugurated at the Theatre Royal. Mad. Rudersdorff, supported by well-selected artistes, drew a crowded and fashionable house on Monday night week to the performance of Lucrezia Borgia. Madame Rudersdorff's acting of the heroine was very spirited, and met with universal approbation. Miss Fanny Huddart's Orsini has lost nothing of its speciality and decisiveness. Mr. Patey, who is a native of this neighbourhood, made his debût before a Plymouth audience, and created a favourable impression. Mr. Elliot Galer, the tenor, seemed not to be in good voice. The band was good, and reflects much credit on the liberality of the management. The opera on Tuesday night was Il Trovatore, and it was, on the whole, well rendered, Mad. Rudersdorff sustained the part of Leonora, and threw into it great energy and perspicuity. She was in excellent voice, and some of the solos were sung with infinite force and sweetness, while the more brilliant passages, with which Verdi's music abounds, were rendered with all the feeling of a true artist. Miss Fanny Huddart took the part of Azucena, the gipsy—a character which finds in her a pertinent and highly demonstrative impersonation. Mr. Patey, as the Count di Luna, maintained his standing, several of his solos being effectively given. Mr. Elliot Galer appeared in the popular part of Manrico. This gentleman suffered much from sea-sickness in coming from Jersey, and he has not yet recovered the strength and tone of his voice; but he sang much better than on Monday.—Local Journal.

York.—An excellent military and vocal concert took place on Tuesday evening in the Festival Concert Room, and notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather there was a gay and fashionable assemblage. In the orchestra was the band of the Royal Horse Guards Blue, and it was quite a treat to listen to the manner in which they played the several pieces set down for them in the programme. The vocal artistes engaged were the Misses Brougham and Mr. Henry Haigh. Mr. Shaw presided at the piano-forte. The following is the programme:—

Part. I.—Overture—Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn; Trio—"Ti Prego" Curschmam (Misses Brougham and Mr. Haigh); Song—"The Three Fishers" Hullah (Miss Elizabeth Brougham); Opera—Selection from Dinorah—Meyerbeer; Song—"Home of my Heart" Lurline—Wallace (Mr. Haigh); Duet—"I would that my Love"—Mendelssohn (The Misses Brougham); Song—"Gentle Troubadour"—Wallace (Miss Josephine Brougham); Valse—"Star of the West"—Montagne.

Part II.—Overture, Der Freischutz, Weber; Romance, "She appear'd," Martha, Flotow (Mr. Haigh); Duet, "Your Pardon Senora," Balfe (The Misses Brougham); Opera, Selection from Lurline, Wallace; Song, "The Beating of my own Heart," Macfarren (Miss Josephine Brougham); Serenade, "Young Agnes," Fra Diavolo, Auber (Mr. Haigh); Trio "I'm not the Queen," Rose of Castille Balfe (The Misses Brougham and Mr. Haigh); Galop "Maximilian," Kuhner; Finale, God save the Queen.

The band of the Royal Horse Guards Blue nevertheless executed Mendelssohn's overture with precision and perfect ease, under the baton of Mr. C. Boose, the bandmaster of the regiment. A selection from Meyerbeer's opera of Dinorah was then given, in which were solos for the cornet-a-piston by Mr. Catchpole, on the euphonium by Mr. Moss, and on the clarionet by Mr. Gale. These gentlemen are clever performers, and were listened to with great delight, particularly the clarionet. A valse by Montagne, introducing English, Scotch, and Irish airs, was an animated performance, and pleased much. The Misses Brougham and Mr. Haigh sung the trio "Ti Prego" in a charming manner; Miss Elizabeth Brougham sung Mr. Hullah's "Three Fishers," and Miss Josephine Brougham "Gentle Troubadour," from the opera of Lurline. Mr. Haigh was applauded in Wallace's "Home of my heart."

The performance of Weber's overture was very fine. The selection from Lurline and galop by Kuhner, were executed with the same amount of intelligence and proficiency. Mr. Haigh gave "She appear'd," from Martha, and "Young Agnes" from Fra Diavolo, both in his best manner. The Misses Brougham and Mr. Haigh joined in the trio "I'm not the Queen," from Balfe's Rose of Castille. This piece was given with so much spirit and vivacity, that the audience called for its repetition, and the vocalists sang it a second time with increased success. The concert was one of the best that has taken place in York for a considerable time, and the audience seemed to feel that they had spent a pleasant evening when the performances terminated with the National Anthem.—Yorkshire Gazette.

Grantham Brass Band Contest and People's Festival.—This important event came off in a field adjoining Mr. Ostler's house, on Monday last. The following bands competed:—4th Lincolnshire Volunteer Rifle Corps Band, Boston; 1st Lincolnshire Volunteer Artillery Corps Band, Boston; 20th West Riding Volunteer Rifle Corps Band, Doncaster; Conisborough Brass Band; Sutton-in-Ashfield United Sherwood Brass Band; the Batley Brass Band; the Ossett Temperance Brass Band; and the Sherwood Rangers' Yeomanry Band, Newark. Messrs. H. Farmer, of Nottingham, and H. Nicholson, of Leicester, were the judges. The following bands gained prizes:—20th West Riding Volunteer Rifle Corps Band, Doncaster, £12, and a silver medal for the band-master; the Sutton-in-Ashfield United Sherwood Brass Band, £8, and a silver medal for the band-master; the Sherwood Rangers' Yeomanry Band, Newark, £5; the Batley Brass Band, £3; the 1st Lincolnshire Volunteer Artillery Corps Band, Boston, £2. After the contest a grand fête champêtre followed, comprising assault at arms, dancing, and other rustic sports. The celebrated game of "Aunt Sally" was much indulged in, and the whole concluded with some of the finest fireworks ever seen in Grantham, by Mr. Seaman of Hull. The refreshments were provided by Mr. Fillingham, of the George Hotel, and they did credit to that gentleman. The arrangements throughout were admirable, and it is computed that 7,000 persons were present. Had the day been fine, which we are sorry to say it was not, there is every probability that 10,000 tickets would have been sold. No doubt the speculation has been a remunerative one, and the town and neighbourhood duly appreciate the movement.—Nottingham Review, August 17.

The late Mr. Alfred Dickens.—With very poignant sorrow we have to notice the death of Mr. Alfred Dickens (brother to the illustrious English author), who expired at Manchester, from a frightfully rapid attack of illness of a pulmonary nature. Mr. Dickens was the travelling and inspecting engineer under the Local Government Act, and was on an official tour when he was stricken down. He had been, we believe, a pupil of Brunel, and was in every respect an able and accomplished gentleman. His vocation did not lead him to the pursuit of letters, but his tastes were eminently literary.—Illustrated London News.

Toujours Grisi.—In default of operatic news of any positive kind we may mention a curious operatic rumour, proceeding, one would imagine, from a humourist or a cynic, but which is said to be traceable to very good authority and to be quite worthy of belief. It is reported, then, that Mad. Grisi, after receiving and refusing offers of re-engagement from Mr. Gye, has signed a contract for the season of 1861 with Mr. E. T. Smith. We can understand that the Ninetta of 1832 (it was about twenty-eight since that La Diva first appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre in La Gazza Ladra), after the direct insults offered to her last year at Madrid, and the species of slight to which she may fancy she has been subjected this season at the Royal Italian Opera—we can understand that, after this two-fold mortification, the veteran prima donna may desire nothing so much as to gain a new success on the scene of her earliest triumphs in this country, and a success of a certain kind can, by certain means, be secured to any singer who possesses as much talent and true power as still belong to Mad. Grisi. Mad. Grisi's popularity, too, would have to be taken into account, and we have seen singers before now so eminently and inexplicably "popular" that they were applauded to the echo, when they had neither voice, nor style, nor any great dramatic ability to recommend them. On the other hand, there are excellent reasons why Mad. Grisi should no longer tempt fortune, but should retire on the laurels she has already gained before they lose their greenness altogether. She has already bidden adieu to the public so many times that the last night of this her supposed final season of leave-taking excited scarcely any interest. Revivals are seldom successful, and we do not think the manager of Her Majesty's Theatre will do himself much good by attempting to revive Mad. Grisi. What Mr. E. T. Smith would do with a Grisi and a Titiens in the same company is a question that chiefly concerns himself. Doubtless, however, the two Donna Annas, the two Valentines, the two Lucrezias, would be able to fight the matter out between themselves.—Illustrated Times.

Some Heresy from a True Believer.—Both the English Operas are to open early in October. In the meanwhile there are no performances of what operatic managers call "the lyric drama" (to distinguish it from the Il-lyric or Illyrian drama, celebrated and imitated by M. Prosper Mérimé) in any part of London. There are concerts on Fridays or on Saturdays, sometimes on both days, at the Crystal Palace. Here Mlle. Parepa and Mlle. Artôt are the chief stars; the band is that of the Crystal Palace; the conductor is, of course, Mr. Manns; and the programme is of the most diversified nature, including dance music, symphonies, operatic selections, and at times an entire opera. But an opera, such as the Impresario of Mozart, the Son and Stranger of Mendelssohn, or, indeed, any work of the kind, long or short, is a dull affair at the Crystal Palace, where it is of necessity presented without costumes, scenery, or any of the usual stage appliances, though, unfortunately, not without attempts by the performers to give dramatic significance to their parts when they ought simply to content themselves with singing the music. Let the directors of the Crystal Palace get a license from the Lord Chamberlain, and fit up a theatre, after the manner of Kroll's Theatre in the Berlin Cremorne, and they may then offer the public an occasional operatic performance with advantage. At present the Impresario and the Son and Stranger, at the Crystal Palace, are as sad as Antigone; and Antigone, with Mr. Vandenhoff's recitation of the dialogue, was, perhaps, the saddest thing we ever heard at Sydenham or anywhere else.—Illustrated Times.

Gibbon, the historian, is so indolent that he never even pares his nails His servant, while Gibbon is reading, takes up one of his hands, and when he has performed the operation, lays it down, and then manages the other, the patient in the meanwhile scarcely knowing what is going on, and quietly pursuing his studies.—Prior's Life of Malone.

Sir Joshua Reynolds at Breakfast.—Sir Martin Shee used to relate what struck him as a singular fact in reference to the President's deafness, an infirmity which, as is well known, compelled or suggested in his case the constant use of an ear-trumpet. While at breakfast, and during the long-protracted interview which accompanied and followed that meal, the conversation with his visitor was carried on in the ordinary tone, without any assistance from the acoustic tube, or any indication of imperfect hearing on the part of Sir Joshua. During the morning, however, they were not unfrequently interrupted by the entrance of a servant with a message or some communication that required his master's attention and oral reply; and on each of such occasions the appearance of a third person was the signal for the President to snatch up his trumpet, and resume a look of anxious inquiry and uncertain comprehension befitting the real or supposed defect of his auricular powers. It is, I believe, no uncommon thing for a deaf person to hear better in a tête-à-tête colloquy than when surrounded by the buzz of general conversation in a large party. But in Sir Joshua's case the contrast seems to have been unusually marked, and calculated to impart a peculiar significancy to Goldsmith's well-known couplet in the Retaliation, which winds up his description of the President:—

"When they talked of their Raphaels, Correggios, and stuff,
He shifted his trumpet, and only took snuff."

—Life of Sir Martin Shee.

Music.—There is something very wonderful in music. Words are wonderful enough, but music is even more wonderful. It speaks to our thoughts as words do; it speaks straight to our hearts and spirits—to the very core and root of our souls. Music soothes us, stirs us up, it puts noble feelings into us; it melts us to tears, we know not how; it is a language by itself, just as perfect in its way as speech, as words; just as blessed. Music, I say, without words, is wonderful and blessed—one of God's best gifts to man. But in singing, you have both the wonders together—music and words. Singing speaks at once to the head and to the heart, to our understanding and to our feelings; and therefore, perhaps, the most beautiful way in which the reasonable soul of man can show itself (except, of course, doing right, which always is, and always will be, the most beautiful thing) is singing.

Kingsley.

EVANS'S

ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

MAY BE HAD IN

EVERY POSSIBLE VARIETY,

WITH

GERMAN PEDAL REEDS (TWO OCTAVES AND A THIRD)

WITH AND WITHOUT PERCUSSION ACTION,

AND

WITH SINGLE AND DOUBLE ROWS OF KEYS,

AT PRICES FROM

Ten to One Hundred and Forty Guineas.

ALSO WITH A SELF-ACTING WIND APPARATUS.

THE HARMONIUM AT 10 GUINEAS

Possesses the same superior tone and touch that characterise all Evans's English Harmoniums, and is admirably suited for a Chapel or School-room. It is in a handsome solid French-polished Oak Case.

THE HARMONIUM AT 65 GUINEAS

(WITH DOUBLE ROW OF KEYS)

Is the most perfect instrument ever manufactured. The demand for this Harmonium being so great, orders should be always sent in good time to prevent disappointment.

Full particulars of Evans's English Harmoniums may be had of

BOOSEY AND SONS, 28 HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by George Andrew Spottiswoode, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by John Boosey, at the Office of Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, August 25, 1860.

The Musical World

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 35 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System of

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION; and as a NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Students, who, as soon as competent, will receive appointments to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Pianoforte	Mr. WRIGLEY. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute	Mons. DE JONG.
Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. D. ELDER.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for his first or second Orchestra.

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist.

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board and lodging, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

35

FLORAL HALL, COVENT GARDEN.—Last Week of ALFRED MELLON'S CONCERTS. It is respectfully announced that these Concerts will positively terminate on Saturday next, September 8th. The Band and Chorus being engaged for the Worcester Triennial Musical Festival. Full particulars of the arrangements for the last six nights will be duly announced. On Saturday next, September 8th (the last night), a GRAND CONCERT will take place, being for the benefit of ALFRED MELLON. Conductor, ALFRED MELLON. Promenade, 1s. Commence at Eight.

NEW PAVILION THEATRE and EASTERN OPERA HOUSE, Whitechapel. Reconstructed and redecorated in the most elaborate style. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN DOUGLAS. Open every Evening, with English and Italian Operas, supported by Signors GIULETTI, A. BRAHAM, W. M. PARKINSON, SOLIERE, RUGIERO, RULETTI, MORENO, SEVERNE, O. SUMMERS, R. MORROW, LISLE, and E. ROSENTHAL. Mdmes. LANGLEY, SEQUIN, PANORA, A. LENG. Band and Chorus of 100. Monday, MARITANA; Wednesday, LA SONNAMBULA; Thursday, NORMA; Tuesday and Friday a grand ITALIAN OPERA. Conclude each Evening with a MUSICAL DRAMA. Begin at 7. Boxes, 2s. and 1s. 6d.; Stalls, 1s.; Pit, 6d.; Private Boxes, 10s. and £1. 10s.; or 3s. each Person.

MAD. LAURA BAXTER begs to announce that she will give a SERIES of PERFORMANCES of SACRED and MISCELLANEOUS VOCAL MUSIC during the ensuing Season. Mad. LAURA BAXTER will be assisted by eminent artists, and also by her Amateur and Professional Pupils. Communications to be addressed to Mad. LAURA BAXTER, at her Residence, 155 Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MR. ALEXANDER THORNLEY (Bass), may be engaged for Concerts, Oratorios, &c.—Address 60 Pentonville Road, N.

TO MUSICSELLERS.—A Scotch Gentleman, aged 26, is desirous of meeting with an ENGAGEMENT in or near London. Has had considerable experience in the Trade, and capable of taking charge of a Branch Establishment.—Address "Delta," Office of this Paper.

FINGER-ORGAN for Sale, containing Open and Stopped Diapasons, powerful tone, grained oak case, gilt pipes. £16. 42 Markham Square, King's Road, Chelsea.

AN old-established PIANOFORTE and GENERAL MUSIC BUSINESS, with Stock, &c., to be Disposed of, in an important Cathedral City, about 60 miles from London. The Proprietor of the above, with a good connection among the upper classes of society, being desirous of retiring, is anxious to meet with a Successor who would be willing to take his present position. The Stock-in-Trade consists of first-class Pianofortes, and every requisite appertaining to the Trade; also, a large connection in Tuning and Hiring Instruments. The Premises are handsome and extensive, and situated in the principal street. This is an opportunity rarely to be met with, and one that could not fail of realising a good income. All further particulars will be furnished by addressing A. B., care of Messrs. Metzler and Co., 37 Great Marlborough Street, London, W.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,
Price 6d.
MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,
DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,
And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting LIVERPOOL will find it advantageous to engage the services of

LEE, NIGHTINGALE, & CO.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Mercury, and Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, and PAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S newest and most popular Ballad is "I love YOU," composed expressly for him by Balfe. "I love you" was sung by Mr. Reeves, and enthusiastically encored, at Mr. G. W. Martin's Concert, Exeter Hall, Mr. Lindsay Sloper's and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts, St. James's Hall, and will be sung at Mr. Balfe's Benefit Concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens, and at the Crystal Palace Concerts. London, published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by J. W. DAVISON, "Rough wind that moanest loud" (sung by Mr. Santley at the Monday Popular Concerts); "Swifter far than Summer's flight," (sung by Miss Palmer at the Monday Popular Concerts); "False friend, wilt thou smile or weep," Beatrice's song in the Cenci (sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby, at the Monday Popular Concerts, St. James's Hall); are published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

The above Songs form Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of Vocal Illustrations of Shelley.

"Mr. Santley was encored in one of the thoroughly picturesque and poetical settings of Shelley, by Mr. J. W. Davison, mentioned a week or two since. His song, 'Rough wind that moanest loud,' is a thoroughly good song."—Athenæum.

"Madame Sainton-Dolby's greatest efforts were called forth by Mendelssohn's 'Night' song, and Mr. J. W. Davison's 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep' (from Shelley's 'Cenci'), to both of which she did the amplest justice. The latter work is one of the most poetical and beautiful of the 'Vocal Illustrations of Shelley,' composed by Mr. Davison many years ago, and which, though rarely heard, possess far more sterling merit than nine-tenths of the most admired songs of the day. A more intellectual treatment of the words could not well be imagined. Mr. Davison has completely caught the spirit of the poetry, and heightened its beauty by the potent charms which belong only to the sister art. 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep,' sung to perfection by Madame Sainton-Dolby, was enthusiastically applauded."

Morning Post, April 26, 1860.

Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.

Composed by Brinley Richards

"I LOVE YOU," New Song by BALFE, composed expressly for Mr. SIMS REEVES, and sung by him with the greatest success, is published, price 3s. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

THE FORSAKEN. Ballad. Composed expressly for Mad. Catherine Hayes, by Virginia Gabriel. Price 3s. C. Lonsdale, 26 Old Bond Street.

CHEAP MUSICAL WORKS, published by BOOSEY and SONS, Holles Street, London (all post free):—Rossini's Stabat Mater, for Pianoforte, by Smart, complete, 3s.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass, do. 3s.; Moore's Irish Melodies, for Pianoforte, by Nordmann, 2s. 6d.; Chopin's Mazurkas, for Pianoforte, complete, with Portrait, and Critical and Biographical Introduction by J. W. Davison, 8s.; Mendelssohn's Songs, without Words, complete, with Portrait and Introduction by J. W. Davison, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Meyerbeer's Dinorah, complete, for Pianoforte Solo, 7s. 6d.; the Juvenile Pianoforte Album, 12 pieces, illustrated and bound, 3s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, 100 gems from the newest Operas, for Pianoforte, in cloth, 12s.; Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances, for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky, for Piano, 3s.; Czerny's Etude de la Velocité, 2s. 6d.; Czerny's 101 Exercises, 2s.; Boosey's Part Song Miscellany, 18 Original Compositions, handsomely bound, 5s.; the Harmonium Museum, 100 Sacred and Secular subjects for Harmonium, with Instructions, 7s. 6d.; Engel's Harmonium Operatic Album, 60 Gems for Harmoniums, 7s. 6d.; Christy's Minstrels Album, 24 Songs in One Book, 2s. 6d.; the Verdi Album, 25 Songs, in English and Italian, 4s.; Dinorah, for Voice and Piano, complete, 12s.

BRASS BANDS.—BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL contains Quick Steps, Troops, Marches, &c., printed in large type on small paper for pasting on Cards. Each Number contains Four Popular Marches, price 7s. for Large Band, and 4s. for Small Band.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, published every Month. 100 Numbers are published, containing Grand Selections from all the best Operas, Quick Steps, Polkas, Quadrilles, Waltzes, &c., arranged for Large Brass Band, 7s. each, and for Small Band, 4s. each. A very liberal allowance to the profession. List of contents gratis.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Critical and Biographical Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.—The Athenæum of July 28 says:—"This is a very handsome publication. The price is cheap, the page is clear, and the type is good. A careful preface by Mr. Davison serves as Overture to these Mazurkas, and, as far as criticism and analysis go, is competent and well reasoned out."

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening. C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

Reviews.

AMONG a whole library of new publications, republications, new editions, reprints of old editions, &c. &c. that have lain in wait for the cessation of operas, oratorios, and concerts, to receive the attention to which their merits entitle them, we "stumble over" (without injury) a few of the earlier productions of M. Stephen Heller. The fresh look of their "exterior" encourages the belief (and warrants the hope) that Messrs. Ashdown and Parry intend re-bringing to light some of the most interesting features in the rich catalogue bequeathed to them* by their predecessors, Messrs. Wessel and Stapleton. If so, we are glad; and a better beginning could hardly be made than with some of the youngest (and freshest) compositions for the pianoforte of one, who, besides being gifted with marked originality, has striven his utmost from the outset of his career, and without one solitary dereliction from the right path, to elevate the art of which he is one of the worthiest modern representatives. Among the small number of "producers" who have devoted themselves in the course of the last quarter of a century, and with an earnestness equal to their ability, to enrich and vary the repertory of the pianoforte, M. Stephen Heller is deservedly accorded an eminent place. True, the spirit of the time has influenced him as it has influenced others, of as great, if not of greater talent. What he has given to the world, however, fully entitles him to be classed with those composers for the most universal of instruments, whom even their immediate contemporaries willingly accept as models, and whose works are in all probability destined to outlive the age in which they were originated.

The early pieces "upon," or "over," which we have but this instant "stumbled" (without injury)—to carry out our fishy metaphor—do not properly belong to the minnow-pond, however short in dimensions and unpretending in character, but rather to the trout-stream, their flavour being thoroughly genuine and excellent. First to take by the tails "and shake in the sun," are Deux Caprices, Op. 19 (Ashdown and Parry). These Caprices are both built upon one theme, viz. a melody by M. Henri Reber. About M. Reber this is not the place to speak. Enough that he is one of the composers haunting Paris and its environs, who have, with more or less sincerity, and more or less success, dedicated their efforts to the higher forms of art. The melody caught by M. Stephen Heller (an expert fisher in the waters of melody, although not nourished exclusively on fish) for the purposes of his Deux Caprices, is not inappropriately styled "La Captive." In its normal (subaqueous) shape it may possibly have been a vocal romance. Though piquant and pretty, it could hardly have laid any pretentions to be classed much higher than in the glittering tribe of "minnows;" but M. Heller, by the magic of his culinary process, has served it up as a pair of likely trout, seasoned with palate-tickling sauces. To quit trope, however, he has first given us the melody simply, in the key of A major, with a sort of pastoral accompaniment—possibly as it started originally from the brain of M. Reber. The first caprice consists of little more than the bare tune, which M. Heller has neatly but unostentatiously presented in the native key, but set off with harmony of a wholly different character, the technical form being a syncopated arpeggio, divided between the two hands, and carried out with dexterous completeness (and, it may be added, with sinistrous, also—the left hand being allotted quite as much to do as its companion). This Caprice, indeed, assumes the conditions of an attractive Song without Words, easy to play and easy to appreciate.

The second Caprice—again in A major (allegro vivo)—is much less accommodating to the executant, besides being much longer. An imitation of the original melody of M. Reber is first entrusted to the left hand, while to the right devolves some graceful passages in semiquavers. The order of distribution is then reversed, the right hand taking the melody and the left the semiquaver passages, a not very strict exemplification of double-counterpoint—of which, doubtless, M. Heller never once thought while constructing it. The whole is worked into a brilliant and effective movement, in the course of which the florid accompaniment is diversified and carried out with masterly completeness. The first part being repeated, the second part (or "free fantasia," as, with unlicensed freedom, it used to be termed at the Royal Academy of Music), is relieved by an agreeable episode in the key of F major, of which new material excellent use is subsequently made. Among the striking points in this Caprice may be cited a pedale on the dominant, which introduces the "reprise" (is that a better word than resumption?) of the subject in the tonal mode. There is a freshness of feeling, and spontaneity of movement about both the Caprices, Op. 19, which enhances the charm belonging to their thoroughly musician-like conduct. It may be superfluous, perhaps, to add that they are admirably written for the Rey-board. M. Stephen Heller is notoriously a proficient on the pianoforte, and though his passages are quite as novel as they are essentially "effective," they are invariably natural and elegant, and as invariably lie well for the hand.

In the next work—Deux Impromptus, Op. 20 (Ashdown and Parry)—M. Heller (to return to the fish-pond) has again submitted M. Reber to a culinary treatment calculated to gratify the most captiously Apician taste. He has this time taken by the tail and "shaken in the sun," a dainty little minnow, "hight" (yclept) "Hai Lulli," also, we are led to presume, in its normal (subaqueous) state, a vocal romance. "Hai Lulli" is quite as engaging and pretty as its companion prisoner, "La Captive;" and M. Heller has served it up in two relais, each representing trout made delicious to the imagination of the gourmet (too refined and delicate, "peraunter," for that of the gourmand) by sauces, à la Heller, of the most exquisite and pungent flavour—sauces piquantes, in the most relishing acceptation of the phrase. But to quit metaphor—(for, though we have not once in this essay alluded to "carp," time presses and space narrows)—the plan of these pieces is in a great measure similar to that already dissected and described. First the theme is proffered "in its integrity" (albeit "simplex munditiis" in some degree, as is M. Heller's wont); then comes a brief and quasi-ephemeral impromptu in full harmony; and, conclusively, another impromptu, in the florid style—longer, more brilliant, and more elaborately developed. The key of F is preserved in all the movements. Both impromptus are ingenious and interesting—the last especially, an allegretto con moto of remarkable fluency, abounding in nice and attractive points of musicianship. Neither impromptu is difficult, each being studiously adapted to the means of ordinary performers; the allegretto, nevertheless, demands force and precision in the left hand, in the absence of which it is likely to "fall through."

Such fish are welcome. The "minnows" of M. Reber are well worth the catching; and the "trout," into which M. Heller has transformed them, through the agency of his pot au feu, as well worth eating.

* Or, at any rate a great part of which was "bought in" by them, at the recent sale.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Aug. 30, 1860.

THE performance at the Grand Opera for the benefit of the Christians of Syria realised 10,000 francs, which is the largest sum the house will yield at the usual prices. This will help to swell the general subscription for this object, which, notwithstanding the great show of sympathy made by the French press, does not progress very satisfactorily, or prove that the people at large are very deeply impressed with the sufferings of their Christian brethren, to whose succour the Emperor has rushed so eagerly. The Huguenots was given on Friday, with Mlle. Caroline Barbot in the part of Valentine, and Mad. Vandenheuvel Duprez in that of Marguerite. This second début of Mad. Duprez was fully as successful as the first, and has quite borne out the favourable expectations of her friends. It is generally regarded that this lady's engagement is a valuable acquisition to the Opera.

The revival of the Part au Diable at the Opéra Comique, with Mlle. Monrose in the part of Carlo Broschi, for the first time, has proved a hit. The débutante has decidedly gained a step in promotion by her impersonation of this important character. Le Docteur Mirobolant, which was to have been produced this week, has been put off in consequence of the illness of Couderc. The new opera, which M. Offenbach has composed to a libretto by Scribe, is in course of rehearsal.

The programme of the Théâtre Lyrique for the ensuing season has been made public. It is to open with Crispin, Rival de son Maître,—a comedy by Lesage, turned into a comic opera by M. H. Berthoud, and set to music by M. Sellenick—followed by l'Auberge des Ardennes, in one act, words by MM. Carré and Verne, music by M. Aristide Hignard.

Among the revivals is promised Le Val d'Andorre, by Halévy, in which Bataille will sing his original part. A new opera by M. Maillart, Les Pêcheurs de Catane, is also promised, and M. Gounod's Faust, the Noces de Figaro, la Fanchonnette, and Philemon et Baucis will be reproduced for Mad. Miolan-Carvalho, as also will Orphée for Mad. Viardot and her pupil, Mlle. Oprawel, who is to make her first appearance.

I have also another programme to communicate, viz. that of M. Cazaldo, the manager of the Italian Opera here. I need not trouble you with a list of the works to be produced; an enumeration of the artists to figure in his troop will be more acceptable. Here they are, then, alphabetically ordered to avoid nice points of precedences. Prime donne soprani, Mdmes. Battu and Penco; prime donne contralti, Mdmes. Alboni and Edenska; prime donne comprimarie, Mdmes. Varona and Vestri; primi tenori, MM. Gardoni, Mario, and Pancani; primi tenori comprimari, MM. Capello and Morey; primi baritoni, MM. Badiali and Graziani; primi bassi, MM. Angelini and Patriossi; primo buffo, M. Zucchini; seconde parte, Mad. Lava, MM. Cazaboni and Soldi. Direttore d'Orchestra, M. Bonetti; maestro alcembalo, M. Uranio Fontana; maestro dei cori, M. Chiaromonte.

The sisters Marchisio have just made their first essay as drawing-room singers in the salon of Mad. Orfila, and have created so marked a sensation, that there is likely to be a run upon their talents during the approaching winter. They sang the two duos from Semiramis, and one from Mathilda di Shabran, to the manifest delight of their brilliant audience, who would not be content without a repetition of the latter. Mad. Ugalde was also present at the same soirée, and sang her serenade in Gil Blas.

I hear from Naples, that notwithstanding the troubled state of affairs there, the subvention paid to the San Carlo Theatre has been raised from 60,000 to 80,000 ducats; and it is now the most munificently supported theatre in Italy. It is said that great efforts are to be made to restore the school of dancing, for which Naples was once so famous, to its early splendour. It was the school of Naples which gave to the world Taglioni, Carlotta Grisi, and Fanny Cerito. A propos of Italy, Camillo Sivori has just returned to Paris from Milan, where he has been giving a series of seventeen concerts in succession. Two of these were for the benefit of the poor, and three to advance the cause of Garibaldi, to whom Sivori was enabled to forward 15,000f. (£600). This is a very creditable act on the part of the little-great violinist, and shows the influence of the Garibaldi enthusiasm in a very strong light. M. Braga is also returned to us from Milan, bringing with him a libretto, to which he is going to compose the music. The opera is intended for Mad. Borghi-Mamo during her engagements at Bologna and Milan.

The Bouffes Parisiens have returned from their provincial tour, and are about to commence their Paris campaign. They open with Orphée aux Enfers, which has met with immense success during their travels. The first novelty will be an opera in two acts, called Les Musiciens; the music of which has employed the talents of no less than three young composers; videlicet, MM. Hignard, Delibes, and Eslanger. I wish I could tell your readers something about these gentlemen; but fame has hitherto spoken of them in such a low whisper as to be inaudible in this reporter's gallery. The manager, M. Offenbach, is moreover engaged on a new work in conjunction with M. Hector Crémieux, which is to be in two acts and four tableaux.

The municipal council of Lyons has voted a sum of 7000 francs (£280) for the purchase of instruments to suit the new diapason for the orchestra of the principal theatre. Whatever scientific or artistic value the pitch reform may have, it is evidently highly advantageous to the instrument makers; and I hope our friend Adolphe Sax will reap such a harvest from the change as will help him to restore the losses he has suffered from lawsuits with piratical imitators. The last of the long series of legal battles he has had to undergo has, by the way, been finally settled by the rejection of M. Gustave Benon's appeal to the Court of Cassation; and for the first time for fourteen years poor Sax can sit down to his meals without the sword of Themis being suspended over his head. Bordeaux has just lost one of its celebrities, Nicholas Schaffner, formerly director of the orchestra at the grand theatre of that city. You may remember how, many years since, that kindly and noble musical Mæcenas, the late M. Alsager, became enamoured of this gentleman's quintetts, and strove hard to get him accepted as a genius of the first rank, but could get no one to ratify his strange judgment. Composers of all countries, Spohr among the number, were invited to feast their ears on the Bordeaux quintetts, but rejected unanimously the spurious vintage.

There has been a concert at the Salle Pleyel in honour of the veteran Moschelles, the programme whereof consisted entirely of music of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, selected by M. Farrenc, well known for his antiquarian researches. In giving an account of this concert, a French critic informs the world that la grande fugue de Bach was executed on the organ by M. Georges Pfeiffer, as though old Sebastian's progeny, under that style, were limited to one. Yet France claims the first rank in the world in musical connoisseurship! This, too, with the Société Bach in full activity, who, by the way, have just published their ninth volume of the works of the great master. Prefixed to it is a curious notice on the construction of the harpsichord by the editor, M. Rust. I told you in a former letter that the Concerts Musard were about to close. I was misinformed; they are to continue open till the commencement of October. They are still very attractive, and they fully deserve their patronage by the capital way in which they are conducted. An ophicleide player, M. Moreau, is at present winning great favour by his solo performances.

The distribution of honours, à propos of the Imperial fêtes of August, still continues. It positively rains crosses of honour and medals. Let the most bombastic and jejeunest of scribblers but indite an ode on the "Imperial theme"—annexation—and let him annex it to the effusion of discord, herself turned maestro, and both author and composer will immediately receive an enormous medal, and be inscribed in the muster roll of the legion of honour.

Now for my foreign budget:—At Berlin they are celebrating the anniversary of Goethe's birthday. Theatrical representations were announced for four consecutive days, as thus:—The 27th, The King's Lieutenant by Gutzkow, and a military concert, conducted by M. Wieprecht; 28th, Frederick et Sesenheiger, operetta by Eberwein; Brother and Sister by Goethe; 29th, Goethe-Marsch by Liszt; Lovers' Caprices by Goethe; Calm at Sea by Beethoven; Walpurgis Night by Mendelssohn; The Transfiguration, a fragment of Faust, by Schumann; the 30th, the Fair at Plimdersweiler, by Goethe, concert. The receipts are to be appropriated to Goethe's monument. At Hanover, M. Steger, the same who failed last season at Her Majesty's Theatre, in Edgardo, has been engaged to replace M. Niemann, at the Court Theatre. At Weimar M. Cheland's opera of Macbeth is to be produced at the Court Theatre. I believe it was performed in England, at Her Majesty's Theatre, by a German company, under the direction of the composer himself. From Vienna I hear that M. Rubinstein has just completed a new opera, and has placed the score in the hands of the manager of the Court Theatre. The management of the Italian Theatre has definitively been granted to M. Salvi, who will commence his season in April and continue it to the end of July. The season at Spa is said, notwithstanding the cheerless weather, to be unexpectedly brilliant. A grand concert has just been given there by the Administration des Jeux, whereof the chief attraction was Vivier, the horn player. It is almost incredible to relate that the pieces performed by him were the eternal cantabile and chasse, with which he has been favouring the world sans change or intermission for the last sixteen years, if not more. Has he expended the entire resources of his genius as a composer on these early works, or does he think that these prodigious creations entitle him to rest for the remainder of his mortal span? Is it not rather a parallel case to that of the "cadger" in our streets, who having by a superhuman effort carved in wood a distant resemblance to Salisbury spire, or combined a gigantic design in grasses and dried flowers, establishes a reputation for ingenuity and industry on which he resolves to trade, the weak and benevolent public aiding, in careless ease, till the parish or the hospital claim him.

Rotterdam is about to present itself with a German opera, the wealthy burghers of that ilk having subscribed to that end 80,000 florins, the interest of which is to be received by M. Vries, the Amsterdam manager, in support of the undertaking, which he is to organise and direct. Stockholm is overhauling its Academy of Music with a view to reform. Several new professorships have been instituted; among them one of history, one of esthetics, and one—though more humble, far more useful I suspect than these—of the art of tuning pianos. It would be well if the French Academy would follow this sensible example, for it is one of the points in which France is greatly deficient. At the German theatre in Pesth, Mahul's Joseph is given out for study. M. Borhowitz, the pianist, has just given a farewell concert here, the proceeds of which were to be devoted to the Szechenyi monument. Milan rejoices in the prospect of two new operas, one by Bottesini, the Assedio di Firenzi, which failed in Paris, when the composer was himself director of the orchestra, the other by the youthful maestro, Cianchir of Florence, composer of several successful works, and among them of Salvator Rosa. The sisters Fermi are here and have given a concert at the Carignano. At Genoa the San Carlo Felice is undergoing a thorough restoration, which is to render it one of the most richly adorned and elegant theatres in Europe. The ensuing season promises to be exceedingly brilliant.

MUSICAL DOINGS IN LONDON.

(From the Vienna Recensionen.)

THE season is drawing to its close. Her Majesty's Theatre is already shut, but the active manager, Mr. E. T. Smith, not deeming it advisable to leave the rival establishment of Covent Garden, under Gye, in sole possession of the field, has thought proper, "in obedience to the general desire," to give a few extra performances of Oberon. The reduced prices caused this to look very like a pecuniary expedient, but we are willing to believe that, on this occasion, the wishes of the public and those of the manager tallied with each other; both parties were, therefore, content with the result: the public with the performances, and the manager with the receipts. With regard to the effect of these performances, I will in a later account of the operatic season, as a whole, add a few remarks.

At Covent Garden, the management is relying, until further notice, on "hash-ups" of separate acts. Thus, yesterday, we had the first act of Norma and the second of Fidelio on the list. This patchwork is presented us to oblige Mad. Grisi. That lady, after her "farewells," announced with a grand flourish of trumpets, has again established herself on the stage en permanence, as they would have said in French parliamentary language, ten years ago. She is but the remains of her former greatness, and, had she only a little sense left, would have been contented with her farewell performances. She must, however, soon leave for younger talent, and, in my opinion, the public as well are sufferers by the present arrangement.

[This is a sour-krout view of the question. Grisi knows better.—ED.]

The flood of concerts with which we have been overwhelmed, during the months of June and July, has passed, and we can now, with dry feet, obtain some slight view of the ground over which it flowed. Many an unsteady craft was flung upon the shore, while many a flat-bottomed boat got safely over the shallows; novelties went, at high-pressure force, through thick and thin; but, as usual, there was only a moderate sample of what is good and beautiful. Public taste leads to what is out of the way. Nobody takes time to feel, think, nay, even to judge; what is remarkable obtains the upper hand.

This tolerance has its good side; in the search after what is new, everything is at least heard once, and consequently much that would, otherwise, never reach the ear of the public. Then, again, moderate music with rare beauties is particularly fitted to a public just beginning to educate itself musically, and which, like young plants, requires thin nourishment. (!) For a fermenting mass, such as that formed by men, who come to London for a three-monthly "Schwietchen," as the student of middle Germany would say, or for a "spree," as people say here, anything concentrated is dangerous, since, together with the eating and drinking, it would certainly get into their heads. We must, therefore, if only from considerations of health, be thankful to concert-givers for subordinating æsthetics to a contrary course.

Among the best samples of what is out of the way, we may reckon the "Russian Concerts," of Prince Galitzin, three of which were given in a tolerably short period, the last taking place on the 18th of July.* They comprise exclusively compositions by Russian authors, principally Glinka, Bortnianski, and the Concert-giver. This, however, does not say that the music was of a specifically Russian nature, that is, nationally original. Many of the pieces were evidently written with this tendency, while others attained it; a great deal, however, was most unmistakeably Italian. Such was the case with a trio and chorus, by Glinka, in the second part of the second concert, the first half of which was quite "transalpine," although the original Russian words, as in all the other pieces which had no Latin ones, were sung. Miss Parepa, Signor Mongini, and Mr. Patey, were excellent, and mastered all the difficulties of the strange music they had to sing in an admirable manner. The chorus prevented the hearer from experiencing weariness at the artificial nature of what he heard, and, especially by first-rate chiar' oscuro in the performance, brought the piece to a very pleasing end. I must award the same praise to the chorus for the "Te ergo," of Bortnianski, which, exceedingly harmonious and well proportioned in musical ideas, was justly encored by the public. The "Pater noster," a chorus by the concert-giver, was also repeated by universal desire, but this just proved the extravagant, the bad, or rather the entire absence of, taste of the public. A chorus begins with chords, then gives us the whole "Pater noster" unisono, and dwelling upon one note, in about twelve bars, ending in a harmonic "Amen," which the basses sing as the other voices die away. This is not merely straining for effect, but really and truly setting a trap for taste. The whole audience fell into it, and could hardly get out again. So long as men find pleasure in mere babble, either in religion or music, they have not attained the age of reason, and a species of music which lends itself to such trickery is yet in its swaddling clothes. May it soon grow up to more elevated beauty. (!) An aria by Glinka, sung by Miss Parepa, ends with a subito in the forte on a high note. Even this "scream" was encored by the insatiable audience. (!) Russian music is fond of unexpected terminations; this was evident at the close of the Kozlow Polka, by Prince Galitzin, which ends with the stringed instruments, which I can only designate as an imitation of a regular sacred "hurrah." The Pathockish "Romance," by the concert-giver, for contralto and violoncello obbligato—sung with great effect by Mad. Sainton-Dolby—is somewhat too gloomy and dull, and evidently no piece for a concert-room. At any rate the violoncello must be subdued before any one can arrive at a conclusive opinion as to the piece. The strength of Mad. Sainton-Dolby's voice lies in the low notes, while the high ones sound not unfrequently like a bad falsetto. (!) The character of her voice is, therefore, too similar to that of the accompanying instrument, a circumstance which produces an unpleasing uniformity. A deep alto part has always something disagreeable and almost unnatural about it, an impression we avoid upon the stage when we make spirits speak in a deep bass. If, in addition to this, there are a great many minor chords, the hearers shudder, a result we like on the stage, but would rather avoid in a concert-room.

* Which "last" did not "take place."—Printer's Devil.

A march for the orchestra, from Glinka's second opera, Rosselane et Ladmila, was characteristic; the oboes were, however, somewhat careless in certain delicate staccato parts. Glinka's "Mazurka" was played by Miss Arabella Goddard with wonderful brilliancy, delicacy, and perfection. I must also mention the great merit evinced by the instrumentalists, Messrs. Ries, Pollitzer, and René-Douay.

The slight political colouring which marked the first concert, was completely avoided in the second and third by the concert-giver, who had bought wisdom by experience. He obtained great success, and the encores taxed in a high degree the patience of the corpulent gentlemen, who, despite the great heat, conducted most energetically. In the sweat of his brow he received the wreath which the applause of the multitude bestowed upon his most careful direction of the songs and chorusses, his delicate instrumentation, his robust melodies, and his successful eccentricities. Prince Galitzin has gained great popularity, a result with which the respect he showed to the artists engaged in the performance had not a little to do. Thus, between the parts he himself brought bouquets to the ladies of the chorus, and sent the gentlemen roses for their button-holes. Even these pretty tricks of art have their advantages, and work simultaneously upon the goodwill of the performers and the sympathy of the audience.

In the bravura air by Glinka, Miss Parepa did not perhaps quite come up to the expectations justified by her natural powers and her method; she was deficient in certainty of intonation and evenness of sustained tone. On the whole, however, her performance was the most brilliant attraction of the evening, and the clearness with which she repeated some complicated figures was beyond all praise.

APROPOS OF THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

(Concluded.)

ARMIDA.

GLUCK'S Armida was produced in Paris on the 23rd September, 1777. The work had been ready earlier. The composer's well-known letter, addressed to M. L. B. D. R.—published in the Années Littéraire, 1776—(it was there stated, without its writer's connivance) distinctly announces his intention of holding his opera back till such time at which it could be given at the Great French Opera House, according to its composer's liking. That letter contains a courteous throwing down of the glove to Gluck's rival, Piccini, who, too, was engaged on a Roland—its writer announcing himself "as no longer a man made for any contests." But such courtesy only make Gluck's subsequent girding up of his loins for the strife more significant. "M. Hebert," writes he, "is a gentleman, and therefore I will not finally withhold from him my Armida on certain conditions. Should they not be granted, I shall hold back Armida so long as I like. The music of it is made in a manner not soon to grow old." Then follows Gluck's appreciation of his own Alcestis, as "a work to the perfection of which little is wanting. But you do not imagine," he continues, "of how many colours and humours, and various ways of arrival, music is susceptible. The whole effect of Armida is so different from that of Alcestis that you would hardly imagine them to be by the same composer. I have used what little vitality was left in my frame to complete Armida—have tried to be painter and poet more than musician. Judge for yourself, should it come to a hearing. I confess that with this opera I should like to end my career," That Gluck did not end his career by Armida we know, happily, from his Iphigenia in Tauris. The success of Armida was not rapid at first. The overture given in this edition was written for Gluck's Telemacoo, one of the many stage works produced by him ere he had come to an understanding with himself and his real power. A word remains to be said respecting the presentment of Armida, consequent on the claim for it of amplitude and pomp in setting forth the music, whether in the concert-room or on the stage. The large number of dramatis personæ announced from the original French opera book is a luxury, not a necessity, if the drama be looked into. Armida's ministering attendants—Phœnicia and Sidonia—as followers of an enchantress, may be fairly called on to "do any spiriting" necessary to support the delusions of the sorceress. This supposition allowed for, the cast of this opera resolves itself into a double quartett, consisting of Armida, Hate, Roland, and Hidraot, as four principal singers, supported by four accessory ones. It will be seen that the English words do not literally represent the French ones, save in the scenes of emotion. In the scenes of description, somewhat more of variety has been tried for than exists in the words of the old French Arcadian dramatist. The scenes selected for the Norwich Festival are from the second and third acts of Armida. The duet betwixt the Enchantress and Hidraot, in which the appeal to Hate is decided on,—the appearance of Roland in the Enchanted Garden, and his falling to sleep there,—a monologue of Armida,—ending in her invocation to Hate,—and the reply to her call by the Infernal Goddess with her attendant furies.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—In another fortnight the whole of the arrangements for the next "meeting of the Three Choirs," must be completed: the erection of the galleries in the nave of the Cathedral has been commenced, and will be finished within that period. The seats will be arranged on the usual plan, except that there will be a "first" and a "second" division in the nave. We understand that the Mayor intends inviting the Corporation to join him in attending the early morning service on the opening day of the festival, and that he will give a breakfast at Guildhall between the early service and the first oratorio. In our first notice, we gave a sketch of the morning performances at the Cathedral. The evening concerts at College Hall, will be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the ball closing the week's doings on Friday. The concert on Tuesday opens with Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, in which Mad. Novello sings the music of the "Queen" and Sims Reeves that of the "Lover." The remainder of the scheme is made up of selections from operatic works, and three English songs. Wednesday evening's concert opens with Weber's overture, The Ruler of the Spirits, followed by a novelty, in the shape of a cantata, by Niels Gade, entitled The Erl King's Daughter, the principal solos by Mad. Rudersdorff, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, and Mr. Weiss. More selections from operas succeed with a sprinkling of English songs, first of all, being the scena from Oberon, "Ocean, thou mighty monster," for Mad. Novello. The programme for the concluding concert on Thursday evening is a long one, selections from Wallace's Lurline forming one half of the first part. Miscellaneous pieces follow, and Mad. Novello (her last appearance at the Worcester Festival) will sing two—probably three—national airs. The concert closes, as usual, with the National Anthem.—Worcester Journal.

MOZART'S IMPRESARIO (Schauspiel-director).—After the performance at Schönbrunn this operetta was produced at the Karnthner-Thor Theatre at Vienna, but for some reason did not please, and after three performances was withdrawn. It has since then been unaccountably laid on the shelf, with only an occasional appearance. One of the most noticeable of these was that undertaken by Goethe during his management of the Court Theatre at Weimar in 1791, when it was brought out with considerable alterations from the pen of the Poet-Manager, under the title of "Theatrical Adventures" (Theatralische Abendteuer). It has been lately again revised by L. Schneider for the Berlin Theatre, and since then has had a considerable run in Germany. In Schneider's version, four pieces, adapted from the pianoforte songs of Mozart, were added; and, indeed, there can be no doubt that in its dimensions—too short for an opera, too long for a mere piece in an ordinary concert—we find the secret of the neglect of so charming a composition.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

THERE is more good music to be heard during the season in the little town, from which Napoleon the Great intended to sweep down to the invasion of Britain, and which, since then, has, en revanche, become completely subject to our peaceful rule, than in any other English colony. Our antipodal brethren would deem themselves fortunate if they heard a tithe of the eminent artistes who pass through Boulogne, at the termination of the London season, and delay their flight southward to inhale for a few days the healthful sea air, and to delight the Anglo-French population with an exhibition of their skill. This year the Boulognese have been more than usually favoured, for they have had the rare good fortune to hear the most highly-gifted singer of the day, both in the concert-room and on the stage. The musical entertainment which M. Reichardt arranged for Mad. Alboni at the établissement des bains has been already noticed in your columns. Since then the great contralto has appeared in the newly-built theatre of the town, in two widely differing characters. Many of your readers may remember that since the destruction (we need not add, by fire, for every place of public amusement seems doomed to be periodically consumed), of the old house, some six years ago, a barn-like edifice styled "Théâtre Provisoire," has been used by a small company of comedians to display the unfailing histrionic talent which seems born with every Frenchman. Within the last few months, however, a new theatre has been opened, which is a perfect bijou, and which might well serve as a model for many of larger size. The exterior is handsome, and the decorations of the interior are designed with admirable taste. White and gold predominate, contrasting well with the rich crimson of the stalls and boxes, and the different tiers are patterned with beautifully painted wreaths, and other floral devices. The theatre is well constructed for sound, the approaches are spacious; the stage itself is of unusual depth; and, indeed, the only faults we could perceive in the entire edifice were the heavily and coarsely painted ceiling and the imperfect ventilation which we meet with in all French buildings. Our neighbours certainly have no idea of the value of fresh air. We need scarcely add that the theatre is constructed with the usual balcon and loges, we cannot say private boxes, for they are certainly anything but private; the openness of the boxes adds, however, to the effect of the gay toilettes of the inmates, and on the occasion of Mad. Alboni's first appearance on Thursday week, in Le Barbier de Séville, when the house was crowded to suffocation, the general effect of the audience portion was remarkably pleasing. Mad. Alboni's representation of Rossini is so well known to all London opera goers, that we need not enlarge upon its merits. On the French stage all the dialogue is spoken instead of sung, and although we missed the familiar recitative, we could scarcely regret its absence, so charmingly did Mad. Alboni speak the words of the French text. In the lesson scene, she introduced the rondo finale from Cenerentola, and she brought the opera to a brilliant but somewhat summary conclusion immediately after the orchestral description of the storm, by the Tyrolienne from Betly, which she sang with such entrain as to excite an enthusiastic demand for repetition that could not be resisted. We should not have been sorry, however, to have heard the order of the two morceaux reversed, for an aria by Donizetti should scarcely be made to do duty to an opera by Rossini, while on the other hand the lesson-scene, according to immemorial usage, may fairly be used as a vehicle for display, irrespective of the composer. On Saturday La Favorite was given, and this representation was much more interesting to the English portion of the audience, because Léonore is a rôle which Mad. Alboni never undertakes in London. We were fully prepared to hear the music rendered by this "Hermaphrodite de la voix," as she is styled with more force than elegance by Théophile Gautier, as it has never been sung before; we were not astonished by the splendid power and irreproachable finish of her singing of the air "O mon Fernand," the chief opportunity for vocal display in the opera, but we must confess that we were most agreeably surprised by Mad. Alboni's admirable acting of this very trying part. We have more than once remarked on the genuine, but unobtrusive humour which Mad. Alboni infuses into several comic rôles; but the care with which she has hitherto eschewed all tragic characters, led us to believe that she did not possess the histrionic power necessary for success in the higher walks of the lyric drama. We confess with pleasure that we were greatly mistaken. Not only did the fulness of her lower tones enable her to give unaccustomed prominence to many passages which are generally unnoticed — witness, for instance, the startling effect that Mad. Alboni produces by her energetic delivery of the phrase "Ne me le demande pas," when the king's mistress is urged into a distasteful explanation by her ardent lover — but her entire delineation of the character, considered merely as a histrionic display, was distinguished by truthful adherence to nature. All the last scene was elaborated with great care — not a gesture was exaggerated; so that, while Mad. Alboni's acting was the result of art, it had all the appearance of being perfectly spontaneous. We trust that we may yet have the opportunity of witnessing Mad. Alboni not only in La Favorite, but in other tragic characters, on the boards of a London stage. On Sunday the great contralto again appeared in Il Barbière, with the same success as on the first occasion, although the English residents, true to their insular convictions, studiously avoided the profane exhibition, and left the "high places" of the theatre, to which, as conquerors, they ordinarily lay claim, comparatively deserted. Of the general casts of the operas we can say nothing, unless it be to draw attention to the tenor, M. Jourdan, who is at least entitled to the merit of consistency, for he sang out of tune with a complacent and determined opposition to the orchestra that was worthy of a better cause. The orchestra itself, though absurdly small, and therefore very ill-balanced, played with a correctness and care that do great credit to the conductor.

Letters to the Editor.

ONE INVALID AND TWO KEY BUGLES.

SIR,—I am an unobtrusive man, loving quiet, but not averse to an occasional enjoyment of the "concord of sweet sounds;" though harsh words, loud-tongued women or men, and all kinds of discordance, are my utter aversion. Judge my daily and nightly terror and misery, consequently, when I tell you that in the "quiet" locality I have chosen for a temporary sojourn from the turmoil of business (say Walsingham Place, for instance), two of the male inhabitants, who are my unneighbourly neighbours, constantly do all they can to drive me mad, by attempting to produce unearthly music on two key bugles or some such brazen instruments, a musical acquaintance with which they are insanely trying to accomplish! Talk of hurdy-gurdies, Italian organs, Scottish bagpipes, or German bands! why the torture of those who listen to these can be nothing compared with the vile discordance which my two mad amateurs produce. Where is your corporate inspector of nuisances? Do, kind sir, do what you can to assuage the tortures endured by

AN INVALID.

Truro, August 28, 1860.

A PROTEST AGAINST "VETERAN."

MY DEAR M. W.—You promise a "word" with a Veteran in your next (p. 337). Please don't forget to touch him up on the blunder he has made about Haydn. Michael Haydn and Joseph Haydn were two different people, and I never heard that the former wrote symphonies for Solomon.

Yours,

SYPHNX.

P.S. Who the d— were "Spöhr and "Palestrini?"—and what kind of phenomenon is "donnerblitz?"

UP TO C IN ALTISSIMO.

WILL the Editor of the MUSICAL WORLD be good enough to inform his friends how long he thinks it will be before the compass of the pianoforte is extended to C, completing the seven octaves?

London, August 27th, 1860.

[Inquire of Messrs. Broadwood and Sons.—ED.]

LEEDS.—The Jullien Festival—Conductor Prince George Galitzin—takes place on Monday evening, under the direct patronage of Sir Peter Fairbairn.

ROYAL ALHAMBRA PALACE; Proprietor, E. T. SMITH.—The Proprietor has much pleasure in informing the Public that he has purchased, at an outlay of £3,000, one of the greatest living wonders and curiosities of the age, a PERFORMING HIPPOPOTAMUS. This amphibious animal was captured in the month of April, 1858, but a narrative of the capture by Mr. John Petherick, Her Majesty's Consul for the Soudan States, may be amusing to the visitors of this elegant edifice:—Since the year 1853 I have devoted six or seven months of that and each succeeding year in exploring the unknown regions of Central Africa. My starting point Khartoum, a town of 60,000 inhabitants, the capital of seven provinces, dependent on Egypt, called the Soudan, between 13 and 20 degrees N. latitude, and 27 to 36 degrees E. longitude. Leaving Khartoum, and navigating the White Nile to between 9 and 10 deg. of North latitude, a narrow channel, for the most part overgrown with reeds, which by former Nile travellers, had been considered unnavigable, attracted my attention, and pursuing it—not without difficulty finding a passage through various narrow openings in a forest of high reeds—I discovered this to be the connection between a large lake and the Nile, of which it is one of the most important feeders hitherto known. Its waters ornament several promontories and islands, more or less wooded by the acacia, mimosa, and sycamore, but little frequented by man, literally are swarmed by crocodiles and hippopotami; the latter in particular having made many rude attempts to dispute the passage over their hitherto secluded home by attacking my boat, battering-ram fashion, both under and on the surface of the water, and on one occasion, to the surprise and horror of all on board, a huge beast suddenly raising half its great carcase, with an agility hardly to be expected, out of the water, close under the larboard bow, carried off my unfortunate cook from the gunwale, on which, his back to the water, he was sitting, one bite of his powerful jaws severing his body in two at the waist. It was here, while returning in the month of April, in the year 1858, from the regions of the equator, when I founded an establishment of 25 armed men whom I brought with me (a part of a numerous escort from Khartoum), while the lake, according to the information received from the negroes of the Rajk tribe inhabiting its southern confines, from its continued drainage into the Nile, after a more than usually dry season, was much lower than it had been known for many years, that the look-out at the mast-head, almost frantic with excitement, sang out "a young hippopotamus," and pointing to the reeds, within a few yards of which we were sailing, a dozen sailors leapt into the water, and, disappearing in the thick herbage, soon returned, one of them grasping in his arms a young animal about the size of a spaniel dog; they both kept afloat, and propelled themselves towards the boat amid the shoutings and rejoicings of their brave fellow-companions. The unexpected but welcome guest was reared with milk, and was treated with all the attention we could bestow upon it. An Arab, Salama by name, one of the most intelligent servants, was appointed to administer to the wants and look after the animal, who from that time to the present has been its constant attendant, and never, I believe, was there more attachment to man shown by any animal than exists between Bucheet (the Arabic for "fortunate," or, according to the manner of expression, "lucky dog"), the name given to the young hippo by its keeper Salaama. This enormous quadruped is a native of Africa, and is always found either in water or in its near vicinity. In absolute height it is not very remarkable, as its legs are extremely short, but the actual bulk of its body is very great indeed. The average height of a full-grown hippopotamus is about 6 feet. His naked skin is a dark brown, curiously marked, with innumerable lines like those on cracks in china or oil paintings. The mouth is enormous, and its size is greatly increased by the odd manner in which the jaw is set in the head. The tusks have a terrible appearance, but are solely intended for cutting grass and other vegetable substances, and are seldom employed as weapons of offence, except when the animal is wounded or otherwise irritated. Although in its native river, the female hippopotamus is a most kind and affectionate mother, the tame animal does not display such excellent qualities. The female hippopotamus, in the Jardin des Plantes in Paris, has twice been a mother, and twice has killed her offspring. On the last occasion she appeared to have been seized with a sudden fit of anger, for the marks of her teeth were only too plain on the poor little beast when its dead body was discovered, and her tusks had penetrated into its lungs. On the first occasion she killed it from sheer awkwardness, and after carrying it about on her neck in the proper manner, she bruised it so severely in her clumsy efforts to teach her offspring the proper mode of getting out of the bath that it never recovered from the hurts which it received. The hippopotamus has for years been extinct in Europe, but the fossil remains of the animal are found abundantly in London clay, showing that, in some remote age, the hippopotamus must have traversed the plains of England and wallowed in its rivers. There is another species of hippopotamus, which is smaller than that which has just been described, and is termed hippopotamus liberiensis. The hippopotamus has nothing in common with the river-horse. He seems to us an aquatic pig, or four-footed land porpoise; in fact, he appears to partake of the wild boar, the bull, and the porpoise, the latter predominating at present; but when he gets his tusks we much fear there will be an alteration in his manners for the worst. As to his eventual size the prospect is alarming. He is at present only a few months old, and he will continue growing till he is 25 years of age. A full-grown hippopotamus generally yields about 2,000lb. weight of fat, which is salted, and much esteemed. In Africa it is compressed, and a milk oil drawn from it, which is considered a certain remedy for diseases in the breast. In Angola, Congo, Elmina, and the western coasts of Africa they look upon him as an inferior deity. P. Labat considered that the animal had sufficient intelligence to let himself bleed when necessary, and performs the operation of rubbing himself against a sharp-pointed rock, and when he thinks he has bled enough rolls himself in the mud until he has stopped the wound; and it has been affirmed that the Indian painters make use of his blood as one of their colours. He does the most injury when he can rest himself against the earth, but when he floats in the water as he only tries; he has been known to upset a boat of six men, by lifting it out on his back. The hippopotamus has been mentioned in the earliest ages in sacred writings by the name of behemoth, and his figure engraved upon the pillars of Egypt. Aristotle scarcely mentions him. Mr. Bruce wrote in his travels through Africa that he frequently met them in Lake Tzana, in Upper Abyssinia. Dr. Klockner, in his translation printed at Amsterdam, stated that this beast deserved the most particular attention, being five cubits long, with cloven feet, like ruminating animals, and tusks like a wild boar, while the side of his body resembles an elephant. The hippopotami have been on many occasions exhibited by the Emperors of Rome to the people in the circus; 1800 years elapsed before the council of the Zoological Society in the Regent's park undertook the conveyance of one from Upper Egypt; all attempts to obtain one on the west coast having proved fruitless. The visitors to the gardens in the Regent's park rose from 169,000 to 370,000 to visit this extraordinary beast; the proprietor of the Alhambra trusts that the same number will view this extraordinary performing hippopotamus. The proprietor makes no additional charge. The Royal Alhambra Palace is open daily from 2 o'clock until 4 o'clock, and from 8 till 11 o'clock. The various performances will be continued, adding amusement, instruction, and enjoyment to the old and young, daily. Every novelty that can be procured for the public will be purchased and produced, no matter at what expense, and the charge will be 6d. and upwards, according to the means of the visitors. The hippopotamus will, as nearly as possible, be exhibited at 3 o'clock daily, and at 9 o'clock at night. Reserved seats and private boxes can be booked during the day at the Alhambra. The public are earnestly solicited to witness this exhibition of the greatest living wonder of the age; more especially as such another opportunity may never occur, for, in all human probability, this will be the last hippopotamus brought to this country, as Mr. Petherick, the Consul, declared that the expense of bringing the animal to England cost double the amount he had received for it. This the reader will more readily credit after perusing Mr. Petherick's interesting account of its capture and transport, which is sold in the Alhambra Palace for 3d. each.

Marriage.

August 25, C. J. MICHAELI, Esq., to Miss Louisa MICHAEL, of the Royal Opera, Stockholm, and Her Majesty's Theatre, London.

Death.

August 27, the Right Hon. LOUISA, Dowager Countess of CRAVEN, aged 78, formerly the celebrated Miss Brunton, of the Theatres Royal, Drury Lane, and Covent Garden.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

TERMS { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1860.

WE have omitted TOMASCHEK, WORSHCEK, BERGER, and a host of other pianoforte writers from our catalogue raisonnée, of the epoch immediately preceding our own, for the same reason that we have not spoken of LOUIS ADAM and some other composers of the time of Dussek. Though clever men, and the authors of a large variety of works, some of which have unquestionable merit, we cannot find that they have had much influence on their cotemporaries; nor have any of them left examples of the sonata, to show their acquaintance with, and attachment to, that grand form of musical composition. But there is one, who, though we name latest, merits perhaps the very first place among all those who were his cotemporaries,—we mean CARL MARIA VON WEBER, one of the greatest geniuses and one of the most original and distinguished musicians of all time. The gifted author of Der Freischütz, as our readers well know, ranked among the remarkable pianists of his age. He wrote a great number of works for the pianoforte, in many of which the peculiar characteristics of his genius are prominently displayed. Perhaps the most generally popular concert-piece ever written is the fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra in F, denominated Concert-stück. This morceau has been for many years the cheval de bataille of numberless players, from Mad. Pleyel, Liszt, and Litolff, to Alexandre Billet and Arabella Goddard. We have heard almost every pianist of fame execute the Concert-stück, Thalberg alone excepted. Weber also wrote a grand concerto in E flat, a brilliant effort, in which, besides a number of passages entirely new, there are orchestral effects of great originality and excellence. The variations and miscellaneous pieces of Weber are well known, as are his quartet in B flat, and other compositions for the chamber — the latter not by any means his best works, while the former are in their way incomparable. But after the Concert-stück, the most highly esteemed of Weber's productions are the four grand sonatas for piano solus in C major, D minor, A flat, and E minor. All of these contain movements as remarkable for their freshness as for their ingenuity—as, for example, the rondo finale ("moto continuo") of the first, the andante with variations of the second, and the allegretto and finale (tarantella) of the fourth. But most perfect of all in many respects is the third, in A flat, a work of romantic loveliness—a masterpiece which every pianist who loves his art should know and profit by. The fault of Weber's sonatas—we say it with deference—is a certain diffuseness which damages the regularity of their form, and an occasional monotony, arising from the too frequent employment of passages strongly resembling each other in character. But the movements we have specialised are almost free from them, while in the sonata in A flat, from the exquisite grain of the principal themes and the captivating luxuriance of the subordinate passages, they become an absolute beauty. Weber, as everybody knows, has had numberless imitators, but fewer copyists of his pianoforte works than of his dramatic compositions and orchestral overtures, to which, and above all to his Der Freischutz, he owes his universal popularity. He may, therefore, be placed apart, like Beethoven—a lesser star, perhaps, but still of the first magnitude.

Of MENDELSSOHN we may say, as of Beethoven, that he shines apart from the rest of his cotemporaries. He was, beyond comparison, the greatest genius and the most learned musician of the age in which he lived, and which he has undoubtedly influenced more than any other individual, Spohr not excepted. The number of Mendelssohn's imitators are legion; the shelves of the music publishers groan under the heavy weight of their productions; you cannot see a new catalogue without observing at least fifty compositions which you may safely swear, without once looking at them, are little better than parodies of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte (the most popular type), or of something else equally his and equally not theirs. But these copyists of a great original, like the other copyists of another great original—Dussek—have chiefly occupied themselves with his mannerisms, being, as we have already said, wholly incompetent to emulate his beauties or his scientific acquirements. The best of them are those who began to write before Mendelssohn, and were afterwards carried away in the vortex of his fascinating style. The most eminent of these, and justly so, are FERDINAND, HELLER, and TAUBERT. Whether either of these wrote sonatas we are unable to say; we have seen many specimens of their works, but not a single sonata—although some stringed quartets, a pianoforte quintet, and a few orchestral essays of Hiller, who is a very admirable musician, show that he had cultivated the form, however inclined to develope it with undue exuberance. Heller, nevertheless, chiefly owes his influence to his Etudes, which have been assiduously practised by pianists, and have facilitated several peculiarities of mechanism. Most of Taubert's pieces which we have had the opportunity of perusing are caprices, fantasias, et hoc genus omne.

It is unnecessary here to enter into details about the composers of our own time. Nearly the whole may be dismissed as followers, more or less successful, of Mendelssohn, Thalberg, Henri Herz, or Liszt, according to their respective tastes and styles. Of Mendelssohn we need say no more; of Henri Herz we have said enough. Of Thalberg and Liszt we may speak in a separate review, since neither having revealed any tendency to the development of the sonata form, it is not requisite to introduce them now, and our future task will be merely to discuss the influence they have exercised upon the pianoforte as the original of particular schools—schools of execution rather than of composition. Chopin, Stephen Heller, Sterndale Bennett—the three most distinguished composers for the pianoforte of our own times, with the single exception of Mendelssohn—of course demand a special consideration, and on more important grounds. Henselt, and a crowd of others, romantic, unromantic, and "middling," may also come in for their share of attention. Macfarren, Reber, and other thoughtful writers, whose pianoforte compositions, highly as they must be rated, only occupy a subordinate position to their other works, can hardly be ranked in the same category.

WE were entering the Alexandrina theatre for the purpose of superintending the rehearsal of our tragedy of Osiris, when we heard a voice from the manager's room utter these words, "Give me my goose and my pig, and I'll go." The door opened and forth stepped a little man, followed by a big man who carried in one hand a pig, and in the other a goose. The two men proceeded to a cab, which was in waiting at the stage door, deposited the animals therein, entered the vehicle themselves, and drove off.

"That was Flexmore," said the manager to us a moment afterwards. "The pantomime has been running eight weeks, and his sucking pig has grown such a size that now he can't put it in his pocket. That's his affair, however. I shan't buy him another, and I've told him so."

This was the first time we had seen a clown in his private clothes, and we had scarcely noticed him! Yet how often had we asked ourselves what a clown could be like in everyday life, and to what extent he probably introduced into it the manners and practices of his stage existence. It seemed to us, however, from the little we had seen, that whatever might be the case with others, Flexmore, at least, was almost as comic and eccentric a personage out of a pantomime as he was in one; and from that time we never could think of Flexmore without laughing—until last week, when we heard that he was dead! And what a strange death to befal the most agile of our pantomimists—for it is said that he actually died of atrophy! One would as soon expect Paul Bedford or Tilbury to perish of St. Vitus's dance.

The death of a popular clown, like Flexmore, surprises and shocks one the more from the fact that no one ever hears of clowns being ill; and perhaps also because from seeing them exposed, on the stage, without any ill effects, to all sorts of violent treatment, one gets accustomed to look upon them as proof against all the ordinary catastrophes of life. A singer of reputation is indisposed a certain number of times every season; but a favourite clown is never unwell, and it always seemed to us that the same immunity from bodily injuries and ailments, by which he is notoriously attended on the stage, accompanied him somehow or other even into private life. At all events since the death of Grimaldi (which, be it observed, did not take place until long after he had ceased to be a clown), we have heard of no clown dying, except a Lancashire one, who appears to have been an inexpert performer, and who, waking suddenly from a dream in a railway carriage, sprang through the window and received mortal injuries in his fall. Certainly no one who saw Flexmore last year in the Covent Garden pantomime could have imagined that he was so near death, nor do we know now either when he died, or even whether he was long ill. The clown asks us how we all are on boxing-night; but who, when the pantomime season is once at an end, troubles himself about the health of the clown?

By the marriage of Flexmore with Mlle. Auriol, the families of the two most celebrated clowns of France and England became united. We involuntarily think of a line uttered by the despondent hero of "Locksley Hall." The first half: "As the husband is the wife is" was not strictly applicable, for Mlle. Auriol chiefly cultivated an elegant style of dancing; but the second: "Thou art wedded to a clown," might have been addressed to that lady with as much propriety as to the Amy of the poem. In marrying Flexmore, however, the daughter of the active and facetious "clown" of the Parisian Cirque made what was really a most suitable match; and had poor Flexmore lived, old Auriol—whose feats, and especially those wonderful and celebrated ones with the chairs, were imitated to perfection by his son-in-law—would have had the honour of being succeeded not only by his son, but also, in a manner, through his daughter. Thus old Debureau was succeeded and replaced by young Debureau, and in so perfect a manner, that many who saw the son for the first time in his flour and his white tunic, fancied they were still witnessing the performances of the father.

Flexmore, unhappily, leaves no one to replace him—neither in a professional nor in a domestic sense—and his widow has a family of young children to provide for. We have first of all then, to regret the loss of a great artist, and without disputing as to which are the highest and which the lowest branches of art, we may here suggest to the reader, that it is a greater thing to be an admirable clown than to be an inferior tragedian; and that to dance a burlesque cachucha in a perfect spirit of parody, is a more artistic achievement than to declaim the soliloquies of Hamlet with much mouthing and no true dramatic expression. In the second place, there is something to be done for the artist's wife and little ones. It is said that Mr. E. T. Smith (if not, why not the managers of Covent Garden?) will give the use of his theatre for a representation, which it is proposed to get up for their benefit. Let the public think of the much laughter for which they have been indebted to Flexmore, and of the tears that his family are now shedding for his loss; and even if the performance be less attractive than it probably will, it, at all events, will be numerously attended.

FLORAL HALL.

THE recent stormy weather which with most persons (says The Morning Post) has proved a plaintive theme, susceptible of endless dismal variations, has been to Mr. Alfred Mellon, the justly celebrated conductor and entrepreneur of the Floral Hall Concerts, a veritable "Godsend;" for the "ill-wind" has brought him nothing but good, and the constant showers have been to Mr. Mellon golden showers. Driven by stress of weather from Cremorne, Rosherville, and all other places devoted to "open-air" amusements, our pleasure-seeking public has wisely sought refuge and delightful solace within the brilliant, and at the same time comfortable, precincts of the great glass-house in Bow Street, where, besides the charms of a splendidly and tastefully decorated locale, excellent refreshments, and every possible convenience with respect to seats (so eagerly sought for by shilling "promenaders"), have been displayed, the attractions of the Royal Italian Opera's incomparable band and chorus, together with those of such celebrated and first-class singers as Mlle. Parepa and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. All circumstances then duly considered, the success of Mr. Alfred Mellon's speculation (although the chosen time, according to received ideas, meteorological propriety, and social custom, was certainly "out of joint") is not at all to be wondered at. To enjoy anything at all, especially anything musical, at this moment, out of one's house, without being wet through, is assuredly a great privilege, and with due respect for the Coldstream and other famous bands performing at decidedly damp places, we really must claim for Mr. Alfred Mellon the honour of having conferred a very great benefit upon our unhappy townsmen, who instead of valourously "breasting the tide" at Brighton or Margate, are obliged to sneak under dropping and dripping umbrellas upon the London "Strand;" who, instead of scaling the heights of Dover, are forced to seek shelter ignominiously under the nearest portico which our metropolitan streets may afford; and who without the Floral Hall concerts could not possible at this season of the year hear any really fine music worthily performed in town—that is, with a dry skin. Mr. Alfred Mellon, with all his tact and experience, is not yet quite a man for the moment—a thorough "master of the situation," whatever it may be, otherwise he would not have confined himself to one illustration of the state of the weather—namely, "The Storm," from Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, as he has done, but would have made Mr. Wilbye Cooper sing "Did you ne'er hear of a jolly young Waterman," "Cease rude Boreas," "For the rain it raineth every day," or have requested Miss Parepa to favour us with "The Meeting of the Waters."

The concert on Saturday night, the first part of which consisted of a selection from the works of Mendelssohn, was as successful as the lovers of good music could have desired. The unpropitious weather failed to rob the familiar name of its attraction; and, though it rained all day without intermission, the doors of Floral Hall were not long thrown open before an immense crowd had assembled. Mr. Alfred Mellon may be complimented on his programme, which, besides being marked by excellence and variety, was so arranged that each succeeding piece afforded an agreeable contrast to its immediate predecessor:—

Overture—"A Midsummer Night's Dream."
Part-song—"Oh hills and vales."
Concerto—Pianoforte (No. 1, in G minor).
Air—"When the Evening Bells are Chiming."
Symphony in A major (Italian).
Finale from the opera of Lorelei.

The performance, from first to last, was worthy of the music, and the audience thoroughly appreciated both. The overture to Shakspeare's immortal fairy play, which, though an inspiration of early youth, is one of the most original and imaginative productions of its composer, was given with a delicacy and precision quite marvellous, the enormous area and configuration of Floral Hall taken into account. But—as was shown later in a still more elaborate work—the band of the Royal Italian Opera, with a director at its head like Mr. Mellon, is capable of achieving difficulties under any circumstances short of absolutely antagonistic. Nothing could come more happily after a piece so full of energy as the overture, than the part-song—perhaps the most universally popular thing of its kind—an image of repose such as music has seldom reflected, a dream of the setting sun throwing its last rays on the quiet hills, a bit of harmonious landscape, in short, the "spirit of whose beauty" (to quote the English paraphrase of the words that inspired it) "can never fade away." After this the attention of the hearers was diverted into an altogether different channel by the impetuous concerto in G minor—another example of Mendelssohn's astonishingly precocious talent—executed by Mr. George Russell, a young and rising pianist, if not precisely with the "impetuosity" most congenial to its character, at least with spirit, clearness, and well-sustained brilliancy. A trifle more of sentiment would not have been unwelcome in the slow movement; but Mr. Russell was probably of opinion that very nice shades of expression might be lost under the dome of the Bow Street Crystal Palace, and so designedly eschewed them. The accompaniments to the concerto were carefully played by the band, and at the conclusion Mr. Russell left the orchestra amid warm and honourably-earned plaudits. The song from Heimkehr (known in England as Son and Stranger)—an opera composed by Mendelssohn to commemorate (what the Germans call) the "silver wedding" of his father and mother (25th anniversary of their union)—is as full of character as it is charming. This, introduced last winter with great success by Herr Reichardt at the Monday Popular Concerts (St. James's Hall), and equally welcome on the present occasion, was delivered with genuine artistic feeling by Mr. Wilbye Cooper. The tranquil opening phrase is finely relieved by the episode describing the night-watch of the soldier, so appropriately announced by the trumpet, and the whole was well adapted to separate the pianoforte concerto from the orchestral symphony, with neither of which it has the smallest feature in common. The Italian symphony was given entire, with the repeat of the first part of the allegro vivace—exactly, indeed, as the composer intended. On the whole, we can scarcely remember a more satisfactory performance of this fresh and genial work. The profoundly touching andante —of which it was said years long past that in writing it Mendelssohn had composed his own requiem—might have gained something by being taken a little slower, but here objection ends. The remainder, especially the last movement, to which alone the symphony is indebted for the geographical expletive now conventionally accepted (undreamt of by Mendelssohn himself, who simply entitled it, "Symphony in A major") the restless Saltarello, suggesting by its peculiar rhythm and colour the idea of a Neapolitan carnival, with all the contingent bustle and excitement —was beyond criticism. How thoroughly the whole was appreciated may be gathered from the fact that the movement in question was redemanded. With the finale of Lorelei before him, nevertheless, Mr. Mellon did wisely in withholding compliance, and resting content with the unanimous applause elicited. In this colossal piece—a splendid pledge of the dramatic genius of its composer, and of the triumphs he was likely to achieve had he been spared to labour for the stage as earnestly as he laboured for the choir, the orchestra, and the chamber—all concerned won laurels. Band, chorus, principal singer, and conductor, were alike assiduous in their duties, and with the like result. It was the last performance, and also the best, in a concert where everything was good. Never were the solos of Leonora—who devotes herself to the spirits of the Rhine in order to acquire the means of being avenged on a fickle lover (a Leonora promising to rival the still incomparable Leonora of Beethoven)—declaimed with more fire and vigour than by Miss Parepa, who (as everybody might have concluded) has just the voice for the part, and (as everybody might not have concluded) a true and forcible conception of it. The audience were so delighted that, without awaiting the final notes, they burst into such a storm of applause as almost drowned in its vehemence the united efforts of the voices and instruments, which go on accumulating power and grandeur to the climax.

The "Volunteer Night" was given on Monday, under distinguished patronage, and attracted an immense audience. There was a fair sprinkling of the grey-coated confraternity in the reserved seats and promenade, and the appearance of uniforms among the ranks of the orchestra had a very novel appearance. The programme embraced the overtures to the Siege of Corinth and Fra Diavolo, the funeral march from the Eroica symphony, grand selection from Guillaume Tell, Jullien's quadrille, "The Campbell's are coming," and his "Last Waltz," and a new volunteer song, entitled, "Let any man with heart and soul," by Mr. Alfred Mellon. The audience was extremely enthusiastic, and when Mr. Wilbye Cooper came forward in the well-known uniform of the 38th Middlesex Artists' to sing Mr. Mellon's new volunteer song, the excitement was boundless, not without cause indeed, since the composition is full of martial ardour and was capitally sung. Jullien's quadrille, too—one of his most enlivening dance compositions—was received with thunders of applause, and No. 4 figure encored. Mr. Thomas Harper performed "The Soldier Tired," on the trumpet—a perfectly marvellous piece of execution —and was compelled to repeat it. Mlle. Parepa added to the attraction by some vocal performances. So attractive was the "Volunteer Performance," that the entire of the programme was repeated on Tuesday. The "Mendelssohn night" was repeated on Thursday.

Last night the Messiah was announced to be performed, the principal characters to be sustained by Mlle. Parepa, Miss Augusta Thomson, Mad. Laura Baxter, Messrs. Wilbye Cooper and Thomas.

MEMORIAL WINDOW TO THE REV. DR. COLERIDGE.—At the west end of Exeter Cathedral has been erected, by subscription, a beautiful stained window to the memory of the late Dr. Coleridge, prebendary of Exeter, and formerly vicar of Kenwyn and of Lawhitton, in this county. It bears the following inscription:—In memoriam viri Rev. James Duke Coleridge, D.C.L., Prebendarii Procuratoris. Obit. 1857.

JULLIEN—MELLON—GALITZIN.

(From the Weekly Dispatch.)

POOR JULLIEN!—whenever the bill is first beheld of the new enterprise in Covent Garden, this will be the exclamation of every candid lover of music. Now he is gone we can do him justice. Remoteness seems to be essentially a condition of just criticism. Not but that M. Jullien managed, in the twenty years he was among us, very effectually to live down the solemn sneering he first encountered. There was a traditional dulness in our orchestras, which had so long been considered dignity, that when the little Frenchman presumed to outrage it in his appearance and vivacity, as a matter of course, he was called a quack. There was also something so strange and irregular in the novel resources he employed to give character and vigour to some of his dance music —his pistol-shots and whip-crackings, his gongs and orchestral shoutings—when his musicians seemed to grow envious of the glory of their instruments, and suddenly break in for a share, that among the dignified and somnolent of our musical cognoscenti, he was a charlatan forthwith. But all this was so much smoke—thin and transparent enough, it is true—that was sent up wreathing, to excite attention. People soon began to see that under it was flame! It was discovered after a time that this much scoffed at entrepreneur was not merely a being composed of a white waistcoat, striking gestures, startling pistol-shots and gongs, and a rather poetic style of literature. Year by year the fact came out that he had a purpose in him and a growth. As he found a public, he furnished music. He fed taste, he did not deprave it. He began by simply giving the world a round of polkas and quadrilles; he ended by presenting it with nights devoted to Beethoven and Mozart. He commenced with attacking the senses, he finished with entering the soul. His whole career had a progressive character, that gives us fair grounds to suppose he contemplated from the first a gradual improvement of the public taste. His very outset seems to show this. He started with giving expansion to the conception of Musard. With the latter arose the notion of addressing music to the million, which, however light and exciting, should be enjoyed for itself alone. With the former this idea expanded into a scheme for elevating the music, till at length it was of a character to refine as well as delight. That M. Jullien, in carrying it out, sensibly aided in the spread of a musical taste among us, it would be perfectly futile to deny. The art history of our time cannot fail to acknowledge the service rendered by such a means as he presented, in its cheapness, excellence, and freeeom, to the gradual diffusion of an improved taste among the million. We can look back, then, with respect to the career of our lost musician, and readily excuse his eccentricities in the presence of his achievements.

Where M. Jullien left his project, Mr. Mellon takes it up. Starting from the platform, as they say in America, of an advanced public appreciation, he has it in his power, it seems to us, to carry out the scheme to its utmost possible results. He can not only give us single nights, but important selections from the best masters, which, combined with good performances, both vocal and instrumental, of the first talent in the country, would gradually expand these concerts into a sort of Philharmonic for the masses. If few will deny this as a great end, as few will be found we are inclined to think, to question the capacity of Mr. Mellon to achieve it. A thorough musician and a good composer, he is perfectly conversant with all the music that is best adapted to his purpose, whilst his long experience as a conductor, both in concert-rooms and theatres, supplies him with the special faculty of conveying his selections in the best form. He has the further advantage of youth, which can combine with art and knowledge the vigour that is so essential both to inspire effort and to sustain it.

It is not to be disguised, however, that such a project demands a certain talent for management as well as musical direction. And we are happy to see that Mr. Mellon is not wanting in indications of capacity in that quarter. He retains, in the first place, the services of the Covent Garden band and chorus, the very first in Europe. He selects for his locality the Floral Hall, and he associates with his enterprise the illustrious name of Prince Galitzin—a nobleman who may be instanced as one of the most striking social phenomena of our time. We had lately occasion to comment on the present age as one of wonders, and we might here adduce a proof that would of itself sustain our statement. Here is a Russian nobleman of such liberal sympathies that he raises funds for Garibaldi, and of such devotion to the cause of music that he is willing to become a public performer, in order to convey to the English public a just sense of Sclavonic genius. Such a fact alone stamps this enterprise with great distinction; and we need not say that, so inaugurated, the Floral Hall Concerts, which propose rather to develope than to resuscitate those of M. Jullien, commenced their essay on Monday evening, with no ordinary success. The performance may be said to have consisted of four distinct features—its orchestral playing—its solo playing—its part singing—and its Russian music. Of these it cannot surprise that the last was the great attraction; and it is only justice to it to say that it deserved the interest it excited. Prince Galitzin's valse and polka, essentially Sclavonic in their character, had a vigour and variety that rendered them quite as enjoyable as they were interesting nationally. The "Sanctus," by Bortniansky, was a very able composition; and the gay finale to the Russian opera, which was also the finale to the concert, was as commendable for its dramatic spirit as its instrumental force and skill.

THE MECHANIC TO HIS SWEETHEART.

BY JOHN PLUMMER.

I know that my hands may be hard and rough,
That my cheek may be wan and pale,
But my heart is made of a good sound stuff
That never will falter or fail;
And though in the world with my mates I stand,
To share in the battle of life,
I take thee, my girl, by thy dainty hand,
As my own, my bonny sweet wife.

Though never a jewelled wreath may span
The curls on thy beautiful brow,
I'll pledge thee my heart and troth as a man,
And love thee for ever as now;
And though the bright dreams of love's sunny prime
Too often the future belie,
The steep hill of life together we'll climb,
And conquer our fate,—thou and I!

My coat may be poor, my words be but few,
Yet there's never an ermin'd king
Can offer his Queen a present more true
Than mine of a heart and a ring;
That tiny gold link with which we may bind
Our fortunes in one common bond,
And rear us a home where happiness shrin'd
May dwell with affection most fond.

What more would we seek? What more would we have?
What more could fair Nature bestow?
If, of all her gifts, we ventured to crave
The richest that mortals might know.
For aye, dearest girl, shall our wedded love
Flash—star-like—a-top of our life;
And never will I a base traitor prove
To my Heart, my Home, or my Wife!

LADY ORGANISTS.

[We have been requested to publish the subjoined statement.—ED.]

A YOUNG lady of talent, who has produced several musical compositions, and having a reputation for ability, good character and conduct, has recently been dismissed from her situation as organist at a well attended District Church, after applying for increase of salary. This lady was educated for the profession under a musician of high repute. Her first appointment was at a Chapel of Ease about seven miles from London, at a salary of £20 a year. Here she continued for four years, respected by the congregation, and kindly treated by the clergymen. However, finding the distance (nine miles from her residence) was inconvenient, she retired, and obtained an organ at a District Church, newly erected, and nearer to her home. At this latter place she has also remained four years, and during that time has been subjected to much mortification, unusual interference, and harsh treatment.

The services, added to the practising of a choir and instructing the children, necessitate 228 attendances in the year, for £20, or 1*s.* 9*d.* each attendance, and occupy a large portion of the organist's time.

The church is, in commercial phrase, a "paying concern," and the incumbency profitable. Some short time since the organist made respectful application to the incumbent and the churchwardens for an increase of salary. The result has been a dismissal and notice to leave from the incumbent, of his own "hoc volo sic jubeo." His power to dismiss an organist paid by the wardens out of church expenses' fund, and one who had given no just cause for removal, is doubted, but will not be contested.

The organist will submit. Nevertheless, in most cases, and, even where the ruling powers are desirous of getting rid of the organist, it is customary to give the party an opportunity of obtaining another situation, and of resigning. Not so in this case. Twenty pounds a year, with a chance of a little teaching, yields but a poor income for a lady's maintenance; and there is much praise due to this class of the under-paid for reserve and delicacy in not wishing their trials and humiliations to be paraded before the public. In this rank stands the young lady in question, and it is to be hoped that her friends will recommend her as a teacher of music and singing, for which she is said to be highly competent.

In the mean time, the subject of church organists and their pay deserves inquiry and consideration.

GRISI AND MARIO.—A few days since, our contemporary, the Globe, gave a flat denial to the report that Grisi and Mario were engaged by Mr. E. T. Smith, for Her Majesty's Theatre, next season. Subsequently our contemporary makes a retractation of its denial, and acknowledges that there is some foundation for the rumour.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—The performances under the Pyne and Harrison management commence in October with Mr. Wallace's Lurline—the great success of last season. The first novelty will be the production of Wagner's Tannhauser in English; the second, a new opera by Mr. Balfe. It is reported—but we cannot give the report credence—that the performances of English operas will be alternative with Italian operas, for which Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini have been engaged as principal singers.

EASTERN OPERA HOUSE, PAVILION THEATRE.—If few doubted the energy and enterprise of Mr. John Douglas—manager of the Royal Standard and Pavilion Theatres, and great musical and dramatic caterer for the east end of London—none were prepared for the introduction of bonâ fide Italian opera into the bourgeois regions of Whitechapel. Mr. Douglas, however, is too cunning to make so lofty an appeal all at once to the tastes and sympathies of his oriental audience; he knew better, and in place of commencing with unadulterated Italian opera, gave them a foretaste, on the opening night, of his Ansonian entertainments, by the performance of Norma in English. In short, to speak plainly, Mr. Douglas has opened his season at the Pavilion Theatre with English and Italian opera alternated, and has provided a numerous, and, in some respects admirable vocal company, with a tolerable band, under the direction of Mr. Isaacson, formerly conductor of the Princess's Theatre, and an efficient chorus.

The theatre has been newly painted and redecorated, and sundry private boxes affixed, to give the interior the veritable operatic air. The house is extremely handsome and commodious, and is well adapted for musical purposes. The company, we have said, is numerous. Mad. Lancia is the prima donna assoluta, and Miss Leng the seconda donna. Others are announced to appear in due season. As yet these two ladies have had all the leading business to themselves. The tenors who have already sung, are Mr. Augustus Braham, Mr. W. Parkinson, and Signor Giuletti; the first two in English, the last in Italian opera. The new speculation commenced on Saturday with Norma, Mad. Lancia, of course, sustaining the part of the hapless Druid priestess; Mr. Augustus Braham that of Pollio; Miss Leng, Adalgisa; and Mr. Rosenthal, Aroveso. Of Mad. Lancia the readers of the MUSICAL WORLD have already heard something. In April, 1858, our own correspondent at Turin wrote us a flaming account of the début of Mad. Lancia, an English lady — then only seventeen years of age — in the Barbière. Our correspondent wrote evidently under the influence of much excitement. It was certain, however, that the young lady had made a great hit. Mad. Lancia came to London the same summer, but did not create a profound sensation in the concert room. She then went on a starring tour to the provinces, and was very successful both in Italian and English opera. In Dublin and Edinburgh, more especially, she grew into high favour, and some of the local journals attempted to establish comparisons between her and Miss Louisa Pyne and Mlle. Piccolomini, all of which went to assert the superiority of Mad. Lancia. We believe the fair artist also performed last year in a series of operas at the Surrey Theatre. We have now heard Mlle. Lancia twice within the week in Norma, and can speak with some confidence as to her powers and capabilities. If style and method alone were to constitute a great singer, Mad. Lancia would, unquestionably, be one of the greatest before the public. Her mode of producing the voice is most admirable, and has evidently been derived from the best Italian teaching. Her voice, a real soprano, is neither particularly full nor sound in quality, nor has it yet attained weight to adapt it to the performance of grand parts like Norma. It is, nevertheless, a most telling voice, extremely sympathetic, and always full of meaning. When we add that Mad. Lancia — at least as far as we were enabled to judge from two trying performances — invariably sings in tune, it will be acknowledged that the lady's vocal excellences are by no means inconsiderable. Of her merits as an actress we can speak with no less assurance. She is certainly deficient in largeness of style, and wants breadth and power for high tragic parts, as may be easily surmised, considering her youth and her size, which is somewhat petite. Her conception of the character, nevertheless, is wonderfully true to nature, is striking, and at times even powerful. Moreover, the lady has great earnestness and feeling, and is as graceful as a fawn. We saw nothing in the whole performance, indeed, which did not please us infinitely, and much which surprised no less than delighted us. Weighing the lady in the scale of our critical consideration, we have no hesitation in saying that she is the best dramatic vocalist we have had on the English stage since Adelaide Kemble. Mad. Lancia is extremely young, and has many things to learn, but that she is destined at this moment to become a great artist is our firm conviction. The Pollio of the first night was Mr. Augustus Braham, who sang the music with much vigour and like a practised artist. The performance of Pollio, however, it seems, is alternated by Mr. Augustus Braham and Mr. W. Parkinson, the meaning of which entirely escapes our comprehension, more especially as Mr. Parkinson does not know a note of the music, and could not sing it if he did. Mr. Parkinson has been put into Pollio, we may suppose, for no other reason than that he is a great favourite with the public in the locality. Luckily for Mr. Parkinson, the audience on Thursday night was innocent of Count Pepoli's book and Bellini's music. Miss Leng, who played Adalgisa, has a good voice and a vicious style. If she could get rid of her vicious style, her good voice might be turned to considerable advantage. Lucia di Lammermoor, in Italian, was performed on Tuesday with Mad. Lancia as Lucy; a new tenor, Signor Giuletti, as Edgardo; and Signor Onorati as Enrico. All we can say of this performance is, that the tenor was no hit. Many operas are in preparation for Mad. Lancia, who, as may be imagined, is becoming better understood and appreciated every successive night. La Sonnambula is announced for to-night; Linda di Chamouni and Martha are being rehearsed. In the meanwhile, it behoves Mr. Douglas to be more careful of his prima donna. Singing every night in the week operas like Norma and Lucia would endanger the constitutions of even Grisi or Titiens.

The Theatres.

ADELPHI THEATRE.—The revival of Mr. Boutcicault's drama, Janet Pride, is a judicious step on the part of the Adelphi management. At the old theatre, where most of the plays that constituted the type of what was called a "real Adelphi piece" had been acted so often that the public was familiarised not only with the several plots, but with every incident and every joke, Janet Pride appeared as a new specimen of the class, with every attribute by which the old successes had been achieved. A strong domestic interest, situations that with small need of elucidating dialogue appeal at once to the eye, a number of leading personages large above the average, and a good comic character — these are the elements that from early days have obtained the patronage of an enormous public, and they are all to be found in Janet Pride. The character of Richard Pride, first the drunkard of humble life, then the fearless bushranger, and, finally, the London scamp aping gentility, has always remained fresh in the memory as one of Mr. Webster's most striking creations, and the fact that he resumes it now is sufficient to render the piece attractive. The drunken scene, as of old, is the most effective connected with the part. That peculiar kind of inebriety that does not arise from any conviviality of disposition, but from a dogged resolution to drown unhappy thoughts, is delineated with wonderful truth in its various oscillations between surly brutality and maudlin grief. The part of Janet Pride is new to Miss Woolgar (Mrs. A. Mellon), who never acted more finely than as this heroine of humble life. The airs of the town-bred coquette, who is most severe in the discharge of her household duties, and most pertinacious in tormenting her lover, while she dotes on him from the depth of her heart, are as natural as possible, and nothing could be more forcible than her passionate appeal to the Court, during the trial scene in the last act. It is a great merit of Miss Woolgar's delineation that even in the most pathetic moments, she never forgets the station of the character. She is still the woman of humble life,—the same whose plebeian style of coquetry has, half-an-hour before, provoked the laughter of the audience. The enamoured Dicky Trotter, violent in all the emotions of love, joy, and grief, to such a degree that he is comic even when heart-broken, is played with free, genuine humour by Mr. J. L. Toole, whose efficiency as a leading low comedian seems constantly increasing. Mr. Selby, excellent as the old French watchmaker, which is one of his best characters, and Mr. Paul Bedford as the ruffian of the Australian bush, with a song of the Blueskin school, are, of course, welcome apparitions.

ST. JAMES'S.—After a series of benefit performances, the St. James's Theatre has launched itself into a regular "summer season." The programme is of a somewhat varying character, as far as the earlier portion of the evening's amusement is concerned, but there is a permanent attraction in Mr. Planché's excellent burlesque, Fortunio, which has been produced with no small degree of care. Miss Clara St. Casse is the smartest and most dapper of knight-adventurers, deporting herself with the most amusing confidence, and singing to the best purpose; and Mr. Joseph Robins abounds in grotesque "fun" as the terrible Emperor, who bullies everybody and finds such constant difficulty in keeping his imperial word. A good chorus and an excellent corps de ballet also do good service to the burlesque.

THE HIPPOPOTAMUS.—(From the Times.)—The hippopotamus in the Regent's Park is so fond of concealing every part of its person save its extremely ugly face, which usually appears on the surface of the water, like an ill-favoured bubble, that the public may fairly welcome a specimen of the rare genus forced to abide on dry land, and consequently to take that direction of its amphibious nature which it seems most anxious to avoid. A hippopotamus placed under these circumstances is now exhibited at the Alhambra Palace, where its slow walk round the arena contrasts wonderfully with the rapid feats of the Brotners Berri, likewise amphibious beings, inasmuch as they divide their existence between earth and air. It is not too much to say that the tame hippopotamus in Leicester Square is one of the tardiest creatures ever witnessed. The surprise it occasions is precisely the reverse of that which was expressed by the Indian who saw bottled stout opened for the first time, and declared that his admiration was caused, not by the escape of the foaming liquor, but by his reflections on the immense difficulty that must have accompanied its incarceration. We are not so much surprised by the tameness of the animal as we are puzzled to imagine how a creature, raised to such an infinite power of piggishness, could ever have been wild. As some peoples seem to have been fitted by nature for constitutional government, so does the hippopotamus seem to fall with the greatest facility into that peculiar kind of civilisation which consists in doing nothing. If we may apply to virtues the categories which are commonly applied to sins, we may say that those of the hippopotamus are all of omission. It is admirable, not for what it does, but for what it leaves undone. It allows a bulky gentleman of colour to thrust his head into its mouth without attempting his decapitation; it permits him also to ride on its back without trying to throw him off; nay, it listens to a comic song sung in its honour by Mr. Tom Matthews, and, though the pleasantry is somewhat of the dullest, it does not give the least sign of impatience. Altogether an exceedingly docile and well-mannered beast.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.—For the forthcoming season, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mathews, Mr. Lambert (from Australia), Mrs. Frank Matthews, Mrs. and Miss Stirling are engaged, and will form part of Mr. E. T. Smith's company, to appear in a new drama from the pen of Mr. Thomas Taylor. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean perform here early in February, to be followed by Mr. Gustavus Brooke.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Mr. F. Strange was fortunate in hitting upon one of the finest days of the entire summer for his annual benefit, which took place on Thursday. The entertainments, as last year, were of a novel and various description, including a concert by popular artists, with songs by the "inimitable" Mackney and the more imitable Sam Collins, performances by the band of the Coldstream Guards, racing on the cricket-ground, balloon race, display of the whole series of the great fountains, stick-play, boxing, high jumping, putting the stones, the broad-sword exercise by the Second Life Guards, ventriloquism, organ performance, Sinclair's magic, and magnificent fireworks. The Concert took place at two o'clock in the new concert-room, under the direction of Mr. Manns. Every seat was filled. The singers were Miss Emily Gresham, Miss Leffler, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Miss Eliza Hughes, Miss Jane Palmer, Mrs. Lee, Messrs. George Tedder, L. Thomas, F. Scotson Clarke, and Montgomery. Miss Emily Gresham was encored in the air from Lurline, "Take this cup of sparkling wine," and "Coming through the rye,"—the last not accepted—Miss Leffler, in "The Skipper and his Boy;" and Miss Rebecca Isaacs in "Logie o' Buchan." The visitors numbered between 16,000 and 17,000.

NORWICH FESTIVAL.—On Monday week there was a general rehearsal of the principals at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square. Mr. Benedict's Undine was gone through, Mr. and Mrs. Weiss sustaining the solo parts in it. Incomplete as such a performance must necessarily be, we are still enabled, even from this very inadequate development of its merits, to give an estimate of the value of this production as a work of art, and that estimate we are happy to say, is of an unequivocally favourable character. The main design, and the constituent ideas, as well as all that pertains to practical elaboration, give token of high musical genius, no less than of consummate skill in the nice adjustment of instruments, and the artistic production of effects. Herr Molique's Abraham has also had a trial, but without the solo singers. Mr. Benedict went to Norwich on the 22nd, for the purpose of conducting rehearsals of the local band and chorus. He remained a week, and was present at four rehearsals—of Abraham, the Last Judgment, the Dettingen "Te Deum," and Undine, Armida, and the May Queen.

CHELSEA (From a Correspondent).—On the 16th inst. (August), a concert was given in the Oakley Assembly Rooms "for the benefit of a Professor of Music in adverse circumstances," for which occasion the services of the following artistes were kindly given:—Miss Clari Fraser, Mrs. Robert Paget, Mr. George Tedder, Mr. Kenny, and Mr. Alexander Thornley, assisted by the Chelsea Glee Club. Solo, Pianoforte, Miss Ward; accompanist, Mr. H. Parker. Conductor, Mr. John Davis. An excellent programme was provided, and the artists acquitted themselves in a manner which elicited well-merited applause and many encores. Mr. Alexander Thornley, a new bass, possessing a voice of excellent quality, sang "I am a roamer," at once effectively and correct. The programme contained the following favourite Glees by Martin:—"Auld Lang Syne," "Haste ye soft gales," "The Evening Star," "Our Saxon Fathers," which were well rendered. There was a good attendance, and we doubt not a satisfactory pecuniary result; and much credit is due to Mr. Lane, the promoter of the concert, for his laudable exertions in the cause, as well as for his valuable assistance in the vocal department (his voice being a capable alto).

MR. AND MRS. BOURCICAULT have returned from Paris. A new piece by Mr. Bourcicault is now in active rehearsal, under his immediate superintendence, at the Adelphi Theatre.

MEYERBEER is taking the waters, not at Spa, but at Schwalbach.

Mr. HOWARD PAUL gave his entertainment on Wednesday evening, for the benefit of the Lying-in-Hospital, Birmingham, and has handed over a handsome sum to that institution.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE ORGANIST OF LEEDS TOWNHALL.

Tenbury, May 8, 1860.

I have great pleasure in stating my conviction that of all persons I know Mr. Wm. Spark is the most fitted for the post of organist of the townhall at Leeds; for no one has so many opportunities as he has had of making himself thoroughly master of all the many and complicated resources and splendid musical effects which are the characteristic features of that magnificent instrument, in the handling of which he has proved himself so successful an adept. I should be truly sorry to hear that the post in question had fallen into other hands, for I retain a vivid and delightful recollection of the judicious and talented way in which Mr. Spark showed off the various beauties of the townhall organ when I visited it last winter, and I am quite sure it would be difficult, if not impossible, to do better justice to it, and very full of risk to entrust it to other and less experienced performers.

I therefore cordially wish Mr. Spark all success.

FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY,
Prof. Mus., Oxon., and Precentor of Hereford.

DEATH OF FLEXMORE, THE CLOWN.—The pantomime-loving public will learn with regret that Mr. Richard Flexmore, the well-known clown, died on Monday night, of atrophy, at his residence, Hercules-buildings, Lambeth, in the thirty-eighth year of his age. Mr. Flexmore may be said to have commenced life as a pantomimist, for at the early age of eleven years he made his first appearance at a small theatre which then existed at Chelsea, in a fantastic piece called The Man in the Moon. He danced very effectively a burlesque shadow dance. He subsequently became a pupil of Mr. Frampton, and showed great aptitude for stage business in his own peculiar line. He was especially celebrated for his close and natural imitation, à la Clown, of the leading terpsichoreans of the day, such as Perrot, Carlotta Grisi, Taglioni, Cerito, &c., and in these imitations none laughed more heartily or enjoyed them more than the originals who happened to witness them. He married Mlle. Auriol, and both himself and his wife, who survives him, became great favourites with the public. His last appearance before the public was for a benefit at the Surrey Theatre, either in March or April.—Express.

THEATRICALS IN NEW YORK.—It is only natural that we should take an interest in the dramatic progress of our Anglo-Saxon brethren on the western edge of the Atlantic; and it is observable, as we look over the columns of the New York journals, that in spite of the very large admixture of the German and the French element in the population, there is still a vast affinity with what may be considered thoroughly English tastes. Some, indeed, trench even upon the floor of the "Nursery;" for at Niblo's Garden, New York, and in one of their finest theatres, Blue Beard some time since was drawing crowded audiences—a Mr. Nixon, the lessee, having "mounted" this mediæval legend with unusual splendour. The number of ladies who thronged to this spectacular exhibition is very great—a fact for which it is not easy to account, seeing that the hero is one of the least sufferable of domestic tyrants. Let us, however, charitably attribute their curiosity to pity for his victims. At the theatre called after, and belonging to, Miss Laura Keene, a higher quality of dramatic performance has been the staple—resembling in some sort that of our own Adelphi. The recent season was exceedingly successful. The name of Wallack revives many associations with the dramatic past of London; but the old English favourite has become thoroughly Americanised as the proprietor of the popular theatre under his name in New York—a theatre in which there is said to exist a wonderful perfection of mise-en-scène. The Bowery is another favourite place of resort, though not so fashionable as those before named, and we can hardly institute a comparison between it and any London establishment. Something between the Folies Dramatiques of Paris and the London Lyceum, will perhaps give the best notion of it. This, as well as the New Bowery, possesses some clever comedians, one of them, a Mrs. Allen, very pretty and accomplished, being the star at the former establishment. But we must not forget that the New Yorkists are proud of their Opera, and that they lavish large sums upon their Academy of Music. For the most part they have not recently been fortunate in assembling first-rate talent at this grand establishment, although the temptation to cross the Atlantic is sufficiently great as far as emolument is concerned. At the present time, one young lady who appears to be almost as much American as Italian, takes the lead, and is decidedly the "Pet of the Public"—we allude to Mlle. Angelica Patti. Our republican friends are not so easily pleased by names as many imagine. Nay, although they extend much toleration to singers, who would here be classed only as fourth-rate, they cannot, and do not, forgot the comparisons they have been enabled to institute with a Lind, a Grisi, an Alboni, or a Bosio (whom, by the way, they were the first to appreciate).

DISCOVERY OF OLD MUSIC.—The Minister of Public Instruction in Modena, having been informed that there existed some pieces of music of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, mice-gnawn and worm-eaten, in the Palatine Library, and that another collection equally valuable was stored in the National Palace, has ordered them to be put together and preserved. M. Angelo Catelani, master of the Cathedral Chapel and conservator of the library, much experienced in bibliography and musical literature, has been recently ordered by the Government to draw up a catalogue of these musical works, among which are many of the famed Stradella, many having been never published. This catalogue, accompanied by biographic, bibliographic, and historic notes, is to be published to the world.—Builder.

HOOD'S JOKES ON HIMSELF. — The very fingers, so aristocratically slender, that now hold the pen, hint plainly at "the ills that flesh is heir to;" my coats have become great-coats, my pantaloons are turned into trousers, and by a worse bargain than Peter Schlemehl's I seem to have retained my shadow and sold my substance. In short, as happens to prematurely old port wine, I am of a bad colour with very little body. I am working nevertheless, with pen and pencil, in spite of the M.D.'s, who ordered me to do nothing; but I found it so hard to do I preferred writing and drawing. Besides which, for all my ill-lookingness, there is one man coming to draw me, another to model me, as if I were fat enough to bust. Luckily, I am capital at sitting just now, and not bad at lying; as to walking or standing, I am as feeble almost as a baby on my pins, which, by the way, have dwindled into needles. — Memoirs of Hood.

THE SUBJECTIVE AND THE OBJECTIVE.—Othello is perhaps the greatest work in the world. From what does it derive its power? From the clouds? From the ocean? From the mountains? Or from love strong as death, and jealousy cruel as the grave? What is it that we go forth to see in "Hamlet?" Is it a reed shaken with the wind? A small celandine? A bed of daffodils? Or is it to contemplate a mighty and wayward mind laid bare before us to the inmost recesses? It may perhaps be doubted whether the lakes and the hills are better fitted for the education of a poet than the dusky streets of a huge capital. Indeed, who is not tired to death with pure description of scenery? Is it not the fact, that external objects never strongly excite our feeling but when they are contemplated in reference to man, as illustrating his destiny, or as influencing his character.—Macaulay.

ANTIQUITY OF CARDS. — In Hindostan, the tradition is, that cards were known in that country at a remote period, — upwards of a thousand years ago; but I have not been able to learn that they are mentioned in any Hindostanee work of an early date; and I am informed, on the authority of the Sanscrit professor at Oxford, that there is no Sanscrit word for playing-cards. This last fact is, however, of but little weight as negative evidence of cards being unknown in Hindostan a thousand years ago; for long before that time, Sanscrit had become obsolete as a vernacular language. In China, if any credit can be attached to the two dictionaries, or rather cyclopædias, of the greatest authority in that country, "dotted cards" were invented in 1120, in the reign of Seun-ho, and began to be common in the reign of Kaoutsang, who ascended the throne in 1131. Cards—carte—are mentioned in an Italian work, said to have been composed by Sandro di Pipozzo, in 1299; but as the MS. is not of an earlier date than 1400, there is good reason for concluding the word to be an interpolation, seeing that in several works in the earlier part of the fourteenth century, which had been cited to show that cards were then known in Europe, it has been discovered that the term cards was an interpolation introduced at a later period by a transcriber. The author of the "Güldin Spil," a work written about the middle of the fifteenth century, and printed at Ansburg, in 1472, says that he had read that the game of cards was first brought into Germany in 1300. No fact, however, confirmatory of the correctness of this account, has been discovered; and the omission of all notice of cards by European authors of the earlier half of the fourteenth century, even when expressly treating of the games in vogue at that period, may be received as good negative evidence of their not being then known as a popular game in Europe: "De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio." Admitting cards to be of eastern invention, it would seem that they first became known in Europe, as a popular game, between 1360 and 1390. Covelluzzo, an Italian chronicler of the fifteenth century, says, that the game was first brought into Viterbo in 1379; in 1393, three packs of cards were painted by Jacquesim Gringonneur, for the amusement of Charles VI. of France; in 1397, the working people of Paris were forbid to play at cards on working days; and, in the same year, card playing was prohibited by the magistrates of Ulm. Such are the principal facts relative to the introduction of cards into Europe. The game appears to have been rapidly spread amongst all classes of people. The manufacture of cards was a regular business in Germany and Italy prior to 1425; the importation of foreign cards into England was prohibited by act of parliament in 1463; and about 1484, cards, as at present, was a common Christmas game.—Chatto's History of Playing Cards.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS AND HIS EAR TRUMPETS.—Sir Martin used to relate, what struck him as a singular fact in reference to the President's deafness — an infirmity which, as is well-known, compelled, or suggested, in his case, the constant use of an ear trumpet. While at breakfast, and during the long-protracted interview which accompanied and followed that meal, the conversation with his visitors was carried on in the ordinary tone, without any assistance from the acoustic tube, or any indication of imperfect hearing on the part of Sir Joshua. During the morning, however, they were not unfrequently interrupted by the entrance of a servant, with a message or some communication that required his master's attention and oral reply; and on each of such occasions the appearance of a third person was the signal for the President to snatch up his trumpet and resume a look of anxious inquiry and uncertain comprehension befitting the real or supposed defect of his auricular powers.—Life of Sir Martin Archer Shee.

A POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION.—Abernethy once said to a rich but dirty patient, who consulted him about an eruption, "Let your servant bring to you three or four pails of water and put it into a washtub; take off your clothes, get into it, and rub yourself well with soap and a rough towel, and you'll recover." "This advice seems very much like telling me to wash myself," said the patient. "Well," said Abernethy, "it may be open to such a construction."

MACAULAY AND MRS. BEECHER STOWE. — Nothwithstanding Macaulay's reputation for conversational power, he appears to have uttered few bon mots, to have made few conversational points which are repeated and remembered. One of the very few good stories current of him is the following: It is said that he met Mrs. Beecher Stowe at Sir Charles Trevelyan's, and rallied her on her admiration of Shakspeare. "Which of his characters do you like the best?" said he. "Desdemona," said the lady. "Ah, of course," was the reply, "for she was the only one who ran after a black man."—Once a Week.

Advertisements.

BOOSEY'S
MUSICAL CABINET

A NEW SERIES OF

SHILLING BOOKS,

COMPRISING

STANDARD AND POPULAR PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Each Book contains from Forty to Fifty pages of Music, printed on excellent paper, Demy Quarto.

No. 1.	Twenty Songs by Mendelssohn	1s.
„ 2.	Twelve Songs by Balfe	1s.
„ 3.	Fourteen Songs by Verdi	1s.
„ 4.	Twenty Songs of the Christy Minstrels	1s.
„ 5.	Fifty Waltzes	1s.
„ 6.	Twelve Sets of Quadrilles	1s.
„ 7.	Fifty Polkas and Galops	1s.
„ 8.	Twenty-five Operatic Gems by Verdi, for Piano	1s.

All the Songs have Pianoforte Accompaniments and English Words throughout under the Music.

The Polkas and Galops are published with their Trios and Second Parts complete.

TO THE TRADE,

Prospectuses, Specimen Pages, and Show Boards may be had on application to BOOSEY and SONS, 28 Holles Street.

EVANS'S

ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

MAY BE HAD IN EVERY POSSIBLE VARIETY,

WITH GERMAN PEDAL REEDS (TWO OCTAVES AND A THIRD),

WITH AND WITHOUT PERCUSSION ACTION,

AND

WITH SINGLE AND DOUBLE ROWS OF KEYS,

At prices from 10 to 140 Guineas.

Also with a self-acting Wind Apparatus.

THE HARMONIUM AT TEN GUINEAS

Possesses the same superior tone and touch that characterise all EVANS'S English Harmoniums, and is admirably suited for a Chapel or School-Room. It is in a handsome solid French-polished Oak case.

THE HARMONIUM AT SIXTY-FIVE GUINEAS

With Double Row of Keys, is the most perfect instrument ever manufactured. The demand for this Harmonium being so great, orders should be always sent in good time to prevent disappointment.

Full particulars of EVANS'S English Harmoniums may be had of BOOSEY and SONS, Holles Street, London.

BOOSEY & SONS' SHILLING MUSIC.

ELEMENTARY WORKS.

Boosey's Shilling Pianoforte Tutor. Founded on the best Works extant, and including the Theory of Music, and a large variety of Exercises, Lessons, and Studies. 36 pages.

Czerny's 50 Best Exercises. Selected from the 101. 24 pages. 1s.

Czerny's Etude de la Velocite. In 3 Books, 1s. each; or complete, 2s. 6d.

Czerny's 101 Exercises. In 2 Books, 1s. each, or complete, 2s.

Herz's Exercises and Scales. 1s.

Bertini's Celebrated Studies. Op. 29, in 2 Books, 1s. each.

Boosey's 100 Exercises, Studies, and Extracts, for the VIOLIN. Selected from the Works of the Great Masters. 1s.

Boosey's Shilling Violin Tutor. An entirely new system. Edited by George Case. 24 pages.

Boosey's Shilling Flute Tutor. Edited by Clinton and Pratten. 24 pages.

Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies for the Flute. Selected from the Works of the great Flute Composers. Edited by R. S. Pratten. 1s.

Boosey's Shilling Cornopean Tutor. Edited by Stanton Jones, and including selections from the Works of Caussinus, Forestier, and Carnaud. 24 pages.

Boosey's Shilling Concertina Tutor. Edited by George Case. 28 pages.

Boosey's Shilling Harmonium Tutor. 24 pages, large size.

Boosey's Shilling Singing Method. Containing Exercises and Solfeggi, by Balfe, Rossini, Vaccaj, Bordogni, Crescentini, &c. 24 pages.

Rode's 25 Caprices or Studies for the Violin. 1s. 6d.

Fiorillo's 36 Caprices or Studies for the Violin. 1s. 6d.

Kreutzer's 40 Studies or Caprices for the Violin. 1s. 6d.

BOOKS OF TUNES.

VIOLIN.

De Beriot's 7 Airs for the Violin with Variations complete. 1s.

Boosey's 100 German Waltzes by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Dances. Second Series. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Dances. First Series. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Reels, Country and other Dances. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Ballads for the Violin. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for the Violin. 1s.

Boosey's 10 Standard Overtures for the Violin. 1s.

GERMAN CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Dances and Songs for the German Concertina. 1s.

CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Dances for the Concertina. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Melodies for the Concertina. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Sacred Melodies for the Concertina. 1s.

FLUTE.

Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for the Flute. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Dances for the Flute. 1s.

CORNET-A-PISTONS.

Boosey's 100 Dances for the Cornet-a-Pistons. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for the Cornet-a-Pistons. 1s.

Boosey's 25 Duets for Two Cornets-a-Pistons. 1s.

Boosey's Complete Operas for the Flute. Price 1s. each.
1. Les Huguenots—2. Robert le Diable—3. Masaniello—4. Ernani—5. Rigoletto—6. Puritani—7. Sonnambula—8. Norma—9. Lucia—10. Lucresia—11. Il Trovatore—12. Don Juan.

Boosey's Complete Operas for the Violin. Price 1s. each.
1. La Sonnambula, Bellini—2. Lucresia Borgia, Donizetti—3. Norma, Bellini—4. Elisire d'Amore, Donizetti—5. Lucia di Lammermoor, Donizetti—6. Ernani, Verdi—7. Masaniello, Auber—8. Don Pasquale, Donizetti—9. I Puritani, Bellini—10. Les Huguenots, Meyerbeer—11. Il Barbiere, Rossini—12. Don Juan, Mozart—13. Il Trovatore, Verdi—14. The Bohemian Girl, Balfe—15. La Traviata, Verdi—16. Rigoletto, Verdi—17. Maritana, Wallace—18. Le Prophète, Meyerbeer—19. La Fille du Régiment, Donizetti—20. Luisa Miller, Verdi—21. Martha, Flotow—22. Satanella—23. Dinorah.

Boosey's Violin Classics.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, September 1, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—30s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 36 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1860 PRICE {4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped}

ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC.—The Michaelmas Term commences on Monday, September 17th, 1860. Candidates for admission must attend at the Institution for Examination by the Board of Professors, on Saturday, the 15th inst., at One o'clock.

By Order of the Committee of Management,
J. GIMSON, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
1 Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, September 5, 1860.

MAD. LAURA BAXTER begs to announce that she will give a SERIES of PERFORMANCES of SACRED and MISCELLANEOUS VOCAL MUSIC during the ensuing Season. Mad. LAURA BAXTER will be assisted by eminent artists, and also by her Amateur and Professional Pupils. Communications to be addressed to Mad. LAURA BAXTER, at her Residence, 155 Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she will remain in Town for the Winter.—All letters for Town and Country Engagements, Oratorios, &c., to be addressed 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

THE ARION (Eight-Part Choir).—Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.—The Members are informed that the next Meeting will take place at 13 Berners Street, on Thursday, October 11th, at 8 o'clock precisely.—Prospectuses of the Society may be obtained on application to the Conductor,

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—SOCIETY of BRITISH MUSICIANS.—The Committee have the gratification to announce that the valuable Library has miraculously escaped destruction by the late Fire, and will be Re-opened to the Members and Associates as soon as arrangements can be made, of which due notice will be given.

September 3, 1860. W. W. GRIGG, Secretary, Committee Room No. 4.

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES VOCAL UNION, consisting of the following Artistes—Miss AMELIA HILL, Mrs. JOHN HAYWARD, Mr. ROBERT MASON, Mr. W. T. BRIGGS. Conductor, Mr. W. C. STOCKLEY, may be Engaged for Oratorios or Miscellaneous Concerts, with or without Solo or Orchestral Instrumentalists.—Applications for Terms, &c. to be made to the Secretary, Mr. W. T. BRIGGS, Cathedral Choir, Worcester; or to Mr. W. C. STOCKLEY, 120 Moseley Road, Birmingham.

AS MORNING GOVERNESS, at Bayswater or Kensington.—A Lady, who has great pleasure and much facility in teaching, wishes a RE-ENGAGEMENT as DAILY GOVERNESS, in consequence of the family she has hitherto instructed being about to leave England. N.B.—A satisfactory testimonial can be obtained from the lady whose family she has instructed for the last twelve months.—Apply by letter, post paid, to L. C., care of Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

MUSICAL EDUCATION.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, of good education, and address, who can command a premium of £100, may be received for Five Years into a first-class Musical Instrument Establishment, of thirty years' standing, in the West of England. He would be instructed in the Organ, Pianoforte, and Singing, and a Salary would be given in the latter three years.—Apply to S., care of Messrs. Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London.

MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, an ASSISTANT of good address, who thoroughly understands the business.—Apply by letter to Mr. James Russell, 125 High Street, Oxford.

MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, an ASSISTANT for the Country, of good address and experience in the above trade. Liberal salary.—Apply, by letter only, to A. B., Messrs. Cramer's, 201 Regent Street.

NOTICE to the TRADE.—The BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS' AMERICAN MELODIES are COPYRIGHT, and can only be obtained of the Publishers, Messrs. Hopwood and Crew, 42 New Bond Street, London, W. The Second Edition of "I'd choose to be a Daisy" is now ready. The Buckley's Serenaders will make their first appearance in London early in October. Full particulars will be duly announced.

A TUNER, who understands Repairing, is desirous of a SITUATION in Town or Country.—Address A. Z., 9 Cheyne Row, Chelsea, S.W.

EASTERN OPERA HOUSE—PAVILION THEATRE, Whitechapel Road. Sole Lessee, Mr. JOHN DOUGLAS. Entirely redecorated and reconstructed. Open every Evening, with an English and Italian Opera Company. First-class artistes. Signors GIULETTI, ONORATI, RULETTI, MAINETTI, SALVI, and MORESO. Mdmes. LANCIA, VERONI, ZETLAND, &c., Miss ANNIE LENO, Messrs. AUGUSTUS BRAHAM, LESLIE, W. M. PARKINSON, EMANUEL ROSENTHAL, OLIVER SUMMERS, R. MORROW, J. W. MORGAN, EVELYN, &c. Band and Chorus, 100 performers. On Saturday, September 8, Monday, September 10, and following Evenings, to commence at a quarter-past Seven, with the Opera FRA DIAVOLO, in English, supported by Messrs. A. BRAHAM, W. M. PARKINSON, E. ROSENTHAL, O. SUMMERS, Mad. LANCIA, Miss ANNIE LENO and the Entire Company. On Tuesday and Friday (ITALIAN NIGHTS). To commence with the Opera, on Tuesday, LA TRAVIATA; and on Friday, LUCREZIA BORGIA, by the Italian artistes. To conclude every evening with a Musical Burletta.

MEYERBEER'S GRAND MARCH for the SCHILLER FESTIVAL, performed at the Floral Hall and Crystal Palace Concerts, as Solo or Duet for Pianoforte.—Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

"GOOD NIGHT," by I. LIEBICH. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich (forming No. 2 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte, by the above author), is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," by R. ANDREWS. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where R. ANDREWS'S transcription for the Pianoforte of "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR" (Reichardt) may be obtained, price 2s.

NEW SONGS by BALFE.—"I LOVE YOU," sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES with such immense success at Mr. Martin's (Exeter Hall), Mr. Lindsay Sloper's, and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts (St. James's Hall), and at Mr. Balfe's benefit concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens before 10,000 persons, 2s.; as well as Balfe's two charming Ballads, "Oh! take me to they heart again," 2s., sung by Miss KATE RANO (mezzo soprano) at Mad. de Vaucheran's Concert; and "I'm not in love, remember," 2s. 6d., sung by Mlle. SEDLATZEK at the fashionable Concerts at Campden House, are published by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By EMILE BERGER. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, arranged for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By I. LIEBICH. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich, is now published, price 2s. (forming No. 1 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte by the above author), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"I NEVER KNEW HOW DEAR THOU WERT." New Song, by H. R. MULLEY, composed expressly for and sung by Miss LASCELLES (the Poetry by CATHERINE WARFIELD) is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

BRASS BANDS.—BOOSEY'S QUICK-STEP JOURNAL contains Quick Steps, Troops, Marches, &c., printed in large type on small paper for pasting on Cards. Each Number contains Four Popular Marches, price 7s. for Large Band, and 4s. for Small Band.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S BRASS-BAND JOURNAL, published every Month. 100 Numbers are published, containing Grand Selections from all the best Operas, Quick Steps, Polkas, Quadrilles, Waltzes, &c., arranged for Large Brass Band, 7s. each, and for Small Band, 4s. each. A very liberal allowance to the profession. List of contents gratis.—Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Critical and Biographical Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or handsomely bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.—The Athenæum of [illegible] says: "This is a very handsome publication. The price is cheap, the page clear, and the type is good. A careful preface by Mr. Davison serves as Overture to the Mazurkas, and, as far as criticism and analysis go, is competent and well reasoned out."

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

NEWSPAPER

An ACCOUNT of the TONIC SOL-FA METHOD of TEACHING to SING.

By JOHN CURWEN.

With a corrected list of publications, and testimonies to the usefulness of the method. with a number of Examples and Illustrations. Four copies for One Penny.

GRAMMAR of VOCAL MUSIC on the TONIC SOL-FA METHOD.

By JOHN CURWEN.

This method seeks to cultivate the voice, ear, and understanding in connection with the real nature of music itself. Price 2s. 6d.

The STANDARD COURSE of LESSONS on the TONIC SOL-FA METHOD.

By JOHN CURWEN.

A simple and practical development of the method, for pupils as well as teachers; so written that persons accustomed to the Established Notation can easily understand it, and accompanied by courses of Exercises in the Old as well as in the New Notation. Price 1s. 6d.

The TONIC SOL-FA REPORTER and MAGAZINE of VOCAL MUSIC for the PEOPLE.

In 90 Penny Numbers, or in 3 volumes, each of 24 numbers, 2s. each. The current monthly Reporter (price 1d.) contains, besides 8 pages of music, 16 pages of information and intelligence. Its circulation approaches 10,000 copies a month.

TONIC SOL-FA METHOD.

For information in reference to the locality of Classes or Teachers, apply to Mr WILLIAM THODEY, Richmond House, Plaistow, London, E.

CLASSICS of VOCAL MUSIC in the TONIC SOL-FA NOTATION.

	s.	d.
ROMBERG'S SONG OF THE BELL	0	9
MENDELSSOHN'S "AS THE HART PANTS"	0	6
HAYDN'S "SPRING"	0	6
HANDEL'S "MESSIAH"	1	6
HAYDN'S "CREATION"	1	6
BACH'S MOTETT, No. V.	0	6
HANDEL'S "ISRAEL IN EGYPT"	1	6
HANDEL'S "DETTINGEN TE DEUM"	0	6

The CHILD'S OWN HYMN-BOOK,

Edited by JOHN CURWEN,

Contains 110 pieces suitable for Sunday School Anniversaries. The increasing popularity of this work is shown in the sale of 240,000 copies in the last year. Price 1d.; or, in cloth, 2d. For wholesale prices, apply to the Publishers as below.

The CHILD'S OWN TUNE-BOOK.

Companion to the above. Price 6d.

The SABBATH HYMN and TUNE-BOOK,

Edited by JOHN CURWEN, Harmonies revised by JAMES TURLE, Esq., of Westminster Abbey, presents at every opening a Tune, with six or seven Hymns carefully adapted to that tune, and marked for expression.

77 Tunes and 467 Hymns. Large type.

Edition A, in the Established Notation, price 1s. 6d.
Edition B, in the Tonic Sol-fa Notation, price 1s. 6d.
Edition C, the same as A, with "Congregational Anthems" and "Bible Chants," cloth, turned edges, price 2s.
Edition D, the same as B, with "Congregational Anthems" and "Bible Chants," cloth, turned edges, price 1s. 10d.

London: WARD and CO. 27 Paternoster Row, E.C.

BERTINI'S STUDIES.

EDITED BY CIPRIANI POTTER.

WITH INTRODUCTORY REMARKS ON THE STYLE OF PLAYING.

Part			s.	d.
1. TWENTY-FIVE STUDIES (Introductory to J. B. Cramer's), Op. 29			8	0
In this Edition, and Op. 32 exclusively, are to be found the most recent alterations by the AUTHOR.
2. TWENTY-FIVE PREPARATORY STUDIES (Sequel to Op. 29), Op. 32			9	0
3. EIGHTEEN OCTAVE LESSONS (for both hands), Op. 84			4	0
4. "L'Indispensable," for small hands—TWENTY-FIVE EXERCISES or STUDIES progressively arranged for Young Pupils.		Book 1, Op. 100	4	6
5. Ditto	ditto	Book 2, Op. 100	4	6
6. TWENTY-FIVE CHARACTERISTIC STUDIES,		Book 1, Op. 66	6	0
7. Ditto	ditto	Book 2, Op. 66	6	0
8. Ditto	ditto	Book 3, Op. 66	6	0
9. Ditto	ditto	Book 4, Op. 66	6	0

 The Studies, Op. 66, are dedicated to the Royal Academy of Music of Paris.

London: R. MILLS and SONS, 140 New Bond Street.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON THE VOICE AND SINGING,

Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,

DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,

And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

CHEAP MUSICAL WORKS, published by BOOSEY and SONS, Holles Street, London (all post free):—Rossini's Stabat Mater, for Pianoforte, by Smart, complete, 3s.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass, do. 3s.; Moore's Irish Melodies, for Pianoforte, by Nordmann, 2s. 6d.; Chopin's Mazurkas, for Pianoforte, complete, with Portrait, and Critical and Biographical Introduction by J. W. Davison, 3s.; Mendelssohn's Songs, without Words, complete, with Portrait and Introduction by J. W. Davison, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Meyerbeer's Dinorah, complete, for Pianoforte Solo, 7s. 6d.; the Juvenile Pianoforte Album, 12 pieces, illustrated and bound, 3s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, 100 gems from the newest Operas, for Pianoforte, in cloth, 12s.; Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances, for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky, for Piano, 3s.; Czerny's Etude de la Velocité, 2s. 6d.; Czerny's 101 Exercises, 2s.; Boosey's Part Song Miscellany, 18 Original Compositions, handsomely bound, 5s.; the Harmonium Museum, 100 Sacred and Secular subjects for Harmonium, with Instructions, 7s. 6d.; Engel's Harmonium Operatic Album, 60 Gems for Harmoniums, 7s. 6d.; Christy's Minstrels Album, 24 Songs in One Book, 2s. 6d.; the Verdi Album, 25 Songs, in English and Italian, 4s.; Dinorah, for Voice and Piano, complete, 12s.

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 5s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

Reviews.

SOME pieces signed by an unfamiliar name—Anton Rée—have sufficient cleverness combined with musical feeling to atone in a great measure for their want of originality, amid other shortcomings. Published at Kiöbenhavn (Copenhagen), we are unable to explain in what manner they found their way into the fish-pond we have recently begun to explore. At the same time, minnows though they be, we are glad to look at them. The least pretending, though not the least pretty, are three dance pieces (Op. 11)—"Ecossaise," "Polska," and "Bolero." Of these the most spirited and characteristic is the "Bolero." The "Ecossaise" has not a vestige of Scottish character; but the "Polska" (the name of a Swedish National dance in three-four measure—not a bit like its near namesake, the Polka) is quaint and charming. "Deux Morceaux de Piano" (Op. 10) though infinitely more pretending than the foregoing, are not so satisfactory. "La Plainte" is an andante; "La Joie" is an allegro; both "Plainte" and "Joie" consisting of a sort of hash of Sterndale Bennett, the latter seasoned here and there with sauce à la Dussek. It is difficult to describe these pieces; but in looking them over, one can hardly get rid of the feeling that something of Sterndale Bennett is going on not exactly as it should, that is, not exactly as Sterndale Bennett would have written it. There is a hint here of his Allegro Grazioso in A major; a hint there of one of his three romances (the last, in G minor); a hint elsewhere of some other piece from the same graceful pen. The exquisite finish which declares the Bennett-touch, however, is not in the touch of M. Rée—who, but that he publishes at "Kiöbenhavn," might have signed his name Rae, or Rea, or Ray, or Wray, or (for a trifle) Ra. "Rée" though he be, he is well acquainted with our own Sterndale; and also has a sly hankering for Dussek's Elegy (Op. 61—on Prince Ferdinand), the last movement of which—with the famous syncopations—he has unblushingly parodied in page 10 (La Joie). "Unblushingly," we have said; nay—terrifically. A set of Cadences for Mozart's great pianoforte concerto in D minor—three in number—might have elicited unqualified praise as improvisations, or extempore productions; but (we submit it with deference) were scarcely worth publishing. The first (for the first movement) begins with a sort of parody of the "freakish" passage that runs through the finale of Beethoven's pianoforte sonata in F sharp major. In another place a fragment of Mozart's second subject is forced into wedlock with the accompaniment to a chorus in Mendelssohn's St. Paul (in E flat). Decidedly Herr (Mons.?—Gospadin?—Mynheer?) Rée is not original. Cadence No. 2—for the same movement—has some bold (if not always exemplary) strokes, and is more to our liking than Cadence No. 1; the hint at another "freakish" passage in the slow movement of Mozart's own symphony in E flat being less open to criticism than the parody of Beethoven already cited. Cadence No. 3 (for the last movement of the concerto) is by much the weakest of the set, and contains, moreover (page 8), an attempt at canon on the fifth above, in which the keys of D minor and A minor are so clumsily alternated as to produce an effect infinitely more disagreeable than musical.

"Une petite Fleur," for the pianoforte, by Charles Lüders, Op. 48 (Chappell and Co.), could hardly have been more fitly designated. A little flower it is, and no mistake. Moreover (an evident advantage) its fragrance is at the command of the majority of amateurs. Though not by any means difficult, "Une petite Fleur" is, on the other hand, not so easy as to be played without some practice; but the trouble will be well bestowed. It is as graceful as it is unpretending, and as well knit as it is graceful, declaring at once the taste that disdains common-place, and the ingenuity that can make what is simple at the same time interesting. Mr. Lüders should manufacture a few more such "little flowers." They are worth the pains.

We had got away from the fish-pond. To return to it, however; here is a minnow, or rather a stickleback, for in one place (page 2—line 3, bar 3, as far as line 4, bar 3) it decidedly sticks, or stickles. This is a setting of a smooth translation (by Mr. W. Anderson) of Beranger's "Oiseau." The melody begins well and progresses well, until the point in question is reached. Here the key of B minor comes very uncomfortably, just after a six, five, three on D sharp has brought us into E major; and the uncomfortableness is not atoned for by an abrupt return to the key in which the song commences (A major)—the melody jumping up to F sharp, while the bass climbs from D to E, as if to demonstrate that a progression of consecutive fifths was not the most disagreeable in the harmonist's index expurgatorium.

"The Bay of Dublin Quadrilles"—by Wellington Guernsey (Brewer and Co.)—represent a whole globe full of glittering minnows. The view of the famous Bay itself (from Kingstown Quarries) which adorns the title-page is alone an attraction, and calculated to raise a vision of herrings, or conjure up an exposition of mackerel. But Mr. Wellington Guernsey's fish, though lively and tempting, are not of larger dimensions than properly appertains to the minnow tribe. On the other hand, all of them are extremely pretty and to the purpose. They might be served up to Terpsichore, with the Guernsey sauce, and Terpsichore not be dissatisfied. To be literal—all the figures are as taking as they are Irish, spirited, rhythmical, and (as our ferociously vivacious neighbours say) "dansantes." Mr. Guernsey, in short, could hardly have selected more attractive tunes or have arranged them more "convaniently. Two vigorous and excellent examples of the general treatment may be pointed out in "Kiss me, Lady" and "Dermot."

"Still waters run deepest," words by "Zeila"; "Love's messenger," ditto ditto; "Song of the Survivor," words by the Rev. W. Calvert (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas); are all more or less worthy the well-earned reputation of their composer, M. Francesco Berger, being—though for the most part somewhat too elaborately written—invariably melodious. In the last of the three, however—besides a transition to A flat (the key of the song being G) in the opening symphony, which being made nothing of subsequently, is (to say the least) superfluous—we note a false relation (page 1—line 3, bar 3) between G natural in the first chord (six, three on E) and G sharp in the next (six, five, three on G sharp); further on (page 2—line 2, bar 3), a dissonance, composed of a major ninth, major seventh, and major sixth, on D, most unceremoniously taken, and decidedly objectionable; and still further, one or two other discrepancies which M. Berger might with advantage reconsider. Even the simpler (if not the better) song, "Love's Messenger," might be improved, with less endeavour in the harmony to avoid the beaten track. This over-fastidiousness is indeed M. Berger's besetting sin. He has given way to it less manifestly in the Spohrish ballad, "Still waters run deepest," but even here he may be taxed with one or two questionable backslidings. What, for instance, becomes of the F sharp on the chord of B flat in the second bar of page 2? The terrible dissonance that immediately follows (B flat, C, E flat and D—on E flat) by no means accounts for it.

We hoped we had caught some trout!

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Sept. 6, 1860.

THE long-announced comic opera in one act, Le Docteur Mirobolan, has at last become palpable to the sense; and after the gloom of the long dreary wet summer, brings a welcome occasion for a little wholesome laughter and enjoyment. This merry little production is founded on Crispin Medecin, by Hauteroche, a writer who flourished in the last century, the date of its first appearance being 1764. It is needless to describe the plot, which savours of the broadest farce, and which, in the old piece, is treated with the license peculiar to the stage of that time. Much of the fun trenches on the delicate ground which Molière almost exhausted in Le Malade Imaginaire, and one of the principal scenes is that in which Crispin is laid out on a table in the place of a hanged criminal whom the Docteur Mirobolan is about to dissect. The authors of the opera, MM. Cormon and Trianon, have, however, dexterously softened whatever was too excessive in this species of humour, while retaining enough of the pith and pleasantry of the original work to engender the heartiest mirth without offence to the comparative squeamishness of modern audiences. The music, by M. Eugène Gautier, is entitled to a full share of the success which the piece obtained. It is extremely dramatic, and the resources of the orchestra have been well employed by the composer. Among the more successful morceaux were a lively quintet, a comic duo between Conderc and Mlle. Lemercier, and a pretty little song by Conderc, who plays the Docteur Mirobolan admirably, as well he may, for the part is exactly fitted to him. Mlle. Lemercier also showed herself an actress worthy of the Théâtre Français, and might vie with the best soubrettes that have appeared in our day.

At the Grand Opéra Le Prophète is announced for Saturday, when Mad. Tedesco will sing the part of Fides. The performance is to be for the benefit of the pension fund of that theatre. Immediately afterwards, Mad. Tedesco and M. Niemann will place themselves at the disposal of M. Wagner for the rehearsals of Tännhauser. M. Obin, the excellent bass singer who lately distinguished himself in the part of Assur in Semiramis, is re-engaged for the ensuing season. Apropos of Semiramis, an edition of this opera is about to be published by the publishers of Le Menestrel in a very grand and luxurious form. It is to be adorned with two portraits of Rossini, one taken in 1820, the date of the production of Semiramide, by the miniature painter Mœyer; the other from a recent photograph by Numa Blanc. It is to be further illustrated by drawings executed by M. Belin, representing the principal scenes of the opera. If the material part of the work be on a level with this magnificence the result will no doubt be a very valuable discovery.

The new opera at the Opéra Comique, which is announced as forthcoming under the title of Le Roi Barkouf, is the same which was spoken of under the provincial title of La Revolte dans l'Inde. It is by MM. Scribe and Offenbach.

I was extremely amused the other day by a paragraph in a French musical journal, of which, that you may share my enjoyment, I give you the exact translation:—"The impulse given by M. Delaporte to choral music, and the recent visit of the Orpheonists to London, are bearing their fruits. Two Choral Societies are in full progress towards organisation. Is not this want of information and conceit incredible? Is it wonderful that a nation which can thus morally shut itself within an impenetrable Chinese wall, beyond which all is in its idea barbarian—is it wonderful that such a nation should be despot-ridden, as it always was and always will be? In the same paper, however, a little justice is done to this country in the letter of a correspondent from London, who says:—"The English nation is perhaps the only one in the universe which does not think itself the greatest musical nation, whence it follows that it possesses at the present time the best music in the world."—meaning the best musical performances. The writer, however, goes on after this to brag about his own countrymen, and how they have carried the palm in everything during the late expired season, which is simply not true, but he is obliged to bolster up his assertion by claiming a whole list of people as French who are English, Belgian, Italian, &c.

Some of the Italian papers have been amusing themselves with murdering Vieuxtemps at Stockholm by the hand of an assassin. These are the same bravos, no doubt, who aimed a deadly blow at poor Rubinstein last year, but did their work so badly that his mangled remains have been writing an opera for the court of Vienna. Why did not the bunglers finish him? As to the amiable Vieuxtemps, so scatheless has he escaped the assassin's dagger, that he has been, as I told you some weeks since, playing at Baden and at Hombourg, and was seen quite recently in Paris with not the slightest indication of the murderous attack upon him at Stockholm. The coward murderous is the most pitiful of the breed, and argues a terrible dearth of the imaginative faculty in the authors of his existence. I don't know whether the late announcement of another aristocratic marriage with an artiste is to be ranked with this sort of poultry—it is that of Mlle. Nathalie Eschborn with Prince Ernest of Wurtemburg. It is gravely stated in the papers here, but I wash my hands of all responsibility in regard to its truth.

From Brussels I am informed that the Belgian Association of Musical Artists has recently held its eleventh annual meeting, when the report of the secretary, M. Albert Delabane, was read, announcing that the capital of the society had increased from 85,000 fr. (£3,400) to 94,264 fr. (£3,770). The society is composed of ninety-eight members. The municipality of Cambrai have offered for competition the design of a new theatre, to contain from eleven to twelve thousand places within an area fifty-five metres in length by from twenty to twenty-two in breadth. There is evidently some error here in the number of seats.

The diapason reform proceeds. M. Calzado, the manager of the Italian Opera in Paris, is about to adopt it. The new instruments required to carry it into effect have been ordered and will be shortly ready. The pitch at this theatre was the highest of any in Paris, and it is said the singers will be grateful for the change. M. Calzado pays the expenses of the reform out of his own pocket. Lille has also adopted the new pitch, and here the city pays half the expenses to which the artists will be put by conforming with the alteration.

THE SAINTONS AT TOULOUSE.

(From the Journal de Toulouse).

Nous avons dit hier, en quelques mots rapides, que la Société chorale de Clémence-Isaure avait donné une sérénade à notre concitoyen M. Sainton. Cet hommage rendu au caractère et au talent d'un artiste de notre ville avait réuni à l'hôtel de l'Europe un grand nombre d'amis de M. Sainton.

Après l'exécution de la Polka de Laurent de Rillé, du Veni Creator de Besozzi, et du Combat naval, dont notre compatriote avait emporté un bon souvenir à la suite du concert qu'il donna ici, il y a dix-huit mois, M. Sainton est venu remercier les Orphéonistes et les féliciter de l'ensemble qu'ils avaient montré dans l'interprétation de ces morceaux. Aux paroles bienveillantes et flatteuses de M. Sainton, Mme. Sainton, née miss Dolby, a voulu joindre ses compliments et témoigner comme elle était sensible à l'attention de l'Orphéon toulousain. Elle ne pouvait le faire d'une manière plus agréable qu'en se faisant entendre aux chanteurs.

Mme. Sainton s'est mise au piano avec une grâce charmante, et elle a chanté plusieurs morceaux anglais et allemands avec un style remarquable et un grand talent. Familiarisée depuis longtemps avec la belle musique d'Haydn et de Haëndel, elle interprète ces célèbres compositeurs avec le plus grand succès.

Elle n'a point ces éclats de voix que l'on entend chaque jour sur nos scènes françaises, ni les notes basses de nos contralti de conservatoire, sons équivoques qui n'ont de chant que le nom. Mme. Sainton-Dolby possède un organe exceptionnel, un contralto, comme on en trouvait à l'époque où Rossini écrivait pour ce genre de voix, d'une bonne étendue et descendant sans le moindre effort aux notes les plus graves. Elle chante avec art, avec expression, avec âme. Elle nuance chaque phrase; chaque note a une intention particulière et quelque morceau qu'elle interprète, Mme. Sainton va droit au cœur.

Nous lui avons entendu chanter plusieurs airs de Haydn, de Haëndel, des chansons populaires de Londres, deux mélodies composées expressly pour elle par Luders et Randegger, et à chacun de ces morceaux elle trouve le moyen d'intéresser l'auditeur; on est parfois saisi d'une douce émotion par la manière heureuse dont elle rend les plus simples idées. Elle cesse de chanter, on l'écoute encore.

On reproche à la nation anglaise un extérieur froid et compassé; on prétend que l'Angleterre ne produit pas de bons chanteurs; Mme. Sainton-Dolby est une preuve évidente du contraire: et si les Sociétés philharmoniques de Londres ont des éléments, nous ne dirons pas pareils, parce qu'on trouve rarement une organisation riche et complète comme celle de Mme. Sainton, mais des éléments que puisse seconder un si beau talent, nous comprenons l'effet que produit chez le peuple anglais les réunions musicales, si vantées, et nous regretterons de n'avoir pu connaître plus tôt une grande artiste qui unit à un si beau talent la grâce et l'affabilité les plus exquises.

PAUL DE LABURTHE.

FLORAL HALL.

THE concerts under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon had, in less than a week after their institution, taken so firm a hold of the public that their early approaching termination was a matter to be regretted, not alone by the speculator, but also by the lovers of music who, at the actual season of the year, are afforded so few opportunities in this metropolis of enjoying their favourite recreation. Since our last notice the Mendelssohn selection has been repeated, the programme (with one unimportant exception) being identical with that which conferred such unqualified satisfaction on this day fortnight. A still bolder step—that of presenting Handel's Messiah (the whole oratorio—allowing for those slight curtailments in the last part rendered conventional by Exeter Hall)—was followed on Friday week by a success which our neighbours "d'outre manche" might reasonably style "éclatant." The solo singers were Miss Parepa, Miss Augusta Thomson, and Mad. Laura Baxter, Messrs. Wilbye Cooper and Lewis Thomas—all artists of eminent merit, and for the most part thoroughly versed in the music of Handel. The performance of this immortal masterpiece, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Mellon—who conducts an oratorio just as well as he does an opera, a symphony, an overture, or a concerto—literally enchanted an audience estimated at between 4,000 and 5,000 in number. So much for "unmusical London," at the non-musical period of the year. In any other city of the world, under the circumstances, there would, in all probability, not have been found a dozen persons to support such an undertaking.

But the two "Mendelssohn nights," added to the "Messiah night," only led to further enterprise in the same praiseworthy direction. Mr. Mellon doubtless had occasion to note that the "education" given by the late M. Jullien to the "masses" was too sound and general to be affected, in a prejudicial sense, even by the lamented death of the musician who was first to emulate the "schoolmaster abroad" of Lord Brougham. A Mozart selection was provided on Tuesday evening, a selection from Haydn's Creation was the chief attraction on Wednesday, while Beethoven's colossal "No. 9" (the Choral Symphony) was given on Thursday, and Mendelssohn's Elijah (entire) on Friday. The production of this last great work (worthy pendant to the Handel chef d'œuvre) was fully warranted by the reception accorded to The Messiah.

Meanwhile the concert on Monday night, which was attended by an immense concourse, was extremely interesting, inasmuch as the first part was wholly taken up with compositions by native musicians. Among these, such ephemeral pieces as Mr. Kingsbury's ballad of "The Sailor's Wife" (sung by Miss Leffler); Mr. Callcott's Artists' Corps Polka (by the band); Mr. Mellon's Isabella Waltz (ditto); the cavatina, "O bright were my visions," from Mr. Mellon's Victorine (encored—singer, Miss Parepa); Mr. Hatton's part-song, "Ah! could I with fancy stray" (by the chorus); Mr. Mellon's new volunteer song, "Every man join heart and soul" (Mr. Wilbye Cooper); and Dr. Arne's "Soldier Tired," marvellously executed, as usual, by Mr. Thomas Harper—the most admirable trumpet player in Europe, who has not merely succeeded, but surpassed his justly eminent father (also encored)—chiefly represented our English composers in the light of unpretending, but, at the same time, none the less acceptable, dilettanti. On the other hand, the trio from Mr. John Barnett's Mountain Sylph (Miss Parepa, Messrs. Wilbye Cooper and Thomas), together with that unexcelled choral glee of Bishop, "The Chough and Crow" (solos by Miss Parepa, Miss Leffler, and Mr. Thomas), consecrated by time, are now universally admitted as "classical." Nevertheless, the most striking features of the programme were Mr. Alfred Mellon's own brilliant and admirably instrumented concert-overture, entitled Romulus (literally, as the French say, enlevée by the orchestra); a pompous and thoroughly dramatic march, from Mr. Charles Horsley's new oratorio of Gideon (which, to the shame of our London societies, Glasgow had the credit of producing); and the better-known cantata of Mr. Howard Glover, entitled Tam o'Shanter. The last-named (with which Mr. Mellon took such pains as became him when the work of a distinguished brother musician was committed to his charge) was capitally executed, and brought the first part of the concert to a close with the utmost éclat. Mr. Wilbye Cooper's performance of the solo part was in all respects first-rate, the graphic text of Burns, and the stirring and characteristic music to which it has been set by Mr. Glover, being equally well delivered. No composition of recent times has more legitimately attained popularity than Tam o'Shanter. The warmest lover of the poetry of Burns, and especially of this his admitted masterpiece, could hardly have wished to see Tam o'Shanter wedded to music more inspiriting. Every scene, every incident, every shade of expression is felicitously caught and illustrated by the English composer, who—it may be said without exaggeration—has translated the romantic and inimitable Scottish legend into music so graphic and congenial, that it would be difficult hereafter to fancy it associated with any other. Tam o'Shanter was received with the warmth of appreciation that has never yet failed to attend its adequate performance since first produced (under M. Berlioz) at the New Philharmonic Concerts.

On Friday the 31st ult. (writes an occasional contributor) was assembled one of the largest audiences that ever listened to the Messiah. That an announcement of the work that has been and is more frequently performed than any other extant, attracted so many auditors, must be attributed, over and above the work itself, to the reputation of the Royal Italian Opera Chorus, and to the important fact that it was Mr. Alfred Mellon's first appearance as an oratorio conductor in London. That gentleman, the versatility of whose talent is truly remarkable, brought the band and choir through with triumphant success. The choruses might have been more effective in the remoter parts of the Hall if the choir had been more numerous; but the capability of each member of the body was proved beyond dispute. Miss Parepa's execution of "Rejoice greatly" claims our suffrages for very brilliant delivery. Miss Augusta Thomson's singing is exactly suited in the air "How beautiful," which she rendered with very correct intonation. Mad. Laura Baxter and Miss Leffler divided the contralto music, the first lady achieving a well-merited success in "He was despised" (encored); and the latter singing "But who may abide" in a commendably correct style. Mr. Wilbye Cooper's exertions to do justice to the arduous tenor music did not pass unnoticed; the plaudits bestowed on him were thoroughly deserved. Mr. Lewis Thomas (like his contemporary and senior, Mr. Weiss) holds the enviable position of a bass among a shoal of baritones. His solid manner, and the full round tone which increases in volume as he descends into the abyss below the stave, are all his own. He was enthusiastically applauded in "Why do the nations?" his delivery of the triplet passages being wonderfully exact, and the ponderosity of tone preserved throughout. The audience enjoyed the performance as if the work had never before been produced. Indeed the applause was occasionally more boisterous than is advisable at a sacred concert.

(From the Illustrated Times.)

A QUANTITY of new dance music has been produced at the Floral Hall, much of which has a military character, or at least military titles. Thus, there is a lively "Rifle Galop," by H. Farmer, in which the orchestra have to shout "Hurrah!" (a performance demanding no inconsiderable amount of animal spirits, especially as the said shout is in no way suggested by the music); and a polka, by Callcott, named after the "Artists' Corps," to which valiant company about half of the Covent Garden band belong. Let these admirable instrumentalists fight together as well as they play together — let their execution in the field be anything like what it is in the orchestra, and their enemies will fall before them like one man. "The Artists' Corps Polka" (which we have not heard) was to have been performed for the first time at a semi-military concert given in honour of the volunteer movement and for the special benefit of the band of the said "corps." This company was, we believe, founded by artists of the brush; but the artists of the fiddle and the bow (or "artistes," as most of our contemporaries think fit to call them) seem now to form the majority of its members.

We must not forget that Private Mellon has been wielding the bâton (Field Marshal in the orchestra—Full Private in the Rifles!) over one of his own compositions—a new waltz, named (as all waltzes should be) after a young lady, and not after a ferocious Muscovite republican like Mr. Alexander Herzen. What can there be in republicanism, and, above all, in Russian republicanism, that suggests waltzing? The memory of Colonel Pestal, one of the leaders of the insurrection of 1825, has been more damaged by an unscrupulous London music publisher, who connected his name with a vapid waltz-tune, than by all the sneers and misrepresentations directed against him by Russian absolutists. Prince Galitzin has behaved better to Mr. Herzen, the waltz named after him being, at least, a waltz of some beauty and some character. Now the Prince has given us a quadrille (performed for the first time last week at the Floral Hall) which is founded on Russian melodies, and entitled the "Ogareff," Mr. Ogareff being another republican, also (what is far more important) a poet, and a co-operator of Mr. Herzen in the publication of the Russian journal, of Paternoster Row, known as the Kolokol, or "Bell."

But to return to Private Mellon. His Isabella Waltz, then, is a very charming waltz, and an honour to the young lady after whom it is named. The new cornet-player, too, of Private Mellon's band has brought out a polka which gives the new cornet-player an opportunity of bringing out some difficult and distressingly loud passages. This is called, with some propriety, "The Whirlwind Polka," and when Mr. Levy is playing it we expect every moment that he will blow his own head off.

Finally, we "assisted" one night at the fag end of the performance of a quadrille, in which the music of the last figure appeared to have been twisted out of the magnificent march in the Prophète. One of Handel's oratorios is announced for next week. Let us hope that no attempt will be made to convert any of its choruses into galopades.

As to the vexed question of the Floral Hall's special adaptability for musical performances, we can safely say that it is far superior in that respect to all other glass buildings that we know of—such, for instance, as the Crystal Palace, or the Palais de l'Industrie in Paris. The waves of sonority, however, are not sufficiently compressed by walls of glass, which, moreover, have the disadvantage of letting in a considerable amount of sound—that is to say, noise—from the outside. During the recent tolerably successful imitation of a deluge the clatter on the roof has been like the rattling of small shot, and occasionally like the roll of a score of drums. Such an accompaniment, not having been devised by the composer, nor calculated upon by the conductor, nor in any way taken into account by the singer, is sure to produce a bad effect, especially with an air that commences piano like "Casta diva." There are portions of Norma in which the tattooing of the rain upon the roof would not be quite so much out of place; but it does not (as Mlle. Parepa we are sure will testify) suit "Casta diva" at all.

PROFESSIONAL SINGING IN CHURCHES.

REPLY OF THE CHURCHWARDEN TO THE RIGHT REVEREND THE LORD BISHOP OF RIPON.

MY LORD,—It is with painful feelings of regret I feel bound to reply to your lordship's letter, published in the Leeds Intelligencer of the 11th inst.; also to that of an incumbent, which was also published in the Intelligencer on the 18th inst.

In your lordship's letter you state, "that a professional singer, Miss W., had been engaged to sing select pieces of music during the service. I consider such an announcement as this highly objectionable." I would ask your lordship whether you mean the engagement of Miss W., or the announcement of the pieces she sung as highly objectionable, or both. In either case I beg respectfully to express my dissent from your lordship's views.

This feeling is not mine alone, but also that of many others. We do consider select pieces—as anthems, spiritual songs, &c.—as parts of divine service, and quite as sacred; and when the performances of these sacred pieces draw together an attentive and sober-minded congregation to listen to and hear the Word of God preached, surely your lordship should pause and learn our position before you hastily condemn our proceedings. It may suit the purpose of one or two individuals to cause your lordship to censure us, the churchwardens; notwithstanding which I do not feel, as yet, convinced that we have justly merited your lordship's displeasure.

Your lordship also says, "I delight in good music." If so, how are you to have good music except through the medium of those who make a profession of it? It is usual in cathedrals and parish churches to engage professional singers. I cannot perceive the difference why the constant employment of professional singers should differ from their occasional engagement, as was the case in our church on the Sabbath alluded to. Again, I cannot conceive why the same objection will not apply to the organists of cathedrals and churches, they being chiefly professional men, and engaged in many instances at very high salaries. In either case their services are paid for. Nor can I see any objection to it.

I agree with your lordship that it is desirable that "all singing in churches in which the congregation cannot take part is objectionable." In order to avoid that inconvenience, we stated in our notices, as your lordship will have perceived, what sacred pieces would be sung, and anyone who could or thought proper to join might do so. In doing this we only did what is regularly done in many cathedrals and some parish churches. If, on the other hand, it be your lordship's opinion that all professional singers and players are to be dispensed with, who are to sing the anthems, or sacred songs, during divine service as directed in the Book of Common Prayer? Your lordship will be aware that the anthems in the earliest period of church service consisted usually of a solo, or sacred song, followed by a chorus, in which the congregation might join: the same is generally the case with more modern music. You will also be aware that few, except a professional singer, would attempt to sing a solo.

Perhaps your lordship may say that it is the announcement of some particular singer which is objectionable. If so, may I ask your lordship in what way the announcement of the name of a particular clergyman to preach a sermon differs from that of a singer, when the object in both cases is the soliciting of money from the congregation for a purpose? The object in either case is to attract the attention of the public, and through that medium to procure their charitable donations. I will now go to a statement of circumstances which induced us to appeal to the parishioners and others through the medium of the church service. The district church, with which I am officially connected, not having undergone any repairs for the last 18 years (the warming apparatus erected in 1851 cannot be considered as such), it had suffered greatly from the severity of last and previous winters. The rain had penetrated the roof, and, in the rainy season, the water ran down on both the pulpit and reading-desk, as well as into the pews. The woodwork in the roof was beginning to decay. Matters standing thus, we, the churchwardens, were conscious that if the church could not be repaired it would soon become untenable. The next question was, how were we to raise the money for the repairs? Those who attend the church are nearly all of the labouring class. The great body of the inhabitants are dissenters. Consequently it would be impossible to raise the money by a church rate. Our only alternative, therefore, was to appeal to the generosity of the neighbouring gentry, and I am happy to say that appeal was not made in vain. After exhausting all probable resources near home, we still required a sum of more than £20 to complete the work. Our only feasible plan, which your lordship so much condemns, of raising the money was to enlist the assistance of a deservedly popular clergyman (the Rev. Mr. Stowell), who, together with the curate, should preach sermons in behalf of the object in question, and to engage a portion of the Bradford Parish Church Choir, as well as a Miss W., who had lately been of the choir of Huddersfield Church. This was not done without first consulting the incumbent by me alone; the curate, not being at home at the time, did not and of course could not take part in the matter, though I must state that in soliciting aid from the neighbouring gentry, I should not have been so successful without his assistance. On Thursday, July 9th, I waited on the incumbent at the Parsonage, to lay before him a statement of the monies subscribed, and also explained to him what further sum would be required to complete the repairs necessary to be done. In these repairs there was no ornamental work or "embellishments" contemplated. After some conversation as to the mode of raising the sum further required, we both agreed we had no alternative but to follow former precedents: he suggested the following in addition, that "silver should be charged on all who went into the church." This I could not comply with, so far as the body of the church was concerned. He also stated, that "our own choir will not be sufficient for the occasion:" hence the engagement of the Bradford Parish Church Choir, &c.

The sermons, together with the singing, drew to the church a great number of people, and to quote the words of the Reverend Mr. Stowell, he said he "had never before preached to so large a congregation as had assembled in the church that evening, and never to a more attentive and orderly one." Such being the case, I take the liberty to express a hope that it was "no profanation of a church," and my conviction is that the inhabitants of this township and of the surrounding district know how to appreciate a good sermon as well as good singing. By these means we were put into a position to pay the work-people for their labour, and the church was put into good repair and preservation, forming a strange contrast with that state of dilapidation which the day-schools in connection with the church now present; and in neither of which is there either a teacher or a scholar. Had we not had recourse to the means above stated, our collections would have been very inadequate, as may be surmised from the fact that the collections at our annual sermons have seldom, if ever, exceeded £2. 10s., and very rarely ever have reached that amount.

The incumbent, in his letter to your lordship, states that "so far from countenancing the proceedings, I requested my family not to attend the service." Whether from illness, or from some other cause, best known to himself, his memory seems to be at fault, or his request was not attended to, for four of his family out of six, I have reason to believe, were present at both afternoon and evening service. He also alludes in his letter to "a kindred act in 1852," and deplores the consequences. Notwithstanding which, in June 1853, he sanctions the preaching of two sermons, the engagement of four professional singers, and one amateur. A circular printed on that occasion is in my possession, and that circular was drawn up by the incumbent, although in his letter to your lordship he professes to be so "INTENSELY ADVERSE" to such proceedings. That circular I took as a guide in the arrangement of the course which your lordship so strongly condemns. It may happen that your lordship may charge me with uncharitableness in thus alluding to the part taken by the incumbent at a time when he is suffering from sickness, but your lordship will bear in mind that I am not the aggressive party, I am merely standing in self-defence. You may also say I speak strongly on these matters, I certainly feel so; and were your lordship fully acquainted with the difficulties I have had to contend with, from different sources, for years past, I think your lordship would sympathise with instead of blaming me.

I am, my lord, your most humble and obedient servant,

J. WRIGHT, Churchwarden.

RETORT OF THE BISHOP OF RIPON.

Palace, Ripon, August 23, 1860.

Sir,—I have to acknowledge your letter, which (without either date or address appended to it) has reached me by this morning's post. You state that you feel bound to reply to a letter of mine which was inserted in some of the provincial newspapers on the 11th inst., and also to a letter from an incumbent which appeared at a later date in the same papers.

You have taken upon yourself the responsibility of defending the practice against which I have thought it a duty to record my strong objection.

The practice which I condemn is that of announcing that any professional singer whatever will, at any particular service, sing select pieces of music, for the sake of attracting large numbers of persons to attend church on such an occasion. In the letter which you have addressed to me you defend the practice upon the following grounds:

1. The custom in cathedrals.
2. The requirements in our book of Common Prayer.
3. The ordinary practice of announcing, on special occasions, particular preachers.
4. The difficulties which churchwardens experience in obtaining the funds which are required for the repair of churches, &c.

With respect to "the custom in cathedrals," there is a wide distinction between cathedrals and ordinary parish churches. I, for one, should be very sorry to see the ordinary plain and simple service of our parish churches supplanted by cathedral music; nor do I believe that the great body of English Churchmen would regard with any favour an attempt to assimilate the mode of conducting public worship in ordinary parish churches to that which prevails in cathedrals. But you are mistaken in supposing it is the custom to announce that professional singers will take part in cathedral services. Each cathedral has its own staff of singers, who are trained to the practise of music, and to whom devolves mainly the due performance of the musical portions of the service. I am not aware of any instance in which professional singing has been advertised as an attraction to bring persons to attend cathedral service. It is universally known that cathedral service differs from the ordinary parochial service, and the custom in cathedrals is not the law for parish churches.

(2.) With respect to the "requirements of the Book of Common Prayer," you ask "who are to sing the anthems or sacred songs during divine service as directed in the Book of Common Prayer?" If you will be at the trouble of looking at the Book of Common Prayer, you will find there is no such direction as you appear to imagine.

The services, such as the "Venite exultemus," "Te Deum," &c. &c., are to be "said or sung." There is no law that they are to be sung. With respect to the anthem the rubric specifies the place in the service where, if sung, it is to be introduced; but the terms of the rubric, "in quires and places where they sing here followeth the anthem," distinctly imply that the performance of an anthem is the exception, not the rule.

The experience of the overwhelming majority of the parish churches in the kingdom clearly proves that the requirements of the Book of Common Prayer may be kept without resorting to the practice which you have come forward to defend, of engaging and advertising professional singers to take part and sing select pieces of music during divine service. You are surely aware of churches in your neighbourhood where the musical portions of the service are admirably conducted—where even services and anthems are occasionally introduced—but where it is never the custom to make a parade of professional singing to attract a congregation, or on the plea of meeting the requirements of our Book of Common Prayer.

(3.) You attempt to draw a parallel between the announcement of some eminently gifted singer to perform at a special service, and the ordinary notice that some well-known clergyman will preach the sermon.

The two cases are totally different. The people are invited to attend the ordinance of preaching because it is one of the chief instrumentalities of which it pleases God to make use to save souls. The object of advertising a particular preacher is not to afford an intellectual treat, but to give to greater numbers the opportunity of hearing from one of Christ's ministers the exposition of God's word, in order that their souls may receive spiritual profit. Will you compare this with the advertisement that a particular vocalist will sing on some special occasion, in order that the lovers of music may have the gratification of hearing his, or her, musical talent, and then pay for his entertainment by casting in his offering to swell the so-called charitable collection? Is the Lord's Day the time for musical entertainments? Is the hallowed house of prayer the place for the display of musical talent? or the sacred hours of the Sabbath to be spent in gratifying the appetite and taste for beautiful music?

But (4.) you seem to defend the practice upon the ground of the financial difficulties in which unhappily churchwardens who are zealous in the discharge of their official duties are often placed. I can honestly assure you that I sympathise with you in those difficulties. I regret that, owing in a great measure to the present unsatisfactory state of the Church-rate question, so much difficulty sometimes attends the obtaining requisite funds whether for the repair of the fabric or the maintenance of the services of your church.

But it is a fundamental principle "not to do evil that good may come," nor do I believe that it ever can be necessary to resort to such unworthy means as the hiring and advertising professional singers to perform in our churches, in order to raise the necessary funds to maintain the ordinances of public worship. The practice is in reality indefensible. It is derogatory to the honour of God. It is at variance with the spirit of your Church Service. It is fraught with many evils. Its tendency is to degrade our churches to the level of the concert room; to make persons lose sight of the real ends of public worship, and, in their admiration of musical talent, to forget that we meet in the Lord's House for united prayer, united praise — and in order that our souls may be fed with the wholesome food of God's holy word and sacraments.

When a parish is blest with an active and laborious minister of Christ, in season and out of season, abounding in his Master's work,—preaching to his people both by word and example, and shewing himself "in all things a pattern of good words," I am sanguine enough to believe that such a minister will succeed to rally around him an attached and willing people, ready to uphold to the utmost of their power the due observance of our holy religion. There will be no need in such a case to employ any doubtful measures for creating an interest in behalf of the Church or her services. I am desirous to see these services upheld with the utmost propriety and efficiency. There is not a parish in the diocese in which there may not be found a sufficient number of persons competent to lead congregational singing. I think it important to cultivate the taste for music. We ought to give to God of our best; but it is no gain to the cause of religion, whenever by the introduction of highly artistic music the congregation are deprived of the privilege of joining in the praises of God; or whenever, for the sake of replenishing a churchwarden's exchequer, the season for the celebration of public worship is employed as an occasion for calling together a multitude to have their musical taste gratified by the performance of select pieces of fine music.

I am, Sir, faithfully yours,
R. RUTON.

Mr. Joseph Wright, Churchwarden.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

TERMS { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1860.

THE SONATA, the noblest form that instrumental music can assume, appears to be going out of date. So much the worse for the art. Let the Sonata be once entirely laid aside, as antiquated, and music will rapidly fall from the high place it now occupies as a beautiful and intellectual pursuit. Sonatas continue to be written, it is true; the German and French catalogues of new music, the latter more rarely than the former, and the English still more rarely than the latter, occasionally announce a new sonata, by some unknown composer; but few of the tried and acknowledged writers ever venture on producing, certainly not on publishing, a work of this gravity and importance. A young musician not seldom begins his career with "a grand sonata," with all the four movements unusually long, which, for want of encouragement, he prints at his own expense. Finding that it does not sell, and that, excepting the few he may have presented to his friends, who do not thank him, the fifty or hundred copies originally issued remain a dead weight upon the shelves of his publisher, he abandons all idea of composing a second sonata, and at once sets to work upon capriccios, fantasias, romances, sketches, songs without words, and whatever he may consider the most marketable commodity. If he be ambitious, and a lover of his art, he will not descend to the variations, rondos, sketches à la valse, &c., with which our pianofortes are covered by those who are neither; he follows, however, in the train of his contemporaries, and gives birth to a series of short movements in the capriccio form — that is in no form whatever — which he dignifies by names borrowed from others, or names of his own coinage, having no intelligible connection with the works to which they are applied. Whether from all this farrago of the fancy, anything clear and symmetrical will arise, to induce us to regret the sonata no longer, it is for some commanding genius to prove. Mendelssohn invented a beautiful form, in the Lieder ohne Worte; but he exhausted it himself. To him it was but an exercise of the fancy, an easing of his continually inventive brain from some of the ideas with which it was overstocked, and which he did not find convertible to loftier purposes; but his imitators—for the most part unblessed with one idea in a twelvemonth, destitute of fancy and invention—attempting to emulate him, have only demonstrated their incompetency. Their Lieder ohne Worte are little better than an empty figure of accompaniment, to which a meagre and passionless tune has been made to fit, with infinite and unprofitable labour. So true is this, that the title of Songs without Words—in German, French, or English—affixed to a piece of new music, predisposes us against the author, and takes away all the inclination we might otherwise have felt to look at his work. To Mendelssohn, also, may be traced the endless forms which the capriccio, or caprice, has assumed within the last twenty years. But his imitators—who include, we may almost say, the entire race of modern composers for the piano—independently of the barrenness of their invention, have altogether overlooked that element which in Mendelssohn's smallest efforts is never absent—the symmetry and consequence of form which ally them more or less to the sonata.

The fantasia used to be regarded, among the old writers, as a sort of improvisation, and was an exception, not a rule. But what would Mozart have thought, had he lived now, and found nine works out of every ten devoted to the pianoforte and other instruments, fantasias—long or short—in other words improvisations, without plan or order—unmeaning jumbles of themes, good or bad, which might belong to anything else than that in which they appear, with quite as much or quite as little propriety? Mozart would not have believed his ears. The ingenious development, or working out, of a theme—which was wont to signalise, not merely fantasias, but actual improvisations—he would have sought in vain; much more in vain the elaborate fugue, demonstrating the composer's facility in counterpoint, that lent interest to the fantasias of the elder masters.

Some will have it that Beethoven completely exhausted the sonata. But this is a manifest error. Beethoven rather showed, by the infinite variety he imparted to it, that the sonata was inexhaustible. He was aware of all the latest resources of the art—as may be well supposed, since he had so large a share in their invention; but he could find no better or more convenient field for their development than this particular one, which already existed, and already, if constant use can wear, had been worn threadbare by Mozart and Haydn—to say nothing of Dussek, a composer too often disregarded by superficial writers, in considering the history and progress of the art. But Beethoven came to the sonata with a world of new ideas; in his hands it was as fresh, and vigorous, and young, as when it first issued from the prolific brain of Haydn, who by right of this one invention enjoys the undisputed title of "Father of Instrumental Music."

The numberless and prodigious inspirations of Beethoven still filling the world with new delight and wonder, it was an impossible task for any instrumental writer immediately coming after him to take him as a model, without becoming his slavish imitator. This shows Mendelssohn and Spohr, the two original composers of instrumental music in our day, in a worthier light. What they accomplished, when it is considered how near they were to Beethoven, must be admitted to be extraordinary. In their symphonies, quartets, and other productions of the kind,* while adhering to the plan of Haydn, which cannot be profitably neglected, they revealed new thoughts, new means of development, and entirely new styles. There is not a shadow of resemblance in the writing of either of them to those of Haydn, Mozart, or Beethoven. Spohr, the elder of the two, may be said to have completely fulfilled his mission, while Mendelssohn, the younger, was unhappily cut off in his prime. Happily he lived to complete the oratorio of Elijah, the greatest masterpiece of modern art. Wholly original as are the manners of these great men, they emulated their predecessors—Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven,—in their reverent adherence to the one true form—that of THE SONATA.

IN a general view of the history of the Opera, the central figures would be Gluck and Mozart. Before Gluck's time the operatic art was in its infancy, and since the death of Mozart no operas have been produced equal to that composer's masterpieces. Mozart must have commenced his Idomeneo, the first of his celebrated works, the very year that Gluck retired to Vienna, after giving to the Parisians his Iphigenie en Tauride; but though contemporaries in the strict sense of the word, Gluck and Mozart can scarcely be looked upon as belonging to the same musical epoch. The compositions of the former, however immortal, have at least an antique cast; those of the latter have quite a modern air; and it must appear to the audiences of the present day that far more than twenty-three years separate Orfeo from Don Giovanni, though that is the precise interval that elapsed between the production of the opera by which Gluck, and of that by which Mozart, is best known in this country. Gluck, after a century and a half of opera, so far surpassed all his predecessors that no work by a composer anterior to him is now ever performed. Lulli wrote an Armida, which was followed by Rameau's Armida, which was followed by Gluck's Armida; and Monteverde wrote an Orfeo a hundred and fifty years before Gluck produced the Orfeo which was played only the other night at the Royal Italian Opera. The Orfeo, then, of our existing operatic repertory takes us back through its subject to the earliest of regular Italian operas, and similarly Gluck, through his Armida, appears as the successor of Rameau, who was the successor of Lulli, who usually passes for the founder of the opera in France—a country where it is particularly interesting to trace the progress of that entertainment, inasmuch as it can be observed at one establishment, which has existed continuously for two hundred years, and which, under the title of Académie Royale, Académie Nationale, and Académie Impériale (it has now gone by each of these names twice), has witnessed the production of more operatic masterpieces than any other theatre in any city in the world. To convince the reader of the truth of this latter assertion we need only remind him of the works written for the Académie Royale by Gluck and Piccinni (or Piccini) immediately before the Revolution, and of the Masaniello of Auber, the William Tell of Rossini, and the Robert the Devil of Meyerbeer, given for the first time at the said Académie within sixteen years of the termination of the Napoleonic wars. Neither Naples, nor Milan, nor Prague, nor Vienna, nor Munich, nor Dresden, nor Berlin, has individually seen the birth of so many great operatic works by different masters, though, of course, if judged by the number of great composers to whom they have given birth both Germany and Italy must be ranked infinitely higher than France. Indeed, if we compare France with our own country, we find, it is true, that an opera in the national language was established earlier, and an Italian Opera much earlier there than here; but, on the other hand, the French, until Gluck's time, had never any composers, native or adopted, at all comparable to our Purcell, who produced his King Arthur as far back as 1691.

Lulli is generally said to have introduced opera into France, and, indeed, is represented in a picture, well known to opera-goers, receiving a privilege from the hands of Louis XIV. as a reward and encouragement for his services in that respect. This privilege, however, was neither deserved nor obtained in the manner supposed. Cardinal Mazarin introduced Italian Opera into Paris in 1645, when Lulli was only twelve years of age; and the first French opera, entitled Akébar, Roi de Mogol, words and music by the Abbé Mailly, was brought out the year following in the Episcopal Palace of Carpentras, under the direction of Cardinal Bichi, Urban the Eighth's legate. Clement VII. had already appeared as a librettist, and it is said that Urban VIII. himself recommended the importation of the opera into France; so that the real father of the lyric stage in that country was certainly not a scullion but in all probability a Pope.

The second French opera was La Pastorale en musique, words by Perrin, music by Cambert, which was privately represented at Issy; and the third Pomone, also by Perrin and Cambert, which was publicly performed in Paris. Pomone was the first French opera heard by the Parisian public, and it was to Perrin its author, and not to Lulli, that the patent of the Royal Academy of Music was granted. A privilege for establishing an Academy of Music had been conceded a hundred years before by Charles the Ninth, to Antoine de Baif,—the word "Académie" being used as an equivalent for "Accademia," the Italian for concert. Perrin's license appears to have been a renewal, as to form, of de Baif's, and thus originated the eminently absurd title which the chief operatic theatre of Paris has retained ever since. The Academy of Music is of course an academy in the sense in which the Théâtre Français is a college of declamation, and the Palais Royal Theatre a school of morality; but no one need seek to justify its title because it is known to owe its existence to a confusion of terms.

Six French operas, complete and in five acts, had been performed before Lulli, supported by Mad. de Montespan, succeeded in depriving Perrin of his "privilege," and securing it for himself—at the very moment when Perrin and Cambert were about to bring out their Ariane, of which the representation was stopped. The success of Lulli's intrigue drove Cambert to London, where he was received with much favor by Charles II., and appointed director of the court music, an office which he retained until his death.

* It is scarcely necessary to remind our readers that a symphony is a sonata for the orchestra—a quartet a sonata for four stringed instruments, &c.

Lulli had previously composed music for ballets, and for the songs and interludes of Molière's comedies, but his first regular opera, produced in conjunction with Quinault—being the seventh produced on the French stage, was Cadmus and Hermione (1673).

The life of the fortunate, unscrupulous, but really talented scullion, to whom is falsely attributed the honour of having founded the opera in France, has often been narrated, and for the most part very inaccurately. Every one knows that he arrived from Italy to enter the service of Mad. de Montpensier; some are aware of the offence for which he was degraded by that lady to the post of scullion, and which we can no more mention than we can publish the original of the needlessly elaborate reply attributed to Cambronne at Waterloo*; and a few may have read that it was only through the influence of Mad. de Montespan that he was saved from a shameful and horrible death on the Place de Grève, where Lulli's accomplice was actually burned, and his ashes thrown to the winds. The story of Lulli's obtaining letters of nobility through the excellence of his buffoonery in the part of the Muphti in the Bourgeois Gentilhomme, has often been told. This was in 1670, but once a noble, and director of the Royal Academy of Music, he showed but little disposition to contribute to the diversion of others, even by the exercise of his legitimate art. Not only did he refuse to play the violin, but he would not even have one in his house. To overcome Lulli's repugnance in this respect, Marshal de Gramont hit upon a very ingenious plan. He used to make one of his servants play the violin in Lulli's presence, upon which the highly susceptible musician would snatch the instrument from the varlet's hands, and restore the murdered melody to life and beauty. Then excited by the pleasure of producing music, he forgot all around him, and continued to play to the delight of the marshal.

Lulli must have had sad trouble with his orchestra, for in his time a violinist was looked upon as merely an adjunct to a dancing-master. There was a King of the Fiddles, without whose permission no catgut could be scraped; but in selling his licenses to dancing-masters and the musicians of ball-rooms, the ruler of the bows does not appear to have required any proof of capacity from the purchasers. Even the simple expedient of shifting was unknown to Lulli's violinists, and for years after his death to reach the C above the line was a notable feat. The pit quite understood the difficulty, and when the dreaded démanchement had to be accomplished, would indulge in sarcastic shouts of "gare l'ut! gare l'ut!"

Strange tales are told of the members of Lulli's company. Duménil, the tenor, used to steal jewellery from the soprano and contralto of the troop, and to get intoxicated with the baritone. This eccentric virtuoso is said to have drunk six bottles of champagne every night he performed, and to have improved gradually until about the fifth. Duménil, after one of his voyages to England, which he visited several times, lost his voice. Then, seeing no reason why he should moderate his intemperance at all, he gave himself up unrestrainedly to drinking and died.

Mlle. Desmâtins, the original representative of Armide, was chiefly celebrated for her love of good living, her corpulence, and her bad grammar. She it was who wrote the celebrated letter communicating to a friend the death of her child, "Notre anfan ai maure, vien de boneure, le mien ai de te voire." Mlle. Desmâtins took so much pleasure in representing royal personages that she assumed the (theatrical) costume and demeanour of a queen in her own household; sat on a throne and made her attendants serve her on their knees. Another vocalist, Marthé Le Zochois, accused of grave flirtation with a bassoon, justified herself by showing a promise of marriage which the gallant instrumentalist had written on the back of an ace of spades.

The opera singers of this period were not particularly well paid, and history relates that Mlles. Aubry and Verdier, being engaged for the same line of business, had to live in the same room, and sleep in the bed.

Marthé Le Zochois was fond of giving advice to her companions. "Inspire yourself with the situation," she said to Desmâtins, who had to represent Medea abandoned by Jason; "fancy yourself in the poor woman's place. If you were deserted by a lover whom you adored," added Marthe, thinking, no doubt, of the bassoon, what should you do?"

"I should look out for another," replied the ingenuous girl.

But by far the most distinguished operatic actress of this period was Mlle. de Maupin, now better known through Théophile Gauthier's scandalous but brilliant and vigorously written romance, than by her actual adventures and exploits, which, however, were sufficiently remarkable. Mlle. de Maupin was in many respects the Lola Montes of her day, but with more beauty, more talent, more power, and more daring. When she appeared as Minerva in Lulli's Cadmus, and, taking off her helmet to the public, showed her lovely light-brown hair, which hung in luxuriant tresses over her shoulders, the audience were in ecstacies of delight. With less talent, and less powers of fascination, she would infallibly have been executed for the numerous fatal duels in which she took part, and might even have been burnt alive for invading the sanctity of a convent at Avignon, to say nothing of her attempt to set fire to it. Perhaps it would be more correct to say that Lola Montes was the Mlle. Maupin of her day; a Maupin of constitutional monarchy, and of a century which is moderate in its passions and its vices as in other things.

But what has Mlle. de Maupin to do with the 8th of September 1860? Merely this, that thinking of the Royal English Opera which is to open in October, our ideas reverted to the Royal Italian Opera which closed in August.

One of the most interesting and one of the latest works represented at the Royal Italian Opera was Gluck's Orfeo, and the reader has already seen how the Orfeo of Gluck takes us back to Rameau, Lulli, and the earliest days of the musical drama. We might have given this explanation beforehand. Perhaps the reader will be kind enough to accept it now?

Her Majesty's Theatre.—The English operatic performances at this establishment commence on the 8th of October with Mr. Macfarren's Robin Hood—according to all accounts a masterpiece. It is now positively decided that on the alternate nights (up to Christmas) Italian operas will be presented, Mlle. Titiens (already in London) prima donna, Signor Giuglini primo tenore.

* Cambronne is said to have been very much annoyed at the invention of "La garde meurt et ne se rend pas;" and with reason, for he didn't die, and he did surrender.

MORE 'APROPOS OF THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

THE LAST JUDGMENT.

Die Letzten Dinge (The Last Things), the earliest of Spohr's three oratorios, was composed about the year 1825. It was first produced before an English audience at the Norwich Musical Festival, on Friday, the 24th of September, 1830, under the title of The Last Judgment, and received with the greatest possible favour. Professor Taylor, in his preface to the English edition of Spohr's second oratorio, Calvary, says:—

"I know there are many persons who will regard the subject of this oratorio as an improper exercise for the musician's art. With every respect for an opinion conscientiously adopted and avowed, I venture to dissent from it. The arts have been tributary to the service of religion in all ages of the Jewish and Christian churches; and of these, none is more calculated to enkindle the flame of devotion, to elevate the spirit, or to touch the heart, than Music. Our immortal bard invoked the 'mixed power' of 'voice and verse,' in order to 'present to our high-raised phantasy

> 'That undisturbed song of pure concent,
> Aye sung before the sapphire-coloured throne
> To Him that sits thereon,
> With saintly shout and solemn jubilee.'

"If there be truth as well as poetry in this sentiment, then are the musician and the poet deserving of honour in proportion as they labour to accomplish the high and holy purpose to which it points; in proportion as they succeed in carrying the mind out of the walks of every-day life, in order to raise it into a purer element, and breathe into it a profounder and more pious emotion.

"There are minds over which no combination of sounds united to kindred words has the power to exercise any influence; but I think it impossible for any who are capable of being thus moved, to hear such a composition as the present without responding to that powerful appeal which it makes, not to the senses only, but through them to the heart. The truly devotional spirit, the really grateful heart, loves to dedicate those gifts, with which its Maker has especially endowed it, to His glory. The impulse of one is to rear to His honour the stately temple; the inward prompting of another bids him dedicate to His praise the boldest flights of poetic inspiration; whilst a third aspires to 'celebrate in glorious and lofty hymns the throne and equipage of God's almightiness; what He works, and what He suffers to be wrought, with high providence in His church; to sing victorious agonies of martyrs and saints, and the deeds and triumphs of His servants.' The last is the end here proposed. I have only to hope that its purpose will be accomplished, and that while it affords to the musician the conviction that the springs of his heart are perpetually gushing out afresh, and its waters ever flowing, it will serve the purpose for which it was especially designed, by awakening the devotion and cherishing the hopes of the Christian."

THE MAY QUEEN.

This pastoral was produced with complete and unqualified success at the Leeds Musical Festival in September, 1858. The overture is a very beautiful composition, and this charming work displays a marvellous combination of simplicity and ingenuity. The persons represented are the Queen of England, the May Queen and her lover, and a nobleman disguised as Robin Hood. The story is simple enough. The Queen of the May, elated with her May-day dignity, teazes her faithful swain by her indifference, and by her semi-encouragement of the advances of the Greenwood King. An attempted kiss on the part of the latter arouses very naturally the ire of the true lover, who proceeds to a pugilistic punishment of the offender. A flourish of trumpets, and the Queen appears amid "pageant music." She soon arrives at the true state of matters, reproves the interloper for trifling with the affections of the May Queen, and commands the latter to wed her lover at morn. The chorus is very happily introduced—first singing in praise of May, then in praise of the May Queen, afterwards in the pageant music, and finally in the concluding piece—"A blessing on the bridal—a blessing on the Queen." The first two of these are the most striking. "Wake with a smile" is a most exquisite piece of modern music, in the truly rural style; and the preservation of the tonic pedal through the harmonious device and melodic abundance is highly clever. The May-pole chorus, "With a laugh as we go round," is well constructed, and is plentifully tuneful; it is immediately followed by a solo from the May Queen, the chorus resuming their burden, "Was never such a May-day," at the close of each verse. Each of the persons represented has a solo except the Queen. The lover (a tenor, of course) leads with a languishing and desponding air, "Oh! meadow clad in early green;" and subsequently Robin Hood has a very spirited song, "'Tis jolly to hunt in the bright moonlight;" a duet for the May Queen and her lover, "Can I not find thee a warrant for changing?" and a trio for the same persons and Robin Hood, "The hawthorn in the glade," are exceedingly beautiful. A most charming simplicity pervades every morçeau referred to, and at the same time, as before hinted, there is no lack of novelty in harmony, or ingenuity in construction. The thoroughly dramatic character of the pastoral is also deserving of especial notice. The dialogue is made to lead immediately into each set piece, so that the action, slight as it is, is never impeded, and interest is kept thoroughly alive. The credit of this is due to Mr. Chorley, who composed the poem. The parts will be distributed:—The May Queen, Mad. Clara Novello; Queen, Miss Palmer; Lover, Mr. Sims Reeves; Robin Hood, Mr. Weiss; and no doubt will be admirably sustained.

NORWICH FESTIVAL CHARITIES.—As a kind of appendix to the sketch of performers and performances at the festival, we find an account of the sums of money given by the festival committee to the following charities:—Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, the West Norfolk and Lynn Hospital, the Yarmouth Dispensary, the Eye Infirmary, the Blind Hospital, the Sick Poor Society, Lying-in Charity, District Visiting Society, Shipwrecked Mariner's Association, and the Jenny Lind Infirmary. The total sum received and paid over to the respective institutions is £8,270. 2s. 9d., of which £5,568. 1s. 9d. has been paid to the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital. What would have been the result had these been annual concerts, got up by private individuals, long ago urged as a substitute, may easily be imagined. The public will see from the above that a very substantial portion of the price charged for admission has found its way into the hands of the local treasurers of our benevolent societies, and thus music has lent a very effective helping hand to charity.

NEW THEATRE AT LEEDS.

[WE have been requested to publish the following prospectus. ED.]

The legitimate entertainments of the stage are recognised as an indispensable means of conveying instruction and amusement of the highest class, in every part of Europe where civilisation and refined tastes prevail.

In this country theatres are found in most large towns, but all experience has proved that their success depends upon respectable management, able and efficient acting, and the proper adaptation of the buildings in which the performances take place.

On the other hand, wherever theatres are not so managed, and are not conducted in well-selected localities, with all the means and adaptations required for displaying the beauties and powers of our best dramatic and lyric authors, experience has proved that amusements of this nature will nevertheless abound in spite of every discouragement; but that under such circumstances they greatly degenerate, are found in obscure localities, are marked by a vitiated and impure taste, and therefore cannot conduce to the successful representations of those sublime inspirations which have immortalised their authors, and which are calculated to cultivate not only a refined taste, but an elevated tone of moral sentiment.

The town of Leeds is at this moment without a theatre possessed of those agencies and attractions which command success.

It is under the influence of feelings of this nature that a number of influential gentlemen in Leeds have met and are co-operating together to elevate the town in this respect to a position equal to other large towns in England, by erecting a Theatre in some appropriate and central locality, capable of giving accommodation of the highest class, both to the performers and the audience.

They feel fully convinced that if such an institution were once established, it would receive such support as would enable the management to organise and sustain a highly efficient permanent company, and to obtain frequent assistance from actors and artists of the first reputation.

In the assurance that these results will follow from a careful and judicious selection of a site, and the erection of a new Theatre, combining all the improvements of the day, a committee has been appointed who have by careful inquiries and estimates satisfied themselves that such a building, with all requisite fittings, scenery, and decorations, may be provided at a cost of, at the utmost, £15,000, which sum it is proposed to raise in shares of £10 each. When the requisite amount shall have been subscribed, a meeting of the subscribers will be called with the object of making such arrangements as may be best adapted to carry the project into execution, having regard to the interests both of the public and of the shareholders.

In order to meet the general objection to joint stock companies, it is intended that the buildings and other property shall be vested by deed in trustees to be elected by the shareholders upon the same principle as the Exchange and other public buildings in Leeds. This will be a complete guarantee to the shareholders not only against any further liability or responsibility beyond the amount of their respective shares, but for the proper management and conduct of the theatre, as it is intended that the trustees thus selected shall have the sole power of selecting the manager and granting leases upon such conditions as they may think proper and advisable.

Already many gentlemen (including some of the principal inhabitants of this neighbourhood) have subscribed towards the undertaking, and thus upwards of £3500 have already been assured. It is, therefore, clear that a vigorous effort at the present moment will secure the success of the project, and will at once supply this important desideratum, and add another to those numerous public buildings which adorn our native town.

The committee therefore appeal for support to the well-tried public spirit of Leeds in the full assurance that the appeal will not be made in vain.

P. FAIRBAIRN, Chairman of the Committee.

Foreign.

BADEN-BADEN.—At Baden-Baden the performances are on a grand scale. M. Benazet spares no money to make his Festival attractive: and gives carte blanche to M. Berlioz for rehearsals; and with such singers as Mdmes. Viardot and Miolan-Carvalho, and M. Roger, and such players as MM. Vieuxtemps and Jacquard, the result could hardly fail to be what it was, one of the most superb and interesting concerts of which we have recollection. We must speak first of the music. The first overture to Les Francs-Juges, by M. Berlioz, was new to us,—one of its writer's best works, since the melodic phrases therein are longer, and in their treatment are less traversed and obliterated by extraneous embroideries, than is the case with much other music from the same pen. Were this overture revised, it might be made one to rank amongst the highest works of its kind. The instrumentation is ingenious and splendid. The chorus—Sylph Dance and Dream from Faust—we have long rated to be one of the happiest inspirations of M. Berlioz: the melody is charming, and but for a bizarre outbreak towards the close, the conduct of the movement, however intricate and rich in detail, is clear; as also the Dance in accelerated tempo, which follows the chorus—so deliciously instrumented. It should be a grave lesson to all lovers of art, that one whose aspirations are obviously so noble, and whose talent has one phase so original as M. Berlioz, should, till now, have been able to reap so limited a success, and that dependent on such exceptional resources as a M. Benazet—or other despot emperor—can alone furnish. He might have been "the musician of the future,"—as it is, we can hardly fancy his music surviving when his own energy and resolution, and the prestige which a man of intellect must always command, shall have passed away. At this remarkable concert Mad. Viardot took the crowded audience by storm in her great scenes from Orphée, executing them with incomparable expression and brilliancy. This superb music, we repeat, is as yet unheard in London: and that such an artist, in her prime, whose performance of the character is one of the most notable things of our musical century, should have been overlooked for one so unequal to the task as Mad. Czillag must be signalised as a self-injurious piece of managerial perversity; as though the object had been to deny Gluck a chance of entrance within our borders. Mad. Miolan-Carvalho was encored in a re-arrangement, by M. Gounod, of Bach's first Prelude, to which a vocal and an orchestral part have been added. M. Vieuxtemps is playing as splendidly as ever, but his concerto-music is intensely tiresome; shallow, pompous, and perpetually balking expectation; music to which every remark made on M. Litolff's compositions applies with extra force. The chorus was excellent; the soprano voices singularly sweet and fresh. On the whole, we never attended a more interesting concert.

WIESBADEN.—This is the time of show-concerts at the German baths, somewhat presumptuously called "Festivals"—in reality, so many speculations of those who undertake to provide for the diversion of the guests, and who cater "stars" of first, second, or third magnitude, affording them such opportunities of shining as they find too rarely. Thus, at Wiesbaden the other day, a Litolff Festival gave us a fair chance of appreciating the talent of a composer who has in some measure been successful of late years in Germany, and who has received much praise from the pens of critics whose praise carries with it authority. Three movements of one pianoforte concerto, two movements of another, two movements of a violin concerto, an overture for full orchestra, and a liberal operatic selection, are sufficient to justify persons habituated to listen in forming some notion of what the average powers of their composer may be. After the elaborate panegyrics of which M. Litolff and his music have been the theme, the statement of such impressions as must be here offered will seem harsh, grudging, unsympathetic. But, to our thinking, he does not fill a place or a corner of his own in the world of living composers. So much as belongs to a group—call it not a school—of writers whose ambitions are very large, who have no perverse desire to be iconoclastic or irregular, but whose works, though carefully made, fall to the ground because of their ample platitude, and because their enterprise, when looked into, proves only seeming. There is no need for the moment to name those who may thus be grouped with M. Litolff as a composer. In the allegro of the first concerto-symphonique performed by him at Wiesbaden, there are so many surprises, stoppings short, languid episodes, under a false idea of expression, as entirely to destroy the character of an allegro movement, and to throw out the average listener, who desires form, be it ever so freely dressed and disguised. Some invention is to be recognised in the florid passages for the pianoforte. The orchestra is well treated; but the perpetual notion of brewing a crescendo seems to have been present to the writer, and somehow the brewage, perpetually interrupted, becomes inevitably vapid. The second movement of this concerto, an andante religioso, is in every respect better,—an excellent andante for a modern concerto, with a melody free and flowing, if not very new,—a rich instrumentation, and a gracefully effective employment of the principal player. In the scherzo (quære, last movement?) a pretty eight-bar phrase is hunted to death,—occurring as it does some thirty times, in all manner of keys. "Whipped to death" might have been said, since among other piquancies of orchestration, the use of the violins (if our ears told right) gave reviving sprightliness to what would else have been stale and threadbare. There may possibly be a finale to this curiously elaborate composition. As a player, Herr Litolff has neither advanced nor receded from the position taken by him years ago, when he was in London together with Dr. Liszt. There is dash,—there is volubility,—there is an apparent determination to storm Olympus (only the achievement is not done),—there is little charm. Meritorious, ponderous, not to be sat through a second time,—such, in brief, are our impressions of Herr Litolff's music. To attempt to analyse, even so slightly as has been done, his own other morceaux of his programme would tempt us into tautology. There are happy effects here and there,—there is considerable cleverness,—there is a discouraging absence of idea,—there is a false notion predominant of grandeur and interest being secured by parenthesis, not continuity. A word or two more have to be said concerning this Wiesbaden Concert. The violin concerto was entrusted to a young boy (named Auer), who is a capital boy, handling his instrument without hesitation, strictly in tune, and showing that instinct for measurement of tempo which nothing can teach or regulate, but which is one of the signs of a grand and noble artist to come. Herr Formes sang the very aria from Die Zauberflöte in which he grasped as a new comer his English public; but his voice is "over and gone,"—method he never possessed,—what remains being a striking presence and imposing manner. Endowments so superb as his, with passing flashes of instinct for what is high, and true, and liberal, and poetical, have never in our experience been so mercilessly flung to the winds by their possessor as in his case. Grander natural means were rarely given to man; in saying this we only except Lablache.—(Foreign Correspondence of the "Athenæum.")

A MUSICAL ELENCH.—The German admirers of Herr Wagner are considerably puzzled just now to know what to do about the consistency of the author of Oper und Drama, — the man who denounced all concession as so much claptrap, and everything that pleased the ear as blasphemy against the holiness of Art,—having heard that, in order to adapt his work to the Grand Opéra of Paris, Herr Wagner has consented to the interpolation of a ballet, for which he has written the music. Why will those who create lay down principles in their prefaces, and recommend their noble selves by abusing their predecessors and contemporaries? When was there ever a more specious and convincing document than Gluck's preface to Alceste, in which repetition was denounced as among other meretricious arts to please the public at the expense of truth. Yet in this very Alceste there are as many examples of da capo quite as superfluous, save to show the singer per se, as in the operas by Hasse, Lampugnani, and other of the light and gay Italians whom Gluck professed to mow down. Thus, after Herr Wagner's Spartan and self-asserting diatribe, this quiet acquiescence in attempting to popularise a composition which might else offer too little to satisfy the sprightly and dance-loving public of Paris is indeed instructive, by way of warning to all theory-spinners, self-praisers and haranguers, if the rumour be correct. As historians bit by bit of the smartest controversy which has occurred in music since that betwixt Gluck and Piccini, we cannot overlook the rumour, nor the chagrin which it has caused among the sincere disciples of a prophet who is supposed to be yielding to "French influence."

The Theatres.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—The "summer" performances at the most western of theatres takes this week a tragic direction, in consequence of the engagement of Mr. Barry Sullivan, who has just returned from America. As on the occasion when some years ago he made his first appearance before the London public, he has chosen Hamlet for the inauguration of his career. All the qualities that have rendered his memory estimable in the minds of playgoers he retains to their full extent. He is a careful, correct, and perspicuous declaimer, turning to good account his natural advantages of voice and figure, and he is, moreover, thoroughly versed in the routine of the part, which he has evidently studied with laudable assiduity. Though he makes no particular attempt to startle his audience, he is neither tame nor listless, and all that he does is well considered and quite to the purpose. A numerous audience witnessed his performance of Hamlet, and greeted him with a hearty welcome.

ASTLEY'S AMPHITHEATRE.—Under the management of Mr. Batty the old equestrian theatre promises to recover its ancient popularity. Mazeppa, always attractive from time immemorial, has been revived with new scenery and appointments, and draws audiences numerous far above the average. The scenes in the circle are all of them first-rate in their kind, Mademoiselle de Berg, the chief female equestrian, being at once remarkable for her gracefulness and courage. An entirely novel feat performed by this lady is a leap through a mail coach, which occupies the place usually assigned to hoops and banners. Of course, the coach is constructed of paper, but, although its material is frail, it has the three measures proper to solidity, and the sight of it is sufficient to baulk any but the most daring artist. Generally a spirit of thorough renovation pervades Mr. Batty's management. Astley's is so essentially a theatre of old associations that a lessee may easily be tempted to let it rest on its traditional fame alone, without essaying to provide it with the attractions familiar at other establishments. But Mr. Batty still adheres to the principle by which he was regulated when, previous to his opening last Easter, he had the house freshly decorated in every part. His dramas are admirably put upon the stage; the personages in the ring, whether equestrian or grotesque, are all costumed in tasteful fashion, and on each succeeding night look as smart as though it was the first occasion of their appearance. Altogether there is not a cleaner, brighter, and more commodious house in London than the time-honoured edifice at the foot of Westminster Bridge.

Letter to the Editor.

MUSIC FOR THE AUTUMN AND WINTER.

SIR,—Everybody is delighted with the Floral Hall Concerts. They have come at a most acceptable time, are given in a building admirably adapted for the purpose, and Mr. Alfred Mellon has exactly hit upon the kind of musical entertainment, calculated now-a-day to satisfy all. Mozart and Haydn, and Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Rossini may safely be given as the staple of the feast, provided a fair proportion of the pieces be vocal. The next six months will be the opera season of the class who frequent promenade concerts;—a very large proportion of the music-loving public, who either cannot afford the expensive enjoyment of Italian opera, or who will support the English from a desire to see the noble art advance amongst their countrymen. Should not the success at the popular concerts of the music of the great masters suggest the desirability of substituting a performance occasionally of the operas of Mozart, Rossini, &c., in English in place of the interminable repetition of the native ones, which, excellent as one or two are, cannot be listened to for the 115th, 116th, and 117th times without tiring? If our best English singers be employed, we can do without one Italian Opera and have a genuine National one instead. A great Italian company was named for Her Majesty's Theatre for last season—let me give not a bad English one for the next; to wit—Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Parepa, and Miss A. Whitty, Mrs. Baxter and Miss Pilling, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Swift, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Santley and Mr. Weiss.

Begging that you and Mr. E. T. Smith will take these matters into serious consideration, I subscribe myself,

Your obedient servant,

A VOICE FROM THE PROMENADE.

Floral Hall, Tuesday Evening.

THE YORK ORGAN.

[THE following, which appeared in a musical journal upwards of twenty years ago, will be read with interest by such of our subscribers as sedulously treasure up all that relates to the history and progress of organ building in this country. Dr. Monk himself, the present able and conscientious director of musical affairs in York Minster, may probably derive some slight gratification from its perusal. ED.]

HILL AND OTHERS, v. THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF YORK.

THE written and oft-repeated testimony of the York organist, in favour of the new instrument, closed our first notice of this trial.

The plaintiffs called Sir Robert Smirke, Mr. Gauntlett, Mr. Lincoln, and a numerous band of agents and workmen. Sir Robert Smirke, it appeared, was engaged by the Dean and Chapter to superintend the restoration of the Minster, and in that situation forwarded a plan to the plaintiffs in which was delineated the position and disposition of the organ between the double screen walls of the choir and the side aisles. Subsequently he received orders to draw out a second plan, which totally differed from his former draft: he delivered this to the plaintiffs in June 1831, about fifteen months after the plaintiffs had been supplied with the other. The organ was built according to the second plan. The plaintiffs' workmen proved that during the whole of these fifteen months the work was proceeded with, and that by this alteration alone nearly the whole of the labour and material had been rendered useless. The expense was estimated at £1500 or £1600. Dr. Cockburn, the dean, is described to have been very troublesome, and the vagaries he indulged respecting the situation of the organ with the arch under it, the heights of the swell-box, the position of the 32-feet pipes, caused great additional labour and loss of time. Neither was he inclined to listen to the suggestions of Dr. Camidge, of whom he said "the doctor fancies my cathedral to be a case for his organ." The expense of the organ was sworn to be about £6000, of which more than £2000 was incurred by alterations and delays, caused by the parties connected with the cathedral.

Mr. H. C. Lincoln, organ builder to His Majesty, proved he had carefully gone over the instrument, which was described as "a monster organ." In his opinion the machinery and construction were admirable, and not possible to be improved upon. It was the largest organ witness had ever seen, and he really could not form an estimate of its cost, neither would he choose to be tied down to a contract in the construction of an instrument so large and peculiar as to its situation, a part of which could not be erected without enormous expense. The builder has certainly spared no expense or exertion to render his work perfect. THE ORGAN WEIGHS ABOUT NINETY TONS; witness could put no price upon such an instrument, and no man in the kingdom could do so. By comparison with the amount witness received for the Brighton organ (that in His Majesty's Pavilion) witness conceives the plaintiffs' demand very reasonable.

Mr. Gauntlett had seen that portion of the organ which had been constructed according to the first plan of Sir Robert Smirke, and had also seen, tried, and examined the York organ as it now is. It is now as to its conformation totally a different organ. In magnitude and mechanism it is unquestionably without rival in this country or any other. The effect of the pedale is astounding, although witness has heard a more brilliant quality of tone than that produced from the manuals.* The mechanism is very beautiful and complete, particularly the movement relative to the wind, which is perfectly unique in its construction and effect. Would consider any departure from the builder's original draft as involving a very serious expense in an instrument so large and complicated in its details. The reverend defendants called their organist and organ tuner; also a provincial organ builder who had repaired the old organ, and a London builder who had not seen the new one. Also a parish organist who had been engaged formerly in trade as a dealer in barometers. Dr. Camidge proved that the old organ had originally cost £1800 and had been repaired at an expense of £1200 more. Considers the organ as complete as possible, and should take it altogether as the finest in the world; witness certainly never heard such an organ, and considers it full a third larger than Birmingham. The scale of the pipes are as large as the room would allow. Considers £2500 a very fair price for the organ as it stands at present: but witness on being shown his own letter to Lumley Saville, in which he writes, "I firmly believe that the labour and material will require the whole sum," retracts that opinion and could not consider it a remunerating price. Witness considers the plaintiffs executed the work very amply, and thinks if they had proceeded as on a close contract, plaintiffs might have screwed him in the work. Says the Dean was "rough and rude" to the plaintiff Hill, and admits him to have been hasty and grumbling that the organ was not erected at an earlier period.

Ward, a country organ builder, deposed to repairing the old organ, and his astonishment at the new. Considered it impossible to make the large pipes speak when he first saw them. The York organ, witness thinks, is as fine a piece of mechanism as any workman could turn out.

Other unimportant testimony was adduced to which it is unnecessary to refer. The verdict gives the plaintiffs nearly £4000. They are supposed to lose about £1500 or £2000 by the transaction.

* The reason (says a contemporary critic) is obvious. Dr. Camidge has multiplied the unison stops (diapasons and reeds), but forgotten to do the same with the compound stops. The old organ was built by Blyth, in 1803, and subsequently repaired and enlarged at a total expense of £2,000. Here is a list of the stops:—

GREAT ORGAN.	CHOIR ORGAN.
Open Diapason (3 ranks)	Dulciana
Stopped Diapason	Stopped Diapason
Principal	Principal
Twelfth	Flute
Fifteenth	Fifteenth
Nazaral	Cremona or Bassoon
Sesquialtra (3 ranks)
Furniture (3 ranks)	SWELL ORGAN.
Cornet (5 ranks)	Open Diapason
Trumpet	Dulciana
Clarion	Stopped Diapason
	Principal
	Trumpet
	Oboe
	Sesquialtra (4 ranks)

In this organ are thirteen unison stops; and compound stops making fifteen ranks, besides a twelfth and nazaral. In the present organ there are only nineteen ranks of compound stops (five of which are in the swell) to stand up against twenty-three unison stops (namely, fourteen diapason, and nine unison, reeds). Let our readers balance the weight of a modern diapason with that of Blyth's scale, and the result must be as clear as a sunbeam. Dr. Camidge should add clarions, octave clarions, twelfths, larigots, tierces, and mixtures almost ad libitum. It may be remarked that the list of stops given to the York organ, in "Bellerby's York Guide," is most inaccurate, and not at all to be relied upon. We allude to the edition of 1832.

MR. SIMS REEVES is climbing mountains, and regaining health and strength, in the Swiss Oberland.

MR. JOHN OXENFORD has completed a translation of Clapisson's opera, La Reine Topaze, and is already engaged on another (we trust a better), both intended for Mr. E. T. Smith, an ecclectic, if there ever was one.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL.—There is to be one novelty at the Worcester Festival, which takes place, be it recollected, the week after next,—this is, "The Erl-King's Daughter," a ballad, or cantata, by Herr Gade. This should recommend the concert at which it will be given to all who are tired of scraps, tawdry ballads, and thirty-times-told opera songs, with the opera dresses and scenery left out.

EPPING (From a Correspondent).—On Thursday evening, August 30th, a highly successful concert was given here, in aid of the funds for the completion of the Epping and Sheydon Garnon National Schools. The programme was of a superior kind; the first part sacred, the second secular, and was entrusted to the following artistes:—Mad. Weiss, Mad. Gilbert, Miss Palmer, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Weiss; at the pianoforte Mr. Alfred Gilbert. Through the exertions of the Rev. J. Tuck and Mrs. Tuck, the room was filled by the élite of the neighbourhood, who testified their gratification by numerous encores and by retaining their seats until the very last note of the concert.

BELFAST.—(From our own Correspondent.)—At the consecration of the Rev. Dr. Dorian, the coadjutor Roman Catholic Bishop of Belfast, the following programme was performed at St. Malachy's in an excellent manner by Mr. R. Sutton Swahy and the choir under his command:—

Veni Creator, Gregorian; Kyrie, Gloria, and Credo, Haydn; Sanctus, Mozart; Tantum Ergo, Spanish; Agnus Dei, Cramsic; Te Deum, Webb; Overture, Athaliah, Handel; Offertoire (No. 5), L. Wély; Larghetto, in F (Symphony), Haydn; Fugue, J. S. Bach; March, David, C. Horsley.

The soloists were Mrs. Ling and Mr. Cramsie, who acquitted themselves most creditably. Mr. Swahy deserves great praise for the marked improvement in the choir since it has been under his management.

OPERATIC MUSIC IN GERMANY.—There is no novelty in German dramatic music to be heard of. At Frankfort they have been playing Der Vampyr (with an ovation to Herr Marschner, who is said to have designs on the Grand Opéra at Paris, and for the moment is sojourning in the free town) and Der Freischütz; at Carlsruhe, Mozart's Titus, without one singer adequate to the music. There, it may be recollected, Herr Wagner's Tristan was to be produced last year. It was put in rehearsal; but after many weeks of laborious study, was abandoned as too uncouth—too little like music to be endured—or learnt. His day, we believe, and, for the interests of art, hope, is done in his own country. Whether he will revolutionise Paris, under imperial protection, remains to be seen. In the theatrical line, Fraulein Gossmann, a comic actress, is turning the heads of young and old in Frankfort by her lively performances.

AGENCIES.—Our intention of offering a few remarks on some of the morals and manners of musical administration has not been laid aside, though its fulfilment was deferred to a time when no possible personality could be connected with what was said. Our reason is, the universally reported increase of a system of indirect dealing, which works ill for the art, ill for the artist, ill for the public: to come to the point, the system of agency and douceur. In no other world of selling and buying (says a contemporary) are these found satisfactory, both in one important feature being distinct from all business done by commission openly avowed. This feature is the secresy of the transaction, which naturally brings on an abuse of public good faith, placing it at the mercy of the artist who can bid highest for the agent's good word,—and of the agent who, by producing ware not worth its reputation for a "consideration," inevitably renders the task of merit more delicate in its scruples, more averse to all intermediate transactions,—possibly, too, less ample in its means. While we would fain protect the artist struggling upwards, we are bound in continuation to ask whether the artists who have arrived are themselves clear of aiding and abetting so thoroughly vicious a system? What is to be said of the performer who, having before him the world of good music where to choose, prefers to perform, on the appeal of a per-centage, or payment in full, music from which pickings and perquisites are to be gleaned? Simply, that in all proceedings of the kind they cease to be artists, and become hired agents in their own turn. It is only the mediocre or the mean among the composers who will bid for such spurious protection, by extending which the public again suffers, and the standard of taste is inevitably depreciated. Much has been said by those before the public concerning the venality of the press. Were this true to the extent complained of, have those who resort to indirect influence on the one hand, or on the other to covert payment, a right to complain? We put the case, in all its strength, before all real musicians. To them it will be known that any amount of evidence could be brought in justification of our broaching a question as important as it is delicate.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—The disaster at St. Martin's Hall deprives London, for a time at least, of one of its best concert halls. We are sorry to see it stated that Mr. Hullah has lost a portion of his musical library by the fire.—Athenæum.

CRUMBS OF NEWS.—Mr. Gye has gone over the Alps, it is said, in search of the Black Swan, alias a real Italian prima donna who can sing.—Herr Hiller, though cordially invited to Leipsig to fill the place vacated by Herr Rietz, as chief at the Gewandhaus Concerts, declines leaving Cologne. In this we hold him wise. Herr Reinecke, some seven years ago known as a pianist of promise, has been appointed in his stead.—"They say" that Herr Reinthaler is composing again; we should have had something new from him long ago.—What, by the way, has become of Herr Gade? He might have melted into the empty air for any "sound himself hath made" in Europe lately.—M. Bataille is about to leave Paris for the Grand Opéra at Brussels,—a real loss this to the French capital.—The Belgian capital is at last to possess an organ worth playing on, a new instrument of first class having been bespoken for the Palais Ducal, in which great musical celebrations are to be held.

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.;

Composed by Brinley Richards

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET

A NEW SERIES OF

SHILLING BOOKS,

COMPRISING

STANDARD AND POPULAR PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Each Book contains from Forty to Fifty pages of Music, printed on excellent paper. Demy Quarto.

No. 1.	Twenty Songs by Mendelssohn	1s.
„ 2.	Twelve Songs by Balfe	1s.
„ 3.	Fourtee Songs by Verdi	1s.
„ 4.	Twenty Songs of the Christy Minstrels	1s.
„ 5.	Fifty Waltzes	1s.
„ 6.	Twelve Sets of Quadrilles	1s.
„ 7.	Fifty Polkas and Galops	1s.
„ 8.	Twenty-five Operatic Gems by Verdi, for Piano	1s.

All the Songs have Pianoforte Accompaniments and English Words throughout under the Music.

The Polkas and Gallops are published with their Trios and Second Parts complete.

TO THE TRADE.

Prospectuses, Specimen Pages, and Show Boards may be had on application to BOOSEY and SONS, 28 Holles Street.

NEW SONGS by J. W. DAVISON, "Rough wind that moanest loud" (sung by Mr. Santley at the Monday Popular Concerts); "Swifter far than Summer's flight," (sung by Miss Palmer at the Monday Popular Concerts); "False friend, wilt thou smile or weep," Beatrice's song in the Cenci (sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby, at the Monday Popular Concerts, St. James's Hall); are published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

The above Songs form Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of Vocal Illustrations of Shelley.

"Mr. Santley was encored in one of the thoroughly picturesque and poetical settings of Shelley, by Mr. J. W. Davison, mentioned a week or two since. His song, 'Rough wind that moanest loud,' is a thoroughly good song."—Athenæum.

"Madame Sainton-Dolby's greatest efforts were called forth by Mendelssohn's 'Night' song, and Mr. J. W. Davison's 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep' (from Shelley's 'Cenci'), to both of which she did the amplest justice. The latter work is one of the most poetical and beautiful of the 'Vocal Illustrations of Shelley,' composed by Mr. Davison many years ago, and which, though rarely heard, possess far more sterling merit than nine-tenths of the most admired songs of the day. A more intellectual treatment of the words could not well be imagined. Mr. Davison has completely caught the spirit of the poetry, and heightened its beauty by the potent charms which belong only to the sister art. 'False friend, wilt thou smile or weep,' sung to perfection by Madame Sainton-Dolby, was enthusiastically applauded."

Morning Post, April 26, 1860.

Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

EVANS'S

ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

MAY BE HAD IN EVERY POSSIBLE VARIETY,

WITH GERMAN PEDAL REEDS (TWO OCTAVES AND A THIRD)

WITH AND WITHOUT PERCUSSION ACTION,

AND

WITH SINGLE AND DOUBLE ROWS OF KEYS,

At prices from 10 to 140 Guineas.

Also with a self-acting Wind Apparatus.

THE HARMONIUM AT TEN GUINEAS

Possesses the same superior tone and touch that characterise all EVANS'S English Harmoniums, and is admirably suited for a Chapel or School-Room. It is in a handsome solid French-polished Oak case.

THE HARMONIUM AT SIXTY-FIVE GUINEAS

With Double Row of Keys, is the most perfect instrument ever manufactured. The demand for this Harmonium being so great, orders should be always sent in good time to prevent disappointment.

Full particulars of EVANS'S English Harmoniums may be had of BOOSEY and SONS, Holles Street, London.

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Pianoforte ... ... Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola...	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) Vocal Classes	Mr. POWELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian ... ... Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting LIVERPOOL will find it advantageous to engage the services of

LEE, NIGHTINGALE, & CO.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Mail, and Liverpool Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, and NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening. C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

BOOSEY & SONS' SHILLING MUSIC.

ELEMENTARY WORKS.

Boosey's Shilling Pianoforte Tutor. Founded on the best Works extant, and including the Theory of Music, and a large variety of Exercises, Lessons, and Studies. 36 pages.

Czerny's 50 Best Exercises. Selected from the 101. 24 pages. 1s.

Czerny's Etude de la Velocite. In 3 Books, 1s. each; or complete, 2s. 6d.

Czerny's 101 Exercises. In 2 Books, 1s. each, or complete, 2s.

Herz's Exercises and Scales. 1s.

Bertini's Celebrated Studies. Op. 29, in 2 Books, 1s. each.

Boosey's 100 Exercises, Studies, and Extracts, for the VIOLIN. Selected from the Works of the Great Masters. 1s.

Boosey's Shilling Violin Tutor. An entirely new system. Edited by George Case. 24 pages.

Boosey's Shilling Flute Tutor. Edited by Clinton and Pratten. 24 pages.

Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies for the Flute. Selected from the Works of the great Flute Composers. Edited by R. S. Pratten. 1s.

Boosey's Shilling Cornopean Tutor. Edited by Stanton Jones, and including selections from the Works of Caussinus, Forestier, and Carnaud. 24 pages.

Boosey's Shilling Concertina Tutor. Edited by George Case. 26 pages.

Boosey's Shilling Harmonium Tutor. 24 pages, large size.

Boosey's Shilling Singing Method. Containing Exercises and Solfeggi, by Balfe, Rossini, Vaccaj, Bordogni, Crescentini, &c. 24 pages.

Rode's 25 Caprices or Studies for the Violin. 1s. 6d.

Fiorillo's 36 Caprices or Studies for the Violin. 1s. 6d.

Kreutzer's 40 Studies or Caprices for the Violin. 1s. 6d.

BOOKS OF TUNES.

VIOLIN.

De Beriot's 7 Airs for the Violin with Variations complete. 1s.

Boosey's 100 German Waltzes by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitsky. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Dances. Second Series. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Dances. First Series. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Reels, Country and other Dances. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Ballads for the Violin. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for the Violin. 1s.

Boosey's 10 Standard Overtures for the Violin. 1s.

GERMAN CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Dances and Songs for the German ConCERTINA. 1s.

CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Dances for the Concertina. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Melodies for the Concertina. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Sacred Melodies for the Concertina. 1s.

FLUTE.

Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for the Flute. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Dances for the Flute. 1s.

CORNET-A-PISTONS.

Boosey's 100 Dances for the Cornet-a-Pistons. 1s.

Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for the Cornet-a-Pistons. 1s.

Boosey's 25 Duets for Two Cornets-a-Pistons. 1s.

Boosey's Complete Operas for the Flute. Price 1s. each.
1. Les Huguenots—2. Robert le Diable—3. Masaniello—4. Ernani—5. Rigoletto—6. Puritani—7. Sonnambula—8. Norma—9. Lucia—10. Lucrezia—11. Il Trovatore—12. Don Juan.

Boosey's Complete Operas for the Violin. Price 1s. each.
1. La Sonnambula, Bellini—2. Lucrezia Borgia, Donizetti—3. Norma, Bellini—4. Elisire d'Amore, Donizetti—5. Lucia di Lammermoor, Donizetti—6. Ernani, Verdi—7. Masaniello, Auber—8. Don Pasquale, Donizetti—9. I Puritani, Bellini—10. Les Huguenots, Meyerbeer—11. Il Barbiere, Rossini—12. Don Juan, Mozart—13. Il Trovatore, Verdi—14. The Bohemian Girl, Balfe—15. La Traviata, Verdi—16. Rigoletto, Verdi—17. Maritana, Wallace—18. Le Prophète, Meyerbeer—19. La Fille du Régiment, Donizetti—20. Luisa Miller, Verdi—21. Martha, Flotow—22. Satanella—23. Dinorah.

Boosey's Violin Classics.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish.
Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, September 8, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 37 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Pianoforte / Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) / Vocal Classes	Mr. POWELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian / Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, an ASSISTANT of good address, who thoroughly understands the business. Apply by letter to Mr. James Russell, 125 High Street, Oxford.

EASTERN OPERA HOUSE.—PAVILION THEATRE, Whitechapel Road. Sole Lessee, Mr. JOHN DOUGLAS. Entirely re-decorated and re-constructed. Open every Evening with a Grand Opera Company. First-class artistes. Band and Chorus of over One Hundred Performers. In consequence of the immense success and applause bestowed on the Opera of FRA DIAVOLO, it will be repeated on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday.—On Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, to commence at a quarter past Seven, the Opera of FRA DIAVOLO, in which Messrs. A. BRAHAM, W. M. PARKINSON, EDMUND ROSENTHAL, O. SUMMERS, R. MORROW, J. W. MORGAN, Mad. LANCIA, and Miss ANNIE LENG will appear. On Wednesday (by desire), LA SONNAMBULA, Elvino, Mr. W. M. PARKINSON; Amina, Mad. LANCIA. Friday and Saturday, A GRAND OPERA. To conclude each Evening with a COMEDIETTA. Prices of Admission, Centre Boxes, 2s.; Lower Circle, 1s. 6d.; Pit Stalls, 1s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 6d. Parties can secure Private Boxes, from 10s., 15s., or 3s. each.

THE ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Established 1857), Whittington Club, Arundel Street, Strand.—This Society will RESUME its WEEKLY MEETINGS on Monday evening, October 1.

The Annual General Meeting will be held at the above Club on Monday evening, September 24, at 8 o'clock.

Qualified Amateurs desirous of joining the Society are requested to communicate with STANLEY J. BALCOMBE, Hon. Sec.
No. 32 Moorgate Street, E.C.

MAD. LAURA BAXTER begs to announce that she will give a SERIES of PERFORMANCES of SACRED and MISCELLANEOUS VOCAL MUSIC during the ensuing Season. Mad. LAURA BAXTER will be assisted by eminent artists, and also by her Amateur and Professional Pupils. Communications to be addressed to Mad. LAURA BAXTER, at her Residence, 155 Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she will remain in Town for the Winter.—All letters for Town and Country Engagements, Oratorios, &c., to be addressed 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

THE ARION (Eight-Part Choir). — Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. — The Members are informed that the next Meeting will take place at 13 Berners Street, on Thursday, October 4th, at 8 o'clock precisely.—Prospectuses of the Society may be obtained on application to the Conductor,
F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

TO CHOIRMASTERS and ORGANISTS.—A BASS SINGER (occasional deputy at St. Paul's Cathedral) is desirous of an engagement on Sunday. Full Choral Service preferred. Address, W. A., Brook's Office, 24 Old Cavendish Street, W.

MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, an ASSISTANT for the Country, of good address and experience in the above trade. Liberal salary.—Apply, by letter only, to A. B., Messrs. Cramer's, 201 Regent Street.

MUSICAL EDUCATION.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, of good education and address, who can command a premium of £100, may be received for Five Years into a first-class Musical Instrument Establishment, of thirty years' standing, in the West of England. He would be instructed in the Organ, Pianoforte, and Singing, and a Salary would be given in the latter three years. Apply to S., care of Messrs. Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London.

NOTICE to the TRADE.—The BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS' AMERICAN MELODIES are COPYRIGHT, and can only be obtained of the Publishers, Messrs. Hopwood and Crew, 42 New Bond Street, London, W. The Second Edition of "I'd choose to be a Daisy" is now ready. The Buckley's Serenaders will make their first appearance in London early in October. Full particulars will be duly announced.

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting LIVERPOOL will find it advantageous to engage the services of

LEE, NIGHTINGALE, & CO.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Mail, and Liverpool Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, and NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.

Composed by Brinley Richards

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 5s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," by I. LIEBICH. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich (forming No. 2 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte, by the above author), is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," by R. ANDREWS. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where R. ANDREWS'S transcription for the Pianoforte of "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR" (Reichardt) may be obtained, price 2s.

NEW SONGS by BALFE.—"I LOVE YOU," sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES with such immense success at Mr. Martin's (Exeter Hall), Mr. Lindsay Sloper's, and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts (St. James's Hall), and at Mr. Balfe's benefit concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens before 10,000 persons, 3s.; as well as Balfe's two charming Ballads, "Oh! take me to they heart again," 2s., sung by Miss KATE RANO (mezzo-soprano) at Mad. de Vaucheran's Concert; and "I'm not in love, remember," 2s. 6d., sung by Mlle. SEDLATZEK at the fashionable Concerts at Campden House, are published by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By EMILE BERGER. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, arranged for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By I. LIEBICH. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich, is now published, price 2s. (forming No. 1 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte by the above author), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"I NEVER KNEW HOW DEAR THOU WERT." New Song, by H. K. MORLEY, composed expressly for and sung by Miss LASCELLES (the Poetry by CATHERINE WARFIELD) is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

RAMSGATE SANDS QUADRILLE.—The most popular set of the day. Founded on favourite and well-known melodies, illustrating a visit to Ramsgate, in characteristic music. By BURCKHARDT. With a most superb Frontispiece, by Brandard, in Colours. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

NOTRE DAME. Romance for the Pianoforte, by EMILE BERGER. Founded on a very beautiful subject by Pergolesi. Price 3s. Illustrated by Laby. Published this day by Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

SCHLOESSER'S BRILLIANT DUETS for Pianoforte, on Oberon, Dinorah, Traviata, and Rigoletto. 5s. each. All effective, brilliant, and moderately difficult. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL ROOM MUSIC-BOOK, price 4s. in crimson cloth, containing 50 Waltzes, 40 Polkas, 10 Galops, 2 Schottisches, 2 Varsovianas, and 12 Sets of Quadrilles (complete). Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

ASCHER'S CLOCHES du VILLAGE (just published), 3s.; Ascher's "Thou art so near," 3s.; Ascher's Dinorah, 3s.; Ascher's Les Vêpres Siciliennes, 3s.; Ascher's Un Ballo in Maschera, 3s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

AN EVENING WITH MEYERBEER (published this day). Mélange for the Pianoforte, by NORDMANN, introducing beautiful subjects from Crociato, Robert le Diable, Dinorah, Les Huguenots, Vielka, &c. Price 5s.; solo, 6s.; duet also.

AN EVENING WITH BALFE, solo and duet.

AN EVENING WITH CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS, solo and duet.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE DRIPPING WELL, for Pianoforte. By GOLLMICK. Third Edition. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING PIANOFORTE TUTOR. 36 pages, music size.

CHEAP EDITION of IL TROVATORE for Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian Words, in 8 monthly parts, 1s. each, commencing October 1. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

NEW ENGLISH DUET.—"Sweet is the dream," Duet by CAMPANA, being an English version of his celebrated aria "Sera d'Amore." Price 2s. 6d. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, for Pianoforte, by Smart, complete, 3s.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass, do. 3s.; Moore's Irish Melodies, for Pianoforte, by Nordmann, 2s. 6d.; Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, complete, with Portrait and Introduction by J. W. Davison, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Meyerbeer's Dinorah, complete, for Pianoforte Solo, 7s. 6d.; the Juvenile Pianoforte Album, 12 pieces, illustrated and bound, 3s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, 100 gems from the newest Operas, for Pianoforte, in cloth, 12s.; Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances, for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by Strauss, Lanner and Labitzky, for Piano, 3s.; Czerny's Etude de la Velocité, 2s. 6d.; Czerny's 101 Exercises, 2s.; Boosey's Part-Song Miscellany, 18 Original Compositions, handsomely bound, 5s.; the Harmonium Museum, 100 Sacred and Secular Subjects for Harmonium, with Instructions, 7s. 6d.; Engel's Harmonium Operatic Album, 60 Gems for Harmonium, 7s. 6d.; Christy's Minstrels' Album, 24 Songs in One Book, 2s. 6d.; the Verdi Album, 25 Songs, in English and Italian, 4s.; Dinorah, for Voice and Piano, complete, 12s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

WORCESTER, Sept. 10, 1860.

THERE is a charm about the meeting of the Three Choirs which is almost sufficient to reconcile the London critic to the infringement upon the already sufficiently brief respite from his labours between the close of the summer and opening of the winter musical campaign. There are the nice, pleasant, quaint, clean old cities, redolent of historical memories and associations, each overshadowed with its cathedral more or less beautiful, with their quiet "closes" and "college greens," their cool cloisters, their rich deaneries, suggestive of easy living and good cheer, and, added to all this, the healthy and unusual excitement of the towns' folk; the streets all alive with people gaily dressed wending their way festival-wards; the serried line of spectators watching their progress, seeming to think that the next best thing to enjoying yourself is witnessing the enjoyment of others; the frequent glimpse of a well-known face, familiar in the London orchestras, also hieing to the central point of attraction; and then the delightful neighbourhood of Worcester, with its bold range of Malvern hills; Gloucester with its Cotteswolds, and the lovely ride to Birdlip; Hereford with its no less agreeable vicinage, hardly inferior in beauty, if not altogether as well known. Again, the rivers; who that has ever eaten of Severn salmon can fail to associate that king of all fish with the gently winding stream on which stand Worcester and Gloucester? The Wye, too, most picturesque of all English rivers—the "Rhine of England"—with its glorious Tintern Abbey, Symmon's Jut, Wyndcliffe, boasting a view in no way inferior to the famous "Ehrenbreitstein;" the Caldwell Rocks; Goodrich Court and Castle (now, alas, closed to the public); Ross with its "Prospect," its "Man," whom Pope has immortalised, its grandly situated Royal Hotel, with the not inappropriate motto in the garden, "Ici on se rajeunit;" and Wye salmon, also not to be forgotten, much less despised; and all three counties rejoicing in their cider and perry, excellent in draught, superb in bottle; indeed, in the latter form far superior to champagne, when taken with the salmon aforesaid. All these things being considered, we feel mollified, and to a great extent reconciled to the prospect of four morning and three evening performances (to say nothing of two balls) which characterise these triennial gatherings.

As this is the one hundred and thirty-seventh meeting of the three choirs, the reader will have no difficulty in fixing the date of commencement of the festivals, which have gone on increasing in magnitude and importance year after year. It is perhaps almost needless to reiterate the fact that charity is the primary object, the relief of the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy in the three dioceses being the purpose of the collection at the doors, and whatever surplus may accrue from the receipts of the Festival, after payment of all expenses; but as a deficit is the general result, and the difference is not taken from the voluntary contributions, a certain number of gentlemen accept the office of stewards, and from their own pockets make up the balance which ordinarily occurs between receipts and expenditure, leaving the collections intact for the fund. The idea of making a collection at the doors originated in 1724, with Dr. Thomas Bisse, chancellor of Hereford, and brother of the Bishop; £31. 10s. was the amount obtained. The following year at Worcester, £48. 10s. was subscribed. In 1729, Dr. Bisse in his Festival sermon, rejoiced that the meetings had already assumed the highest importance, but £38 was all that was collected. At Gloucester the following year, it sunk to £28. 3s. It is needless to pursue the monetary part of the question farther, but for the purpose of comparison it is sufficient to say that at Gloucester last year £1,143. 3s. was subscribed (being the largest collection ever known), and that Worcester has a sufficient sum invested in the funds to contribute her yearly quota of some £60 to the charity. When the meetings were originally established, the members used to assemble the first Tuesday in September, and choral services were performed in the cathedral the two following days, on the last day a service and collection. For many years past the collections have been made every day, and the service held on the first. Worcester has made a change in the arrangements this year, devoting the whole of the four mornings to oratorios, and giving the sermon at an earlier hour—half-past eight, substituting Croft in A in place of the Dettingen Te Deum, and one anthem only in place of the two which were usually given, and making no charge whatever for admission. In point of fact, divesting the strictly religious portion of the week of all appearance of or pretence to a grand musical performance, the members of the choirs alone, without the stars, band, chorus, &c., sustaining the services throughout. This we take to be a sensible step, as it not only disarms the objections of the captious, who did not like the association of a sermon with the names of London concert-room singers and opera-house players, but also affords an opportunity for enlarging the programme by the addition of another clear morning for sacred music in the cathedral.

A wonderful contrast is suggested between the humble gathering of what was then literally the meeting of the choirs and the vast assemblage now—a band of some seventy or eighty performers, most of them selected from the Philharmonic, Royal Italian Opera, &c., and chorus, making up with the instruments upwards of 300—all the leading talent of the metropolis engaged as principals, the railway facilities bringing people in thousands where they formerly scarcely mustered in hundreds. In the important item of stewards, too, there is a remarkable difference. In 1754 the stewards were reduced from six to two, at which number it continued till 1798, when it was augmented to four, and afterwards to the original number. During this period the fortunes of the festivals fluctuated considerably. In 1774 the collection at Hereford amounted to £622. 5s. 9d., while at Worcester, nine years afterwards, it fell to £384. 12s. At the same city, in 1794, it was still further reduced to £266. 2s. 2d.; but in 1809 Worcester redeemed itself by subscribing £810, a sum which would not be considered a bad average at the present time. Apart from the sums collected at the doors, the success (pecuniary) of the festivals has been very varied, so much so that even within the last four years it has been more than doubtful whether or not the music meetings would be brought to a final close. For this the clergy are in some degree to blame. At Hereford the Bishop is absent—the Dean proclaims himself a violent enemy to the proceedings, and shuts up the Deanery, flying the city as if it were plague-stricken. The Archdeacon, who formerly was one of the most active supporters, goes off in a huff, and but for the energy and public spirit of some few gentlemen, there would have been no Festival in '58. Some years previous a serious hitch occurred at Gloucester, and to the late Rev. Dr. Evans, for so many years one of the most active supporters of the Festival, the credit is mainly due of having persisted, at all sacrifices, in carrying out the original design, and preventing Gloucester being the first to break through the time-honoured observance of the music meetings.

It would be curious and interesting were it possible to investigate the balance-sheet of the early festivals as compared with these of present times. We have, however, but little information on this head, beyond the fact that the members chiefly belonged to the college, their performances being gratis, with an exception in favour of the leader, whose pay was 5s. nightly, the members being refreshed with ale, cider, and tobacco. To induce regularity of attendance, a fine of 6d. was inflicted on each absentee. The Te Deum of Purcell and that of Handel, composed for the peace of Utrecht, were given alternately for many years, until the latter was superseded for the well-known Dettingen, which has held its place until the present year. The original price of the concert tickets was 2s. 6d.—they are now 10s. 6d.—the leader's pay being one guinea for the whole meeting. Mr. Woodcock, of Hereford, who then filled that important office, was famous for his performance of the fifth concerto of Vivaldi, whose Cuckoo Concerto may be known to a few amateurs of this generation. In 1733, the "famous Mr. Powell, of Oxford" was the great star of the Gloucester meeting. Of this gentleman we know nothing at the present day; but that he occupied a position of great eminence in his time may be gathered from an extravagant rhapsody in the Gentleman's Magazine of 1744, where the obituary pathetically exclaims:—

"Is Powell dead? Then all the earth
Prepare to meet its fate:
To sing the everlasting birth,
The choir of Heav'n's complete."

This is hardly inferior to the well-known—

"One God, one Farinelli."

As our readers are well aware, these Festivals are conducted by the organists of the respective cathedrals. Now, with all possible respect for the ability of these gentlemen, who are doubtless thoroughly at home with their own instruments, we cannot but think that it would be desirable to have a chef with whose method of conducting the band is familiar; for it is hardly to be expected, however great the capacity as an organist, that any one assuming the bâton once in three years should be competent to direct performances on the scale of magnitude that these Festivals have assumed. Granting that Messrs. Done, Amott, and Smith are not altogether unused to such oratorios as the Messiah, Elijah, &c., (although in these, without being hypercritical, we have more than once had occasion to find fault) it is in the evening concerts that their deficiency as conductors is apparent; a wavering beat, uncertainty and changes of time, frequently putting band and chorus at variance, and in some instances marring the efficiency of the principal singers. Of late years, however, this has fortunately not been quite so apparent, thanks to having a leader like M. Sainton, whose unvarying steadiness is of immense service, acting as a foil to the somewhat eccentric gyrations of the local conductor's stick. More than once an attempt has been made to alter this, and secure the direction of a London conductor, but vested interests and other prejudices of like character have interfered, and so kept things in statu quo. One of the objections urged has been the time-honoured cry of precedent—"It always had been so, and why should there be a change?—It would alter the character of the meetings, &c" Now, the fact is that it was not always so; for in 1737 Dr. Boyce, many of whose anthems still hold their place in our churches, was engaged to conduct the festival, and wrote an anthem for the occasion; and, as we shall show farther on, other conductors presided at various times. When Handel's oratorio of Samson was produced in 1752, the prices were raised in consequence of the extra expense of engaging London performers, although this was not the first time that the metropolis had contributed her aid; for in 1733 (Mr. Powell's year) French horns, trumpets, hautboys, German flutes, and a "fine treble harp," were engaged, to say nothing of the "first vocal" performers, of whose names we have no record. In 1754 Handel's Judas Maccabæus was produced at Gloucester. In 1755 at Worcester the singers were Miss Turner, daughter of Dr. Turner, organist of Westminster Abbey; Mr. Wass, of the Chapel Royal; Mr. Denham; Mr. Baildon; and Mr. Beard. The latter gentleman was the Sims Reeves of his day, taking the principal part in almost every musical piece that was performed, and being the original tenor in Esther, Handel's first oratorio. He was one of the singers in the Duke of Chandos's chapel at Cannons; and in 1739 gave great scandal to the aristocracy by marrying Lady Henrietta Herbert, only daughter of James Earl of Waldegrave, and widow of Lord Edward Herbert, second son of the Earl of Powis. Our musical readers will remember that the late Lord Waldegrave married a daughter of the great John Braham. Touching the marriage of Lady Herbert, Lady Mary Wortley Montague, in one of her letters to Lady Pomfret, says:—"Lady Herbert furnished the tea-tables here with fresh tattle for the last fortnight. I was one of the first informed of her adventure by Lady Gage, who was told that morning by a priest that she had desired him to marry her the next day to Beard, who sings in the farces at Drury Lane. He refused her that good office, and immediately told Lady Gage, who (having been unfortunate in her friends) was frightened at this affair, and asked my advice. I told her honestly that since the lady was capable of such amours I did not doubt, if this was broke off, she would bestow her person and fortune on some hackney-coachman or chairman, and that I really saw no method of saving her from ruin, and her family from dishonour, but by poisoning her, and offered to be at the expense of the arsenic, and even to administer it with my own hands, if she would invite her to drink tea with her that evening. * * * Her relations have certainly no reason to be amazed at her constitution, but are violently surprised at the mixture of devotion that forces her to have recourse to the church in her necessities, which has not been the road taken by the matrons of her family." With much more of the like good-natured character.

Her friends, however, were disappointed, as Beard appears to have been a man of superior attainments, good principles, and respectable conduct; and consequently he and his noble wife enjoyed a fair share of happiness in the married state. After her death Beard married a daughter of Rich, and eventually became one of the proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre, dying in 1791, at the age of seventy-four. In 1757 Handel's Messiah was given at Gloucester for the first time, and received with enthusiasm, Dr. Hayes being the conductor. The following year Pinto, an Englishman by birth, but of Italian parentage, conducted. Pinto's son, who died in 1808, at the early age of twenty-one, was a most extraordinary genius, but of very irregular habits. In addition to being an excellent performer on the violin and piano, his compositions for these instruments, as well as for the voice, were both numerous and original. The Monday Popular Concerts gave one of his sonatas, A major, for pianoforte, the early part of last year, if we remember rightly. At the Gloucester meeting of 1760, Dr. Hayes again conducted, Esther being given in memory of Handel, who had died since the preceding anniversary. In 1770, at Worcester, Miss Linley (afterwards the wife of Sheridan) sang. Israel in Egypt was given for the first time at Gloucester with a new oratorio, Ruth (now entirely forgotten), by Giardini, who at that time led the band. Hereford, in 1777, took a novel step;—the introduction of an entire Italian opera: the example, however, was not repeated. Mr. Cramer, father of John Cramer, led the band at Hereford in 1780. Four years later the church services and anthems were confined for the first time to the morning meeting in the cathedral, and the music which had been performed the same year at Handel's commemoration at Westminster Abbey substituted for the ordinary service. In 1788 George the Third and his queen honoured the Worcester Festival by their presence. The following year Mrs. Billington made her first appearance at these festivals. Lindley, the celebrated and well-remembered violoncello player, made his first appearance at Gloucester in 1798, and his last appearance at the same place half a century later. Gloucester certainly seems to have taken the initiative both in the production of new works and new performers; for in 1796 we find that John Braham made his appearance as principal tenor for the first time. Worcester, however, brought out Incledon in 1803; and Gloucester, in 1802, Mrs. Billington, and in 1811, Mad. Catalani, when Braham resumed his post as first tenor, having just returned from Italy; and in 1814 Miss Stephens, afterwards Countess of Essex. We have before alluded to the responsibilities of the stewards; and so heavy were the losses they had to defray, that at one time (1798) no gentleman could be found to accept the office, consequently the meetings ran the imminent risk of being abandoned altogether. The Duke of Norfolk, however, overcame the difficulty; and, although since then great trouble has been experienced in getting stewards, and from that and other causes the festivals have been repeatedly endangered, we think that now there is every reason to believe that they are established on a firmer basis than ever, the losses of late years having diminished to a mere trifle, and indeed twice at Gloucester, 1853 and '56, a surplus being obtained for the charity. To Mr. J. H. Brown, the indefatigable secretary of the Gloucester meetings, belongs the credit of extending the number of stewards, having gradually increased from eight to no less than forty-four, whose names we find heading the programme of last year's meeting. The Rev. Robert Sarjeant, the zealous secretary of the Worcester festivals, has secured the goodly number of thirty-four stewards, amongst whom we find the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, Earl Coventry, the Hon. F. G. Calthorpe, M.P., Hon. F. Lygon, M.P., Sir H. E. Lambert, Bart., Sir E. Lechmere, Bart., the High Sheriff of the county, &c., &c. Should any loss arise it is not felt when distributed over so many; but when a deficit of £1500 has to be divided amongst six, as it has been within our recollection, it becomes a serious matter. Another advantage, too, in numbers is this:—The majority of gentlemen selected are generally residents in the neighbourhood, and being pecuniarily interested in the success of the Festival, fill their houses with company for the week, and every day bring large parties to the Cathedral and Shire Hall, who not only swell the attendance, but contribute handsomely to the plates held at the doors with such persistence by the most charming and fascinating of ladies, whose earnest appeals are literally irresistible. We can understand any one refusing a donation when the plate is handed round at "Ebenezer" or "Little Bethel" by a sour-visaged deacon, elder, or some such functionary, the mind having been previously prepared by listening to a dreary discourse from the Rev. Mr. Howl, and the body chastened by sitting in the most uncomfortably angular pew constructed of the hardest wood known. But after hearing a glorious oratorio, in a no less glorious cathedral, the dulcet strains of Clara Novello or Sims Reeves ringing in our ears, to have to run the gauntlet of a dozen or so of the most elegant and fashionable belles of the county, the heart would not be made of flesh and blood who could possibly withhold his mite under such circumstances.

The list of principal singers is strong. First we have Mad. Clara Novello (who made her first appearance at Gloucester twenty-five years ago with Caradori Allan), and as this is the last opportunity the public will have of hearing her marvellous voice in the place of all others where it sounds to the greatest perfection—the nave of a cathedral—we doubt not that this fact will of itself be sufficient to attract vastly increased numbers to the morning performances. The remaining soprani are Mesdames Rudersdorff, Weiss and Parepa; contralti—Mad. Sainton-Dolby (the Worcester stewards not following the example and bad taste of the Norwich committee), and Miss M. Wells. Tenors—Mr. Sims Reeves (without whom no festival can be considered complete), Messrs. Montem Smith and Mason. The basses—Messrs. Weiss, Briggs, and Signor Belletti; the first-named gentleman this time sustaining the part of Elijah, as he had always done at the festivals of the choirs until last year at Gloucester, the circumstances of which need no repeating here, having engaged sufficient attention at the time. Mr. H. Blagrove leads the band in the morning, M. Sainton in the evening performances. Nearly the whole of the principal players of M. Costa's orchestra are engaged, but amongst the violoncellos we miss the familiar name of W. Lovell Phillips, unhappily numbered with the dead since the last meeting of the choir, and also of Signor Cioffi, first of trombone players, likewise taken from us this year.

To-day there has been a long rehearsal at the cathedral, and this evening another rehearsal at the College Hall. From what we hear there seems every prospect of a good festival, by far the larger proportion of seats for both morning and evening performances being secured. The weather is charming, a trifle cold perhaps, but bright, clear, and promising a continuation.

TUESDAY.

This morning, at half-past eight, divine service was held in the choir of the cathedral, the Rev. R. Cattley, minor canon, intoning, the Rev. Canon Lewis, reading the first, and the Hon. and Rev. the Dean (Dr. Peel), the second lesson,—the chant being the Rev. F. Havergall's festival chant. The choristers and lay clerks of the three choirs were all present, and rendered the service, Croft in A, and Goss's anthem, "Praise the Lord O my soul," with steadiness and efficiency, Mr. G. Townshend Smith, of Hereford, presiding at the organ. An excellent and appropriate discourse was preached by the Rev. George Herbert Pepys (son of the bishop), from a text taken from the 3rd chapter of the book of Proverbs, 9th and 10th verses—"Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." Although the congregation was very large, the collection was but little more than £14, which does not say much for the liberality of the Worcester townspeople, whom we take to have formed the staple of those present. True it is that the Mayor and Corporation, who came in state, reserved their contributions for the oratorio performance, which was to take place later in the day, when no doubt the charitable feelings of the corporate body, and many others, would be stimulated by a bounteous champagne breakfast, with which the Mayor regaled his friends at the Guildhall, a building which has just undergone thorough repair and redecoration, the festivities of to-day serving as a sort of house-warming to the edifice. We remarked that the choir or east window of the cathedral has been partially restored, six out the ten stained glass lights having been recently filled in by Hardman of Birmingham. The purport is to depict certain events in the life of our Saviour, but what they are intended to represent must be taken entirely on trust, as from the choir it is quite impossible to decipher their meaning. The colours, moreover, are poor and cold, lacking that rich and lustrous effect which the old artists were wont to produce in stained glass. And while we are on this subject, it may not be out of place to mention that upon visiting Gloucester cathedral last Sunday, we found three new and very fine specimens of stained glass windows had been inserted in the south aisle, and it is in contemplation to complete the series by filling in the whole of the lights on the south or college green side in a similar manner. When this is finished, the nave of Gloucester may challenge comparison with any cathedral, the very large and no less effective west window, erected to the memory of the late Bishop Monk greatly enhancing the appearance of the building.

At 12 o'clock the musical performances were inaugurated by the first part of Haydn's Creation, in which the most marked feature was the singing of Mad. Clara Novello, whose voice told wonderfully in "The Marvellous Work," and "With Verdure clad." The choruses went well, "The heavens are telling," bringing the selection to a fine close. Mr. Weiss is so thoroughly at home in this as in all other of our standard works, that we need do no more than remark that his delivery of "Rolling in foaming billows" was characterised by all those good qualities which have raised and retained him in his deserved position. After a few minutes' pause, Mendelssohn's oratorio of St. Paul commenced, and allowing half-an-hour's interval between the first and second part, did not conclude until just 4 o'clock. Our readers are sufficiently well acquainted with this masterpiece to render all criticism on its intrinsic and manifold beauties quite superfluous. Suffice it to say then, that the general execution is entitled to commendation—principals, band, and chorus alike exerting themselves to do justice to the great work, which twenty-four years ago was produced with such success at the Dusseldorf gathering, under the direction of the great composer himself. Mesdames Clara Novello and Rudersdorff divided the soprano music; Mad. Sainton-Dolby, assisted by Miss M. Wells, the contralto; Mr. Sims Reeves alone sustaining the tenor part, and Signor Belletti the bass, supported by Mr. Briggs, one of the lay clerks of the cathedral. The choruses producing the greatest effect were "Stone him to death," "Rise up, arise," and "O great is the depth," marred, however, by people who could not wait for their refreshment until the end of the first part, but persisted in getting up and disturbing everybody else. The chorales, forming so distinctive a feature in this oratorio, were also given with great smoothness and attention. The one "To thee O Lord," performed at the funeral of the late Duke of Wellington, and "Sleepers, wake, a voice is calling," especially calling forth praise. The final chorus "Not only unto him" was altogether lost for the same reason we have above alluded to. Perhaps four hours is rather too long for a sitting, especially when we consider there are yet three full mornings and three long evening concerts to come. The attendance was larger by some 300 than is usual on the Tuesday morning (a good argument for continuing the same order at future meetings)—about 1,350 persons being present. An alteration has been made since the last festival, by taking away the western gallery and substituting reserved seats; another change too has been made, the prices of the aisles—formerly 5s. but last time 3s. 6d.—are now 2s. 6d.; and the result is that they were quite full, instead of, as in days gone by, being but a third occupied. One singular fact has come to our knowledge (and that from an undoubtedly authentic source) which it will not be out of place to mention here. The elegantly dressed ladies would perhaps feel offended if they were told that their devotion to fashion sadly interfered with the charitable objects of the music meeting, and could not think it possible that their skirts amplified by crinolines (which large as they are in the metropolis become positively gigantic in the provinces), should be enemies to the festival to the extent of more than £200—but so it is, for this time there are 230 seats fewer than last, to allow room for the present outrageous height, or rather width, of fashion. Readers of a calculating turn of mind who feel inclined to multiply this number by 15 shillings, the price of the reserved seats, can arive at a correct result. But this is not all, we have spoken only of the seats in the cathedral; at the College Hall, where the concerts are held, the number of places is diminished by 119—which according to Cocker (the most often quoted but least known of arithmeticians) will at 10s. 6d. each give, or rather not give, £63. 9s.—so that altogether some £235 are sacrificed, because the ladies will "make broad the borders of their garments." We give this merely as a curious statistical fact, not for a moment supposing that any of our fair readers will diminish their circumference in consequence.

WEDNESDAY.

"Music hath charms," not only "to soothe the savage breast," but also to extract money from the civilised pocket, and efficacious as pulpits and preachers may be upon some occasions, orchestras and singers are yet more powerful upon others. Excellent as was the advocacy of the reverend gentleman who officiated yesterday morning, and urged the claims of charity, less than £15 was collected at the doors, as we have already stated; but after Haydn's Creation and Mendelssohn's St. Paul, the plates were replenished by donations amounting to upwards of £355, a sum more than double that usually subscribed the first day, and a splendid beginning for the Widows' and Orphans' fund. This has put the stewards and everybody connected with the festival in high spirits, and as the weather is magnificent and the plans for morning and evening performances present the gratifying sight of nearly the whole of the reserved and numbered seats marked off as let, all of them for Friday, the Messiah, and always the great day, and all for Thursday night, the last concert, the pecuniary success of the meeting ought to be certain. Should the anticipated attendance be fulfilled, there is a right to expect a surplus for the charity, or at any rate no deficit, for if there is any call upon the stewards after filling cathedral and concert hall every day, it must be a sign of radical mismanagement somewhere, as after all it amounts to a mere matter of calculation. So many seats at so much will produce a given sum, the engagements and other expenses will cost so much, and allowing a margin for casualties, the expenditure should not be allowed to exceed the estimated receipts. The attendance last night at the College Hall was the largest we remember for a first concert, 530 being present. The body of the room will hold about 600 persons, and the gallery some 300 more, but for the fact we mentioned yesterday, a thousand people might be accommodated. Perhaps when the present fashion is discarded (it cannot last for ever, that's one consolation), and ladies return to the straight and limp costume of their grandmammas, "when George the Third was king," and the festival of 18—, well, we cannot fix the date exactly,—has let every seat for morning and evening, the "consummation devoutly to be wished" may be accomplished.

The concert of Tuesday was a decided improvement in more respects than one on those generally given at these meetings. In the first place the length was not excessive, as it commenced at eight and would have terminated at eleven, but for the encores in the second part. So much for the quantity. Next as to the quality, likewise praiseworthy, including, as it did, two works each equally great in its way, and sufficient to stamp the concert with the individuality of good music. We allude to Dr. Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, heard for the first time at Worcester, and now fairly making the round of the provinces (it only remains for Hereford to follow the example of Gloucester the "fayre," and this the "faithfulle" city, to complete the circle of the choirs), and Beethoven's Symphony in D, No. 2, which occupied the post of honour, the opening of the second part. Mad. Clara Novello, as the heroine, Mr. Sims Reeves as the lover, Mr. Weiss, as Robin Hood, and Miss M. Wells as the Queen, one and all acquitted themselves to perfection; the chorus, too, was unusually good, and but for the orchestral accompaniment being far too loud throughout the entire execution, would have been entitled to unqualified praise. Of course for this the conductor is responsible, and it really was a pity to hear the voices of the principals all but drowned by the loudness of the instruments. We have so frequently eulogised this work that any further laudation would be superfluous, but it is sufficient to say that the intrinsic goodness of the music is such that the pleasure of the hearer is increased at each performance, a fact which never occurs with music of an inferior character, however attractive and catching it may have been at first hearing. The audience, although cold during its progress, applauded loudly at the close of the May Queen, which was succeeded by Mad. Rudersdorff, who gave an energetic reading of Meyerbeer's "Va, dit-elle." Mr. Montem Smith followed in a ballad of Hatton's, from the Spanish, "The maid I love hath many a grace." Macfarren's charming ballad from Don Quixote, "Ah, why do we love?" gave us an opportunity we have not had frequently of late—the hearing Mad. Weiss, who sang with unaffected taste and expression. The accompanyist, however, did his best (or his worst) to mar her efforts, by dragging the time unpleasantly, and it would be an advantage to the gentleman in question if he could attend one of the Monday Popular Concerts, and take a lesson from the manner in which pianoforte accompaniments are played there. Mr. R. S. Pratten received an immense welcome upon appearing to play his solo, "Maria Stuart," on his newly-perfected flute, and by the extraordinary powers of execution he displayed, commanded a perfect hurricane of applause at the conclusion.

The performance of the Beethoven Symphony was on the whole satisfactory; and although in parts lacking that nice discrimination of light and shade, without which a symphony is nothing. Mozart's "Questi Avventurieri," sung by Signor Belletti, seemed to fall flatly upon the audience, who were, however, roused to enthusiasm by Knight's old ballad, "She wore a wreath of roses," given by Mad. Rudersdorff, with a pathos amounting almost to exaggeration, especially in the last verse. It had its effect, however, for a tremendous encore ensued, when the lady returned to the platform, seated herself at the piano, and treated her auditors with one of those Spanish songs ("Cola séra") with which Mad. Viardot Garcia has so frequently indulged the public. We have never heard the unaccompanied quartett from Dinorah go better than it did last night, being sung to absolute perfection by Mesdames Weiss and Sainton-Dolby, and Messrs. M. Smith and Weiss. The "Shadow Song" from the same opera, has been so frequently sung by Mlle. Parepa, that we need say no more than that the Worcestrians insisted upon its repetition, with which demand the fair singer immediately complied. The remaining encore was to Mad. Sainton-Dolby, for her expressive rendering of Virginia Gabriel's ballad, "The Skipper and his Boy," the last verse being repeated. Two duets, "E il sol dell' anima" (Verdi's Rigoletto), by Mad. Clara Novello and Mr. Sims Reeves, and "Quanti amore" (Donizetti's Elisir d'Amore), by Mlle. Parepa and Signor Belletti, and Mozart's quintett, "Sento, oh dio," completed the programme of a concert which seemed to give perfect satisfaction to the large number of persons assembled.

The College Hall, where these concerts are held, forms the south side of the cloisters, which connect it with the cathedral. It is by no means a comfortable-looking room, the coloured wash with which the walls are covered, and the dilapidated condition of the stone columns detracting from its appearance. The bare roof, open timber work of no ornate character, also adds to the effect we mention. It has, however, two very great merits, which in this age of defective ventilation and faulty principles of acoustic construction, must not be overlooked. The height of the building, and its tall windows with their lofty openings, secure an amount of circulation of air which we may seek in vain in any of our London concert-rooms. Indeed, last night the fault was the other way, for the cold was so excessive that the opening of the windows might well have been dispensed with, ladies gathering their opera cloaks round them, and looking as if they would have liked to put their feet to the fire. For sound, too, it is excellent, and perhaps had the conductor and his band known how thoroughly their sweet strains travelled, and how the softest note may be easily heard in every part, they might not have fallen into the error we have already alluded to. The building in olden times served as a refectory, and is used ordinarily as the College school; and as the pupils must necessarily have a holiday while the room is occupied for the purposes of the meeting, we have no doubt that these young gentlemen look with great respect upon the Worcester festivals, which would of course be increased if they were held every year instead of triennially.

As the cathedral is under repair, the Dean and Chapter having agreed to expend some £20,000 on the work of restoration, masons are busily engaged both inside and outside the edifice, and in some parts to the great inconvenience of the occupants of the orchestra in the cathedral, as it is not altogether pleasant to have unglazed windows in close proximity with such a cold north-east wind as we have had the last two or three days, and which has made itself felt despite the bright sunshine; this morning, however, it is decidedly warmer. This being market day, the streets are crowded with farmers and dealers, their wives and daughters with butter, poultry, fruit, &c., and by their rustic garb and dialect contrasting with the throngs of elegantly dressed people who swarm all over the town. About 1100 were present at this morning's performance in the cathedral, and certainly enjoyed a treat of the highest order,—for the execution of Spohr's Last Judgment was irreproachable from beginning to end. It was at first our intention to have specialised the most remarkable points, but we find upon consideration that so doing would involve a recapitulation of almost every piece from the overture to the final chorus, and so our readers must be content to learn that never perhaps has Spohr's masterpiece been heard to greater effect. The soloists were Mesdames Rudersdorff and Sainton-Dolby, Mr. M. Smith, and Mr. Weiss, all of whom were in excellent voice, and sang with great artistic skill, Mr. Weiss especially distinguishing himself in the arduous bass part, the descriptive recitative describing the approach of the last day being given most admirably. At the request of the Dean, who is supposed to preside in absence of the Bishop, the quartett "Blest are the departed," was repeated. The second part consisted of a selection of the most striking pieces from Judas Maccabæus, comprising the choruses, "Mourn ye afflicted children," "O father whose Almighty power," "Disdainful of danger," "Fallen is the foe," "We never will bow down" and "Sing unto God." The whole of these were given with the greatest effect, band and singers working with a will. To Mad. Clara Novello fell "Pious orgies" and "From mighty kings." To say that she sang these to perfection would be faint praise, and so marked an impression was produced by the latter that no one could help feeling gratified when the Dean got up and requested its repetition, with which Mad. Novello gracefully complied by again singing the second part. It made every one feel a regret that we are so soon to lose such a voice from among us, and that future festivals must look long and far before they again find any one conveying the sensations produced by those clear ringing bell-like notes. No less magnificent was Mr. Sims Reeves's delivery of the two airs set down for him, "Call forth thy powers" and "Sound an alarm," both equally well sung, but the latter absolutely electrifying the audience. Mr. Reeves was asked to repeat this, but wisely forbore from overtaxing his voice by a repetition of such a terrifically trying song. Of course all audible manifestations of applause are suppressed in a sacred building, but after such a display as those of Sims Reeves and Clara Novello, a subdued murmur seems to run round, and a thrill of delight is visible in the face of every one. Mad. Weiss achieved a most decided success in the air "O Liberty," and made many regret that the air, "Wise men flattering," had not also been allotted to her. Mad. Sainton-Dolby had but little to do, but what she had was done well. Signor Belletti, who has been suffering from indisposition throughout the festival, was consequently unable to do himself justice in "Arm, arm, ye brave," or "The Lord worked wonders." Before dismissing this morning's performance we must make one remark, as the same thing has struck us both yesterday and to-day. Admirable as is the chorus, comprising, as it does, not only the three choirs, but also a contingent from Bradford, it might be improved by the addition of a few more sopranos, this department seeming weak in comparison with the tenors and basses, which are remarkably good. One more exception and we have done. The cathedral is an extraordinary building for the conveyance of sound, and the 800 in the orchestra really produce a stronger effect than double that number at Exeter Hall (including sixteen double basses), especially do the brass instruments make themselves heard. This morning (and in places yesterday also) the trombones completely drowned the violins. This was evident enough in all parts of both choir and nave, in the orchestra it must have been positively deafening; and it behoves a conductor to use his ears as well as his stick, and spare the "tympanum" of his audience, if we may so speak of a collective auricular organ. The collection to-day amounted to £229. 2s. 6d., which includes cheques from the Rev. J. Fortes, one for £20, and the Gloucester dividend £22. 17s. 4d. At the festival of '57, £221. 5s. 8d. was taken.

As the plateholders are pretty much the same each day, we shall reserve their names until the last, but we may as well mention that the large collection of yesterday included the following:—Lady Emily Foley, £50; Sir J. Pakington, £10; Mr. Lycett, £10; Mrs. Padmore, £20; Mrs. Peel, £10; Earl Beauchamp, £10; Mr. Ricardo, £20; the united subscription of the Corporation, £30. 6s., being a guinea from each alderman and half a guinea from each councillor, a very shabby donation considering the immense benefit to the town these festivals unquestionably are. Such illiberality only convinces us that the people who care the least for their success or failure are the townsfolk, who should be the most active supporters, instead of leaving it to the county families and strangers.

THURSDAY.

Our notice of last night's concert must necessarily be short; and as there was but one novelty in the evening (the greater part of the remainder of the programme being of an uninteresting character) our task is easy. The plot of Niels W. Gade's cantata, The Erl King's Daughter (first time of performance in England), is remarkably simple. A certain Sir Oluf, on the eve of his marriage, appears to have been taking a post-prandial ride "while twilight around was closing;" very unwisely he decides upon also taking a nap on the Elfin Hill, although his mamma has expressed her objection to his being "out" at night. The elfin maidens, no doubt gratified at the presence of such a distinguished guest, serenade him, and invite him to dance, while the Erl King's daughter tempts him by the offer of a silk waistcoat ("a silken vest it shall be thine"), a decided novelty in the way of attire, as the young lady's mamma, who must have been a laundress of original ideas, seems to have bleached it in "pale moonshine." Whether he accepts or declines the gift is not altogether clear; however, the lady "hurries him on," and having attained her wish ungratefully dismisses him with a prediction that he will die on the morrow. As she tells him to "ride home to his bride clad in robe of red," we conclude that in elfinland an extensive stock of ready-made gentlemen's apparel is kept on hand. Sir Oluf's mamma, who has been terribly distressed at his absence, welcomes him on his return, as does also a chorus of what we may suppose to be his tenants. Unfortunately for Sir Oluf, but fortunately for the public, the prediction is fulfilled, and the hero expires promptly; and so ends the cantata. An epilogue is tacked on very much in the shape of the "moral" to the celebrated pathetic legend of "Villikins and his Dinah;" only instead of the advice being addressed to "All ye young maidens take warning and nor," it is "Knights who will on horseback ride" who are counselled to "stay not, like Oluf, in elfin grove with elfin maidens till morning."

Of the music we need say little more than that in parts it is invested with a certain graceful flowing melody, and that Mendelssohn has been the model the composer has sought to imitate. The execution was good, Mesdames Rudersdorff and Sainton-Dolby, with Mr. Weiss as Sir Oluf, sustaining the principal parts. On the whole, however, it is not very interesting, lacking invention, and displaying a tendency, especially in the melodramatic part of the story, to run into commonplace. The audience were not very enthusiastic at its termination; but that says nothing, as enthusiasm does not appear to be an attribute of the Worcestrians. Weber's overture the Ruler of the Spirits and Mendelssohn's concerto (very finely performed by M. Sainton) were the only instrumental pieces. A change in the arrangements made the first part of the concert unusually long, which was happily balanced by the second part being uncommonly short. Au reste, it is enough to say that there were three encores—Signor Belletti, in Rossini's "Sorgete;" the same gentleman with Mad. Rudersdorff, in the duet "Per piacere" (Turco in Italia), and Mlle. Parepa, in Auber's "Laughing Song." The attendance was about 900.

This morning the Elijah has been given with enormous success. The same remarks that we applied to the Last Judgment will serve equally well with reference to the performance of Mendelssohn's masterpiece, which has seldom been heard to greater perfection. Mr. Weiss sustained the whole of the arduous part of the Prophet, and well as he sings upon most occasions, was never heard to greater advantage than on this day—his voice being in excellent order, and his delivery throughout being unexceptionable. He certainly has taken his revenge for the treatment received at the last Gloucester Festival, and at future meetings we can hardly imagine the conductors entrusting the part of Elijah to any other than Mr. Weiss. Of course, Mad. Clara Novello took the first soprano music, her fine voice producing the usual effect, especially in the duet with the Prophet, and "Hear ye Israel." Mr. Montem Smith sang the tenor part in the first, Mr. Sims Reeves in the second division, "Then shall the righteous" being magnificently declaimed. Mesdames Weiss and Sainton-Dolby were equally praiseworthy, and touchingly as the latter lady sang "O rest in the Lord," we are glad that its repetition was not requested "by authority," as was the case with the trio, "Lift thine eyes." We have protested so frequently and unavailingly against this barbarism (for it is nothing less, to destroy the chain of harmony in such a manner), that we fear until every one shall know the Elijah thoroughly there will be no chance of correcting such egregious want of taste. The choruses went admirably from beginning to end; and we cannot but compliment Mr. Done, the conductor, upon the excellent judgment displayed in taking the time as it is marked, and not accelerating or retarding, for the sake of producing effect. Upwards of 1600 persons were present, and to-morrow it is anticipated that there will be a much larger attendance, the Messiah always bringing immense numbers from the country, who regularly come every festival to hear that imperishable work. The collection to day amounted to £255. 5s. 1d., being £10 more than the Thursday of three years ago. This includes the £60 Worcester dividend on funds. In yesterday's return the name of J. C. Dent, Esq., who gave £50, was omitted.

To Correspondents.

B. T. B., Bath.—The music shall be looked for.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1860.

WHEN Sir William Davenant obtained permission from Cromwell to open his theatre for the performance of operas, Antony à Wood wrote that—"Though Oliver Cromwell had now prohibited all other theatrical representations, he allowed of this, because, being in an unknown language, it could not corrupt the morals of the people." Thereupon it has been imagined that Antony à Wood must have supposed Sir William Davenant's performances to have been in the Italian tongue, as if he could not have regarded music as an unknown language, and have concluded that a drama conducted in music would for that reason be unintelligible. Nevertheless, in the present day, we have a censor who refuses to permit the representation of La Dame Aux Camélias in English or even in French,* but who tolerates the performance of La Traviata (which, we need hardly say, is the Dame Aux Camélias set to music) in Italian, and, we believe, even in English; thinking, no doubt, like Antony à Wood, that in an operatic form it cannot be understood, and therefore cannot corrupt the morals of the people. Since Antony à Wood's time a good deal of stupid unmeaning verse has been written in operas; and sometimes, when the words have not been of themselves unintelligible, they have been rendered nearly so by the manner in which they have been set to music, to say nothing of the final obscurity given to them by the imperfect enunciation of the singers. The mere fact, however, of a dramatic piece being performed in music, does not make it unintelligible, but, on the contrary, increases the sphere of its intelligibility, giving it a more universal interest, and rendering it an entertainment appreciable by persons of all countries. This, in itself, is not much to boast of, for the entertainment of the ballet is independent of language to a still greater extent, and La Gitana or Esmeralda can be as well understood by an Englishman at the opera houses of Berlin and Moscow as at Her Majesty's Theatre in London; while, perhaps, the most universally intelligible drama ever performed is that of Punch, even when the brief dialogue which adorns its pantomime is inaudible.

Opera is music in a dramatic form; and people go to the theatre and listen to it as if it were so much prose. They have even been known to complain, during or after the performance, that they could not hear the words, as if it were through the mere logical meaning of the words that the composer proposed to excite the emotion of the audience. The only pity is that it is necessary in an opera to have words at all; but it is evident that a singer could not enter into the spirit of a dramatic situation if he had a mere string of meaningless syllables, or any sort of inappropriate nonsense to utter. He must first produce an illusion on himself, or he will produce none on the audience, and he must therefore fully inspire himself with the sentiment, logical as well as musical, of what he has to sing. Otherwise, all we want to know about the words of "Casta diva" (to take examples from the most popular, and also one of the very finest of Italian operas) is that it is a prayer to a goddess; of the Druids' chorus, that it is a chorus of Druids; of the trio, that Norma, having confronted Pollio with Adalgisa, is reproaching him indignantly and passionately with his perfidy; of the duet, that Norma is confiding her children to Adalgisa's care; of the scene with Pollio, that Norma is again reproaching him, but in a different spirit,—with sadness and bitterness, with the compressed sorrow of a woman who is wounded to the heart, and must soon die. We may be in error, however, for though we have seen Norma fifty times, we have never examined the libretto, and of the whole piece know only the two words which we have already paraded before the public—"Casta diva."

One night, at the Royal Italian Opera, when Mario was playing the part of the Duke of Mantua, in Rigoletto, and was singing the commencement of the duet with Gilda, a man dressed in black and white like every one else, said to us gravely—

"I do not understand Italian: can you tell me what he is saying to her?"

"He is telling her that he loves her," we answered.

"What is he saying now?" asked our inquisitive amateur two minutes afterwards.

"He is telling her that he loves her," we repeated.

"Why, he said that before!" objected this person, who had apparently come to the opera with the view of gaining some kind of valuable information from the performers. Poor Bosio was the Gilda, but our horny-eared neighbour wondered none the less that the Duke could not say "I love you" in three words.

* La Dame aux Camélias was to have been played last summer at the St. James's Theatre, with Mad. Doche in the principal part; but its representation was forbidden by the licenser.

"He will say it again," we answered, "and then she will say it, and then they will say it together; indeed they will say nothing else for the next ten minutes, and when you hear them exclaim 'addio' with one voice, and go on repeating it, it will still mean the same thing."

What fool was this who wanted us to tell him the words of a beautiful duet? And is there much difference between such a one and the art-blind savage who would look at the texture of a canvas to see what the painting on it was worth?

We will admit that as a rule no opera is intelligible without a libretto; but is a drama always intelligible without a play-bill? A libretto for general use need really be no larger than an ordinary programme, and it would in our opinion be a positive advantage if it contained merely a sketch of the plot, with the subject, and perhaps the first line of each of the songs.

Then the foolish amateur would not run the risk of having his attention diverted from the music by the words, and would be more likely to give himself up to the enjoyment of the opera in a rational and legitimate manner. Another advantage of keeping the words from the public would be that composers—full of the grossest prose, but priding themselves on their fancy—would at least see the inutility (as well as the pettiness) of picking out one particular word in a line, and "illustrating" it; thus reproducing a sound when their aim should be to depict a sentiment. Even the illustrious Purcell has sinned in this respect, and Meyerbeer no end of times, though always displaying remarkable ingenuity, and as much good taste as is compatible with an error against both taste and reason. It is a pity that great men should descend to such anti-poetical and indeed nonsensical trivialities; but when inferior composers are unable to let a singer wish she were a bird without imitating a bird's chirruping on the piccolo, or allude in the most distant manner to the trumpet's sound without taking it as a hint to introduce a short flourish on that instrument, we cannot help thinking of those literal-minded artists who follow a precisely analogous process, and who, for example, in picturing the scene in which Macbeth exclaims "Throw physic to the dogs," would represent a man throwing bottles of medicine to a pack of hounds. What a treat it would be to hear a setting of Othello's farewell to war, by a determined composer of imitative, picturesque music! How "ear-piercing" would be his fifes! how "spirit-stirring" his drums!

The words of an opera ought to be good, and yet need not be heard. They should be poetical that they may inspire the singer, and they should be rhythmical and sonorous that he may sing them easily and with due effect; above all, they ought not to be ridiculous, lest the public should hear them and laugh at the music just where it was intended that it should affect them to tears. Indeed we would have every thing good at the Opera, down to the rosin of the fiddlers, and including the words of the libretto. Even the chorus should have good verses to sing, though no one would be likely ever to hear them. Indeed it is said that at the Grand Opera of Paris, by a tradition now thirty years old, the opening chorus in Robert le Diable is always sung to these touching lines—which we confess we never heard on the other side of the other orchestra:

La sou- | -pe aux choux | se fait dans la mar- | -mite
Dans la | marmi- | -te on fait la soupe aux | choux.

We have said nothing about the duty of the composer in choosing his libretto, and setting it to music, but of course if he be a man of taste he will not take the work of an idiot. English composers, however, have not much choice in this respect, and all we can ask of them is that they will do their best with what they have been able to obtain; not indulging in too many repetitions, and not tiring the singer and provoking such of the audience as may wish to "catch" the words, by setting more than half-a-dozen notes to the same monosyllable, especially if this monosyllable occurs in the middle of a line, and the vowel e, or worse still i, in the middle of the monosyllable. One of our most eminent composers, Mr. Vincent Wallace, has given us a striking example of the fault we are speaking of, in his well-known trio "Turn on, old Time, thy hour-glass" (Maritana), in which, according to the music, the scanning of the first half line is as follows:—

Türn ōn | öld Tī- | ī-ī ‖ ī-ī-ī-ime, | &c.

We know that Time is infinite, but seven sounds do not convey the notion of infinity; and even if they did, it would not be any the more pleasant for a singer to have to take a five-note leap and then execute five other notes on a vowel which cannot be uttered without closing the throat. If we had been in Mr. Vincent Wallace's place we should at all events have insisted on Mr. Fitzball making one change. Instead of "Old Time" he should have inserted "Old Parr."

Türn ōn | öld Pā- | ā-ā ‖ ā-ā-ā-arr, | &c.

would not have been more unintelligible to the audience than "Turn on, old Tī-ī-ī-ī-ī-ime," &c., and would have been a thousand times easier to sing.

Nor, in spite of the little importance we attach to the phraseology of the libretto when we are listening to "music in a dramatic form," would we, if we were a composer, accept such a line as

"When the proud land of Poland was ploughed by the hoof"

—with a suspension of sense after the word hoof. No; the librettist might take his hoof elsewhere. It should not appear in our opera; at least not in lieu of a plough. We should tell such poets that they might keep such ploughs for themselves

Sic vos pro vobis fertis aratra boves.

The singer should certainly understand what he is singing, and still more certainly should the composer understand what he is composing; but the sight of Latin reminds us that both have sometimes failed to do so, and from no one's fault but their own. Jomelli used to tell a story of an Italian chapel-master who gave to one of his solo singers the phrase Genitum non factum, to which the chorus had to reply Factum non genitum. This transposition seemed ingenious and picturesque to the composer, and suited a contrast of rhythm which he had taken great pains to produce. It was probably due only to the bad enunciation of the choristers that he was not burned alive.

Porpora, too, narrowly escaped the terrors of the Inquisition, and but for his avowed and clearly proved ignorance of Latin would have made a bad end of it, for a similar though not quite so ludicrous a blunder as the one perpetrated by Jomelli's friend. He had been accustomed to add non and si to the verses of his libretti when the music required it, and in setting the creed found it convenient to introduce a non. This novel version of the Belief commenced Credo, non; credo, non credo in Deum, and it was well for Porpora that he was able to convince the Inquisitors of his inability to understand it.

Another chapel-master of more recent times is said, in composing a mass, to have given a delightfully pastoral character to his "Agnus Dei." To him "a little learning" had indeed proved "a dangerous thing." He had somehow ascertained that "Agnus" meant "lamb," and had forthwith gone to work with pipe and cornemuse to give appropriate "picturesqueness" to his accompaniments.

WE are glad to find, for the sake of the Norwich Festival, of the musical profession, and of our own ears, that, after all, Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini are engaged for the forthcoming celebration at the great musical city. (We call Norwich "the great musical city," in order to avoid repeating the name; also by way of making some amends to the Norwichers for the abuse we felt bound to heap upon them a few weeks since apropos of their making arrangements public that ought to have been kept private; and finally, because some very admirable compositions have been written specially for the city in question, and, on their production, have been thoroughly appreciated by the native population, as well as by the intelligent visitors from the metropolis. We will conclude the parenthesis by remarking that we have always liked Norwich, its cathedral, and even its inhabitants; and in particular have always enjoyed its festival, and hope to do so again this year.)

Let us not imitate the Norwichers and inquire too curiously what Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini are to receive for their invaluable services at this festival; but since the committee have now become reasonable, and have engaged the only first-rate soprano and the only first-rate tenor they could possibly have secured as leading vocalists for the concerts (Mad. Clara Novello and Mr. Sims Reeves will, we imagine, have enough to do, or nearly so, singing in the oratorios), we will explain to them that, even in a commercial sense, they have done no foolish thing, as we are sure the result will prove.

The question a directing committee should consider is not whether it costs more in the first instance to engage a first-rate or second-rate singer, but whether it is more profitable to obtain £210 by the outlay of £200, or £300 by the outlay of £250—or in some such proportion. We learn from the Norwich Mercury that "the hall has never been filled, or anything like filled, at every performance." If then by engaging the best available talent the committee can succeed in filling the hall in every part there will be no loss, but on the contrary great gain, both in a pecuniary sense and in the reputation acquired, or at least maintained by Norwich as a musical city. "Politically," says the Norfolk and Norwich Mercury, "Norwich has no enviable reputation, and in manufactures its ancient prestige is scarcely sustained. We need some redeeming characteristic, some excellence which may secure us a place in history. Our musical pre-eminence gives us this; and we must jealously preserve it, or Norwich may hereafter be known only as a city which, once famous, gradually lost everything which conferred on it an honourable distinction."

We quite agree with our contemporary.

WHAT a number of old associations have lost the link that fastens them together by the death of the admired and esteemed Mrs. Yates. Though eleven years have elapsed since her final retirement from the stage, there is not a more clearly defined figure in the memory of playgoers, including many who are still too young to merit the name of veterans.

We can look back upon Mrs. Yates as upon the pure spirit under whose auspices the little Adelphi Theatre rose from a vulgar condition of Tom-and-Jerryism into a house for that domestic drama which, more than any other, retains a hold upon the sympathies of the public. Tragedy only draws when connected with some particular star (we never have a new tragedy now),—the comedy of manners is extinct,—the plays that bear the name of comedy owing their success, in a great measure, to their approximation to domestic drama.

The pieces in which Mrs. Yates appeared at the Adelphi may be regarded as the classics of their kind. The Wreck Ashore, Victorine, Henrietta, and others, are constructed on a principle from which dramatists who would please have not yet departed. And it was to the thoroughly artistical, and at the same time thoroughly natural acting of Mrs. Yates, in these plays, that they owe that vital reality which found favour with all classes.

It should never be forgotten that Mrs. Yates, though her name will go down to posterity as that of the heroine of the domestic drama, was trained in the high school of comedy, the illustrious school of Mrs. Davison and Mrs. Glover, and that she went through a "legitimate" course at Covent Garden, before she drew the tears of the thousands who witnessed her performance in the smaller edifice. The older melodramatic actors were, as a rule, trained in the higher departments of theatrical art. The rush of an unprepared novice upon the boards of a London theatre is a phenomenon peculiar to the present day.

Mrs. Yates was as highly esteemed in private life as she was admired on the stage, and to no one could the ordinary commonplace be applied with greater propriety:—"She died deeply lamented by all who knew her."

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Sept. 13, 1860.

SYMPTOMS of returning animation are beginning to show themselves in the operatic no less than the dramatic world. The Théâtre Lyrique has just opened under a new manager, M. Rety, M. Carvalho having retired. This house, as your readers know probably, is a second Opera Comique, and plays a very useful part in the republic of art by affording opportunities for young artists and young composers to try their strength. The season commenced with the new opera in two acts I have already mentioned, Crispin Rival de son maitre, being Lesage's well-known comedy turned into an opera, and cut into two acts. This plan of having recourse to the repertoire of the Théâtre Francais for operatic subjects seems coming into fashion. I wrote to you last week of Hauteroche's Crispin Médecin being so served up. Some of the critics are inclined to raise an outcry of profanation against the practice, and say that soon the chefs d'œuvres of Molière, Regnard, and Destouche will be cut up into scenas, duos, and concerted pieces. If they were we cannot see what harm would result. Molière's Don Juan is no less a masterpiece because a libretto has been founded on it, giving occasion for the production of another masterpiece by Mozart.

The only objection to resorting to the old comedies for subjects to be operatically treated, is that they are seldom suited to musical expression. The comedy of Lesage in question is an instance of this. It turns on the intrigues of a valet to supplant his master in his suit to a young lady who is to present her husband with a handsome portion. There is nothing in such a subject suggestive of music, which, if not inspired by deep or noble passions, cannot at any rate dispense with the lighter graces of sentiment and tenderness, or simple, frank and joyous humour. A keen encounter of wits working against each other by stratagems and plots, is a barren soil from which no composer can hope to reap a rich harvest. Had the lover and his mistress been rendered more prominent, and the intrigues of the valet more subsidiary, the composer would have had a better chance. As it is the opera appears tedious from the monotony and unmusical character of the interest, and it would be better if it were reduced to its original dimensions of one act, as Lesage, who must have known what he was about, designed it originally. The author of the music, M. Sellenick, was a little while since director of the orchestra at Strasbourg, and is now band-master of the Imperial Guards. Although there are evident marks of inexperience and uncertainty of hand in his present attempt, it would be unjust to deny it considerable merit, while the ungratefulness of his subject must also be taken into consideration. Several pieces were received with marked applause, and Lisette's song, "Tromper une filette," was demanded a second time. Mlle. Faivre was the Lisette, and gave the song with a lively and spirited manner, the impression of which would have been still more favourable, but for her tendency to force the natural power of her voice, in other words to scream.

On the same night another novelty was produced, L'Auberge des Ardennes, a trifle in one act, the music of which is by M. Hignard. And lest you should be perplexed by this information, I will inform you that he is a promising young composer, already favourably known to the Parisian public by several productions, of which Les Compagnons de la Mœrjolaine is one, and Le Nouveau Pourceaugnac another. He also was not happy in his subject, which turns on the tricks played by a new married couple at an inn on an unfortunate travelling bailiff (huissier) who alights at the same hostelry and disturbs their tête-à-tête. This groundwork is both stale and flimsy. To render M. Hignard's position still harder, two unsuccessful débutants, a tenor and a soprano, were intrusted with important parts in his work. Nevertheless, the intrinsic merit of one or two of the pieces made their way with the audience, notwithstanding these drawbacks. Since the opening night L'Enlèvement du Serail has been revived for M. Battaille, and Les Dragons de Villars, in which Mlle. Roziés made her first appearance in the character originally played by Mlle. Borghése. Next month Halévy's Val d'Andorre will be produced, and Mad. Carvalho will make her re-appearance in Gounod's Faust.

This lady is, by the way, at Berlin at present, with the Italian Opera Company which is to open next week. She is to sing first in Lucia, and afterwards in Il Barbière. If Mad. Carvalho appears, as it is expected she will, in Le Pardon de Plöermel, she will play in German. It appears there is no foundation for the report that this artist will sing in French Opera Comique while here. Berlin has been anxiously looking out for a new grand ballet by M. Paul Taglioni, the title of which is Le Rêve et le Réveil, or Veder Napoli poi Morire. It was expected to come out in the course of the present month, and to be a very magnificent affair. Gropius, the celebrated painter, has been busy on a series of scenes for it, which are said to be of the most picturesque effect. The principal characters will be filled by Marie Taglioni and M. Carl Muller. Dantzic is to have an Italian Opera this year. It is to be under the direction of M. C. de Paëz, and one of the prime donne is to be Mad. Seemann-Paëz.

The other artists are said to have come from the Italian Opera in London, but which is not stated by my informant, who, however, gives me the name of the conductor — M. Moderati — a name of promise certainly, if anything be in a name. The hundredth anniversary of Cherubini's birthday, September 8th, has been celebrated at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and Faniska, an opera composed by the celebrated maestro in Vienna, in the year 1805, and played there in 1806, was produced on the occasion. I see by the German papers that the operas played at Vienna, at the Court theatre, from the 6th to the 26th of August, were the Huguenots, Le Postillon de Longjumeau, Satanella, La Dame Blanche, Don Juan, Falstaff, Belisario, Le Prophète, L'Etoile du Nord, and Lohengrin — a sufficiently eclectic series in all conscience! Mad. Czillag does not return to the Court Opera, but proceeds across the Atlantic to fulfil an engagement at New York. M. Rubinstein's new opera, entitled Les Enfans des Landes will be produced, it is said, in the course of November next.

I informed you some time since that on the occasion of their Imperial Majesties visiting Chambéry a Te Deum would be performed at the cathedral, recently composed by M. St. Arod. I have just received a few details relative to this performance, which may be found interesting. The choruses were composed of more than two hundred voices, selected from the schools of the city, from the Choral Society of Chambéry, and from a choral society at Lyons. The instrumental parts were confided to the band of the 54th Infantry, whose ranks were swelled by the addition of a number of instrumental performers, both professional and amateur, from Lyons. M. Cazant, the bass singer of the Paris Opera, had been sent for from Paris for the solo parts, and was assisted by M. Peront, a prizeman of the Conservatoire, and M. Mermant, first tenor of the principal theatre in Ghent.

I have received from my friend at Baden an account of a grand concert organised and conducted by M. Hector Berlioz, according to his annual custom. It took place in the Conversation Hall, and the principal artists engaged were Mesdames Viardot and Carvalho, and MM. Roger, Vieuxtemps, and Jacquard. The choruses and the orchestra were composed of professional performers from Baden, Carlsruhe, and Strasbourg. Among the items of the programme were M. Berlioz's overture to Les Francs Juges, and a fragment from Faust, comprising a recitative and air, chorus of gnomes and sylphs, by MM. Eberius and Eberhoffer, of the chapel of Carlsruhe.

Both these pieces were listened to with every mark of admiration, and the effect of the supernatural music in Faust was heightened by the thunder and lightning which was growling and flashing without during its execution. Meyerbeer has been staying for the last six weeks at Schwalbach, which he has now left to betake himself, it is said, viâ Paris, to Dieppe.

The San Carlos Theatre at Lisbon has made up its Italian company for the winter, under the management of M. Corradini. The principal names are: prime donne, Marietta Gazzaniga and Ferranti Kennet; prima mezzo soprano and contralto, Mad. Galli Marié; primi tenori, Sig. Agresti and Neri Beraldi; primo barytono, Sig. Fagotti; primo basso, Sig. Antonucci.

The theatres are beginning to wake up slightly, although not much novelty has yet made its appearance, the chief signs of novelty being one or two revivals. The Odeon has opened for the season with two new pieces; one in verse, entitled Le Parasite, and the other, in prose, called Les Mariages d'Amour. The first is by a very young author, M. Pailleron, who adopts the cigne of Emile Augier as his model. The second, by M. Ernest Dubreuil, takes up once more the hackneyed subject of marriages for mammon's sake, and does not relieve its staleness by any very refined or witty treatment. There has also been a new piece at the Gymnase, by M. Latour St. Ybars; it is entitled La Folle au Logis. The folle is a flighty young lady who throws up an engagement with a very "eligible party" on the eve of marriage, and runs after a dandified gentleman whom she has caught sight of but once. She is soon undeceived as to the merits of her dandy, and returns to the arms of her first love, who is soft enough to receive her there and make her his wife.

COLOGNE.—Herr Merelli's Italian operatic company has given several performances in the neighbouring towns of Dusseldorf, Crefeld, Bonn, and Aix-la-Chapelle. Here in Cologne, their head-quarters, we have had Don Juan, Lucrezia Borgia, Norma, and Ernani, portions of which were admirably rendered, though, as a whole, the performances were inferior to those of the comic operas. According to report, Herr Merelli has been requested by the Intendant-General of the Theatres Royal in Berlin to give a series of performances in that city. He is, in consequence, now engaged in strengthening his company, a measure which is decidedly necessary before they appear in the capital.

LEEDS TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1861.

(From our Correspondent).

In compliance with a notice issued by the Mayor (Wm. Kelsall, Esq.), a public meeting was held in the Civil Court of the Leeds Town Hall on Wednesday, "to make arrangements for the Musical Festival in 1861, and to consider the object to which the surplus fund shall be devoted." The Mayor presided, and amongst the gentlemen present were—Messrs. E. Wurtzburg, John Marshall (Horsforth Hall), P. O'Callaghan, C. Frost, G. Smith, J. Kitson, R. Barr, W. E. Hepper, S. Lawson, R. M. Carter, G. Brooke, J. W. Atkinson, Wm. Spark, W. Joy, G. Buckton, J. Holt, R. Rooke, E. C. Dray, J. Kitson, jun., J. N. Dickinson, Lyndon Smith, Fred Spark, &c.

The Mayor having briefly stated the object of the meeting, read a letter from Mr. Nunneley, suggesting that the whole of the surplus, if any, should not be devoted to the Infirmary, but be divided amongst the medical charities of the town.

Mr. Frost then moved the first resolution as follows:—

That in the opinion of this meeting, it is desirable to hold a musical festival in Leeds in the autumn of 1861.

He had not, he said, given much attention to the working of a musical festival, but judging from the great success of the first Leeds Festival, he saw no reason to fear a different result for the second. (Hear, hear.)

Ald. Kitson said he had much pleasure in seconding the motion, and he trusted that the Festival of 1861 would be but the beginning of a long series of successful triennial musical festivals in Leeds, (Hear, hear.) Those persons who had had the opportunity of hearing the opinions of musical men as to the magnificent performances at the first Leeds festival, could not but agree with him that an effort should be made to retain the good name which the town had won. (Hear, hear.) He saw nothing to prevent the second festival from being equal to the first, both in a musical and in a pecuniary sense. They might enlist the sympathies of those who were not what is called "musical" by assisting the charities of the town; and at the same time produce musical works which should prove attractive to lovers of music not only in Yorkshire, but throughout England. (Applause.)

Mr. Marshall heartily concurred in the opinions of the previous speakers, and cordially supported the resolution. In Leeds we had all the means and facilities for making a musical festival successful. There was a large population, a growing intelligence, and, he hoped he might say, an increasing wealth; and when they saw a small town like Norwich holding its established triennial festivals with success, could there be any doubt that Leeds would be entirely successful in the movement they were met that day to promote? (Applause.) Believing that a festival in 1861 would prove of great advantage to the town, he had great pleasure in supporting the resolution.

On being put to the meeting, the resolution was unanimously carried.

Mr. O'Callaghan said he had been entrusted with a resolution; but as he was neither an inhabitant nor a ratepayer of Leeds, he thought it should be proposed by some other person. He therefore begged to ask Mr. Marshall to undertake the duty.

Mr. Marshall admitted his readiness to do anything in support of the proposed festival. The resolution was a necessary and an important one—it was the appointment of an efficient committee. He begged to propose:—

That the following gentlemen be the General Committee, with power to add to their number, to make the necessary arrangements for the festival, and to take steps for procuring a guarantee fund:—The Mayor, J. W. Atkinson, Robert Barr, George Brooke, S. J. Brown, George Buckton, R. M. Carter, H. Dawson, J. N. Dickinson, E. C. Dray, Thomas Eagland, Sir Peter Fairbairn, John Gott, T. W. George, Joseph Gill, W. E. Hepper, Samuel Hey, Joseph Holt, William Illingworth, Walker Joy, James Kitson, J. D. Luccock, C. G. Macles, Julian Marshall, T. H. Marshall, Joseph Middleton, H. Oxley, John Piper, jun., R. L. Rooke, Samuel Smith, J. M. Smith, G. Smith, J. W. Scott, E. Stead, H. M. Sykes, John Wilkinson, Jos. Wright, E. Wurtzburg, and A. J. Williams.

This was seconded by Mr. J. Kitson, jun., and carried unanimously.

Mr. G. Buckton said that at a meeting of the old committee, recently held, a sub-committee was appointed to send out circulars for the meeting that day, and to draw up a series of resolutions. It was an instruction to that sub-committee to word a resolution recommending that the profits arising from the next festival should be divided as follows:—one half to the Leeds Infirmary, one-fourth to the Dispensary, one-eighth to the Eye and Ear Infirmary, and one-eighth to the Hospital for Women and Children. There was considerable discussion on the question, some gentlemen being of opinion that the whole of the profits should be again given to the Infirmary. (Hear.) He was not, however, prepared to move any resolution on the subject, but would leave it to any one present to do so.

Mr. G. Smith said he believed there was some intention to build a new Infirmary for Leeds. If that were so, and the festival profits could be wholly devoted to the building fund, it would no doubt make the festival popular, and tend to increase its success.

Mr. Barr remarked that nothing definite was yet decided upon relative to a new Infirmary.

Mr. Smith suggested that the question of appropriating the profits should be deferred to a future time, so that opportunity might be given to decide the question concerning a new Infirmary.

Mr. Wurtzburg was of opinion that the appropriation of the profits should be left for decision with those who subscribed to the guarantee fund. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Carter said that the subject was thoroughly discussed at the meeting of the old committee, and they decided that the profits should be divided in the manner stated. He thought that one of the greatest inducements to persons to subscribe to the guarantee fund would be a knowledge of the fact that the profits of the festival were to be divided amongst the principal charities of the town. A great deal of dissatisfaction was expressed at the close of the last festival because the whole of the profits were given to one charitable institution only. (Hear, hear.) There was the Dispensary, in North Street, which was equally deserving the support of the town, and stood quite as much in need of it as the Infirmary. (Hear, hear.) The question ought to be decided at once, and he therefore begged to move:—

That the profits of the next Leeds Festival be appropriated in the following manner:—one-half to the Infirmary, one-quarter to the Dispensary, one-eighth to the Eye and Ear Infirmary, and one-eighth to the Hospital for Women and Children.

Mr. G. Buckton observed that the old committee were divided in opinion as to the division of profits arising from the next festival. It appeared to him that it would be a strong inducement to persons to subscribe to the guarantee fund, if they were told that by so doing they would have a voice in disposing of the profits. Of course there would be a distinct understanding that the profits were to be divided amongst some of the charities of the town.

Mr. Frost supported Mr. Carter's resolution, and remarked that the Dispensary had not received that support from the town which it fairly deserved. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Wurtzburg then moved, and Mr. Buckton seconded:—

That the appropriation of the surplus fund of the Festival be left to the decision of the subscribers to the guarantee fund, it being an instruction to apply the same to the purposes of one or more of the public charities of Leeds,

Mr. Hepper seconded the original motion. They must all be aware, he said, that considerable dissatisfaction was caused in the town by the exclusive appropriation to the Infirmary of the profits obtained by the last festival; and they would extend the popularity of the next festival if they decided at once to divide the surplus money amongst the different charities of Leeds. (Hear, hear.) By deferring the question they would meet with considerable opposition: for it would very naturally be said that those connected with the Dispensary were a smaller body than at the Infirmary, and by a majority of numbers on the guarantee fund list, injustice might be done to the Dispensary and the other charitable institutions. He was one of the gentlemen who went to the Board Room of the Leeds Infirmary at the close of the festival in 1858, to present that Institution with the sum of £2,000. Of course it was accepted, but in his opinion it was received in an exceedingly cool manner; and those connected with the Infirmary had given scarcely any encouragement to the Festival. Gentlemen would know that he always spoke what he thought, and he certainly believed that the Festival Committee were not well treated by the patrons of the Infirmary.

The amendment was then put and lost, and Mr. Carter's motion was carried by 14 to 10.

A vote to the mayor, proposed by Mr. Joy and seconded by Mr. Dray, closed the proceedings.

The first meeting of the general committee is to be held on Monday afternoon next, when the honorary secretaries will be appointed, the sub-committees elected, and other important arrangements made for the festival.

IN RE READE AND MORE THAN READE.

(Not from the Saturday Review.)

The letter from a French dramatic author which has recently come under the public notice was curiously well timed. With a tenderness and courtesy worthy of all respect it pointed out one of the most flagrant and ludicrous instances of that "cleptomania" which Mr. Charles Reade has riddled through and through with the sharpest arrows of a literary quiver, inexhaustibly rich in arguments and illustrations. No reader of that powerful and attractive fiction, It is never too late to mend, will be surprised at the occasional eccentricity and the thorough nobleness and generosity of Mr. Charles Reade's commentaries on "The Eighth Commandment," as it is interpreted by our legislators, and obeyed by our playwrights, under cover of a certain proviso smuggled into the International Copyright Act of that famous millennial year 1851. "For in that year," writes Mr. Charles Reade, "the chief nations of Europe agreed that intellectual property should pass frontiers and sheets of water, yet still be property." We must do Mr. Reade the justice to say that he takes no pains to conciliate the goodwill of that class of writers which, to distinguish from the "independent" and the "immortal," he defines as salaried and ephemeral, a class to which, we fear, most journalists (unless they happen to be novelists or dramatists in the bargain) must belong. Perhaps we ought to despair of persuading so ardent and eloquent an admirer of the present Emperor of the French, that even an English journalist, though "salaried and ephemeral," need not, therefore, be "incapable of a noble action or of a noble sentiment," or "the enemy not only of the country but of the human race." These harmless amenities belong naturally enough to a page devoted to the glorification of that eminent patron of "independent" and "immortal" literature, Napoleon III.; but whether they assist the cause of an English author, jealous of his country's legislative and literary honour, is a question we leave to the calmer reflections of Mr. Reade. At any rate, no ebullition of an "inkster," whom we delight to reckon among the "Immortals," shall prevent us from thanking Mr. Reade in the name of national honour and international justice for having written a volume which is something better than a good book, for it is a good action. It is not the fault of the author of Christie Johnstone that he cannot make even "The Eighth Commandment" dull as fact, and unsaleable as a syllogism. He has fought like a Paladin; but you forget his sufferings and his dangers when he caracols through nearly four hundred pages clad in a suit of dazzling armour of art, scholarship, logic, irony, science, anecdote, and sarcasm. No doubt Mr. Reade has learnt in suffering what he sings in such inimitable prose. He tells us that his chivalrous enterprise has cost him heartache, headache, and heavy loss; but the British public, who think that authors ought to be pillaged for the public good, will revel in the Cervantic humour of the sermon, and lose sight of the brilliant preacher's text. We cannot find it in our hearts to count among Mr. Reade's sufferings this admirable performance. "The Eighth Commandment" becomes, under his hand, quite as amusing and infinitely more instructive than a batch of "novels of the season," and he may be very well content if it is its own reward.

Who was it, then, that invented the shameful proviso in the Act of 1851, according to which the protection accorded to the works of foreign dramatic authors is "not intended to prohibit fair imitations or adaptations of dramatic works to the stage in England and France respectively, but is only meant to prevent piratical translations?" By this proviso, as Mr. Reade proves exhaustively, and beyond the possibility of cavil, "the protection sold so dear to the dramatist in the heart of the statute is all juggled back, together with the heavy expenses the promised protection inveigles him into." The men who "carried wigged" the legislature into an act of fraud were "the stupidest of all the literary pirates that filch under false colours," "the smallest dunces of the century,"—in other words, the playwrights who live on "adaptations" and "imitations" from the French stage. The result of this iniquitous and contemptible proviso has been the destruction of a national drama in a country which once had the finest national drama in the world, and the assimilation of the trade of playwright to the business of one of those establishments where rags, and bones, and "dripping," are bought and sold. Mr. Reade quotes, chapter and verse, the playbills of the principal London theatres during a single year; nine-tenths of the pieces are "adapted" from the French. It is notorious that within the last year or two plays written by English authors of repute and described as "original" have been "adapted," scene by scene, from the French. There are English "dramatists" who have lived for years at the expense of the French inventors. No man who lives and moves habitually between Fleet Street and Pall Mall would hesitate to name the probable authors of a proviso which has closed the market to dramatic genius at home, starved all but the chiefs of the piratical crew, flooded the stage with exotic representations utterly and absurdly false to English life and nature, and, last but not least, sanctioned the robbery of the French dramatist under cover of a treaty supposed to protect him. No one who is fortunate enough to have a French dramatic author among his friends can be insensible to the deep stain which this miserable "adaptation" proviso has inflicted upon our national honour; and where the good opinion of a body so influential in the formation of public feeling and popular opinion as the French dramatic authors is concerned, an act of mere bad faith, involving damage to particular interests, becomes an act of grievous national impolicy as well as of grave international injustice. There is no alliance, as we have repeatedly insisted, between two such nations as France and England, so hopeful and enduring as a moral and intellectual alliance; but no such alliance can subsist on deliberate dishonesty on the one side, and a contemptuous sense of injury on the other. Mr. Charles Reade has completely annihilated the impudent sophistries of the piratical interest, who presume to hoist the banner of Free Trade, as if "duty free" meant "purchase free." Sometimes, indeed, Mr. Reade appears to be pointing a sixty-eight pounder at a "bluebottle," so inane are the pretensions of his enemy. For instance, when he undertakes to prove that English genius is dramatic, that great novelists may be great dramatists, and that stolen French invention drives English dramatic inventors from the stage, and starves all but the leaders of the shameless gang, we feel that he is wasting excellent powder and shot. Alphonse Karr, years ago, drew up a law of copyright in a single clause, declaring that intellectual property is property. It will take a long time yet to convince a mechanical, industrial, and sporting Legislature that brainwork is work, and that intellectual produce is property. Mr. Reade shows how in the United States, where patent rights are strictly asserted, mechanical invention is in advance of all the world; whilst, in default of international copyright, American national literature may be said to exist only by favour of the occasional chivalry of a few English publishers. In France, though dramatic literature is by no means in the high moral and intellectual condition which Mr. Charles Reade, as an admirer of the Second Empire, loves to imagine, it is certainly flourishing enough, in a commercial sense, to pay the playwrights who adorn the Second Empire, and to pay them handsomely. But if we look at home, we find an English playwright described in the bills of one of the most respectable of our theatres as the author of Casimir Delavigne's best play, and of a famous drama by Alexandre Dumas.

Mr. Charles Reade, armed with poignant personal experiences, spurns the preposterous theory that "adaptation" is not less difficult than invention, for he has himself achieved conspicuous success in both. Only; when he proposed to adapt a French drama he bought the right first, and was driven to law to defend the same from wholesale pillage. We believe that the evil is slowly correcting itself; and if our national drama revives, it will thank the author of "It is never too late to mend" for having saved it from suicide.

[PANURGE to the rescue! Surely the foregoing must be the perpetration of an "inkster," to "mend" whose pen would bother the "trenchant glaive" with which Sir Gawaine and brethren hewed King Pellinore—who had slain King Lot—who had married King Arthur's sister, and was yet not the father of Sir Mordred, King Arthur's unnatural son and nephew—who was killed at "the last great battle," by the hands of King Arthur himself—who was King Lot's wife's own brother—who, &c.—ED. M. W.]

BENEDICT'S ERIN AND CALEDONIA.*

(From the Illustrated Times).

THAT these brilliant morceaux de bravoura should have attained almost unexampled popularity is not to be wondered at, considering the manner, at once clever and congenial, in which Mr. Benedict has treated the beautiful melodies that form their groundwork. For "Erin" he has selected two of the most racy of the (supposed) Irish national tunes, which will be recognised under the comparatively recent titles of "Believe me if all those endearing young charms" and "The Minstrel Boy." For "Caledonia" he has had recourse to "Auld Robin Gray," and one of the liveliest, most piquant, and characteristic of the Scottish reels. In both instances the wisdom of his choice is borne out by the complete success of his workmanship. The airs are admirably harmonised, and the passages are, without exception, graceful, showy, and effective. The plan of each fantasia is clear, well defined, and masterly; and in the Irish as in the Scotch essay the character of the tune is imitated throughout with the utmost felicity, though it is by no means certain that "The Minstrel Boy" is an Irish tune, any more than "The girl I left behind me," "The Cruiskeen Lawn," and others which were never thought to be anything but English until Moore adapted them. We often hear of Scotch and Irish music being wonderfully "characteristic," and yet persons who should be good judges are perpetually making mistakes as to the character of each. Mr. Chappell in his volume of English national music, frequently remarks and shows that such and such a composer or compiler (among others Moore) could not tell the tunes of one country from those of another. From this we infer—while fully believing that each possesses a certain number of airs clearly impressed with the stamp of nationality—that owing to interchange, imitation, and probably some other causes, there is a far greater resemblance than is generally supposed between the airs of England and Ireland, and also between those of England and Scotland. During the last year "fantasias on Irish airs" have been published by Mr. Wallace (an Irishman) and Mr. Benedict, in each of which one of the motives is "The Minstrel Boy," otherwise "My lodging is on the cold ground." With regard to the nationality of this tune, Mr. W. Chappell tells us that it has been a stock song in England since 1775, and that it was never claimed for Ireland until the beginning of this century, when Thomas Moore included it among his Irish melodies. "I believe," he adds, "there is no ground whatever for calling it Irish. The late Edward Bunting, who was engaged to note down all the airs played by the harpers of the different provinces of Ireland when they were collected together at Belfast in 1792, and who devoted a long life to the collection of Irish music, distinctly assured me that he did not believe it to be Irish, that no one of the harpers played the tune, and that it had no Irish character. I do not think a higher authority as to Irish music could be quoted, or one more tenacious of any infringement upon airs which he considered to be of truly Irish origin. I might add the testimony of Dr. Crotch, Messrs. Ayrton, T. Cook, J. Augustine Wade, and others, both Irish and English, who have expressed similar opinions to that of Bunting; but, in fact, there is a total want of evidence, external and internal, of its being an Irish tune. About the same time that Moore claimed it it was printed in Dublin in Clifton's 'British Melodies.'"

* Published by Boosey and Sons.

GRISI.—The report that Mad. Grisi intends to sing at Her Majesty's Theatre, proves, as we hoped it would do, for her sake, a mistaken rumour.—Athenæum.

MEYERBEER has consented to become President of the Kerein Teutonia, a choral union in Paris, and is said to have composed a new chorus for them.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—This establishment is announced to commence its third season, under the management of Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. W. Harrison, on Monday, October the 1st.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—The Critic says it is feared the fire at St. Martin's Hall has not only destroyed the extensive music library of Mr. Hullah, but also that belonging to the Society of British Musicians.—The Critic's fears are groundless.

ROTTERDAM.—A society has been formed to establish a German opera. Herr Skruss, of Prague, has been engaged as conductor, and has already arrived to enter on his new sphere of action. It is said that Mad. Prausse, from Prague, is to be the prima donna; Herr Grimminger, the tenor; Herr Brassin, the barytone; and Herr Carl Formes, the bass.

COBLENTZ.—A short time since, Mlle. Marie Cruvelli gave a concert, at which she sang airs from Rossini's Tancredi, and Donizetti's Favorita, a romance from Verdi's Trovatore, and two German songs by Schumann and F. Schubert. Her beautifully full alto voice and admirable style, especially in the Italian pieces, gained for her enthusiastic applause.

OSTEND (From Le Courier des Bains).—A numerous and fashionable audience assembled last Wednesday, to "assist" at the concert given by M. Depret in the salons of the Casino. This excellent artist, whose talent has been admired for the last two years in London, and the principal towns in England, sang several compositions, which were most charmingly rendered, and met with the greatest success. M. Depret is certainly the best singer that we have heard for a long time; he possesses a splendid voice of unusual compass, power, and flexibility, which he uses with an excellent method. M. Depret was ably assisted by Mlle. Vronen and M. Libotton, for whom a brilliant career is in store, and who gave unqualified satisfaction. In short, M. Depret's concert satisfied the most critical, and the unanimous applause he received proves that his talent was deservedly appreciated.

EASTERN OPERA HOUSE, PAVILION THEATRE.—Mr. John Douglas can hardly estimate his prima donna, Mad. Lancia, at her true artistic value, else it is not possible that he would make her sing six nights in the week, a call upon her means, histrionic and vocal, that no artist living could undergo with impunity. That Mad. Lancia can sustain herself through such an ordeal without breaking down is owing to her admirable method and her indomitable energy. From the judgment, as well as enterprise exhibited in all former administrations by Mr. Douglas, we may nevertheless infer that such a hazardous employment of his principal operatic strength is to be attributed to necessity not choice. The difficulty of procuring a soprano singer who could with anything like success alternate performances with Mad. Lancia may be easily supposed; and the audiences of the Eastern Opera have been too well taught in the new campaign not to appreciate the difference between legitimate and spurious talent, or to be satisfied with mediocrity. Hence Mr. Douglas finds himself in "a fix!" and Mad. Lancia is unintentionally made the sacrifice, or will be, provided no competent artist be discovered in time to sing on the off-nights. The difficulty is enormously increased now that the two great Italian theatres are about to be opened for English opera, which of course involves the engagement of a large complement of our available artists; and still farther—if we are informed rightly—by the conversion of Drury Lane and the Alhambra into minor opera houses, whereby, it may be presumed, all the superfluous talent of the country will find employment, if their services have not been already retained. Under these circumstances we can sympathise with the manager of the new opera house in Whitechapel, who is enforced against his will to make too free a use of his prima donna.

Since our last notice several operas, Italian and English, have been produced. Of these the Traviata, La Sonnambula, and Fra Diavolo proved most attractive—the last, indeed, so much so that it has been repeated frequently. The Traviata was given in Italian, and, but for Mad. Lancia's delightful singing and admirable acting as Violetta, would have proved a failure, from the utterly bad performance of the tenor, Signor Giuletti, whose Alfredo was literally unworthy the lowest audiences of Whitechapel. La Sonnambula fared something better, although Mr. Parkinson knows nothing of acting, and does not appear to find Italian music kindred to his means. This gentleman, nevertheless, is very popular with the East-end public—why, we have not been able to ascertain—and as favouritism, like charity, covers a multitude of sins, his deficiencies and solecisms not merely escape censure but are converted into causes for approbation. Mr. Parkinson, indeed, may thank his stars that his audiences are so indulgent, or their senses so obtuse. Both in Violetta and Amina, Mad. Lancia created a perfect furore, and had she been even decently supported either opera might have been played for weeks successively. Fra Diavolo has, however, proved the most enduring success. Mr. Augustus Braham sustains the character of the brigand chief with excellent spirit, and sings the music with much taste and sweetness; and Mr. Parkinson shows to greater advantage in the part of Lorenzo than anything operatic he has yet attempted. As for Mad. Lancia's Zerlina, it cannot be too highly praised. The music is sung with irreproachable grace and expression, and the acting, in many respects, is better than that of any artist we have seen. Linda di Chamouni is in rehearsal for Mad. Lancia and Mr. Augustus Braham.

Manchester.—The Jullien Festival.—Last evening the friends of the late M. Jullien mustered extensively at the Belle Vue Gardens, in aid of the fund being now raised for the widow of the amiable and talented conductor. The number present was about ten thousand, and, as the weather was fine, music and dancing, to say nothing of liberal feasting, were evidently enjoyed with no common gusto. First came the Campbell Minstrels; after which Blondin walked on the tight rope, stretched across the lake in front of the city of Badajoz; upon this followed performances by the military bands of the 11th Hussars and 84th Regiment. They both played with good taste, conducted by their respective bandmasters, Mr. J. P. Clarke and M. Brozang. Part second of the concert introduced to us his Highness the Prince George Galitzin—one of the finest built men that has ever stepped before a critical public, and who presents also finely cut features, full of an intelligent expression. We learn that he is in England because of his love of that good cause which is to end in the freedom of Europe. The Prince was here as conductor of the instrumentalists, once known as Jullien's Orchestra, and in addition he appeared during the evening in the character of a composer, his popular "Surprise" Polka being played under his baton with remarkable effect. There is genius in his eye, and in his conducting he shows great nervous energy, as well as that precision of manner which the position he undertook so much demands. The noble conductor—noble beyond the conventional—received a most hearty welcome from an audience packed in every part of the great music hall. That most pleasant of ballad singers, Miss Poole, appears to be as great a favourite as in those younger days when she used to stir the hearts of young England with her brilliant tap of the drum. Her voice and manner are as charming as in her brightest time, and she seems to be one of those whom kind mother Nature takes a delight in cherishing with the freshness of youth. Besides all these good things, we had the pleasure of listening to a large volunteer chorus, under the direction of Mr. D. W. Banks, who kept them together in his usually able style. The whole "went off" very successfully, and so did the fireworks, and then the people "went off," and all as "merry as a marriage bell." We trust the result may be a success to Madame Jullien; and it is gratifying to find that a further effort in her aid is to be made in the Free-trade Hall on Saturday next, when a considerable part of the above musical entertainment will be repeated, along with other attractions. She will in that locality appeal to those audiences which used for so many years to gather liberally at the call of poor Jullien, whose baton, we are informed, was there wielded for the last time.—Manchester Weekly Times, Sept. 8.

Band Contest at Manchester.—There was a band contest at Belle Vue Gardens, Manchester, on Monday last. The following five bands competed:—Sherwood Rangers (Yeomanry), Newark, conductor, William Lilly; Dewsbury, John Peel; Halifax (Volunteer Rifles), J. Dewhurst; Albion (Heckmondwike, near Leeds); Deighton (near Huddersfield), Philip Robinson. Each played two pieces; one of their own choice, the other being Herold's Zampa overture. This having been done, the judges required that two bands whose number they stated, should play again. This proved to be Halifax and Dewsbury; and the latter repeating their own selection (one from "La Sonnambula") were required once more to play. All five bands then joined in the National Anthem; and the judges made the following award of the prizes:—1st, Halifax, £35; 2nd, Dewsbury, £15; 3rd, Sherwood Rangers, £10; 4th, Albion, £5; 5th, Deighton, £2. Bands from Wyke, near Cleckbeaton, and the Barrington Colliery, near Morpeth, were stated to be unavoidably prevented from competing after being entered. The judges were:—Herr Brozang, 84th Regiment; Mr. J. P. Clark, 11th Hussars; and Mr. G. Kern, 41st Regiment.

GERMAN MEN'S SONG FESTIVAL.

We will put a question and try to answer it. This question is: What bearing have the German Men's Singing Societies had upon the growth and development of musical art? Have they furthered or retarded it? This question may be sub-divided into two. First: Has the cultivation of male part-singing benefited the productive side of musical art-composition? and secondly; has it benefited the vocal reproduction, the art of singing.

All musical persons of judgment and taste agree, that by far the greater part of compositions for male voices have but very little musical merit, if any at all. The classic German masters, Bach, Handel, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, have produced so little in this line, and what there is of them is so decidedly inferior to their other vocal works, that it would never have been a sufficient cause to establish special societies for its reproduction. Franz Schubert, too, has written too little to build societies, upon although of some of his male four-part songs might be truly said: ex ungue leonem. It is characteristic however of the tendency and the taste of their societies that you see very seldom—perhaps never—a piece of Franz Schubert's on their programmes; and that the few compositions left by Robert Schumann are neglected just as much. It is true that Mendelssohn has written some very remarkable works for male voices, among which the Antigone music stands prominent, but none of them, save one, has become popular with our societies, so that hardly a festival passes by during which the "Farewell to the woods" is not sung by heart—and, generally speaking, very poorly too.

The principal food of these societies at their private meetings, as well as at their grand joint festivals, consists—besides the Gambrinic malt juice—of the "still" liquid brewed by a few artizan-composers, who meet the enormous yearly demand for new part-songs by opening their sluices of musical idiocy and mediocrity par excellence. Masterworks, similar to the Singer's Rambles, Student's Rambles, Mordgrundsbruck, &c., flood the market in the cheapest of editions, excluding all competition of copyists, and satisfy to a marvel the wants and tastes of most societies and their respective directors. In these productions phrases take the place of an original melodic element, and instead of an independent carriage of the parts you find a piano accompaniment arranged for voices; for in almost every bar of these popular works you can trace the keyboard easily.

To proceed to the second part of our question: in the art of singing, are the voices benefited by the cultivation of male part-singing? Every musician who has any experience in vocal music would answer, not at all; on the contrary, it is highly injurious to voices. All the mediocre manufacturers of male choruses speculate on the effect of the highest notes of the tenor-voice. Such an Amphion of the Liedertafels thinks to himself; a high A or B never fails of its effect, and there is hardly a society without one or two first tenors who can sound these high notes with full chest voice; why then should I not put them in as often as possible? It would be well if the assassination of tenor voices could be placed under the surveillance of the police. Any one who has ever been present at a regular meeting of a Men's Singing Club must have noticed, that instruction in the proper use of the vocal organs, or even correct pronunciation of the words, is never thought of. Practising, cigar in mouth, and beer glass within reach, is kept up till the first tenors cry for grace, and the bill of fare.

An excursion generally proves fatal to some young promising tenor voices, which if they had joined a mixed chorus instead of a male chorus might have been preserved and been useful. But it has of late become very difficult to obtain male members, especially high tenors, for singing societies in which ladies participate. In the first place the compositions which are studied and performed there are altogether too classical, that is to say too tedious for the majority of our young men. Of course nobody can become interested in the works of Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, without first possessing himself of some initiatory musical knowledge. Moreover our first tenors, if they were to join mixed choruses, would but too often stand convicted of utter ignorance in reading readily—especially in the tenor-clef—in counting and keeping time. And this is reason enough for keeping aloof from societies in which they sing fugues—horrid word! Such is the state of things now, that Choral Societies have to engage professional singers to get even a decent proportion of tenors and basses. It has happened quite lately that, in a pretty large provincial capital, not far from Berlin, there were but seven male singers to ninety-seven ladies present at an oratorio rehearsal. Many choral societies which used to flourish have been obliged to disband only for reasons of this kind. The principal cause of this is the so-called cultivation of male part-singing. Really, if old Zelter—supposed to be the Columbus of the Liedertafels—could have known how this discovery would affect the higher vocal music, he would have looked at it with horror.—Berlin Vossiche Zeitung.

THE NEW YORK MUSICAL REVIEW AND MUSICAL WORLD came to us last week in its new form, which is substantially the old form of the Review. We part with reluctance from our old friend the Musical World, which for many years, under Mr. R. Storrs Willis, was a constant and faithful advocate of whatever was highest and best in art, and the memory of which will always be pleasantly associated with his name. The new paper will doubtless gain a new life and strength from their union of forces, and, under the able conduct of its editors, and its enterprising publishers, Mason Brothers, we doubt not will have continued prosperity and success.—Dwight's "Boston Journal of Music."

Advertisements.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,
Price 8s.
MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,
DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,
And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.
"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.
"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

JUST PUBLISHED, RUDIMENTS of HARMONY with Progressive Exercises. By G. A. MACFARREN; Price 7s. 6d. Cramer, Beale, & Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

NEW SONGS by EMANUEL AGUILAR.—"SYMPATHY," poetry by ELLIS BELL, dedicated to Signor FERRARI, price 2s., and "IN A WOOD ON A WINDY DAY," poetry by ACTON BELL, dedicated to Miss GRACE LINDO, price 3s., are now published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"These songs, written by the younger sisters of Charlotte Brontë (Currer Bell, author of 'Jane Eyre,') have been clothed by Mr. Aguilar in beautiful and expressive music. 'Sympathy' is full of tranquil tenderness; 'In a Wood on a Windy Day' paints the agitated and exulting mood often engendered by the stormy aspects of nature—the wind roaring among the branches and scattering the withered leaves, or the dashing of the billows on the sea-beach. Mr. Aguilar has heightened the effect of this last song by the picturesque character of his pianoforte accompaniment."—Daily News. "In a Wood on a Windy Day," was sung by Miss Grace Lindo with great success at Mr. Aguilar's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.

LOCH KATRINE WALTZ, on Scotch Airs, and KILLARNEY WALTZ, on Irish Airs. By LAURENT. Both Illustrated. Price 3s. each. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

MARGARETTA WALTZ, on Balfe's Celebrated Song. By LAURENT. Beautifully illustrated in colours by BRANDARD. Companion to the MAUD and BELOVED STAR WALTZES. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

TENNYSON'S EXQUISITE LYRIC—"FOR EVER AND FOR EVER,"—has been as exquisitely set to Music by Mr. BLANCHARD JERROLD. Vide Illustrated News, September 8th. It is just published by Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

CZERNY'S 50 BEST EXERCISES (from the 101), 1s. CZERNY'S ETUDE DE LA VELOCITE, 2s. 6d. complete, or in Three Parts, 1s. each. CZERNY'S 101 EXERCISES, Two Parts, 1s. each. HERZ'S EXERCISES and SCALES, 1s. Boosey's editions must be ordered.

KUHE'S ROBERT LE DIABLE, published this day, price 3s. Also, KUHE'S FANTASIAS on DINORAH, SATANELLA, DOMINO NOIR, ZAMPA, LES VEPRES SICILIENNES, 3s. each. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

IN ENGLISH.—Dinorah, 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 6s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Parma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 18s.; Der Freischutz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbiere, 10s.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English words and the original Foreign text, in handsome cloth volumes. Boosey's editions must be ordered. 28 Holles Street.

KREUTZER'S 40 STUDIES for VIOLIN, 1s. 6d.; Rode's 36 Caprices for Violin, 1s. 6d.; Fiorillo's Caprices for Violin, 1s. 6d.; De Beriot's 7 Airs, with Variations, for Violin, 1s.; Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies by all the great Masters, for the Violin, 1s.; Boosey's Violin Tutor, 24 pages, large size. Boosey & Son, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 VIOLIN DANCES, 1s. (First Series); 100 Dances (Second Series), 1s.; 100 Ballads, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 Reels and Country Dances, 1s.; 100 Waltzes (by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky), 1s.; 10 Standard Overtures, 1s.; Boosey's 23 Complete Operas for Violin, 1s. each (including Dinorah, Satanella, Bohemian Girl, Maritana, Il Trovatore, La Traviata, &c.). Boosey's editions must be ordered. Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 DANCES for FLUTE, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 Exercises and Studies by the great Masters, 1s. All arranged by R. S. PRATTEN. Also 12 Complete Operas for the Flute, arranged by CLINTON, 1s. each, including Il Trovatore, Sonnambula, Les Huguenots, &c. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, Manufacturers of Pratten's Perfected Flutes.

BOOSEY'S 25 DUETS for TWO CORNETS-A-PISTONS, arranged by THOMAS HARPER, price 1s.; Boosey's 100 Dances for Cornet-à-Pistons, 1s.; Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for Cornet-à-Pistons, 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 CONCERTINA DANCES, 1s.; 100 Popular Melodies for Concertina, 1s.; 100 Sacred Melodies for Concertina, 1s., arranged by GEORGE CASE; Boosey's Concertina Tutor, 24 pages, large size, 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

FOR BEGINNERS.—Thou art so Near, Solo and Duet, 1s.; The Shadow Air (Dinorah), 1s.; The Power of Love, 1s.; Willie, we have Missed You, 1s.; Beautiful Star, 1s.; Maud Waltz, 1s.; Satanella Quadrille (complete), 1s.; König's Hero Polka, 1s. All in the Pianoforte Recreations. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish.
Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, September 15, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 38 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Pianoforte / Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) / Vocal Classes	Mr. POWELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian / Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

MEYERBEER'S GRAND MARCH for the SCHILLER FESTIVAL, performed at the Floral Hall and Crystal Palace Concerts, as Solo or Duet for Pianoforte.—Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

EASTERN OPERA HOUSE.—PAVILION THEATRE. Lessee, Mr. JOHN DOUGLAS. Continued success of the Grand Opera Company, which has surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the Manager. The Theatre crowded to the ceiling. On Monday, FRA DIAVOLO, supported by Messrs. W. M. PARKINSON, A. BRAHAM, O. SUMMERS, Mad. LANCIA, Miss FANNY TERNAN, and Mr. EDMUND ROSENTHAL. On Tuesday and Wednesday, TROVATORE. On Friday and Saturday, MARTHA. On Thursday, a Special Night, THE BOHEMIAN GIRL and NORMA, on which occasion Mr. MELCHOR WINTER, the new tenor, will make his first appearance. Band and Chorus of 100 artistes. Conclude all this week with a MUSICAL BURLETTA. Boxes, 2s.; Lower Circle, 1s. 6d.; Pit, 6d.; Pit Stalls, 1s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 6d.; Private Boxes, 10s., 15s., and 3s. each person.

MAD. LAURA BAXTER begs to announce that she will give a SERIES of PERFORMANCES of SACRED and MISCELLANEOUS VOCAL MUSIC during the ensuing Season. Mad. LAURA BAXTER will be assisted by eminent artists, and also by her Amateur and Professional Pupils. Communications to be addressed to Mad. LAURA BAXTER, at her Residence, 155 Albany Street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce that she will remain in Town for the Winter.—All letters for Town and Country Engagements, Oratorios, &c., to be addressed 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

THE ARION (Eight-Part Choir). — Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. — The Members are informed that the next Meeting will take place at 13 Berners Street, on Thursday, October 4th, at 8 o'clock precisely.—Prospectuses of the Society may be obtained on application to the Conductor,

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES VOCAL UNION, consisting of the following Artistes—Miss AMELIA HILL, Mrs. JOHN HAYWARD, Mr ROBERT MASON, Mr. W. T. BRIGGS; Conductor, Mr. W. C. STOCKLEY; may be engaged for ORATORIOS or MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS, with or without Solo or Orchestral Instrumentalists.

Applications for terms, &c. to be made to the Secretary, Mr. W. T. Briggs, Cathedral Choir, Worcester; or to Mr. W. C. Stockley, 120 Moseley Road, Birmingham.

MR. WALLWORTH begs to inform his pupils, friends, and the public that he has REMOVED to 81 PARK STREET, GROSVENOR SQUARE, W.—The Second Edition of his "ART OF SINGING" is just published, and may be had at his residence.

VOLUNTEER BAND now forming in the 37th Middlesex (G. G. B.) Volunteer Rifles. Any persons willing to join are requested to apply at Head Quarters, 35 Bernard Street, Russell Square.

BOARD and RESIDENCE for PROFESSIONAL LADIES.—Miss Le DIEU begs to announce to her Friends and the Public that she receives a limited number of Young Professional Ladies as BOARDERS. 18 Chalcot Crescent, Primrose Hill, N.W.

THE SON of a PROFESSOR of MUSIC seeks employment. Has a well-grounded knowledge of music. A small salary only expected to commence with.—Address A. Z., 13 Salmon Parade, Bridgewater, Somersetshire.

MUSICAL EDUCATION.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, of good education and address, who can command a premium of £100, may be received for Five Years into a first-class Musical Instrument Establishment, of thirty years' standing, in the West of England. He would be instructed in the Organ, Pianoforte, and Singing, and a Salary would be given in the latter three years. Apply to S., care of Messrs. Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London.

JUST PUBLISHED, RUDIMENTS of HARMONY with Progressive Exercises. By G. A. MACFARREN. Price 7s. 6d. Cramer, Beale, & Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting LIVERPOOL will find it advantageous to engage the services of

LEE, NIGHTINGALE & CO.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Mail, and Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, PAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

ONE PENNY B 15 NEWSPAPER

NEW SONGS by BALFE.—"I LOVE YOU," sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES with such immense success at Mr. Martin's (Exeter Hall), Mr. Lindsay Sloper's, and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts (St. James's Hall), and at Mr. Balfe's benefit concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens before 10,000 persons, 3s.; as well as Balfe's two charming Ballads, "Oh! take me to they heart again," 2s., sung by Miss KATE RANO (mezzo-soprano) at Mad. de Vaucheran's Concert; and "I'm not in love, remember," 2s. 6d., sung by Mlle. SEDLATZEK at the fashionable Concerts at Campden House, are published by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By EMILE BERGER. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, arranged for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By I. LIEBICH. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich, is now published, price 2s. (forming No. 1 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte by the above author), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"I NEVER KNEW HOW DEAR THOU WERT." New Song, by H. K. MORLEY, composed expressly for and sung by Miss LASCELLES (the Poetry by CATHERINE WARFIELD) is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 5s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," by I. LIEBICH. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebech (forming No. 2 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte, by the above author), is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW ENGLISH DUET.—"Sweet is the dream," Duet by CAMPANA, being an English version of his celebrated aria "Sera d'Amore." Price 2s. 6d. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, for Pianoforte, by Smart, complete, 3s.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass, do. 3s.; Moore's Irish Melodies, for Pianoforte, by Nordmann, 2s. 6d.; Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, complete, with Portrait and Introduction by J. W. Davison, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Meyerbeer's Dinorah, complete, for Pianoforte Solo, 7s. 6d.; the Juvenile Pianoforte Album, 12 pieces, illustrated and bound, 3s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, 100 gems from the newest Operas, for Pianoforte, in cloth, 12s.; Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances, for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by Strauss, Lanner and Labitsky, for Piano, 3s.; Czerny's Etude de la Velocité, 2s. 6d.; Czerny's 101 Exercises, 2s.; Boosey's Part-Song Miscellany, 18 Original Compositions, handsomely bound, 5s.; the Harmonium Museum, 100 Sacred and Secular Subjects for Harmonium, with Instructions, 7s. 6d.; Engel's Harmonium Operatic Album, 60 Gems for Harmonium, 7s. 6d.; Christy's Minstrels' Album, 24 Songs in One Book, 2s. 6d.; the Verdi Album, 25 Songs, in English and Italian, 4s.; Dinorah, for Voice and Piano, complete, 12s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.

Composed by Brinley Richards

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"GOOD NIGHT," by R. ANDREWS. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where R. ANDREWS'S transcription for the Pianoforte of "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR" (Reichardt) may be obtained, price 2s.

RAMSGATE SANDS QUADRILLE.—The most popular set of the day. Founded on favourite and well-known melodies, illustrating a visit to Ramsgate, in characteristic music. By BUCKHARDT. With a most superb Frontispiece, by Brandard, in Colours. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

NOTRE DAME. Romance for the Pianoforte, by EMILE BERGER. Founded on a very beautiful subject by Pergolesi. Price 3s. Illustrated by Laby. Published this day by Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

SCHLOESSER'S BRILLIANT DUETS for Pianoforte, on Oberon, Dinorah, Traviata, and Rigoletto. 5s. each. All effective, brilliant, and moderately difficult. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL ROOM MUSIC-BOOK, price 4s. in crimson cloth, containing 50 Waltzes, 40 Polkas, 10 Galops, 2 Schottisches, 2 Varsovianas, and 12 Sets of Quadrilles (complete). Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

ASCHER'S CLOCHES du VILLAGE (just published), 3s.; Ascher's "Thou art so near," 3s.; Ascher's Dinorah, 3s.; Ascher's Les Vêpres Siciliennes, 3s.; Ascher's Un Ballo in Maschera, 3s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

AN EVENING WITH MEYERBEER (published this day). Mélange for the Pianoforte, by NORDMANN, introducing beautiful subjects from Crociato, Robert le Diable, Dinorah, Les Huguenots, Vielka, &c. Price 3s.; solo, 6s.; duet also.

AN EVENING WITH BALFE, solo and duet.

AN EVENING WITH CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS, solo and duet.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE DRIPPING WELL, for Pianoforte. By GOLLMICK. Third Edition. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING PIANOFORTE TUTOR. 36 pages, music size.

CHEAP EDITION of IL TROVATORE for Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian Words, in 8 monthly parts, 1s. each, commencing October 1. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

WORCESTER, Sept. 15, 1860.

We were necessarily compelled to close our notice at the termination of the Thursday morning's performance. The concert the same evening, being the last, was attended by an audience which not only filled the hall to suffocation — even standing room being unobtainable, — but overflowed into lobbies and staircase, and necessitated the refusal of upwards of 300 persons, who had unwisely deferred taking tickets until the last moment, and so had only themselves to thank for the disappointment. A selection from Vincent Wallace's Lurline, including the overture, the songs, "Flow on, O silver Rhine," by Miss Parepa; "Sweet Form," by Mr. Sims Reeves; the quartet, "Through the world;" and chorus, "Sail, sail on the midnight gale;" inaugurated the first part. Mad. Novello's reading of "Robert toi que j'aime," although somewhat deficient in energy, was much applauded, as were also Mad. Sainton-Dolby and Mad. Rudersdorff—the first, in Handel's "Cangio d'aspetto;" the last, in Ferdinand Hiller's "Wanderer's night hymn," and "The Lark." Arnold's old song, "Flow, thou regal purple stream," originally sung in The Castle of Andalusia, was forcibly given by Mr. Weiss; and a fine performance by Mr. Blagrove of his own violin fantasia on Luisa Miller, brought the first part to a close. That the overture to William Tell should be received with enthusiasm and encored (the last movement being repeated), was not surprising; and, if we had occasion in the opening of our article to take exception to the local conductors generally, we must make the amende to Mr. Dove, whom we congratulate upon his direction in both the sacred and secular music. Mr Sims Reeves was encored in a new ballad, by Mr. Henry Oakeley (an amateur of the neighbourhood), to Lord Byron's "Farewell, if ever fondest prayer." Mozart's duet, "La dove prende," by Mr. and Mad. Weiss; the familiar "La biondina in gondoletta," executed by Mlle. Parepa; two national airs by Mad. Clara Novello, and a third upon a vociferous recall; Balfe's "Green trees," by Mad. Sainton-Dolby; "Il mio piano," by Signor Belletti; Mendelssohn's "O hills, O vales," with a bolero of Randegger, sung by Mad. Rudersdorff; and "God save the Queen," solos by Mlle. Parepa, brought the concert to an end at eleven o'clock. By some want of arrangement the windows, which on Tuesday night, with less than 600 persons, and a very cold north-east wind blowing, were kept open to the manifest discomfort of the audience, as already mentioned, were this time carefully closed; the external temperature being decidedly mild. The consequence was, that the densely crowded room was warm to an unpleasant degree, an evil admitting of a very simple remedy, to which it seemed nobody's business to attend. An improvement has been effected since the last meeting in the lighting of the orchestra—a semicircular line of gas jets throwing an ample flood of light on the music-desks. The weather, which up to this point had been magnificent, took a turn, and Friday morning broke with heavy clouds and a generally lowering look, foreboding rain, which soon came down in cold driving showers. Fortunately, before eleven o'clock the sun burst forth, and all looked bright again by the time that the stream of people and carriages had set in towards the Cathedral. Here, as elsewhere, the Messiah is sure to attract the largest attendance, and nearly 2500 persons were assembled in the Cathedral, an increase of 700 on the Festival of '57. As every reserved seat had been taken for some days, an additional space was made in the aisles, and several found seats in the choir, where the effect is, perhaps, finer than in any other part. From an early hour numbers of vehicles from the country poured in; the spring-cart and old-fashioned gig, evidently accustomed to do duty on ordinary market days, for the conveyance of the sturdy farmer and his thrifty wife, now carried the roseate daughters, dressed in their best, and bearing that glow of health in their faces which residence in fresh air and among green fields alone can give. Numbers too came in by trains from Gloucester and the neighbouring towns, and speedily made their way to the Cathedral, anxious to secure a good position as early as possible. Later in the morning came one unbroken line of elegant equipages, many of the unquestionable Long-Acre stamp, and showing by their emblazoned coats-of-arms the style and title of the occupants; Worcestershire being remarkably rich in county families and aristocratic residents. We missed, however, the presence of Earl Dudley, who, as Lord Ward, has made himself so well known a supporter of matters musical, and we should have thought would have made a point of attending, or if not, at least of sending a handsome donation, considering his large possessions in the county. We do not at present see his name amongst the donors to the charity, but hope we may yet hear of a cheque being forwarded from North Britain, where his lordship is at present enjoying himself in Grouseland.

With one exception (the chorus "Let us break their bonds," which opened unsteadily,) the execution of Messiah was irreproachable, and the effect such as it is impossible to obtain elsewhere. Mad. Clara Novello seemed determined to leave an impression on her hearers which should not easily be forgotten, and the emotion was manifest not only among the audience, but also in the orchestra, when she had finished her last air, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." We could not be surprised at this being re-demanded by the Dean; and although we have elsewhere expressed our opinion as to the propriety, or rather impropriety, of encores, knowing that this was the last time we should ever have an opportunity of hearing Mad. Novello, we felt that this was an exceptional case, and shared in the general satisfaction when the song was repeated. As an instance of the superior capabilities of a cathedral for sound, we may state that the most delicate note of the pianissimo shake with which the air concludes was distinctly heard at the furthest end of the building. Mr. Sims Reeves sang "Comfort ye," with all his accustomed pathos, and "Thou shalt break them," with almost more than his usual vigour and impassioned energy. Not less admirable was his delivery of the recitative air, "Behold and see." "How beautiful are the feet," fell to Mad. Weiss, who again sang with the care and skill of a true artist, while Mad. Sainton-Dolby, in the airs "He shall feed his flock," and "He was despised," as usual left nothing to be desired. Mr. Weiss and Signor Belletti divided the bass music—the Englishman taking the first, and the Italian the second part, and both singing their best. Of course Mr. T. Harper played the trumpet obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound." The entire audience remained standing during the choruses, "For unto us a child is born," "Lift up your heads," and the "Hallelujah," and it was a fair sight to see the multitude rising up as if by general assent. In no country but England can such a spectacle be witnessed. The collection on Friday amounted to £290 11s. 8d; the corresponding day at the last Festival realised £247 11s. 8d. Mr. Sims Reeves, we learn, gave ten guineas, and the total of the collections, including the sums obtained at the early services, amounted to £1124 18s. 4d. We understand that there are yet other donations to come in—Worcester, with commendable rivalry, being determined to exceed Gloucester in the sum gathered for the charity. In 1857, £999 11s. 7d. was the total of the four days' collection.

A grand full-dress ball at the Guildhall brought the Festival to a brilliant termination. Dancing was kept up with unflagging spirit to the strains of Adams's band until four in the morning, and even then many evinced no desire to depart. The supper was on the most liberal scale, the comestibles of the highest order of excellence, and the champagne of undeniable quality. The stewards, however, should be reminded that their duty consists in something more than wearing a distinguishing mark in their button-hole, and taking all the best partners for themselves, as many strangers were present who had to remain as unwilling "wall-flowers" the whole of the evening. Before concluding our notice, special mention must be made of the excellent example set by the Dean—the Rev. Dr. Peel (brother of the late Sir Robert Peel)—who kept open house throughout the week. The duties of secretary are not merely confined to the actual week of the Festival, but extend over several months beforehand, and are not concluded until some time after the meeting is over, involving a correspondence of much extent, and an amount of labour and knowledge of details incredible to the uninitiated. To the Rev. Robert Sargeant, who has now fulfilled this arduous post for the last three meetings, all credit must be given for the admirable way in which he has acquitted himself; and to his persevering activity the unprecedented success of the Festival is in great measure due.

THE ORGAN.*

TENTH STUDY.—ON QUALITY OF TONE (timbre) AND ITS THREE PRINCIPAL CAUSES. FIRST PRINCIPAL CAUSE,—SCALE.

IT is undoubtedly the duty of every pipe in the organ to give the sound of some one note of the gamut with the greatest possible perfection; but this one note may be given with equal perfection in an almost infinite variety of qualities of tone, and in as many different shades of the same. This one note may remain the same, without varying in the slightest degree as regards the pitch, in a hundred different pipes, but its special quality of tone may be different in every one of them. To take an example in illustration of this matter, in the works of two piano-makers whose works are everywhere most justly celebrated, Erard and Pleyel; how striking is the difference between the pianos of one and the other! The latter aims at giving to his instruments all those qualities of tone which are tender, delicate, and refined, though nervous; and in this the quality of his instruments approaches, generally speaking, more nearly of the two to that of the German and English makers. The first, on the contrary, gives to his pianos, both grand and cottage, a brilliancy, a roundness, and an elasticity of tone, which accompanies all the modifications of their sound without causing it to lose its chief characteristic—namely, roundness; and, what is not a little remarkable, from father to son, from uncle to nephew, the respective qualities of the two makers are perpetuated in such a way that, as we still find in the pianos by Pleyel a reflection of that grace and elegance which may be met with in the still musical, though now perhaps somewhat antiquated ideas of a composer of the same name, so we may find in the pianos of Peter Erard the vigorous, brilliant, and flexible organisation of his great uncle Sebastian. With these two piano-makers the notes may be the same in each, the pitch may not vary; what is fa with one may be fa with the other, what is do, do; and yet, for all that, the do and fa of Pleyel are no more the do and fa of Erard, as regards quality of tone, than the do and fa of Erard are those of Pleyel. Any maker, any pianist, of even the most moderate experience in such matters, would detect at once the difference between the qualities of tone of both these makers.

Quality of tone, then, may be described as this or that particular shade out of those unnumbered shades which it is possible to give to one and the same note. Thus, a note or pipe of an organ may have this or that shade of tone—it may be delicate or cutting, sweet or tender, and still be the same note in the scale. For example, the note do of the scale may be given in any of these different qualities of tone in as many different organ-pipes, and still be the note do; for, without any change at all in the note, quality of tone may vary infinitely, and quality of tone alone.

This quality of tone depends mostly on three things—namely, on scale, form, and material. Scale is not that which is usually understood by this word, but is the greater or less distance from one another of the sides of the pipes; in other words, scale is the same thing as the diameter of the pipe. The Germans call it measure, mensur. From this it may be seen that the very same note may be expressed by pipes of different diameters. There are also a great many varieties of scale or measure; but they may be all reduced to three principal ones, to the full scale, the fine scale, and the mean scale. The arithmetic proportions between three pipes made to sound the same note, but each in a different scale, is thus given by Dom Bedos:—"Let us take," he says, "a pipe, the height of which is six inches: if it is made to the fine scale, its diameter should be six lines; if made to the mean scale, and an open pipe, its diameter should be nine lines; and if to the full scale, and an open pipe, it should be twelve lines; if a stopped pipe, and made to this last scale, its diameter should be by fourteen lines." This writer takes care to observe that these measures are not absolute, and allows to builders, as we should also do, considerable freedom in every case. He would also grant that, besides the fine scale, there is another, the very fine, and, in a word, that the scale of organ pipes varies according to their situation, the special duties they have to perform, and the effect they are intended to produce. "Thus," he says, "the do of four feet, which is the third do of a series of pipes, the longest of which is sixteen feet, should not be more than three inches in diameter; but that, if this do of four feet is intended to be itself the first of a series of pipes, and therefore the largest of them, then its diameter should be increased to three inches and a half." In fact, the comparative shrillness in the tone of the pipes of this series must be compensated for by the vigour of their sounds. Now the more the scale enlarges the size of a pipe, the greater does the vibrating column of air become which is gathered within its walls; the more the scale is narrowed, so much the more also is the sound resulting from it diminished, so much the more refined does it become in the quality of its tone.

Pipes of the full scale, which absorb a great quantity of wind, are suited to the largest organs only, to sound-boards only of the largest dimensions. These sounds ought to be at the very greatest degree of roundness and force. The very fine scale, on the contrary, is a luxury in the way of sound that a bare sufficiency of means alone does not admit of. It is that sort of quality which represents the delicate and rather meagre sounds of the viol, and which gives point to certain foundation open pipes, which are indispensable to the general body of organ tone in its more perfect state. Pipes of this quality of tone are, in matter of fact, put upon all the clarions in greater or less quantity, and with good reason, because of the effect of this kind of pipes, which is sweet, though penetrating, and very useful as an accompaniment to the voice.

Pipes of mean scale have generally more sweetness than delicacy as compared with the others, though they are not deficient either in a certain amount of brightness. Like everything else of a mixed character, they do not at all times take after the stock from which they first drew their origin. Thus deprived, as they are, of the strength and mellowness of pipes of the full scale, they partake of the infirmities of the fine scale, without possessing, at the same time, the delicacy, the refined and pleasing quality of tone, which is its distinguishing characteristic. In a large organ they are placed on the choir sound-board, or, when their number is very considerable, on some subordinate sound-board, for it is usual to place some series of them on each of the key-boards. Regard, however, must at all times be had to the place for which the organ is being built. In a small church, where a large number of pipes of full scale would be simply deafening, it would be found very useful to combine with a sufficient number of those, pipes of the mean, and even the fine scale; but within the walls of a vast cathedral, all the efforts of pipes, more especially of this last scale, would be utterly abortive and without effect. Pipes of both the mean and fine scale do certainly occupy a most necessary place in organ building, but they should not prevail in it to such a degree as is too often found to be the case in those sham organ schemes to which poor congregations, and other good but simple persons, are asked to put their names by dishonourable organ-builders.

Writers on this subject do not find it difficult to give some notions of comparison between scale and scale as long as the question is only about open flue pipes, because these pipes are for the most part made in the form of a cylinder, the apex of which is the same size in diameter as the base. But the pipes of reed-stops being conical in shape and wider above than below, their diameter and their length depend on one another, and it is not therefore easy to establish so exactly in their case an arithmetic proportion between one scale and the other. Nevertheless, Dom Bedos gives some measures by which the lengths of reed-pipes as compared with their diameters may be approximately determined, and these are the measures commonly in use amongst builders. Following him, then, they speak of a trumpet of 6 inches, of 5, or of 4 inches for the three scales of the trumpets, which corresponds in its notes with the do of eight feet in the open flue pipes. Dom Bedos himself gives three different measures for the scale of the trumpet, and says that the first measure or full scale should be five inches and nine lines; the second, or mean scale, should be four inches and nine lines; and the third, or fine scale, should be four inches and two lines.* This is a matter which it is important to study, and the comparison is one that should often be made, with the compass in the eye, if not in the hand, for the diameters and speaking lengths of the pipes for reed-stops are some of those many things on which dishonourable builders speculate with cruel impunity, making use of far too many pipes of fine and mean scale where they should place pipes of full scale, and this even in large churches, and without any regard to what may be the importance of the instrument which they are employed to build.

* From L'Orgue, sa Connaissance, son Administration, et son Jeu, by Joseph Regnier.

* It will, of course, be borne in mind that the French inches are rather longer than the English, and that the ligne is rather less than the English 16th. N. Tr.

As regards organs for accompaniment only, commonly called choir organs, and, indeed, as regards great organs for small churches, this class of builders always find an excuse for their avarice in the smallness of the locality and the position of the organ; and hence, if possible, we intend to give a graduated table of the scale of one note as compared with another for each scale of the three kinds, and for every note of the key-board. By this means, on inspecting an organ, the eye, however little practised, will detect at once the scale which the builder has chosen as his starting point, and the greater or less exactness with which, in the same series of pipes, he has observed the proportions of one note to another throughout this scale so chosen. I say the proportions, and not the progression, for a strict logical progression would be the cause of such magnitude in the largest pipes made to the full scale, that it would not be possible either to find a place for them, or if such a place could be found, to supply them with a sufficient quantity of wind. But still there are proportions for the lowest bass pipes of the full scale, which are not the proportions for the corresponding pipes of the mean scale; as there is also a means by which the size of the lowest bass pipes of the mean scale may be distinguished from that of the lowest bass pipes of the fine scale. Where these proportions are not attended to, there is not only the difference between what the diameters really are, and what they ought to be, but there is also the very great difference between the quality of the sound in such pipes from what it really ought to be; a difference which amidst the general body of full-organ tone may possibly escape the notice of the ordinary unpractical hearer, but cannot escape that of either the inspector of the organ—if he knows his business—or of the builder himself, who cannot be supposed to be ignorant of such matters, or of the professed musician.

Supposing for a moment that there was no difference in the quality of the sounds produced by pipes of different scales, the builder would no doubt do most wisely in choosing for his standard the smallest scale of the three, as being for him the least expensive; but when he does so, well knowing that there is this difference, then he takes you in. Not only does he do so by taking metal from your pipes and money from your purse, but also by taking the soul out of your organ, in depriving it of all its most pure qualities of tone, and leaving it with such qualities only as are for the most part dull and veiled in the open flue pipes, thin and cutting and without body in the reed pipes. Or, if your organ has not all these defects, it still has one which is no less intolerable than these, and that is, that it is not the organ as at first contracted for between the purchaser and the builder, an organ that is of such and such a scale in all its parts, and consequently of such and such a quality of tone. When we consider, and we know it to be the fact, that a reed-pipe will speak just passably at three-fourths of that length which is necessary for it in order that it may produce its better tones, we shall more easily understand what the injustice is which is committed by a fraudulent builder, who thus murderously cuts off the heads of his pipes. To such an one of course the more perfect quality of tone in his pipes is as nothing, so long as he can reckon with any amount of certainty, either on the profit he is about to make out of you upon his instrument, or on the fact that it will be placed in a church where there is no lack of resonance, or, more than all, on the ignorance of those who are to hear it.

A few words only remain to be said on the relations between the scale and the length of the speaking part of the pipe. As a general rule, this latter may be diminished in proportion as the former is increased, and, vice versâ, the length of the pipe may be increased if its diameter is very considerably diminished. Thus an open flue pipe of fine scale sounding the eight-feet do, ought certainly to be more than eight feet long, because the amount of air necessary for the production of this note will be very considerably diminished by the narrowness of the diameter of the pipe. But this increase in the length of a pipe is only found to be necessary in the very fine scale, when it is used as a starting point; in the fine and mean scales the pipe of eight feet is cut to the same length as the pipe which produces the same note in the full scale; and the reason of this is, that these three scales, fine, mean, and full, are calculated upon a sufficient quantity of vibrating air; with this only difference, that the fuller the scale of a pipe, the fuller also will be the tone produced by it. For it is clear that the full scale causing the air to vibrate in a greater space, and being provided with a vibrating apparatus in proportion to the size of this space, will produce much more powerful sounds than the other two.

To conclude: after having made these observations on the differences between the three chief scales, it would remain for us to consider the quality of tone in pipes which, owing to the directions taken by their sides, unite to themselves the characteristics now of one now of another scale, as is the case with some flue pipes, and the bodies of those trumpet pipes, which begin with being of fine scale, enlarge themselves gradually into full scale, and end oft with being no larger than the very fine scale. But this is less a question of diameter than of form, and as such it is more fitted to become the subject for another chapter.

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON.*

WITH the close of the operatic season came also the termination of the concert-giving period in London, or, to speak more correctly and generally, the period when the aristocratic and more especially art-loving world is in town.

Most of the concerts given by the various musical associations, as well as the morning and evening concerts of individual artists, took place between the 1st May and the 1st August. It is almost incredible what a number of musical entertainments there have been in the course of these three months, and what patronage — for without patronage there is nothing to be done — what love of the art, and also what fashion and bon ton are brought into play to procure a full attendance for each concert. Filling a concert-room here is a very different thing to what it is in Paris, where two-thirds of the audience enter with free admissions, and the real profit of the concert-giver is next to nothing. In London there is a large subscription list for all the oratorios and orchestral concerts, as well as for the Associations for chamber-music, while the artists who lend their assistance, and likewise those who, relying upon their reputation and the distinguished patronage they enjoy, give concerts of their own, find it worth their while to do so — a state of things long since passed away in Paris. Like everything else in London, the orchestral and vocal associations are colossal and innumerable.

After naming the Sacred Harmonic, the Musical Society of London, the Amateur Musical, the Philharmonic, and the New Philharmonic Societies, the Vocal Association, the Tonic Sol-Fa Association, Leslie's Choir, the Society of British Musicians, the London Orchestral Association, the Bach Society, Hullah's Concerts, the Monday Popular Concerts, the London Glee and Madrigal Society, the English Glee and Madrigal Union, the Choral Society, the Arion, Robinson's Choir, the Musical Union, Wilby's Quartet Union, and Dando's Quartet Concerts, I have by no means exhausted the entire list. As we see, Paris, despite all its vapouring about art, is nothing in comparison. In that city associations for oratorios and choral works are out of the question, while the two or three orchestral associations to be found in addition to the Concert-Society of the Conservatory, drag on their existence with difficulty.

The Monday Popular Concerts, a new institution, have been fortunate enough to secure the continuous favour of the public, and that, too, from the beginning of November to the beginning of July. And what do we hear at them? Waltzes by Strauss, polkas by Wallerstein, and selections from operas? Not a bit of it, but, instead of this, sterling chamber music, especially for the stringed quartet, although there is no deficiency of pianoforte and vocal music. I will give you a few samples from the programmes; such, for instance, are a quintet by Boccherini, sonata for two violoncellos by the same (played by Piatti and Schröder), quartet, in D minor, by Cherubini (played in conjunction with Messrs. Reis, Blagrove, and Piatti, by Herr Becker, from Mannheim, who has always met with extraordinary success wherever he has appeared); Clementi's pianoforte sonata in C, Op. 34, and three pieces by Scarlatti (Miss Arabella Goddard). In addition, we had vocal compositions by Paesiello, Jomelli, Salvator Rosa (whose landscapes, however, I admire more than his musical compositions), Salieri, and Mozart.

* From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

The concert of the 24th June was devoted entirely to Mozart. It began with the quintet in A, for clarionet and stringed instruments. Miss Goddard and Herr Becker then played the sonata in F (with the variations), for pianoforte and violin, the lady playing also the solo sonata in B flat. As a wind-up, we had a most admirable performance of the violin-quartet in G. Mad. de Paez (a German lady) made her first appearance at these concerts as a vocalist, in the airs "Parto" from Titus, and "Voi che sapete" from Figaro. A German bass, Herr Hermanns, sang two of Osman's songs from Die Entführung aus dem Serail. He created a sensation, and was obliged to repeat the last air. Sims Reeves sang Don Ottavio's "Della sua pace," in his usual artistic and highly finished manner.

The previous concert was dedicated to Beethoven, and the following, and last, "to all the great masters," as the bills expressed it. This concert was the twenty-seventh since November, and took place on the 2nd July. St. James's Hall, large as it is, could scarcely contain those who flocked to obtain admission. The lowest number of persons present at one of these concerts was 1500, and the highest 2500. On the occasion in question about 1600 persons paid their shilling each to the cheapest places, while the other part of the hall and the three-shilling galleries were filled by subscribers. And what was the music such numbers flocked to hear? Subjoined is the programme: —

PART I.

Violin quartet in C major	Spohr
Song, "Der Wanderer,"	F. Schubert
Pianoforte pieces (Fugue in D minor)	Scarlatti
"Liederkreis an die ferne Geliebte"	Beethoven
Prelude, saraband, and gavotte for violoncello	Bach

PART II.

Violin quartet in E flat major	Mendelssohn
Song, "Zuleika" (new)	Meyerbeer
Suite von Clavierstücken	Handel
Song, "Il Pensier"	Haydn
Song, "La Gita in Gondola"	Rossini
Sonata in D major for two pianofortes	Mozart

Is it not something astonishing that such chamber music as this should attract thousands of persons to seven-and-twenty concerts during a period of eight months?

The quartet performers were Sainton, Goffrie, Doyle, and Piatti. Herr Hallé was the pianist in the first, and Miss Goddard in the second part. To hear them both in Mozart's double sonata by far the greater portion of the audience remained to the end; indeed, as a general rule, the rudeness of leaving the hall before or during the last piece is far less usual at these concerts than at those exclusively patronised by the aristocratic world.

The projectors and directors of these concerts, the popularity of which increased wonderfully in the second season just terminated, are the Messrs. Chappell; and they have made a very good thing of them. These gentlemen have avoided all interested praise of the artists engaged, and most particularly eschewed anything approaching boastfulness or humbug; a plan which is all the more praiseworthy because it is so rare here.

The regular concerts at the Crystal Palace are still under the direction of Herr Manns. In addition to these, several monster concerts have been given in the immense building. Such, for instance, was a performance of Elijah, on the 4th of May, by 2500 persons; a concert of the Vocal Association, with 1000 voices, &c. That nothing is gained for art by performances on so gigantic a scale even artists here concur in thinking; but speculation and trade find their profit in them.

I am sure you will spare me the task of giving you a list of the hundred and odd artists who have given concerts at their own risk. These persons are, with very few exceptions, all musicians and vocalists, male and female, who reside and teach in London. Non-resident professionals play, as a rule, only at the concerts of the musical societies and associations for chamber music.

It is still impossible for any operatic speculation to succeed side by side with the two Italian operas. An English opera was started at Drury Lane, but lasted only a week; a French company at the Lyceum stood its ground somewhat longer, thanks to Offenbach's operettas, but, like its English predecessor, could not establish itself on a firm basis.

We have here facts which are scarcely comprehensible opposed to each other. 2500 persons listen applaudingly to quartets and pianoforte pieces by Scarlatti, Bach, and Handel, and do not expend a shilling for English, French, or German opera. Such contrasts can be found only in England.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Sept. 20, 1860.

THE spirit of musical and theatrical activity last week has left us languid again. I have nothing more important to inform you of than the production of the Trouvère (Trovatore) at the Grand Opera, with M. Michot for the first time in the part of Manrique, and Mlle. Barbara Marchisio in that of Azucena, also for the first time. Both debuts were successful, but especially the latter. The fine contralto voice of Mlle. Barbara, and her power of expressing deep emotion, brought out the characteristics of the gipsy mother with great force. M. Michot was much applauded in such passages as demand feeling and tenderness, but in the more vigorous portions he was not quite up to the mark. The Opera Comique gave last Monday a représentation extraordinaire for the benefit of the Christians in Syria. The bill was of the most miscellaneous composition, commencing with the Chaises à porteurs, followed by L'Etoile du Nord (first act), Ma Tante Dort (transplanted from the Théâtre Lyrique), the second act of Fra Diavolo, a scena and duo from Chateau Trompette, and three pieces from the Pardon. A new opera in three acts is about to be put into rehearsal at this house. The music is by M. Victor Massé, and the book by M. Dumanoir, who gives to his work the title of Le Lutrin. At the Théâtre Français, Mlle. Marie Royer, a recent acquisition from the Conservatoire, has been trying her strength in Mlle. de Belle-Isle, and has won very favourable opinions from the critics. At the same time another pupil from the Conservatoire has been making a brilliant debut at the Odéon in the part of Camille in Hornee. There is, therefore, some chance that the vacant niches of Melpomene and Thalia may once more be filled up in the National Theatre. The new comedy by M. Octave Feuillet (author of Le Roman d'un Jeune Homme Pauvre), which has been so much talked of, and is entitled Redemption, is in active rehearsal at the Vaudeville. The principal parts will be played by MM. Briadeau, Felix, Ribes, and Mlle. Fargaiol. The Porte St. Martin Theatre had been known to be labouring for some time past with a new edition of the celebrated fairy-spectacle Pied de Monton, and it has at last burst upon the world in the full splendour of new scenery, dresses, and decorations, and bespangled with fresh jokes by M. Hector Cremieux. I have not yet seen it, but it is said to be drawing nightly crowds.

The patriarch of song, Rossini, has been giving a series of musical soirées at his villa in Passy, and among the artists who have had the honour of exhibiting their savoir faire before the venerable maestro, were the sisters Marchisio. It was their second appearance in a private arena since their debut in the salons of Mad. Orfila, and was no less brilliantly successful than the first. They sang the duo in Semiramis, and also that in Mathilda di Shabran, in which they never fail to produce the most captivating effect by the admirable blending of their fine voices, and the brilliancy and perfection of their execution. On the same evening M. de Braga, the violoncellist, gave a touch of his quality by playing, with a very pure tone and exquisite expression, a melody composed by the maestro expressly for him, and called Une larme. M. Rubinstein the younger also displayed his powers on the piano. He appears to aim exclusively at brilliancy, rapidity, and feats of execution. M. Huerta, the guitarist, whom every one supposed to be dead, has appeared in the flesh at these soirées, as also have Ronconi, M. Castellani the buffo, M. and Mad. Tiberini, Mad. Borghi-Mamo, and M. Delle Sedie, an accomplished baritone, whom the Victoria Theatre at Berlin has just carried off from the Scala at Milan. Apropos of the "swan of Pesaro," it is said that he has been very angry with the author of the programme of the festival-concert given at Boulogne the other day under the direction of M. Venoitte, in which one of the items (No. 10 in the 2nd part) was "Un air classique par Rossini." This excited the wrath of the maestro, who, it must be here related, that the sequel may be understood, has been lately presented with a copy of his ancestral coat of arms, as recently discovered, engraved on a bell in the church of Cotignola. They were engraved on a seal, and accompanied by a pedigree drawn up by M. Luigi Cosmo Ferrucci, the learned librarian of Florence. The crest consists of a branch of a rose tree, on which is perched a nightingale, surmounted by three stars and a wreath of "palms." Alluding to this proof of the antiquity of his family, the maestro is said to have expressed his dissatisfaction with the Boulogne programme in these terms:—"Va pour le rossignol, les trois étoiles et les palmes de l'immortalité; je consens à les léguer à la postérité; mais je me refuse, et me refuserai de mon vivant comme outre tombe, au titre de classique et à tous les honneurs y attachés." ("The nightingale, the three stars, and the palms of immortality are all very well; I consent to bequeath them to posterity; but I refuse, and always shall refuse while I am alive and from beyond the grave, the title of a classic, together with all the honours thereunto belonging.")

I have already informed you how the company of the forthcoming Italian Opera here is composed. The opening night is fixed for the 2nd of October, and the first opera produced will be La Sonnambula, with Mlle. Batta and Signor Gardoni in the principal parts. The next opera will be Flotow's Marta, in which Mario, Graziani, and Mlle. Edenska, the new contralto, will sing. I hear from Milan that M. Bottesini's opera, Il Assedio di Firenza, has at length been produced there, but did not meet with a very enthusiastic reception. The composer was applauded, but not called for at the end of the performance. The blame is kindly laid by my informant on the feebleness of the execution. Another young composer, M. Cagnori, author of the famous Don Bucefalo, has had a new opera performed at the Scala with great success. It is entitled Il Vecchio della Montagna. Mad. Carvalho has made her first appearance at Berlin in Il Barbiere, and she has made such an impression on the German critics that they proclaim her the Jenny Lind of France. It is a proof with how little disturbance of the ordinary course of things the Neapolitan revolution has been effected, that in the midst of the Liberator's triumph and the king's flight, a new opera has been produced by Signor Petrella. It is called Il folletto di Gresy, and met with the most brilliant success, the composer being called before the curtain, I am told, at least twenty times.

I generally favour you with the matrimonial rumours that cross my path connected with the artistic world, because I know that, whether true or false, they always cause a little flutter of agreeable excitement among your lady readers. Here is one which has all the requisite ingredients of interest, more especially its uncertainty:—Mlle. Louise de la Rochefoucault, daughter of Count Wilfrid de la Rochefoucault, granddaughter of the Duke de la Rochefoucault, some time ambassador at the Court of Prussia, will exchange the illustrious name of her ancestors for the somewhat less distinguished patronymic of M. Henri Litolff.

From Brussels, I hear that the opening of the new theatre, styled "Du Parc," has taken place, and was honoured by the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Brabant. The alterations in the body of the theatre are said to be a great improvement, and the decorations are very tasteful. The first opera which will be got up this season at the Royal Theatre is Herculanum, by Felicien David. It will be followed by a grand opera, the music of which is composed by M. Hanssens, the director of the orchestra.

A Brussels paper announces the curious fact that Mr. Lumley has obtained the management of the national theatre, the Cirque, of that capital, and that he is about to open it with a company of Italian singers, wherein will be found more than one name of distinction. If this be true, and there is no particular reason to doubt it, we have another proof of the indefatigable spirit of the celebrated impresario, and if ever energy against adverse fortune deserved the favour of the gods, they should smile on him now.

The salons of Erard have been the scene of a grand congress, or rather, the preliminary meetings for one, the object of which is the restoration of plain song and church music. An article in a class paper, called La Maitrise, under the title of L'Idée Mère du Congrès, has appeared, explaining fully the intentions of the association, which has received the patronage of the chief ecclesiastical dignitaries of the country. The first regular meeting of the congress will be held at the end of November in the premises of the Société d'Encouragement pour les Beaux Arts et l'Industrie; and the editors of the above-mentioned journal have presented the association with a series of medals in gold, silver, and bronze, to be distributed as prizes for the best missa brevis, the best compositions for the voice and organ applicable to the celebration of divine service, of a simple and severe style, and easy of execution. A grand competition of Orpheonists, organised by the instrumental and choral societies of the department of the Seine, is announced to take place next Sunday at Livry-Sévigné. The competition will be preceded by a solemn mass, which will be sung by one of the choral societies of the upper division.

An interesting discovery has just been made in the royal library of Munich, consisting of an autograph piece by Mozart, not hitherto known to exist, and of which there is no mention in any list of his compositions. It is an Italian air for a soprano to words commencing Fra cento affanni e cento. From the inscription it bears, this air would appear to have been written by Mozart while at Milan, in the year 1770, when he was only fourteen years of age, and while his fourth dramatic composition, Mitridate re di Ponto, was being played with striking success.

The Paris correspondent of a Belgian paper relates how a considerable stir is being made in diplomatic circles here, in order to have another posthumous work of the Russian composer Bortniansky performed. The Prince W——— is said to be at the head of this movement, and in order to popularise the music of this composer he is about to organise a number of concerts; to which end he has sent for a Russian choral society composed of artists whose execution is said to be unrivalled throughout the world. The Greek Church allows no musical instrument to be used in its religious services, and the choristers are therefore accustomed to execute pieces without accompaniment. It is only in Russian churches that the contra basso voice, less rare in Russia than elsewhere, is employed, the compass of which extends to the lower A, two notes below the c à vide of the violoncello. The effect of these voices singing an octave below the basses is beyond conception. They are, in fact, human double basses. In the choral troop brought to Paris by Prince W. are several of these contra bassi, among whom one in particular, M. Ivan Norrowine, enjoys a high reputation, and is destined, it is said, to make quite a sensation. The opera of Bortniansky, which it is sought to get performed in Paris, was found, it is said, among his papers. The libretto is by the celebrated Russian poet, Ponschkin. Several unaccompanied choruses occur in this opera, and these are the choruses which will be performed at the concert in question. Bortniansky occupied the post of chapel-master to the Emperor of Russia from 1782 to 1826, when he died. His music is chiefly dependent for its effect on the employment of choral masses, with all the resources of which he was thoroughly acquainted.

In your record of the movements of the nomad tribe of musical artists, note that Joseph Wieniawski has returned to Paris from Hamburg and elsewhere.

In your obituary, since the bills of mortality in art know of no geographical limit, set down that Jean Louis Heiberg, the "creator of the Danish vaudeville," whatever that may be, has himself lapsed from the number of living created beings. At Copenhagen his eyes first saw the light, and in Iceland the curtain of death was drawn over them. In the interval he had studied medicine and written for the stage; — among other things a Don Juan for a company of puppets at the age of three and twenty.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—On Saturday Mr. G. W. Martin gave a performance of his own national part-songs, prize glees, &c., with a choral force numbering nearly 2000, in the Great Handel Orchestra. That Mr. Martin is popular as a composer may be inferred from the fact that more than 10,000 people assembled on the occasion. The attraction of the concert, however, entirely escaped our observation. Of the fourteen pieces given ten were written by Mr. Martin; the others were harmonised by him. The national part-songs—four in number—we did not greatly like, though all were received with vociferous acclamations. The part-song, "Brightest hopes are fleetest," is really charming—the best, indeed, we have heard of Mr. Martin's compositions—and well merited the encore it received. That Mr. Martin has a large circle of friends none could doubt who saw the crowd and heard the applause on Saturday afternoon.

Notice.

In consequence of the communication from our own reporter being mislaid in the transit, our notice of the Norwich Festival is unavoidably postponed until next week.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1860.

THE retirement of Mad. Clara Novello from the Sacred Concert-room will leave a blank which at present there does not appear any likelihood of being filled up. Such a loss to sacred art is indeed to be deeply lamented, more particularly at a time when oratorios, become an entertainment for the people, are progressing rapidly in general estimation, and when their performances are no longer restricted to special localities and periods. Such an artist as Mad. Novello must have had some hand or voice in conducing to this progress. Many no doubt would at first go to hear the singer, with no particular predilection for holy strains, who subsequently, taught to attend and understand, would be attracted by the music itself. If ever singer was constituted to exercise an influence over a large auditory, it was the lady who forms the subject of our remarks. Mad. Novello has not only a voice of surpassing quality and purity, but her style and manner are eminently adapted to sacred music. The beauty and purity of her voice were acknowledged from the first moment when, as a girl, she was launched into artistic life, and dared the fiat of the public alongside of Malibran, Grisi, Caradori, Sontag, Mary Paton, and other cantatrice, native and foreign, who were more or less remarkable in the roll of fame. A new star in such a constellation, the youthful Clara Novello was not obnubilated in the surrounding lustre. She gained hosts of admirers, who were enchanted with her lovely voice and the refinement of her style, and augured the most brilliant results for her future. That these auguries have not been falsified we need hardly say. Mad. Novello's career has been one of undeviating success, and no part of her progress has been marked by greater triumphs than that which dates from her return to public life after several years' interval passed in retirement. Indeed, our principal regret at losing the artist is bound up with the fact that her vocal powers are as transcendent as ever, and that time has only added to the purity and delicacy of her style. Had Mad. Novello's powers been on the wane our regrets would have been extenuated by the consideration that she was acting cautiously and judiciously; anticipating Time as it were, and succumbing to his supremacy ere he could lay too heavily his hand upon her—thereby exhibiting art to the last, as she stood on the threshold of the temple about to take her leave. Mad. Novello's reasons for quitting public life are alleged to be of a private nature. The loss to the public is the same whatever the cause.

The qualities which eminently befit Mad. Clara Novello for the sacred concert-room are the peculiar character of the voice, and a style essentially devotional. Mad. Novello's voice is a high soprano, pure, open, brilliant, clear and liquid as a well-tuned silver bell, and extremely sympathetic. In the upper register some of the tones are wonderfully touching. This rare organ, so available, it would seem, for all purposes, so capable, so beautiful and so telling, is toned down and sobered to a religious feeling that lends it its peculiar characteristic, and makes it almost sombre in expression and colouring. From this peculiarity, this sombreness of tone, Mad. Novello derives her special power in sacred music. Of that "demonstrative" quality so indispensable to the dramatic singer she exhibits but little, and is seldom outwardly energetic or forcible. Intensity without display, and earnestness arising from a manner full of repose and apparently absorbed, constitute the specialties which distinguish Mad. Novello from all other singers of sacred music. So rapt, indeed, is she at most times in her performance, that, even when singing, could our ears deceive us so, she might stand as an exemplification of Wordsworth's Nun, "breathless with adoration." Whether this be pure instinct or the most consummate art, we cannot say. In either case the result is the same, and the wondrous influence of the vocalist made manifest. When shall England be able to boast of another singer who can produce such extraordinary effects by such simple means? When shall England boast of another singer who, while disclaiming, if not failing in, that dramatic vigour and impassioned energy which all candidates for lyric honours, on or off the stage, have made the be-all and end-all of their acquirements, may be able to achieve such greatness and renown? The brightest luminary of the Sacred Concert-room is about to disappear for ever—when to be replaced lies buried in the womb of Time.

BESIDES accusations of unintelligibility and of contra-sense (as for instance when a girl sentenced to death sings in a lively strain), the Opera has been attacked as essentially absurd, and it is satisfactory to know that these attacks date from its first introduction into England and France. To some it appeared monstrous that men and women should be represented on the stage singing, when it is notorious that in actual life they communicate in the speaking voice. Opera was declared to be unnatural as compared with the Drama. In other words, it was natural that Desdemona should express her grief in melodious verse, but unnatural that she should do so in pure melody. (For the sake of the comparison, we must suppose Rossini's Otello to have been written long before its time). Persons with any pretence to reason have long ceased to urge such futile objections against a delightful entertainment which, as we shall presently show, is in some respects the highest form the drama has assumed. Gresset answered these music-haters well in his "Discours sur l'harmonie." "After all," he says, "if we study nature, do we not find more fidelity to appropriateness at the Opera than on the tragic stage, where the hero speaks the language of declamatory poetry? Has not harmony always been much better able than simple declamation to imitate the true tones of the passions—deep sighs, sobs, bursts of grief, languishing tenderness, interjections of despair, the inflexions of pathos, and all the energy of the heart?"

For the sake of enjoying the pleasures of music and of the drama in combination, we must adopt certain conventions, and must assume that song is the natural language of the men and women that we propose to show in our operas, as we assume in tragedy that they all talk in verse; in comedy that they are all witty, and yet are perpetually giving one another opportunities for repartee; in the ballet that they all dance and are unable to speak at all. The form is nothing. Give us the true expression of natural emotion, and all the rest will seem natural enough. Only it would be as well to introduce as many dancing characters and dancing situations as possible in the ballet, and to remember in particular that Roman soldiers could not with propriety figure in one (for a ballet on the subject of "Les Horatii" was once actually produced in France, in which the Horatii and the Curiatii danced a double pas de trois); and in tragedy, that the chief personages ought not to be London coal-heavers or Parisian water-carriers; and in the same way, that in opera, scenes and situations ought to be avoided which in no way suggest singing. And let us now inform the ignorant opponents of opera, that there are certain grand dramatic effects attainable on the lyric stage which without the aid of music would be impossible. Music has often been defined; here is a new definition of it. It is the language of masses—the only language that masses can speak and be understood. On the old stage a crowd could not cry "Down with the tyrant!" or "We will," or even "Yes" and "No," with any intelligibility. There is some distance from this state of things to the Blessing of the Daggers in the Huguenots, or the Prayer of the Israelites in Mosé. In the ordinary drama we could neither have the prayer (unless it were recited by a single voice, which would be worse than nothing) before the passage, nor the thanksgiving which in the opera is sung immediately after the Red Sea has been crossed; but, above all, we could not obtain the sublime effect produced by the contrast between the two songs; the same song, and yet how different; the difference between minor and major, between a psalm of humble supplication and a hymn of jubilant gratitude. This is the change of key at which, according to Stendhal, the women of Rome used to faint in such numbers. It cannot be heard without emotion even in England; and we do not think any one, even a professed enemy of Opera, would ask himself, during the performance of the prayer in Mosé, whether it was natural or not that the Israelites should sing either before or after crossing the Red Sea.

Again, how could the animation of the market scene in Masaniello be expressed except by means of music? What other art could render confusion harmonious and intelligible? In concerted pieces, again, the Opera possesses a means of dramatic effect quite as powerful and as peculiar to itself as its choruses. The finest situation in Rigoletto is that in which the quartet occurs. Here three persons express simultaneously the different emotions which are excited in the breast of each by the presence of the Duke of Mantua in the assassin's hostelry, while the Duke of Mantua himself makes love to the assassin's sister. The amorous fervour of the Duke, the reckless gaiety of Maddalena, the despair of Gilda, the vengeful rage of Rigoletto, all this exists at the same time, and is told at once in the combined songs of the four personages, while the spectator derives a new pleasure from the very art by which the four different songs are combined into harmony,—a magnificent quartet, of which, however, the model existed long before in Don Giovanni. All this is of course very unnatural. It would be so much more natural that the Duke of Mantua should first make a long speech to Maddalena, that Maddalena should then answer him, that afterwards both should remain silent while Gilda, of whose presence outside the tavern they are unaware, sobs forth her lamentations at the perfidy of her betrayer, and that finally the Duke, Maddalena, and Gilda, by some inexplicable unity of purpose, should not say a word while Rigoletto is congratulating himself on the prospect of being speedily revenged on the libertine who has robbed him of his daughter. In the old drama, perfect sympathy between two lovers can scarcely be expressed—certainly not with anything like the vividness with which it can be told through suggestive union of the two voices in the ensemble of a duet. We are sometimes inclined to think that even the balcony duet between Romeo and Juliet ought to be in music; and certainly no living poet could render the duet between Valentine and Raoul adequately into either prose or verse. Talk of music destroying the drama; why, it is from innate love of the drama that so many persons go to the Opera every night.

"But is it not absurd to hear a man say 'Good morning?' 'How do you do?' in music?" Most decidedly; and therefore all ordinary, commonplace, and trivial remarks should be excluded from operas, as from poetical dramas and from poetry of all kinds except comic and burlesque verse. It was not reserved for the unmusical critics of the present day to discover that it would be grotesque to utter such a phrase as "Give me my boots" in recitative, and that such a line as "Waiter, a cutlet nicely browned," could not be advantageously set to music. All this sort of humour was exhausted by St. Evremond, in a comedy called Les Opéras,* which he wrote during his residence in London, soon after the production of Lulli's Cadmus and Hermione, in 1673. In this work, which was published but not represented, Chrisotine is, so to speak, opera-struck. She thinks of nothing but Lulli, or "Baptiste," as she affectionately calls him, after the manner of Louis XIV. and his court, sings all day long, and in fact has altogether abandoned speech for song. Perrette, the servant, tells Chrisotine that her father wishes to see her. "Why disturb me at my songs?" replies the young lady, singing all the time. The attendant complains to the father that Chrisotine will not answer her in ordinary spoken language, and that she sings about the house all day long. Chrisotine corroborates Perrette's statement by addressing a little cavatina to her parent, in which she protests against the harshness of those who would hinder her from singing the tender loves of Hermione and Cadmus.

* A German translation of this piece, entitled Die Opern, is to be found in the library of the British Museum. The original is not there.

"Speak like other people, Chrisotine," exclaims old Chrisard, "or I will issue such an edict against operas, that they shall never be spoken of again where I have any authority."

"My father, Baptiste: opera, my duty to my parents; how am I to decide between you?" exclaims the young girl, with a tragic indecision as painful as that of Arnold, the son of Tell, hesitating between his Matilda and his native land.

"You hesitate between Baptiste and your father?" cries the old gentleman; "O tempora, O mores!" (only, in French).

"Tender mother! cruel father! and you, O. Cadmus! unhappy Cadmus! I shall see you no more," sings Chrisotine; and soon afterwards she adds, still singing, that she "would rather die than speak like the vulgar." It is a new fashion at the court (she continues); since the last opera, no one speaks otherwise than in song. When one gentleman meets another in the morning, it would be grossly impolite not to sing to him:—

"'Monsieur, comment vous portez vous?' to which the other would reply:—

"'Je me porte à votre service.'

"1st Gentleman—'Après diner, que ferons nous?'

"2nd Gentleman—'Allons voir la belle Clarisse.'

"The most ordinary things are sung in this manner, and in polite society people don't know what it means to speak otherwise than in music."

Chrisard—"Do people of quality sing when they are with ladies?"

Chrisotine—"Sing! sing! I should like to see a man of the world endeavour to entertain company with mere talk in the old style. He would be looked upon as a man of a bygone period. The servants would laugh at him."

Chrisard—"And in the town?"

Chrisotine—"All persons of any importance imitate the court. It is only in the Rues Saint Denis and St. Honoré, and on the bridge of Notre Dame, that the old custom is still kept up. There people buy and sell without singing. But at Gauthier's, at the Orangery, at all the shops where the ladies of the court buy dresses, ornaments and jewels, all business is carried on in singing; and if the dealers did not sing, their goods would be confiscated. People say that a severe edict has been issued to that effect. They appoint no Provost of Trade now unless he understands music, and until M. Lulli has examined him to see whether he is capable of understanding and enforcing the rules of harmony."

The above scene, be it observed, is not the work of an ignorant detractor of Opera, of a brute insensible to the charms of music, but is the production of St. Evremond, one of the very first men on our side of the Alps who called attention to the beauties of the new musical drama just established in Italy, and which, when he first wrote on the subject, had not yet been introduced into France. St. Evremond had too much taste not to enjoy the Opera, and too much sense to decry it on account of such improbabilities as must inevitably belong to every form of the Drama, which is the expression of life, but which need not, for that reason, be restricted to the language of speech exclusively any more than tragedy need be restricted to the diction of prose, or comedy to the inane platitudes of ordinary conversation. At all events there is no novelty, and above all no wit, in repeating seriously the pleasantries of St. Evremond, which, we repeat, were the pleasantries of a man who loved the object of his good-natured and agreeable raillery.

Indeed, most of the men who have written things against the Opera that are still remembered, have liked the Opera, and have even written operas themselves. Aujourd'hui ce qui ne vaut pas la peine d'être dit on le chante, is said by the Figaro of Beaumarchais—Beaumarchais, who gave lessons in singing and on the harpsichord to Louis the Fifteenth's daughters, who was an enthusiastic admirer of Gluck's operas, and who wrote specially for that composer the libretto of Tarare, which was however set to music by Salieri, Gluck's favourite pupil. Beaumarchais knew well enough—and Tarare would in a certain way prove it—that not only "what is not worth the trouble of saying" cannot be sung, but that very often such trivialities as can with propriety be spoken in a drama would, set to music, produce a ludicrous effect. Witness these lines in St. Evremond's Les Opéras—

"Monsieur, comment vous portez vous?"
"Je me porte à votre service:"

which might form part of a comedy, but which in an opera would be absurd, and would therefore not be introduced into one, except by a foolish librettist (who would for a certainty get hissed), or by a wit like St. Evremond, wishing to amuse himself by exaggerating to a ridiculous point the latest fashionable mania of the day.

THE appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Bourcicault at the Adelphi renders that theatre for the present the most important in London. The Haymarket still chews the cud of pieces that have long lost their novelty, the attractive force of the Olympic is considerably lessened by the temporary absence of Mr. Robson, and the Colleen Bawn,—though produced in an already dramatised story (the Collegians)—has all those attributes that were found serviceable at the old Adelphi, and are even more requisite at the new house, where there is a stage of increased capacity.

The few nights during which Mr. Bourcicault played at the Princess's Theatre some eight years ago, can scarcely be mentioned in opposition to the declaration that he now for the first time comes before the public in a histrionic character; still less do his juvenile performances, when he was yet unknown as an author, live in the memory of the public. As the Irish peasant, Myles na Coppoleen, he appears for the first time as a trained artist, with a settled sphere of action. The performance is thoroughly careful and well considered, and not a touch is wanting to the sly humour and indomitable shrewdness which are such important elements in Milesian nature. His scene with the priest, Father Tom, in which, while evidently losing his game, he struggles to the last to resist detection of his lies, is as masterly a piece of acting as one would wish to see. On the other hand, that abandonment to the impulse of the moment, that overflowing hilarity which distinguishes Mr. Barney Williams, he does not attain—nay, does not attempt. He is an artist who ever feels himself above the work he executes, and while he shows that he understands his task in all its bearings, never forgets his own identity.

The same piece that introduces Mr. Bourcicault determines the position of Mr. Edward Falconer, and it is hard to recognise the very indifferent actor of tragedy and light comedy in the accurate delineation of the Irish serf, as exemplified in the character of Danny Man. The voice kept down to a perpetual semblance of servility, the stoop occasioned as much by the bowed mind as by the broken back, the agonies of the death-bed, are all admirably true, and without a particle of exaggeration.

Nor is it too much to say that in the Colleen Bawn we are first made acquainted with the capabilities of Mrs. Billington,—a lady who, when she has attempted parts more than commonly conspicuous, has generally suggested the notion of over-weight. But in the very powerful scene in which Mrs. Cregan curses the captors of her son, she completely rises to the level of the position, and astonishes by her newly-marked force.

Mrs. Bourcicault is an amiable, pleasing actress, who sings and dances very prettily, and is thoroughly unaffected and enthusiastic in all she undertakes.

Thus, altogether, the Colleen Bawn is not only a welcome apparition at a season which is dull even for September, but is an earnest of theatrical improvement. Two new artists are added to our histrionic force, and several who are well known develop new capabilities.

THE OPERA COMIQUE.

Its Rise and Progress.

II.

MONSIGNY AND PHILLIDOR.

The first of these was simply a musical amateur, born at Fauquemberg, a village near St. Omer, on the 17th of October, 1729. He was destined for a financial career, and obtained a post in the office of ecclesiastical accounts. It was while hearing a performance of La Serva Padrona, by Pergolese, that he felt the musical chord within him vibrate. He had learned to play the violin at the Jesuits' College of St. Omer, and after having heard the chef d'œuvre of the Italian master, he took some lessons of a double bass player at the opera, called Gianotti, who taught him the principles of thorough bass, which the latter had learned from Rameau. He studied only five months with Gianotti, and it was after having received this elementary instruction that he set to music a little libretto entitled Les Aveux indiscrets, played at the Théâtre de la Foire St. Laurent.

At this period the orchestra of the Italian Theatre (Comédie Italienne), in which the greater part of Monsigny's works were to be played, consisted only of five first and five second violins, two altos, three violoncellos, to which were added later two double basses, two flutes or two hautboys (the same artists being engaged to play both instruments), and lastly two miserable horns and two bassoons, who by no means piqued themselves on playing in tune. The performers in this incomplete orchestra were inferior to our most humble provincial artists, and the actors of the company of singing comedians were after the fashion of those of the vaudeville theatres of the present day. It may be guessed, therefore, what the performances of these "fair theatres" (théâtres de la foire) were like in which our Opéra Comique took its rise.

The following year Monsigny brought out on the same stage on which his first piece had been played, Le Cadi dupé, of which the words were by Lemonnier.

Even in this early work there are several pieces deserving mention. The air of Zelmire for instance, "Toi que mon cœur adore," by no means deficient in tenderness of expression; the duo, "Qu'en dites vous, monseigneur?" the trio, "Entrez donc," &c. The music of these pieces is well adapted to the sense of the words.

Sédaine, attracted by these qualities, got himself introduced to Monsigny, and became his recognised collaborator. They brought out in 1761, Le Roi et le Fermier, which produced a great sensation —two hundred representations bringing in 10,000 fr. (£400) to the composer! (An enormous sum for the period.) This piece met in the first instance a cold reception on account of the musical element preponderating more than had been previously known. The poem of Sédaine had not taken the fancy of the audience, and it was not until after it had been heard several times that it was perceived Monsigny's music was marked by a strain of touching melody well suited to the sentiments expressed in each scene, a necessary condition of success with a French audience.

Two years later Sédaine and Monsigny gave the world a village opera (paysannerie), Rose et Colas, the graceful and simple songs of which charmed the public. In Le Déserteur the talent of Monsigny developed itself and reached its crowning success.

The fine wits of the time criticised this poem, and Sédaine's origin was cast in his teeth. His education had been ill cared for; his pieces were faulty in their style. Errors in French and spelling were as frequently met in them as dramatic situations which he sought after, rather than refinements of language, his chief object being to stir the emotions of the public. He knew the personage he had to deal with, and was convinced that to be made to cry or to laugh was all he asked for, which explains the introduction into his operas of characters for whose appearance no motive can be discovered. Thus in Le Déserteur, perceiving that the sentimental scenes were drawn out to too great a length, he introduced in the third act, in the most gratuitous manner, but with the utmost felicity, the character of Montauciel, which still preserves its charm in the eyes of the present generation. Clairval in the character of Montauciel, and Caillot in that of Alexis, gained the greatest applause.

"Monsigny,"—to borrow a passage from M. Adolphe Adam's interesting book, Derniers Souvenirs d'un Musicien—"worked with difficulty. Not only was he too unskilled a musician not to experience great difficulty in marshalling together his ideas and apportioning them between the vocal parts and the orchestra, but being endowed with extreme sensibility he was impelled to identify himself in some sort with his personages, and to place himself in their positions in order to excite and kindle his genius, and stir it up to emit the sparks of fanciful inspiration. Frequently while he was working at Le Déserteur it was found necessary to take the manuscript away from him on account of the excessive nervous excitement he experienced. This sensibility never left him. Choron relates the following anecdote:— Monsigny being then eighty-two years of age, while explaining to us the manner in which he wished the situation in Le Déserteur to be rendered, where Louise is gradually recovering from her swoon, and her stifled accents are interrupted by orchestral passages, shed tears of sympathy and fell himself into the same state of overwhelming emotion which he was describing in so expressive a manner."

M. Fétis, who quotes this trait on the authority of Choron, adds with much justice:—"This sensibility constituted his genius, for he was indebted to it for a multitude of touching melodies which must always render his works deserving of attention from instructed musicians."

Next to Le Déserteur, the works of this composer which obtained the greatest success were La Belle Arsène, June 1773, and Félix ou l'Enfant Trouvé, 1777. From the latter work should be quoted the quintet, the trio, and the air, so well fitted to the situation—"Qu'on se batte, qu'on se dechire."

Although Monsigny was at that time only 48 he refused ever again to compose anything, and resembling in this one of our great contemporary geniuses, rested upon his numerous laurels. He alleged as his reason for thus prematurely reposing from his labours, the prohibition his physician had laid him under from ever again writing on penalty of losing his sight. On this subject, however, M. Fétis remarks,—"I knew this respect-worthy man, and I asked him in 1810, that is to say thirty-three years after the production of his last opera, whether he had never felt a craving to write since that time: 'Never,' said he; 'from the day that I finished the score of Félix, music has been as it were dead to me; I have never had an idea since.'"

He died in Paris, on the 14th of January, 1817, at the age of 88, being forty years after the last performance of Félix.

His music—notwithstanding the inspiration of which it bears the immortal impress—betrays constantly the want of an adequate musical education; a glance at the scores of Monsigny will show at once that his modulations, although for the most part simple, have been effected with difficulty. Such was not the case with his contemporary—François André Phillidor.

III.

PHILLIDOR.

BORN at Dreux, on the 7th of September 1726, this composer was admitted at the age of six among the children choristers of the chapel choir of Louis XV. His first musical studies were under the direction of Cambra.

He was still a chorister when his passion for the game of chess declared itself. The musicians, while awaiting the hour for the king's mass, were in the habit of playing at this game; one day, one of them finding himself alone with Phillidor, was regretting the absence of an opponent, when the child offered his services in that capacity. His offer was accepted as a joke in the first instance, but soon led to the discovery that he possessed the most surprising aptitude for the game. He had divined its rules and the combinations of which they were susceptible while watching the play of his comrades. This love for chess was the most serious obstacle he had to encounter to his success as a composer.

He would at any time throw aside his music, and devote himself not only to devising extremely complicated problems, but to writing works on this game. He went to Holland, where his chess-playing talent developed itself by contact with adepts of great skill. It befel him, especially towards the close of his life, when he was blind, to play several games at once, but these feats of strength, which required a great tension of the mind, weakened his intellects.

From Holland he went to England, and it was in London that he received from Diderot a letter upbraiding him severely for squandering his mind on the study of chess, thus depriving the world of the fruits of his musical genius. As a composer he would be esteemed; as a chess-player he could only excite a curiosity but moderately honourable to himself.

He returned to Paris, where he had a Lauda Jerusalem executed at Court, with which the queen was but little pleased; Maria Leczinska, it is known, did not like Italian music, and it was in that style that Phillidor had written his psalm.

Four years later, on the 9th of March, 1759, he brought out at the Foire St. Laurent Theatre his first opera, Blaise le Savetier. This opera had some success, and its composer showed himself a much better harmonist than his contemporaries. But as I said previously, his melodies had not the touching gracefulness of Monsigny's. The trio, however, "Le ressort est, je crois, mêlé," is in a pleasant style.

On the 18th of September he produced L'Huitre et les Plaideurs; this piece is inferior to the first, but he recovered himself in Le Soldat Magicien and Le Jardinier et son Seigneur, which were played, the first in 1760, the second in 1761.

In this last score, Phillidor advanced one step as regards instrumentation; his orchestra exhibits more signs of care than was the case with contemporary works. The duo, "Un maudit lièvre," manifests a remarkable elegance and skill of handling. Nevertheless the works of this master are known only to the antiquarian and the professional singer.* His most successful operas were: Le Maréchal Ferrant, in two acts, represented for the first time on the 22nd of August, 1761, every piece in which work might be deservedly mentioned, the most remarkable in my opinion being, however, the trio, "Oui, oui, je le dirai;" the duo, "Premièrement buvons," the trio, "Que voulez vous:"—Le Sorcier, which first saw the blaze of the footlights (if I may be excused this pompous expression to denote the few candles which illuminated the front of the stage in those days) on the 22nd of January, 1764:—and, lastly, Tom Jones, which appeared the 27th of February, 1764, and was his first piece in three acts. This departed from the usual style, and, as happens with all innovations, it was in the first instance hissed, because it was not understood, and then the same persons who had hissed on the first night applauded at the subsequent performances.

In his resentment the innovator returned to London to apply himself again to chess; and when he once more visited Paris he found his own works and those of his contemporaries eclipsed by the success of a young citizen of Liège, for whom Phillidor had himself previously attempted to procure a poem in vain.

The first opera of the young "Liègeois," Le Huron, performed the 20th of August, 1768, had caused a complete revolution in the public taste. The name of this composer was Grétry.

Phillidor, however, composed two more works; a grand opera, Thémistocle, which he brought out first at Fontainebleau, in 1785, and afterwards, in 1786, at the Royal Academy; and L'Amitié au Village, a comic opera in one act played on the 31st of October, 1785, and on account of which he was called upon the stage, an honour extremely rare in those days. The Republic then supervened and he returned to London, where he died the 30th of August, 1795.

To complete the list of his comic operas we must mention Sancho Panza and Le Bucheron, both in one act, and both played in 1762; Zélide et Mélide and Ernelinde, in 1766; in 1768, Le Jardinier de Sidon; in 1769, L'Amant Deguisé and La Nouvelle Ecole des Femmes; in 1772, Le Bon Fils; and in 1775, Les Femmes Vengées, the words of which were by Sédaine.

In the time of Phillidor the Comédie Italienne began to have singers. The most renowned of these were M. and Mad. Trial, M. and Mad. Laruette, Caillot, Clairval, &c.

Trial was from Avignon. After having sung on several provincial stages he made his first appearance at the Comédie Italienne in 1764, in the character of Bastien in Phillidor's Sorcier. He was a good actor but had little voice. After having laughed and made others laugh so often in his various characters, he ended his career in a tragic manner. The public having made him endure some humiliation he went home and poisoned himself. He had married the widow of one Comolet, Mad. Mandeville. Comolet left her side only when she went on the stage. At home he locked her up when he had to go out. This kind of life had naturally exerted an influence over the temper of the young actress, and when her husband died she recovered all her natural gaiety of spirits. Everything here below has its compensation.

Though Laruette had no voice, his wife, on the other hand, who had sung at the Opera when she called herself Mlle. Villette, was an agreeable singer.

Trial and Laruette created those buffo tenor parts, to endow which French authors have exerted their comic vein, and have thus made them celebrated.

Clairval was an agreeable tenor. He was no musician, but his voice was pleasing. Besides his characters in comic opera, he frequently took parts in drama and comedy.

Caillot was the son of a goldsmith who had failed in business. As a child he played Cupids at the Court theatre; when his voice broke he retired into the country. He was playing the violin in the orchestra at La Rochelle, when an actor being taken ill he took his part on the stage. Subsequently he met with success at Lyons, and went thence to the Comédie Italienne, where he made his début in Ninette à la Cour, on the 16th of July, 1760. His voice was of wide compass, and similar in character to that of Martin, of whom I shall often have to speak. These actors, however, had no chance of pleasing the public but by an effective delivery; purely musical singing was in the second rank. Caillot retired from the stage in 1772.

Let us now sum up our opening remarks on the first foundation of the Opéra Comique.

The work commenced by Dauvergne, roughly shaped out by Duni, polished by Monsigny and Phillidor, had reached at the latter period to a degree of perfection which permitted its assuming an equal rank with the Grand Opéra. The opera buffa of the Italians, the lyrical drama of the Germans, had a rival, or rather a younger brother, in the French Opéra Comique, which, like its elders, was destined to perform the tour of Europe. Voltaire had predicted that the French would never have a music of their own, that our language was opposed to it; and scarcely had this prophecy dropt from the pen of the great writer, than music, really of French origin and character, came into the world, possessed of a constitution which ensured it a long life.

* Grimm was wont to say that his music was wanting in ideas, and that he had more genius for chess than for music. After the first performance of Tom Jones, however, he granted him nervous strength, and a warm and vigorous style. Further on he calls Tom Jones the finest work on the stage.

(To be continued.)

AN UNKNOWN OPERA BY DONIZETTI.

THE following are particulars relative to the recently-discovered manuscript opera of Rita. One day, as Donizetti was walking along the Boulevard des Italiens, depressed and sad, he was accosted by his friend, M. Gustave Vaez (author of the libretto of La Favorite). "I die with ennui," he exclaimed; "pray suggest something to occupy my mind, even if it be but one act." A comic subject was agreed upon; two days after, the first act was brought by the author to the composer, who soon accomplished his task; to be brief, within the week the opera (Rita) was finished. It was accepted with eagerness by the director of the Opera Comique, M. Crosnier, but never produced, for the following cause. M. Auber, at that time the presiding deity of the Opera Comique, had been vainly solicited to have his work ready at the period named, but replied that it was impossible, and chose the month of March following for its performance. In this dilemma, M. Crosnier addressed himself to Donizetti, and an agreement was duly drawn up between them. M. Auber, who was in ignorance of this agreement, wrote a few days afterwards to the manager, retracting his first decision, and fixing November as the precise period he wished his opera to appear. Great was M. Crosnier's embarrassment; but by employing a little tact, he hoped to extricate himself. Donizetti, who did not at all understand theatrical diplomacy, was at first much puzzled by the manager's preliminary eloquence, but a light flowing into his mind, he divined the real state of the case, and coming at once to the point, said, "Oh, now I see: it is the engagement with me that is the difficulty in question; I am not in the habit of using a magisterial order to enforce a performance of my music," and taking up the paper he tore it in pieces. Feeling, however, much hurt, he refused to part with the score. Unfortunately for M. Crosnier, Auber within a few days again altered his mind, and gave notice that he should adhere to his original arrangement of producing his opera in March. Meantime the management of the Opera Comique devolved on M. Basset, and the latter, finding an entry of the piece in the books of the theatre, proposed to M. Gustave Vaez to put it at once into rehearsal. The illustrious composer was already attacked by the cruel disease of the brain which, alas! paralysed his fine intellect, and his brother—chief of the military bands of the Sultan, at Constantinople—did not judge it right, while the poor maestro writhed in his bed of agony in a Maison de Santé, at Issy, to deliver over the fruits of that intellect to the anatomical discussions of the critic. Donizetti was taken to Bergamo, his native town, in a dying state, where he yielded up his last sigh. A seal was put on all his papers, amongst which was the score of Rita. Adolphe Adam, who was aware of the existence of this MS., wished to produce it while he was director of the Opera Nationale, and M. Gustave Vaez wrote to M. Joseph Donizetti, and received the following reply, dated from Constantinople: "Sir,—It is out of my power to accept your polite offer at present, as no decision has yet been made of my poor brother Gaetano's effects, and I am only a co-inheritant." The matter thus rested during several years. M. Joseph Donizetti dying, his son bought the rights of the other inheritors, and came to Paris with the score, which M. Gustave Vaez proposed to M. Perrin, now manager of the Opera Comique. M. Perrin inquired into the authenticity of the work, and M. Gustave Vaez pledged his word of honour to having seen each piece composed by Donizetti, according as the words were brought to him. "Your simple word is enough for me," replied M. Perrin, "but it will hardly satisfy those who may be tempted to surmise a speculation on our part." M. G. Vaez proposed forming a committee capable of pronouncing on the authenticity of the work. The proposal was at once carried into effect. Individuals were chosen, not only with reference to solving the question in an artistic point of view, but also those who were acquainted with his handwriting. The list included the following names: M. Duprez, M. Laborne, who had superintended the copying of all Donizetti's music for the theatre from the original MSS.; M. Vauthart, chief director of the choruses; M. Robin, chief copyist. The committee assembled under the presidentship of M. Perrin. The question to be solved was the following: "Is the score of the opera (Rita) complete as it has been found, orchestrated, and ready for the copyist, by the hand of Donizetti?" If the committee do not come to a satisfactory conclusion on this point, M. Perrin's agreement is null and void. The score was carefully examined, and the judges unanimously pronounced that no possible doubt could exist of its authenticity. The committee signing their names, they further stated that there was positive evidence that the music had been composed after the receipt of the words, and expressly for the French libretto.

MUSICAL PITCH.

(To the Editor of the Athenæum.)

LAST year, when the Pitch question was under the consideration of our English Committee, I ventured to call attention, by a letter published in the Journal of the Society of Arts, to the manner in which the finest ear may be deceived as to a particular tone, and to the fact, that notes identically the same may sound acuter or graver, owing to the quality of the voice or instrument transmitting them, or to the manner in which they are framed or set off by the composer.—A signal illustration of this came under my notice the other evening at Baden. It will be remembered that the Carlsruhe pitch was distinctly adverted to in the French report as wisely moderate. When M. Berlioz was directing the Carlsruhe orchestra in the chorus and "Dance of Sylphs" from his Faust, I chanced to be seated beside one of the most intelligent and accomplished professors living:—one, too, whose ear, by his occupation, must be rendered peculiarly sensitive to differences of tone, and timbre. "That is in E flat," said he.—"No," I replied, "it is in D;" mentioning in support of my correction the fact of my having adapted English words to this chorus some years since, which made me able to speak to the point with some certainty. "Then it is transposed," was the reply, "for the pitch here is higher than it was in Paris." I was sure that no transposition would be allowed in his own music by one so exquisite in his researches after sonority as M. Berlioz. But my neighbour was convinced that he was hearing E flat for D, and B flat for A; counter-assurances went for nothing—nor could he be satisfied as to the real state of the case, save by reference to the fountain-head, which proved that his ear had been deceived, and that the key was D after all. It may be the extreme brilliancy of the instrumental combinations of M. Berlioz which caused the mystification. In a more sober chorus by Gluck, given at the same concert, no such acute impression could possibly be received. The incident seems so instructive a comment on certain peculiarities influencing musical evidence and testimony, and to contain so strong a suggestion as to the impossibility and undesirableness of uniformity, that I offer it as a postscript to former remarks, which were not flung out from any wanton desire for paradox, but as the result of comparison and experience. H. F. CHORLEY.

FRANKFORT, September, 1860.

Foreign.

HERR RICHARD WAGNER AND THE BALLET.—It is stated that, in order to adapt his great work to the Grand Opera of Paris, Herr Wagner has consented to the interpolation of a ballet, for which he has written the music.

MUSIC IN FRANCE.—The French are "stepping out" in many musical paths formerly untrodden by them. The Orphéonistes showed us only a few weeks since how remarkable has been the advance made by them in part-singing. The other day a traveller loitering on the way betwixt Strasbourg and Paris might have fallen in with choral meetings of men, accompanied by wind instruments, 200, 250, and 500 executants strong,—singing and playing their best in aid of the persecuted Syrian Christians,—at Metz, Luneville, and Nancy. In the last-named clean and courtly town (which has a sort of Dresden air, without the lifelessness and dejection of the Saxon capital) the vesper service in the cathedral, chaunted by a large portion of the congregation, in antiphony with the priests at the altar, is impressive;—the body of voices clear in tone and well in tune. Nothing so good was to be heard in Paris, when we first knew it, on high days and holidays. Lastly, as to accompaniments, France, in its military bands, is beginning to tread close on the heels of Prussia and Austria. The presence of a marshal in the great hotel at Strasbourg gave occasion for a serenade of "harmony music," not equal, of course, to that produced by our late guests, the band of Les Guides, but rich in sound, crisp in time,—the players playing with that real manly expression which overlooks—but, also, which overdoes—no point where taste can show itself. This was expressly to be felt in the delicious introduction to M. Auber's overture to La Sirène.—Musical Correspondent of the Athenæum.

PARIS.—There is some talk of erecting a new place of amusement, and the project, it is said, has already obtained the ministerial consent. The building in question is to be a theatre of grandiose proportions, under the name of the "Théâtre Anglo-Française;" thus called because English capitalists would contribute towards the cost of erection, and, besides the other kinds of dramatic entertainments included in its patent, there would be the performances of a company of English pantomimists, who would import the celebrated choreographic fairy pieces so popular on the English side of the Straits of Dover. The new theatre would be situated at the corner of the Faubourg Saint Denis and the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, and built on a circular plan, the better to ensure facility of ingress and egress. A magnificent façade, thirty-one metres high, would decorate the main body of the building, to which would be attached two pavilions; that on the right would be in a line with the Boulevard, and that on the left run down the Faubourg Saint Denis. A lane would separate it from the adjacent houses. We are promised all the improvements required in the construction of new theatres. The façade, the audience part of the house, and the saloons, would be arranged in an entirely novel manner. There would be a pit, an "entre-sol," and four tiers of boxes and galleries. There would be a permanent exhibition of contemporary pictures in one of the saloons. Comedy, vaudeville, pantomime, and grand choreographic fairy pieces would make up the programmes. Historical dramas, taken from French history more especially, might be admitted; a system of literary competition might, too, be established, and prizes awarded, even to authors whose productions might have been rejected, but who should have been honourably mentioned by the jury. The originator of this project is M. Ruiz de Fye. (Believe it who will!)

MUSIC IN GERMANY.—Every inquiry and research made in Germany yields, for the present, only one result so far as music is concerned. Not a name of the slenderest promise in composition is to be heard of. Even the open air bands (delight of enthusiastic English travellers unused to home music in the open air) which fifteen years ago were always giving out something new (for better for worse), must now, for overtures, recur to the weary platitudes of Reissiger and Lindpaintner, while a good new waltz, or polka, or polonaise, or mazurka, is no more to be heard. The spell of Strauss and Lanner, magicians of dance-music, has died with them. Most of all (we are assured) is the decay of the art to be felt in Vienna, in the management of whose splendid and subsidised opera-house there has been as much malversation of Imperial money as in other more important branches of Austrian finance. The German town, north or south, in which the greatest variety of operatic music may possibly now be heard, is Frankfort. There only, during many years past, has the repertory of the theatre included Cherubini's magnificent, though difficult opera of Medea. Cherubini is elsewhere only known in opera, throughout Europe, as having written Les Deux Journées. At Frankfort, for a Cherubini centenary, to be held this very day, his Faniska has been announced; an opera rich in idea and science, though these were somewhat encumbered by the perverse nature of the rugged Italian, to whose career, as a predominant composer, tact alone was wanting. There may come a Cherubini revival as well as a Gluck revival, though the former may possibly involve the necessity of a re-consideration, which the latter does not. Herr Silcher, one of the pleasant Suabians (and how pleasant the Suabians are as poets, singers, musicians, and comrades, from Herr Uhland downwards, every one conversant with Germany must know), is gone. His collections of national tunes should keep his name alive among all who love national music.—Musical Correspondent of the Athenæum.

HORACE MAYHEW has returned from a tour in the United States and Canada. We hazard the inference that he will give the public, in light and pleasant form, some record of his travelling experiences.—Illustrated News.

Provincial.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1861.—A meeting of the general committee was held on Monday, when Mr. H. Ludolf, Mr. J. W. Hill, and Mr. Fred. Spark were added to the list previously published, and the finance, orchestral, and general purposes committees, with their respective chairmen, were appointed. Messrs. J. W. Atkinson, G. Buckton, and Walker Joy were elected the honorary secretaries, and it was decided to communicate with DR. BENNETT, with a view to his appointment as conductor.

LEEDS.—JULLIEN FESTIVAL.—The grand concert for the benefit of Mad. Jullien, in the Victoria Hall, passed off as well as could be desired. The orchestra comprised the members of the late M. Jullien's band, and this alone gave sufficient assurance of excellent music, the enjoyment of which was enhanced by the spirited and able conducting of Prince George Galitzin. Two or three of the Prince's compositions were played, and displayed great beauty and spirit, as well as originality. The oboe solo by M. Lavigne, and the flute solo by M. Swensden, were exquisite performances. The vocal portion of the concert was sustained by Miss Poole, who sang with great taste and sweetness, and by the Leeds Festival Choral Society in a selection of choral glees and part songs, conducted by Mr. Burton.—Leeds Intelligencer.

MANCHESTER.—The first Saturday concert of the season took place on Saturday evening, at the Free-Trade Hall, when there was a large though not crowded audience. Of the artists engaged the attractions were Mesdames Gassier and Viardot Garcia, Signors Graziani and Ciampi; the last making his debut before a Manchester public. Signor Ciampi is apparently almost youthful; he possesses a fine deep voice along with great facility of execution, and an evident taste for humour of the smart, lively, Italian buffo class. He was encored in the air from Cenerentola. Mad. Gassier gave a brilliant rendering of the rondo finale from Sonnambula, and when encored, substituted the "Venzano Waltz." She also sang the bolero, "Merci, jeunes amies," from Verdi's Vêspres Siciliennes. Signor Graziani won the suffrages of the public in a plaintive romance by Stanzieri, and the eternal "Il balen." Mad. Viardot Garcia sang Schubert's "Erl König" with great effect. A new tenor, Signor Angelo Luise, attempted "La donna è mobile." Some portion of the concerted music was well given, but the "Zitti, zitti" could scarcely have been worse. Mlle. D'Orvill, who took a part in the "Din, din,"—better known to us as "Bon soir"—is a pupil of Mad. Viardot Garcia, whilst the young lady who accompanied the "Erl König" is a daughter of the latter, in whose features we recognised a great look of poor Malibran, if our memory serves us correctly, in a face it would be difficult to forget.

ITALIAN OPERA AT MANCHESTER.—After a lengthy interregnum, the Lyric Drama once more makes its appearance amongst us, in a series of Italian operas. Four out of the five works constituting the series are of the modern school; the fifth is the immortal Don Giovanni. The series commenced on Monday with Il Trovatore. The cast was as follows:—Leonora, Mlle. Titiens; Azucena, Mlle. Lemaire; Manrico, Signor Giuglini; the Count, Signor Valsovani; Ferrando, Signor Vialetti. The Leonara of Mlle. Titiens is a performance of extraordinary excellence. From her first appearance to the death scene, she sustained the part with unflagging energy, singing the music only as a great artiste can sing it, and rising in the fourth act. Signor Giuglini's Manrico is wanting in power. In the delineation of the gentler emotions—in the "Ah! si ben mio;" the "Ah, che la morte;" and the duet, "Si, la stanchezza," he is unrivalled in delicacy and refined expression. The Ferrando of Signor Vialetti merits considerable praise. Signor Valsovani in the character of the Count was totally inefficient.

La Favorita was given on Tuesday, with Mad. Borghi-Mamo, Signori Giuglini and Vialetti, as Leonora, Fernando, and Baldassare. Mad. Borghi-Mamo comes before us for the first time, and therefore claims a special recognition. Her voice is a mezzo-soprano of considerable range, delicious when subdued, or, using the language of Italian art, as sotto voce. Her style is good, her acting natural and graceful, rising easily into the impassioned. Her singing of the air, "Oh! mio Fernando," exhibited large powers of expression and great vocal skill. The most satisfactory part of the opera was the fourth act. Both she and Signor Giuglini here won their greatest triumphs. The "E fia vero?" was encored with acclamations.

The performance of Don Giovanni on Wednesday was of a mixed character. Mlle. Titiens as Donna Anna was everything that could be desired, and we do not hesitate to express our conviction that the character was never more efficiently represented, nor Mozart's music more conscientiously nor more faithfully rendered. The fine scene in the first act, the great scene with Don Ottavio, containing the difficult air, "Or sai chi l'onore," and the "Non mi dir" of the second act, were all in the highest style of lyric art. Scarcely inferior was the Zerlina of Mad. Borghi-Mamo; the "Batti batti" being re-demanded with enthusiasm, and the "Vedrai carino" was faultless. The "Della sua pace" and the "Il moi tesoro" of Signor Giuglini, pieces exactly suited to the character of his voice and his refined style, were received with great enthusiasm. Signor Gassier's Don Giovanni, considering that he is a bass rather than a baritone, was not without merit; Signor Vialetti's Leporello was better; and Signor Mercuriali made a passable Masetto. The orchestral accompaniments, considering their strength, were on the whole satisfactory.

The fourth opera of the season, Lucrezia Borgia, was brought out on Thursday night, with the following caste:—Lucrezia, Mlle. Titiens; Orsini, Mlle. Lemaire; Don Alfonso, Signor Vialetti; Gubetta, Signor Mercuriali; and Gennaro, Signor Sirchia. This was another triumph for Mlle. Titiens, whose acting and singing were both of that high character which entitles her to rank as one of the very first of lyric artistes. One of her most striking characteristics is the perfect equality she maintains throughout every performance. Nothing is sacrificed or slurred over; while she possesses the rare qualification of keeping a brilliant and facile vocalisation in entire subjection to expression. This is remarkably exemplified in the part of Lucrezia, in which numberless graces of vocal skill are thrown off in profusion, and yet seem to belong naturally to the feeling expressed; being the reverse of what is often heard from skilful vocalists, viz: a complete sacrifice of expression to vocal grace, which thus ornament nothing. The perfect equality of Mlle. Titiens' performance prevents us from making any special references to parts, all being equally excellent. The Orsini of Mlle. Lemaire was creditable, Signor Vialetti's Duke was excellent, while Signor Mercuriali's performance was careful, and, upon the whole, praiseworthy. Some parts of Signor Sorchia's Gennaro indicated considerable talent. As it is, we can only augur good things from him. To the opera was added the last act of La Favorita, for Mad. Borghi-Mamo and Signor Giuglini.—(Abridged from the Manchester Weekly Times.)

KENSINGTON PARK CHURCH.—Travellers from the west and north-west of England, upon their approach to London by the Great Western line of railway must have observed a very beautiful church standing out in the fields adjoining the confines of the line. This splendid fabric, founded by the Rev. Dr. Walker, rector of St. Columb Major, Cornwall, and which for seven years, owing to legal difficulties, has remained in its present unfinished condition, is forthwith to be completed. Up to the present time it is said to have cost upwards of twenty thousand pounds. The elegance and beauty of this miniature cathedral in all its details has only to be seen to be greatly admired. The Rev. John Light, M.A., of Ashton-under-Lyne, has been presented to the living. A daily cathedral service, morning and evening, is to be performed by a very efficient staff of singing men and boys, and Dr. James Pech, of New College, Oxford, and Mr. William Sudlow, will be the organists and choir masters.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. DR. MILLER, VICAR OF BELFAST. We had yesterday the pleasure of inspecting, at the warehouse of Mrs. Hart, Castle Place, a grand drawing-room pianoforte of seven octaves, by the presentation of which to the Rev. Dr. Miller the members of the congregation of St. Anne's Church, and other friends, intend to show their esteem for that respected clergyman. The instrument was manufactured specially by Messrs. J. Kirkman and Son, London, and fully sustains the high character borne by the firm in the musical world. The tone is remarkably pure, rich, and powerful. All the latest improvements have been attended to in the construction, and the style of ornament adopted is exceedingly chaste and elegant. The initial letter of Dr. Miller's name has been introduced in the fret-work with excellent effect, and altogether the piano, in appearance and power, could scarcely be excelled. A silver plate in front of the stands bears an inscription to the following effect:—"Presented to the Rev. Thomas Fitzwilliam Miller, D.D., Vicar of Belfast, by members of the congregation of St. Anne's Church, and other friends, as a token of their regard and esteem — 1860." The cost of the instrument was 130 guineas, and the subscriptions to meet it were contributed some months ago, but the presentation was delayed till this time, as the instrument could not sooner be completed by the makers.—Belfast Paper.

MISS KATE RANOE.—The following extract from the Plymouth Mail will no doubt be read with interest by many of our subscribers:—"At the theatre the other evening, Miss Kate Ranoe, the adopted daughter of the late M. Jullien and Mad. Jullien, made her debut as the Minstrel Graceful, in the extravaganza of the Fair One with the Golden Locks. She is a very pleasing young actress, and has evidently received a highly finished musical education. Her acting was very spirited, but graceful and natural, and entirely free of all 'buskin affectation.' Her easy walk across the boards would be worthy the notice of older actresses. Her singing is that of an accomplished artiste, and the taste and knowledge she displays makes much amends for the present state of her voice, which, it is to be regretted, is rather defective. What makes the matter the more to be deplored, is that it is stated that her natural very fine voice has been damaged by excess of practice. With this drawback, her 'Power of Love' was given with great sweetness. With her natural attractions, fine acting, and influential introductions to the musical world, a high position for her among the favourites of the public is next to certain." In another Plymouth paper, the Western Morning News, we find the following:—"A young lady, Miss Kate Ranoe, of no mean pretensions to future theatrical celebrity, has made her debut at the theatre in the part of Graceful, in the amusing burlesque by Planché, the Fair One with the Golden Locks. Miss Ranoe's acting betrayed more knowledge of the stage than was to be expected from so young a debutante. Both her acting and her singing were truly artistic; she had, however, to contend with a break-up in her voice, evidently brought on by overworking of the organ; still she contrived to win golden opinions from the audience by her intonation and pure style of singing. She had evidently been well taught, and her acting was natural, very engaging, without effort, and extremely effective."

GRISI AND MARIO IN DUBLIN.—Flotow's Marta had the effect of crowding the Theatre Royal last evening with a brilliant assemblage of rank and fashion. A German by birth, the composer was not insensible to the charms of Irish melody, when he introduced into one of his operas the "Last Rose of Summer," under an Italian garb. Who could hear the matchless Grisi's rendering of it last evening, and not be moved? It developed all the sweetness and sustaining power of her voice. As she warbled with true feeling note after note, she seemed to bring her listeners with her into an Elysium of delight. The tenor part of Lionello was sustained by Signor Mario, and few characters, musically speaking, are better suited to test his powers. The exquisite aria, "M'apari," now so familiar to the public ear, seems a most exacting song on the great tenor, from the fact of its being difficult of execution, with a certainty of having to repeat it. Signor Mario's rendering of it was fully equal to public anticipation. It brought forth the rich and finer qualities of his voice, and he successfully endeavoured to win the deserved encore which was given. A great feature in the opera was the dramatic representation and admirable vocalism of Mad. Viardot Garcia in the rôle of Nancy. It is difficult to say whether her dramatic or vocal genius is the greater, for she is unrivalled as an artiste in her peculiar sphere. Signor Graziani gave the popular beer song, and had to repeat it. The spinning-wheel quartet was warmly encored. At the close Mesdames Grisi and Garcia were called before the curtain, and retired amidst loud cheering, laden with offerings of the choicest flowers.—Irish Times, Sept. 15.

EFFECT OF MUSIC ON THE SICK.—The effect of music upon the sick has been scarcely at all noticed. In fact, its expensive-ness, as it is now, makes any general application of it out of the question. I will only remark here, that wind instruments, including the human voice, and stringed instruments, capable of continuous sound, have generally a beneficial effect—while the pianoforte, with such instruments as have no continuity of sound, has just the reverse. The finest pianoforte playing will damage the sick, while an air like "Home, Sweet Home," or "Assisa a piè d'un salice," on the most ordinary grinding organ, will sensibly soothe them—and this quite independent of association. —Florence Nightingale.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,
Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,
DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,
And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

"UNDINE."—JULES BENEDICT'S new lyrical legend, the words by JOHN OXENFORD, composed expressly for the Norwich Festival, just published, price, complete, £1. 1s., also in detached pieces, and transposed editions of the Songs sung by Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Palmer, and Mr. Sims Reeves; Pianoforte solo arrangements of the Overture and March, by the Composer; and favourite Airs, arranged by Calicott.—Lists may be had of the Publishers, Leader & Cock, 63 New Bond Street.

"I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY," as Sung by the Buckley Serenaders, and all their Copyright American Melodies, are just published by Messrs. Hopwood & Creed, 42 New Bond Street, London, W. The Original and Celebrated Buckley Serenaders (from 585 Broadway, New York, U.S.) will make their First Appearance in London at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, early in October. N.B.—Full particulars will be duly announced.

SIX THOUSAND New Popular and Standard PIANOFORTE WORKS will be found in the Catalogue just issued by Messrs. ROBERT COCKS & Co., and supplied gratis and postage free to applicants. Address Robert Cocks and Co. 6 New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by EMANUEL AGUILAR.—"SYMPATHY," poetry by ELLIS BELL, dedicated to Signor FERRARI, price 2s., and "IN A WOOD ON A WINDY DAY," poetry by ACTON BELL, dedicated to Miss GRACE LINDO, price 3s., are now published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"These songs, written by the younger sisters of Charlotte Brontë (Currer Bell, author of 'Jane Eyre,') have been clothed by Mr. Aguilar in beautiful and expressive music. 'Sympathy' is full of tranquil tenderness; 'In a Wood on a Windy Day' paints the agitated and exulting mood often engendered by the stormy aspects of nature—the wind roaring among the branches and scattering the withered leaves, or the dashing of the billows on the sea-beach. Mr. Aguilar has heightened the effect of this last song by the picturesque character of his pianoforte accompaniment."—Daily News. "In a Wood on a Windy Day," was sung by Miss Grace Lindo with great success at Mr. Aguilar's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.

LOCH KATRINE WALTZ, on Scotch Airs, and KILLARNEY WALTZ, on Irish Airs. By LAURENT. Both Illustrated. Price 3s. each. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

MARGARETTA WALTZ, on Balfe's Celebrated Song. By LAURENT. Beautifully illustrated in colours by BRANDARD. Companion to the MAUD and BELOVED STAR WALTZES. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street

TENNYSON'S EXQUISITE LYRIC—"FOR EVER AND FOR EVER."—has been as exquisitely set to Music by Mr. BLANCHARD JERROLD. Vide Illustrated News, September 8th. It is just published by Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

CZERNY'S 50 BEST EXERCISES (from the 101), 1s. CZERNY'S ETUDE DE LA VELOCITE, 2s. 6d. complete, or in Three Parts, 1s. each. CZERNY'S 101 EXERCISES, Two Parts, 1s. each. HERZ'S EXERCISES and SCALES, 1s. Boosey's editions must be ordered.

KUHE'S ROBERT LE DIABLE, published this day, price 3s. Also, KUHE'S FANTASIAS on DINORAH, SATANELLA, DOMINO NOIR, ZAMPA, LES VEPRES SICILIENNES, 3s. each. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

KREUTZER'S 40 STUDIES for VIOLIN, 1s. 6d.; Rode's 36 Caprices for Violin, 1s. 6d.; Fiorillo's Caprices for Violin, 1s. 6d.; De Beriot's 7 Airs, with Variations, for Violin, 1s.; Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies by all the great Masters, for the Violin, 1s.; Boosey's Violin Tutor, 24 pages, large size. Boosey & Son, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—Under this title Messrs. BOOSEY & SONS have published a new Series of Shilling Books, intended to embrace every description of Standard and Popular Music for the Voice and Pianoforte, and adapted for every variety of taste.

Each Book contains from forty to fifty pages of Music, beautifully printed on fine paper (demy 4to.) in an illustrated Cover, price One Shilling. Prospectuses, with specimen page of paper and type, are now ready, and will be sent post free by the publishers. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—MENDELSSOHN.—No. 1 contains Twenty Favourite Songs by Mendelssohn, with English Words and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—BALFE—No. 2 contains Twelve Popular Songs by Balfe, including "The Green Trees," "The Good Night," "Beloved," &c. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—VERDI—No. 3 contains Fourteen Favourite Songs by Verdi, with English Words and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—CHRISTY'S SONGS—No. 4 contains Twenty of the most Popular Christy's Minstrels' Songs, with Choruses and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—WALTZES—No. 5 contains Fifty Popular Waltzes by Laurent, Tinney, Gungé, Lamotte, Mellon, &c. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—QUADRILLES. No. 6 contains Twelve popular Sets of Quadrilles (complete), by D'Albert, Laurent, Tinney, Lamotte, Nordmann, &c. Price 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—POLKAS and GALOPS.—No. 7 contains Forty Polkas and Ten Galops (all with their trios), by Labitsky, Lanner, Laurent, Ettling, Gungé, Strauss, Nordmann, &c. Price 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—OPERATIC MUSIC.—No. 8 contains Twenty-five Gems from Verdi's Operas. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Nordmann. Price 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL-ROOM MUSIC-BOOK. Price 4s. superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, containing Fifty Waltzes, Forty Polkas, Ten Galops, Twelve Quadrilles (complete), Two Schottisches, Two Varsovianas. By all the most popular Composers of the day. Forming the most attractive and cheapest collection of Dance-music ever published. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 VIOLIN DANCES, 1s. (First Series); 100 Dances (Second Series), 1s.; 100 Ballads, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 Reels and Country Dances, 1s.; 100 Waltzes (by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitsky), 1s.; 10 Standard Overtures, 1s.; Boosey's 23 Complete Operas for Violin, 1s. each (including Dinorah, Satanella, Bohemian Girl, Maritani, Il Trovatore, La Traviata, &c.). Boosey's editions must be ordered. Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 DANCES for FLUTE, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 Exercises and Studies by the great Masters, 1s. All arranged by R. S. PRATTEN. Also 12 Complete Operas for the Flute, arranged by CLINTON, 1s. each, including Il Trovatore, Sonnambula, Les Huguenots, &c. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, Manufacturers of Pratten's Perfected Flutes.

BOOSEY'S 25 DUETS for TWO CORNETS-A-PISTONS, arranged by THOMAS HARPER, price 1s.; Boosey's 100 Dances for Cornet-à-Pistons, 1s.; Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for Cornet-à-Pistons, 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 CONCERTINA DANCES, 1s.; 100 Popular Melodies for Concertina, 1s.; 100 Sacred Melodies for Concertina, 1s., arranged by GEORGE CASE; Boosey's Concertina Tutor, 24 pages, large size, 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

FOR BEGINNERS.—Thou art so Near, Solo and Duet, 1s.; The Shadow Air (Dinorah), 1s.; The Power of Love, 1s.; Willie, we have Missed You, 1s.; Beautiful Star, 1s.; Maud Waltz, 1s.; Satanella Quadrille (complete), 1s.; König's Hero Polka, 1s. All in the Pianoforte Recreations. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

IN ENGLISH.—Dinorah, 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 6s; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Parma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischutz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbiere, 10s.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English words and the original Foreign text, in handsome cloth volumes. Boosey's editions must be ordered. 28 Holles Street.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, September 22, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 39 SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Pianoforte / Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Violin	MONS. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	MONS. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English): / Vocal Classes	Mr. POWELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian / Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

JUST PUBLISHED, RUDIMENTS of HARMONY with Progressive Exercises. By G. A. MACFARREN. Price 7s. 6d. Cramer, Beale, & Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mlle. PAREPA, Mad. SAINTON-DOLBY, Mr. GEORGE PERREN, and Mr. LEWIS THOMAS, with full Band Choirs, will perform the MESSIAH on Wednesday, October 3. Conductor, Dr. WYLDE. Tickets at popular prices, viz.—Area, 1s.; Balcony, 3s.; Stalls, 5s.; to be had of Mr. Austin, ticket office, St. James's Hall; Messrs. Cramer & Co., 201 Regent Street; Chappell & Co., 50 New Bond Street; and Keith, Prowse, & Co., 48 Cheapside.

MAD. CATHERINE HAYES begs to announce her Return to England for the Season. All communications respecting Concerts and Oratorios to be addressed to 13 Westbourne Park, W.

THE ARION (Eight-Part Choir). — Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. — The Members are informed that the next Meeting will take place at 13 Berners Street, on Thursday, October 4th, at 8 o'clock precisely.—Prospectuses of the Society may be obtained on application to the Conductor,
F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

MR. WALLWORTH begs to inform his pupils, friends, and the public that he has REMOVED to 81 PARK STREET, GROSVENOR SQUARE, W.—The Second Edition of his "ART OF SINGING" is just published, and may be had at his residence.

MR. GEORGE FORBES respectfully informs his Friends and Pupils that he has REMOVED from 9 Bentinck Terrace, Regent's Park, to 22 PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA HILL, W.

AN ITALIAN GENTLEMAN, who is perfectly cognisant of Music in all its branches, particularly Singing and Composition, wishes to obtain PUPILS. Would not object to an Engagement in a large Music Establishment, as Director or Reviser. Full references given if required. Address G. D. L., Post Office, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

VOLUNTEER BAND now forming in the 37th Middlesex (G. G. B.) Volunteer Rifles. Members will have the benefit of instruction from a Musical Professor of great experience as a Teacher of Military Musical Instruments. Any persons willing to join are requested to apply at Head Quarters, 55 Bernard Street, Russell Square.

TO OBOE PLAYERS.—Mr. WILLIAM HOWARD has an opening in his Orchestra for a FIRST OBOE; a five months' engagement guaranteed. Must be really a good player.—Address to 37 George Street, Edinburgh.

MUSICAL EDUCATION.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, of good education and address, who can command a premium of £100, may be received for Five Years into a first-class Musical Instrument Establishment, of thirty years' standing, in the West of England. He would be instructed in the Organ, Pianoforte, and Singing, and a Salary would be given in the latter three years. Apply to S., care of Messrs. Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London.

BOARD and RESIDENCE for PROFESSIONAL LADIES.—Miss Le DIEU begs to announce to her Friends and the Public that she receives a limited number of Young Professional Ladies as BOARDERS. 18 Chalcot Crescent, Primrose Hill, N.W.

A PARTMENTS.—Bed-rooms Furnished,—Drawing-room Bed-rooms, convenience en suite, 25s., no extras. Pianoforte if required. Bed, use of Breakfast-room, 3s. 17 Arundel Street, Coventry Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S GRAND MARCH for the SCHILLER FESTIVAL, performed at the Floral Hall and Crystal Palace Concerts, as Solo or Duet for Pianoforte.—Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201 Regent Street.

LIVERPOOL.

MANAGERS and ARTISTES visiting LIVERPOOL will find it advantageous to engage the services of

LEE, NIGHTINGALE, & CO.

(for many years connected with the Liverpool Times, Liverpool Mail, and Liverpool Albion Newspapers), PRINTERS, LITHOGRAPHERS, ADVERTISING AGENTS, AND NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Swift Court, 13 Castle Street, Liverpool.

MUSICAL WORLD PENNY NEWSPAPER

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,
Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,
DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,
And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.
"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.
"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

"THE HARP OF WALES."
Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,
COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS,
Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.
"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.
"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.
"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—
"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.
"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.
"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.
"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.
Composed by Brinley Richards

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"GOOD NIGHT," by I. LIEBICH. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebech (forming No. 2 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte, by the above author), is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," by R. ANDREWS. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where R. ANDREWS'S transcription for the Pianoforte of "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR" (Reichardt) may be obtained, price 2s.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 2s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by BALFE.—"I LOVE YOU," sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES with such immense success at Mr. Martin's (Exeter Hall), Mr. Lindsay Sloper's, and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts (St. James's Hall), and at Mr. Balfe's benefit concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens before 10,000 persons, 2s.; as well as Balfe's two charming Ballads, "Oh! take me to they heart again," 2s., sung by Miss KATE RANO (mezzo-soprano) at Mad. de Vaucheran's Concert; and "I'm not in love, remember," 2s. 6d., sung by Mlle. SEDLATZEK at the fashionable Concerts at Campden House, are published by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By EMILE BERGER. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, arranged for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By I. LIEBICH. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich, is now published, price 2s. (forming No. 1 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte by the above author), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, is now published, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I NEVER KNEW HOW DEAR THOU WERT." New Song, by H. K. MORLEY, composed expressly for and sung by Miss LASCELLES (the Poetry by CATHERINE WARFIELD) is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by EMANUEL AGUILAR.—"SYMPATHY," poetry by ELLIS BELL, dedicated to Signor FERRARI, price 2s., and "IN A WOOD ON A WINDY DAY," poetry by ACTON BELL, dedicated to Miss GRACE LINDO, price 3s., are now published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.
"These songs, written by the younger sisters of Charlotte Brontë (Currer Bell, author of 'Jane Eyre,') have been clothed by Mr. Aguilar in beautiful and expressive music. 'Sympathy' is full of tranquil tenderness; 'In a Wood on a Windy Day' paints the agitated and exulting mood often engendered by the stormy aspects of nature—the wind roaring among the branches and scattering the withered leaves, or the dashing of the billows on the sea-beach. Mr. Aguilar has heightened the effect of this last song by the picturesque character of his pianoforte accompaniment."—Daily News. "In a Wood on a Windy Day," was sung by Miss Grace Lindo with great success at Mr. Aguilar's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.

KREUTZER'S 40 STUDIES for VIOLIN, 1s. 6d.; Rode's 36 Caprices for Violin, 1s. 6d.; Fiorillo's Caprices for Violin, 1s. 6d.; De Beriot's 7 Airs, with Variations, for Violin, 1s.; Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies by all the great Masters, for the Violin, 1s.; Boosey's Violin Tutor, 24 pages, large size. Boosey & Son, Holles Street.

LOCH KATRINE WALTZ, on Scotch Airs, and KILLARNEY WALTZ, on Irish Airs. By LAURENT. Both Illustrated. Price 3s. each. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

MARGARETTA WALTZ, on Balfe's Celebrated Song. By LAURENT. Beautifully illustrated in colours by BRANDARD. Companion to the MAUD and BELOVED STAR WALTZES. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE MAZURKAS of CHOPIN, edited by J. W. DAVISON, complete in One large Volume, music size (100 pages), with Preface by the Editor, and Portrait of Chopin, price 8s., or superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, price 10s. 6d.; Rossini's Stabat Mater, for Pianoforte, by Smart, complete, 3s.; Mozart's Twelfth Mass, do. 3s.; Moore's Irish Melodies, for Pianoforte, by Nordmann, 2s. 6d.; Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, complete, with Portrait and Introduction by J. W. Davison, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Meyerbeer's Dinorah, complete, for Pianoforte Solo, 7s. 6d.; the Juvenile Pianoforte Album, 12 pieces, illustrated and bound, 3s. 6d.; the Operatic Album, 100 gems from the newest Operas, for Pianoforte, in cloth, 12s.; Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances, for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.; Boosey's 100 Waltzes, by Strauss, Lanner and Labitzky, for Piano, 3s.; Czerny's Etude de la Velocité, 2s. 6d.; Czerny's 101 Exercises, 2s.; Boosey's Part-Song Miscellany, 18 Original Compositions, handsomely bound, 5s.; the Harmonium Museum, 100 Sacred and Secular Subjects for Harmonium, with Instructions, 7s. 6d.; Engel's Harmonium Operatic Album, 60 Gems for Harmonium, 7s. 6d.; Christy's Minstrels' Album, 24 Songs in One Book, 2s. 6d.; the Verdi Album, 25 Songs, in English and Italian, 4s.; Dinorah, for Voice and Piano, complete, 12s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C.—A.D. 1834.—The TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT, Cash Account, Balance Sheet, &c., are now ready, and may be had on written or personal application.
CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondents.)

Tuesday, Sept. 18.—Of all cathedral cities we should have considered Norwich the least likely to support a triennial musical festival, and such a festival as that of A.D. 1860. The united choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford have an annual meeting, but the Norwich festival is strictly triennial, and it might have been thought that the increasing thirst after music would have induced the good folk of the eastern counties to travel to London in the intermediate years, the railway communication being convenient, and so have left no appetite for the good things put forward by the promoters of the meeting. However, the present festival offers so many attractions, in the shape of creative and executive art, that the ancient city may fairly compete with London itself. Two works new to the world are to be performed, and one new to Norwich, and the best attainable artists have been engaged for the oratorios and concerts. Success, therefore, is deserved, and we hope to be able to chronicle a complete triumph. Norwich labours under some disadvantages with regard to its festival. The great charm of such events consists in the oratorios being performed in a sacred edifice, where the necessary quietude of the audience, together with the hallowed associations of the building, disposes the mind to an attention which can never be bestowed in a concert-room. Norwich has a cathedral, a noble building, eminently calculated for such performances, but the representation of oratorios is interdicted by the diocesan authorities, we suppose, as a desecration. Without entering into a discussion of this veto, we may congratulate Norwich on having so good a room to fall back upon as St. Andrew's Hall, in which the festivals are held. This building accommodates about the same number as Exeter Hall, so that it is not a mere makeshift.

The Norwich festival differs from those given in the western cathedral cities in the fact of there being no collection at the doors after the morning performances. It therefore argues much for the spirit of the place that since the first festival was held (in 1824) a profit of £8,270. 2s. 9d. has been realised in favour of various local charities.

Notwithstanding the revolutions which the railways have created, not alone in travelling, but in the habits of society in general, and its amusements, festivals in this, as in a few places of larger population, continue to exist, although apprehension has arisen that their existence might be shortened by the facilities which the public enjoy in reaching London. There, in the season, every singer of note is found, and performances in some respects equalling those of the provincial festivals can be heard, to satisfy the most enthusiastic amateur, and at a less cost. As excellence is absolutely necessary in these days, and as the demand for the best artists, vocal and instrumental, is much greater than when festivals were first established, the difficulty is so to concentrate these and other requisites, as to enable its managers to realise a fair profit for the charities. Of late, Norwich festivals cannot be said to have answered from a commercial point of view; but a much stronger appeal than usual is now made to the public aid, through official sources and otherwise. We take no notice of the preliminary rehearsals, for the simple reason that, however good in themselves, they do not enable a sound judgment to be formed of a new work. The most careful rehearsal, from the absence of the principal instrumentalists, must be imperfect. There are those who may recollect the excessive labour attendant on the rehearsals of former days. Now it seems as if, even in a new work, such is the perfection instrumentalists have attained, that rarely indeed are frequent repetitions required. And well it is so, for with the quantity of music now crammed into the performances, the rehearsals would scarce finish ere the concert began.

On Monday evening the festival (or rather prelude to the festival) commenced by a sort of bye concert, at a cheaper rate—five shillings the area, ten shillings and sixpence to patrons' gallery—enabling those who cannot afford high prices to partake in the musical treat of the week. The selection was that universal favourite, the Creation. No better choice could have been made, if only because it gave the audience an opportunity of hearing all the English vocalists. The attendance, although fair, about 1,000, was not equal to what was anticipated. The patrons' gallery and area were full, but the galleries not. In earlier festivals there have been as many as 2,300 persons in the hall; but of late years, whether the orchestra occupies more space, or from what other cause, the committee seem unable to accommodate so large an audience. This no doubt makes a considerable difference in the general receipts, as the later evenings and the Messiah are always the most crowded. The Creation went off bright and sparkling, from beginning to end. Mad. Novello, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, Mr. Santley, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, all sang their allotted parts with their accustomed excellence. The band was admirable, and the chorus almost faultless.

Wednesday, September 19.—The festival proper has been inaugurated brilliantly. At the first miscellaneous concert last night, most of the executants were in capital "condition," and the programme combined sufficient novelty with a good selection of pieces that have been tried and not found wanting. Viewed from a business aspect, the success was not so brilliant. The hall was well filled, but not crowded. On the other hand, the demand for tickets for this evening and for Friday's Messiah has so far exceeded the supply that the committee have erected an extra gallery above the seats reserved for "patrons" at the east end of the hall. This gallery is a substantial structure supported on iron columns. As it is situated immediately opposite the orchestra, its occupants will be placed on ne peut mieux, both for seeing and hearing. The interest excited by this evening's performance, and by that of Friday morning, affords another instance of the affection for familiar works and the prejudice against those unknown which distinguishes us from all other nations. Last night's concert derived special interest from the production of an opera which, written eighty-three years ago, is so aged and forgotten that it is quite new; to-morrow is to be made memorable by the first public trial of a new cantata; but people seem rather to avoid these attractions in order to make sure of to-night, which is remarkable for nothing but the May Queen. Dr. Bennett's cantata cannot be called old, as it has only been two years before the world; but its merits received such immediate acknowledgment that it has already become a "classic," and, therefore, comes into the category of received works. Of course we always affirm that it is our national fidelity and steadfastness which makes us listen with devout attention to acknowledged masterpieces. Still we have heard foreigners assert that it is to our ineradicable shopkeeping propensities that this peculiarity is to be ascribed; in other words, that we are prudent even in our pleasures, and, en vraie nation boutiquière, prefer taking our money on a sure card, investing our superfluous cash in a certainty rather than in a speculation. But, whatever the reason, such is the fact, and, as long as it continues to be so, we must not complain if the compilers of programmes lay this truth to heart. We are, however, quite at liberty to praise when we find bold departures from this safe but unsatisfactory principle; and in this respect Norwich merits honourable distinction. The concert last night was rendered particularly interesting by a selection from Armida. We have watched with attention the increasing interest which the works of Gluck inspire. Even if it be a mere fashion it is one that cannot fail to bring good results. Our readers will remember the success of Orfeo at Covent Garden this summer, and also that of Iphigenia at St. James's Hall, which surprised most listeners into a confession that to them Gluck had been until then unknown. The general appreciation of his labours has emboldened Mr. Charles Hallé to announce the performance of a third opera of the same master at Manchester. A selection from this arrangement of Armida was performed last night. All dramatic compositions lose effect when removed from the stage, but of all composers Gluck suffers most. His intense desire to be dramatic led him into that famous warfare, which the mention of his name invariably calls up. But after all, tacitly or openly, this rivalry between art moulded on art and art founded on nature, has been going on since art first began. It is instanced as plainly in Palissy the potter, and Rosetti the painter, as in Gluck the musician. Without comparing the intellectual powers of the two, we may suggest the resemblance between Gluck and Wagner, not only in the ideas that animate, but also in the self-assertion that characterises both. If Wagner's present venture in France prove a success, the resemblance will be rendered still more striking. After all, Wagner seems to aim at the same object by a noisy revolution which Meyerbeer, for many years, has been striving to effect by gradual reformation. In each succeeding work we see Meyerbeer discarding more and more the formal artifices of his predecessors, in order to make his compositions more thoroughly dramatic; and the theory which Wagner preaches, as if it were a new evangel of which he is the apostle, is little else than a réchauffé of Gluck's creed—an amplification of the suggestion thrown out by Mad. Dudevant (Georges Sand) in the letter on Les Huguenots, addressed to Meyerbeer some fifteen years ago. From the introductory matter to the new edition of Armida, edited by Mr. C. Hallé, we extract the following:—

"In the original French opera-book Armida is designated as a Drame Héroique. It might more correctly be styled a romantic rather than heroic legend, setting forth in picturesque contrast the strife betwixt sensual pleasure and courageous duty. The story is as old as Christianity. It was shadowed out in the early mysteries, where the Goddess Venus and her seduction of chaste and noble warriors figured. Again and again has the same combination appeared under different costumes and disguises. It is one of the very few inventions which exist in the world of fiction, and is possibly the first Christian legend which in drama was allowed to take a place of interest, reputed as equal to that attaching itself to the marvels of pagan mythology."

Here, again, we might call attention to the similarity of subject between Armida and Tannhäuser, in which Venus, like Gluck's Enchantress, holds her knight in silken toils, and which depicts the struggle between love and duty. To go further, might we not point to the duet in the fourth act of the Huguenots, where the subject is humanised and elevated? The scenes selected last night, from the second and third acts, form a tolerably complete story. They comprised a duet (Mad. Clara Novello and Mr. Santley), in which Armida concerts with Hidraot the destruction of Roland; an air for Roland in the enchanted garden, which suggests by its soothing character the gradual influence of the magic scene upon the knight, until he is lulled to sleep (sung to absolute perfection by Mr. Sims Reeves)—a strain of delicious melody that haunts the memory long after its notes have died away; a scena, showing Armida herself, vanquished by love, lamenting her weakness, and then bursting out into an invocation to Hate—as grand and dramatic a composition as can well be imagined (finely declaimed by Mad. Novello); an air with chorus, "Love shall no longer reign," in which Hate promises deadly opposition to her rival (extremely well delivered by Mad. Weiss); and a recitative, in which Armida bewails her passion. Here the selection terminated, but it might have very well been carried on to the end of the opera. We should then have learnt that two companion knights of Roland, after successfully resisting the fascinations of the enchanted garden, finally rescue him from the "silken dalliance" into which he has subsided, and honour and duty triumph. We repeat that Gluck's music loses infinitely in the concert-room, and is proportionately ineffective in detached pieces; but if the great composer was so powerfully dramatic when dealing with the unsubstantial creatures of romance, what would he have been if he had taken humanity for his theme?

Armida was not the only novelty. A soprano solo, "To please and then instruct mankind," sung by Mad. Weiss, and a bass solo, for Mr. Weiss, with chorus, "In pæans loud," from a cantata entitled Hypatia, were by Mr. J. F. Hill, chorus master of the festival. Mr. H. H. Pierson, whose oratorio, Jerusalem, was performed here some eight years ago, was also represented by an accompanied part song, to Campbell's "Ye mariners of England." The chorus gave this con amore, and the enthusiastic encore it elicited must be attributed rather to its energetic execution by 260 fresh and admirably trained voices than to any other cause. Mlle. Titiens made her first appearance in Norwich, and received a cordial welcome. There is little scope for effect in the soprano part of "A te o cara," but the brilliancy of the Hungarian lady's voice produced almost as much effect on the audience as the delicious warbling by Signor Giuglini in the opening solo, one of the most exquisite melodies that ever emanated from the most plaintively melodious of composers. The audience had already unsuccessfully endeavoured to get several pieces repeated, but in this case the encore was too enthusiastic to be denied. Mlle. Titiens surprised her audience beyond measure in "Casta Diva," and her grand delivery of the majestic melody of the largo, as well as her energetic execution of the cabaletta, were worthy of the applause she excited. The audience could not have exhibited greater warmth even if they had known that Mlle. Titiens was suffering from such severe indisposition as would have justified her in not appearing at all. Mad. Borghi-Mamo's success was scarcely less decided. She was heard to most advantage in the air from the Donna del Lago, "Oh quante lagrime," although she produced a marked effect in the Neapolitan barcarole, "Santa Lucia." Mad. Novello was much applauded in the charming aria of Benedict and De Beriot, "Prendi per me." Miss Palmer sang with passionate earnestness Mr. J. W. Davison's setting of Shelley's song, "Swifter far than summer flight,"—an exquisite illustration of one of the most perfect gems by the most purely poetical of all poets, and breathing the very spirit of the original "Lament," with all its delicate and tender grace; and Herr Molique's melodious ballad, "When the moon is brightly shining," was sung with the utmost refinement of expression by Mr. Sims Reeves, the effect in both the latter instances being heightened by Mr. Benedict's perfect accompaniment on the pianoforte. The instrumental performances were by no means inferior to the vocal. Miss Arabella Goddard has helped so much to popularise Mendelssohn's G minor concerto, that we need only repeat for the hundredth time that the fair pianiste's execution is not merely mechanically irreproachable, but that it exhibits how thoroughly the performer is imbued with the intentions of the composer. The slow movement, with its lovely violoncello accompaniment, and the finale, with its exuberance of joyful energy, were both played to perfection. The same words will apply with as much force to Signor Piatti's incomparable performance of his own fantasia on airs from Linda di Chamouni. The orchestral pieces consisted of Beethoven's symphony in C minor, and the overtures to Masaniello and Zampa, both of which were given to perfection under the skilful guidance of Mr. Benedict. The mayor was present in the patrons' gallery with belt, sword, mace, and all the insignia of state, in pursuance of the following praiseworthy resolution:—

"At a meeting of the council of the body corporate of the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the city of Norwich, held on the 5th day of September, 1860, it was moved by Sir William Foster, Bart., seconded by John Godwin Johnson, Esq., and resolved unanimously: 'That this council, considering that the love of music which distinguishes this city is a subject of just pride, and that the triennial festivals are the fruit and reward of long devotedness to this ennobling pursuit, earnestly calls upon the citizens by themselves, and through their friends and connections, to promote in every way in their power the success of an enterprise which reflects so much credit on all concerned; being assured that such a success would be a gain for music and lovers of music everywhere, an encouragement to local talent, an assistance to deserving charities, and especially gratifying to all who wish well to this ancient city. And, to exhibit practically the interest which the corporation takes in the forthcoming festival, a committee was appointed to co-operate with the committee of management, and to afford it all possible support and assistance.'

"At a meeting of the committee of council, held the 11th day of September instant, it was unanimously resolved: '1. That it would be the best possible proof of the hearty good feeling of the citizens towards the festival, and a great encouragement to the committee of management and the choral society, were the corporation, with their ladies and friends, to attend the first miscellaneous concert on Tuesday evening.' '2. That the mayor be requested to invite the members of the corporation, and at the same time, the sheriffs, magistrates, and other leading citizens, to concur in this demonstration of the best wishes of the city for the success of this noble enterprise.'

"J. HENRY TILLETT, Mayor.

"Guildhall, 11th September, 1860."

The italics are not our own.

Thursday, Sept. 20.—The success of the festival is now no longer a matter of speculation, but a certainty. The bright weather continuing of course exercises a favourable influence; but, on the other hand, the attractions of the programme are so many and so great that no wonder the tickets for admission, both at the morning and evening performances, should be purchased with avidity. The splendid edifice in which the concerts are held is of itself sufficient to attract visitors; and its acoustical properties being no less remarkable than its architectural beauties, the beau idéal of a music-hall is realised. In short, whether as an arena for civic assemblies, or as a place of public entertainment, St. Andrew's Hall is unrivalled in England: at once ornamental and useful, it is a monument of which the city may be proud, and a receptacle the value of which can hardly be over-estimated by the inhabitants. When lighted up at night its appearance is dazzling, while the ecclesiastical style of its architecture, both interior and exterior, materially aids the illusion at the oratorio performances in the morning. All day long the approaches to St. Andrew's Hall are crowded; so that but for the excellent arrangements of the police it would be somewhat difficult for visitors (especially at night) to gain access to the building. The good people of Norwich, who at the beginning of the week could not be kept indoors by the very inclement weather, were not likely to be debarred from exercising their curiosity in the open air when "the rain was over and gone," the sky was unclouded overhead, and the comfortable sun shed light and warmth on every object.

The Dettingen Te Deum, and the Last Judgment, both superbly given, would merit a column of description; nevertheless, they must be passed over with a word. The singers in the Te Deum were Mad. Weiss and Miss Palmer, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Weiss; the principal trumpet part in the bass solo with chorus, "Thou art the King of Glory" (Mr. Weiss), being executed by Mr. T. Harper with as much truth of intonation as though he had been playing easy passages on the easiest of instruments, instead of passages more difficult than any elsewhere met with, even in the scores of Handel, who wrote not seldom so perplexingly for the trumpet as to incline many to the belief that it was in his time a different kind of instrument from the one subsequently employed. Of singers so well known as those we have named, in a work so familiar as the Dettingen Te Deum, it is requisite to say no more than that they did their best, and that better could not have been desired. The Last Judgment—in which Mad. Novello took the soprano music, and Mr. Sims Reeves sang the tenor part for the first time (so admirably, by the way, that the lovers of Spohr's music earnestly hope it may not be for the last)—made as deep an impression as at any performance of the same great work we are able to recall. The Norwich amateurs have an affection for this oratorio, which first introduced Spohr to their notice, at the festival of 1830, on Friday, the 24th of September, when Sir George Smart was conductor, Mad. Stockhausen and Mrs. Knyvett, Master Phillips, Messrs. Braham (the elder), Vaughan, Terrail, and Edward Taylor (the Gresham Musical Professor), were the singers, and Mori, Wagstaff, Lindley, Dragonetti, Nicholson, Grattan Cooke, Willmann, Powell, Mackintosh, Platt, Harper, Chipp, &c. (all eminent performers, of whom only two are now living) among the members of the orchestra. The alto part (allotted yesterday to Miss Palmer) was intrusted to a gentleman—a counter-tenor (Mr. Terrail, so well remembered at glee parties and other convivial meetings). We doubt, however, if, with all this array of names, the Last Judgment was nearly so well rendered as on the occasion under notice—30 years later. What used to pass muster then would hardly be accepted now without a protest; and with respect to singers, Mad. Novello and Mr. Sims Reeves are not bad substitutes for Mad. Stockhausen and the elder Braham; the rich contralto of the clever and improving Miss Palmer is assuredly preferable to the shrill tones of a counter-tenor; while, for sacred music, a more satisfactory barytone-bass in every sense than Mr. Santley could not be singled out. On the vast improvements made by our choristers and orchestral players during the last quarter of a century it is unnecessary to insist. The choruses were without exception finely sung (even "Destroyed is Babylon" being as steady in time and tune as it is too frequently the opposite), and the instrumental preludes to the 1st and 2d parts of the oratorio were performed by the band in such a manner as to display their manifold and exquisite beauties in the most thoroughly effective light.

The new oratorio has been tested and come forth from the ordeal triumphantly. If not absolutely a great work, it is in every sense the work of a great musician, and has raised its composer, high as he has always been previously rated, a step higher than he stood before. It shows him a master of the choir as well as of the orchestra, capable of dealing with a lofty Scriptural subject, and able to sustain himself on the point of elevated expression indispensable to its proper treatment, besides possessing that thorough familiarity with technical resources which allows the application of those elaborate contrivances in which the greatest masters of the art have delighted to exercise their ingenuity and show their power. All we can add now is, that the oratorio (solo-singers—Mad. Novello, Mad. Weiss, Miss Palmer; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Wilbye Cooper, Santley, and Belletti) was performed under the direction of Herr Molique himself, who was enthusiastically received on appearing in the orchestra, and as enthusiastically applauded at the end of his work. Two pieces were redemanded and repeated, at the request of the Mayor of Norwich (the Lord-Lieutenant, strange to say, not being present on this occasion). To conclude, musical Norwich has added another laurel to its already goodly wreath, and done honour to itself in honouring one who has shown himself so worthy of distinction.

Friday, Sept. 21.—Abraham, by general admission, is not merely a success, but a legitimate success. Those who previously knew anything of the composer, and recognised in him one of the foreigners whose residence among us exercises the most salutary influence, whose example and teaching produce in an equal measure valuable results, and whose earnest devotion to art in its purest and highest signification have won them places among the ranks of music's chosen expositors, were not surprised to find in Herr Molique the author of a work so lofty in design and so masterly in execution. Others less intimately acquainted with the current history of art-progress, and to whom his name was comparatively unfamiliar, or at best only known as that of an eminent performer and composer for the violin, were probably taken aback by this evidence of a new and unexpected talent. Both sides, however, were ready to acknowledge the unusual merit of Abraham, and to hail it unreservedly as the best specimen of oratorio writing since Elijah. This was felt more and more strongly as number succeeded number, yesterday, in St. Andrew's Hall; and the grand chorus which terminates the first part left no further doubt on the matter. A second part was to follow, it is true; but no one anticipated any falling off; on the contrary, people felt sure of the rest, and looked forward to experience still increasing satisfaction. Conscious that for more than an hour a genuine master had been ministering to their entertainment, they were content to allow that master to conduct them where he listed, persuaded that he enjoyed alike the power to edify and the gift to please. Halévy, the French composer, observing with anxiety the silence of his instructor, Cherubini, while some trivial flatterers were extolling, in unmeasured terms, the beauties of La Juive, addressed the moody, if not morose, Italian as follows: "Maitre! vous ne me dites rien?" "Puisque tu ne m'as rien dit," was the brief and significant retort of Cherubini. But when, at the end of the first and second parts of Abraham, Herr Molique turned towards the conglomerate of Cherubinis, who, in the shape of the crowded audience of St. Andrew's Hall, sat there to pronounce judgment according to the dictates of the impressions they had received, they left him no time to put the Halévyan query. He had really said so much to them, and which they had so thoroughly appreciated, that spontaneously, and without giving a moment to consideration, they recorded a unanimous verdict in his favour. The members of the orchestra and chorus—not anticipating the decision of the public, as is too frequently the unwarranted and anomalous practice—merely echoed it; but echoed it with such hearty acclamations as allowed no question of their unqualified approval.

The book of Abraham (prepared, as we are informed, by the composer) is modelled after that of Elijah (the compilation, as all the world knows, of Mendelssohn himself). The text of every piece consists of some extract from Sacred Writ, appropriate to the matter in hand. To this an objection has been made, specious enough, but which, if enforced, would greatly restrict the domain of the oratorio. Here it is, nevertheless:—

"The merits of Elijah are due to the composer having followed the bent of a dramatic genius. The absence of Scripture phraseology would have detracted nothing from these merits. When the sacred text happens to accommodate itself naturally and gracefully to the subject, a beauty is gained by its use. But to force the union is to injure both.

Neither can it be pleaded that truth supplies the place of discarded fiction. To put the words of one man into the mouth of another—to apply to one event what was said of another, to destroy old associations by the substitution of new—may be perfectly justifiable, may even be advantageous, but surely it is not adherence to truth."

That Mendelssohn's dramatic genius was not greater than his genius as a religious composer, his psalms (one of the most beautiful of which was performed immediately after Abraham, yesterday), together with many sublime passages in St. Paul and Elijah, amply demonstrate. Take away from those masterpieces such devotional pieces as, "But the Lord is mindful of His own," "Cast thy burden upon the Lord," "He that shall endure to the end," &c., and they would be shorn of half their beauties. It is, indeed, this "interfusion of styles" contemned by the writer of the above sentences, which has enabled not only Mendelssohn but Handel himself to obtain some of the noblest results of which the oratorio is capable. That there exists, properly speaking, only one "sacred oratorio," is, we believe, admitted; and even the Messiah presents instances of quasi dramatic treatment which would almost lay it open to the same critical objection. It should be borne in mind, moreover, that an oratorio is not an anthem; and, indeed, an anthem nearly three hours long would be a tedious affair, calculated rather to fatigue than to elevate. Even in their psalms the great composers have endeavoured to gain variety through the medium of a descriptive colouring bordering on dramatic expression, wherever the text offered a suggestion that could serve their turn. Besides, an oratorio—even a sacred oratorio, like the Messiah—is a very different thing from an act of worship, and originated from an entirely different point of view. Herr Molique, then, in our opinion, was perfectly justified in resorting to the form he has adopted. He has made none of his characters do anything for which the Book of Genesis is not warrant, nor say anything that they might not reasonably be presumed to have said (taking the incidents of Genesis as groundwork) under the circumstances. The citations from the Prophets, the Psalms, Deuteronomy, Judges, Lamentations, Job, and the Revelations are all to the purpose; and by their employment the composer has secured an element of contrast that would otherwise be wanting to his oratorio. How Herr Molique has put the materials of his plot together was shown yesterday.

About the music of Abraham a few scattered observations must at present suffice. A work of serious and elaborate character, which must have cost the author so many days and nights of earnest reflection, of both mental and physical labour, should not be dismissed as if it were merely an ephemeral production. The high opinion which a single hearing has warranted us in pronouncing is not destined, we feel assured, to be weakened by closer familiarity, but is rather likely to be fortified by the discovery of beauties which, not being immediately on the surface, reveal themselves less readily at first. Herr Molique has evidently written not so much with a view of exciting pleasurable emotions or eliciting momentary admiration by the production of separate and what are denominated "striking" effects as with that of producing a work complete as a whole and symmetrical in all its parts. He has succeeded, and, though at times deeply influenced by the example of Mendelssohn (the extraordinary fascination of whose manner, as developed in the oratorios of St. Paul and Elijah, it seems impossible to resist), so deeply, indeed, as occasionally to paraphrase and copy (we have not said plagiarise) some of that composer's most salient characteristics, he more than once approaches the solemn dignity of Handel, emulates the grace and ingenuity of Mozart, and even attains the cheerful and healthy vigour of Haydn. These compound elements make up an individuality which may fairly lay claim to be denominated "Molique," and are handled with such wonderful facility and cleverness that it is impossible at any moment to confound them with the pale reflections and attenuated parodies of recognised masters in which modern art unhappily abounds—most especially among the direct followers of Mendelssohn and Spohr (the last-named a model, by the way, for whom the strong partiality once evinced by the composer of Abraham seems to be now virtually extinguished). Always strong, often elevated, in his choruses; forcible in his narrational and declamatory recitatives, expressive and melodious in his airs and vocal concerted pieces, Herr Molique adds to these desirable qualifications, a thorough knowledge of contrapuntal contrivance (witness the admirable clearness of his fugues and imitative passages), which he is enabled to exhibit with the greater felicity, inasmuch as he is a master of all the resources of orchestral colouring, and employs them not only with invariable freedom, but with consummate judgment, the rich and elaborate instrumentation of his grand choruses and more important pieces being not more remarkable than his sober and delicate scoring of the recitatives and solo airs.

The performance of this fine work, though unequal in merit, was in many respects surpassingly good. The solo soprano music was done great justice to by Mad. Clara Novello and Mad. Weiss. Miss Palmer, as the contralto, sang with even more than her usual excellence, and as much may be said for Mr. Santley, who had a very arduous part to perform, and acquitted himself most honourably. To Mr. Wilbye Cooper, too, great praise is due for his tasteful and musicianly rendering of a part of the solo tenor music; and Signor Belletti should be highly extolled, if only because, like a genuine artist, he accepted a very small part, for the sake of strengthening the "cast" of the oratorio. Mr. Sims Reeves, too, had but little to do, but that little included one of the most impressive songs in the oratorio, which he sang so magnificently as to carry off the chief honours of the performance. The band and chorus, under the direction of Herr Molique, were highly satisfactory.

(To be concluded in our next number.)

Impromptu Parody on "Sweet Love, Good Night," as sung by Sims Reeves on Wednesday Evening at the NORWICH FESTIVAL. By a Martyr in the Patrons' Gallery.

The husband leaves his easy chair
With sad and sleepy eye;
He thinks upon his pot of beer,
And heaves the bitter sigh.
But, ah! he feels not half the woe
That now is felt by me,
Whene'er I hear the muffs below,
Sims Reeves! encoring thee.

The husband views his pipe of clay,
With calm it fills his heart;
It soothes his mind to see away
Each circling puff depart.
Then let me blow at home the cloud
That brings such peace to me,
Nor never hear another crowd,
Sims Reeves! encoring thee. A. A. V.

[The above luminous effusion was picked up in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, after the second concert of the festival on Wednesday evening.—ED.]

THE ACCIDENT TO MR. H. SAKER.—The accident at the Princess's Theatre has resulted in a more serious injury to Mr. H. Saker than was at first anticipated. We are enabled to state he is now out of danger, but he will not be able to resume his professional duties for some weeks.

THE "ERA" versus THE "ATHENÆUM."—Some weeks ago we recorded in these columns the announcement of an engagement having been made by Mr. E. T. Smith, the lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre, which secured the valuable services of Signor Mario at that establishment, at the same time that it would lead to Mad. Grisi taking her farewell of the lyric stage, on the boards where she first made her debut in the metropolis. A contradiction of this statement having appeared in some of our contemporaries, who assume to be well informed on operatic matters, we take this opportunity of again assuring our readers that the fact is exactly as we originally reported it, and that the subscribers to Her Majesty's next season will have the opportunity of hearing both the above-named artistes, and that the positive farewell of the "great Grisi" will take place on that stage. It is to be regretted that those who profess to enlighten the public with reference to the movements of the musical and dramatic world, do not refer for authentic information to our pages, wherein only the earliest intelligence of such matters is to be found.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Sept. 27, 1860.

THE special performance at the Opéra Comipue for the benefit of the Christians in Syria, which I just mentioned in my last, was a very brilliant affair. The house was crowded, and, though the programme was not exhausted till past one, all kept their places to the end. After the Chaises à Porteurs, in which Conderc and Mlle. Lemercier sang and acted with wonderful spirit, a little disturbance arose at the moment of lifting the curtain for L'Etoile du Nord. Only the first act had been announced, but the audience had made up their minds that this implied the overture, and on finding that it was omitted, set up a general clamour. The regisseur had to come forward and explain, that as only the first act was promised in the bills, and nothing said of the overture, the management had not expected it would be called for, and had not therefore provided the double orchestra of Sax's instruments which were necessary to its execution. After a while the audience got the logic of this argument into their heads and allowed matters to take their course. Mad. Ugalde sang the part of Catherine, in which she acquitted herself as admirably as ever and was called before the curtain. A pleasant little opera, Ma Tante Dort, originally produced at the Lyrique with great success, followed, and Mad. Ugalde appeared in the part of Martine, originally created by her. All the fun and vivacity shown by her on the first production of the opera were equally at command now; and both she and Mocker, who played Scapin, were recalled at the end. The great point of interest of the evening, however, was the interlude, in which Mlle. Monrose sang three pieces from the Pardon de Ploërmel. As this rising young vocalist is about shortly to essay the part of Dinorah, great curiosity was felt to know how she would probably acquit herself of the arduous undertaking. The triumphant manner in which Mlle. Monrose surmounted the vocal difficulties of the celebrated Ombre légére, and the grace and sprightliness of her acting, afforded the most favourable augury of her success in interpreting the entire rôle of Dinorah. After the buffo duet, "Chateau-Trompette," sung by M. Berthelier and Mlle. Lemercier, an excerpt from Fra Diavolo, and the Beaumont-Cohen cantata, in honour of the Napoleonic festival, brought this long and well-filled evening to a worthy conclusion. The Petit Chaperon Rouge of Boieldieu, revived last season after an interval of many years, has been again brought forward at this house. The part of Comte Rodolphe is now played by M. Montaubry, who is as accomplished a comedian as he is a graceful singer.

The Grand Opera still goes on with Semiramis, and the sisters Marchisio are still the life and soul of Rossini's great work. Pierre de Medicis makes an occasional appearance in the bills. Le Propheté, whose advent has been imminent for some time, is retarded by the illness of Mad. Tedesco. Meanwhile Guillaume Tell is in preparation, and Mlle. Carlotta Marchisio will sing the part of Mathilde, restoring the air and scena which had been omitted since the reduction of the opera to three acts. The ballet which Mlle. Taglioni has invented for Mlle. Emma Livry, in whom the embryo of a second Carlotta Grisi is detected by the choreosophists, will make its appearance about the middle of next month. The young danseuse is daily rehearsing her part with a zeal and application which are directed and stimulated by the counsels of her celebrated patroness. Some of the pas in which Mlle. Livry is to shine are spoken of with raptures of anticipation. In particular are mentioned a certain Mazurka in the first tableau to which all previous mazurkas are to be as barbarous jigs; a valse des rayons, destined to illuminate the second tableau with splendours which its title render it difficult to define; a pas noble which will in future be danced only by permission of the College of Heralds; and lastly a pas finale, which will in every way deserve its designation by being the ultima thule of the choreographic art, beyond which comes chaos and the primitive "double shuffle" again.

Before I leave the operas let me mention that the manager of the Opéra Comique had determined to cast the part of Hoel in the Pardon, which, as I have said, he is about to produce, to Mlle. Werteimber, who had already played parts written originally for bass voices. Meyerbeer is said to have approved the arrangement. The opera in three acts by Scribe and M. Offenbach is in rehearsal, and it is to be produced with great splendour of scenery and decoration.

The Italian opera season is expected to be very brilliant this winter, and it is said the subscription list is already crowded with the highest names among the wealthy and the aristocratic.

At the Théâtre Lyrique an opera in one act is said to be in rehearsal, the words of which are by MM. Theodore Barrière and Carré, and the music by M. Leo Delibes. M. Maillart's opera, Les Pêcheurs de Catane, is also in active preparation. There has been a squabble between the director of this house, M. Retz, and a composer, M. E. Reger, author of Selam and Maitre Wolfram. The latter had written the music to a libretto by MM. Michel Carré and Jules Barbier in three acts, and, according to an agreement with the previous manager, M. Carvalho, the work was to have been produced at the opening of the theatre. This was the term fixed. When M. Retz assumed the management he begged M. Reger to put off the production of his opera to the month of December, and with the consent of the other collaborators, the delay was granted. The manager, under pretext of having made fresh engagements, then sought to adjourn the opera sine die, but the authors have very naturally refused to accept so uncertain an arrangement, and the affair is accordingly to be referred to a court of law, unless the Société des Auteurs should exercise its power in favour of the composer and his fellow labourers. No amount of damages, however high, compensates a composer for the suppression of a work on which he may have bestowed all the resources of his talents and his happiest inspirations, and in which he may have built with reason the hope of enhanced fame.

The Gymnase has produced a new piece in four acts, entitled Le Voyage de M. Perrichon, which turns on the opposite means employed by two suitors for the hand of his daughter to gain the good graces of an honest French bourgeois. One has saved the life of the father of his beloved, and reckons on his gratitude; the other has had his life saved by the same individual, and builds on the love of protection and patronage which is natural to the human bosom in opposition to the repugnance commonly felt at being under an obligation. At first the suitor who reckons on the meaner motive carries everything before him; but the betrayal of his deliberate designs opens the eyes of the bourgeois to the baseness of the impulse he had followed, and reinstates the rival in his good graces. The idea is well worked out, and contains a lesson on human weakness which is amusingly conveyed. M. Geoffroy, so celebrated for his manner of rendering the type of the Bourgeois de Paris, plays M. Perridion, and seems likely to establish the character as a popular favourite. At the Variété a novelty, entitled Une Chasse à St. Germain, has been successful, although very stale in idea. An unfortunate painter about to contract a marriage is persecuted by three former mistresses, whom he contrives to pass off for the flames of as many friends.

Henri Monnier has also appeared again in the well-known character of Joseph Prudhomme, which he has had the credit of inventing, and the advantage of trading on for the last thirty years. Joseph Prudhomme chef de Brigands is the new phase in which he now introduces him; but, although there is undoubted fun in the idea, and Monnier is still amusing in the part, the notion is too worn out to afford ground for a very brilliant success.

LIVERPOOL. — (From our own Correspondent.) — The Philharmonic Society gave their eighth subscription concert on Tuesday night before a fashionable audience. The vocalists were Mlle. Titiens, Signors Giuglini, Vialetti, and Valsovani. The concert was a very great success, and Signor Giuglini, who was in unusually good voice, sang "Spirto gentil" (La Favorita), and "Aurora che sorgerai" (La Donna del Lago), delightfully. Mlle. Titiens' solos were, "Non mi dir" (Don Giovanni), and "The Last Rose of Summer." Both were given in perfect style; and the fair Teutonic prima donna fairly astonished the amateurs by the expression and the simplicity of her rendering of Moore's charming ballad. The band played Spohr's symphony in D for the first time in Liverpool in admirable style, and the audience appeared to thoroughly appreciate it. Mad. Grisi and Signor Mario sing at the next concert on Tuesday.—Our Italian opera season commences at the Theatre Royal on Monday, and we are to have six performances in a fortnight. The artists are Mesdames Grisi, Viardot, Sedlatzek, and Orvil; Signors Mario, Dragone, Ciampi, &c., who are to sing in Trovatore, Martha, Don Giovanni, Macbeth, Norma, and Rigoletto.—The Savage Club and our Literary and Dramatic Society gave a second performance in aid of the "Brough Memorial Fund" at the Theatre Royal on Tuesday night; and, in spite of the great attractions elsewhere, there was a good house, and the burlesque of the Forty Thieves went off amidst most uproarious laughter. Mr. G. A. Sala read his address in the course of the evening.—In the concert room of St. George's Hall, Mr. and Mrs. German Reed and Mr. John Parry have made quite a hit, and the room has been nightly crowded by the élite of Liverpool.

Advertisements.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—Season 1860-61.—The admirable situation of this great operatic establishment, its unparalleled acoustic properties, unequalled musical capabilities, and unrivalled lyrical resources, together with the flattering success which attended his late Italian Season, has determined the Lessee to venture on the experiment of producing at Her Majesty's Theatre a series of English Operas, during a certain portion of each year. The Season will commence on Monday, the 8th of October next. As will be seen by the accompanying list, the first vocal and instrumental talent has been secured, and will further be secured, no matter at what expense. The lessee and manager of this vast establishment, not being a vocalist himself, can have no professional jealousies—his only aim, in duty to his patrons and subscribers, will be to put the "right man in the right place." The services of Mr. Sims Reeves are already secured, and negotiations are pending in addition to the following engagements:—Sopranos—Miss Parepa, her first appearance at this theatre; Miss Jenny Bauer, from the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, her first appearance at this theatre; Miss Allesandri, from the principal theatres in Spain and Italy, her first appearance in this country; and Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, her first appearance on the stage; contraltos—Miss Laura Baxter and Miss Fanny Huddart; tenors—Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Parkinson, Mr. George Perren, Mr. Terrott, and Mr. Swift (from La Pergola, Florence, &c.), his first appearance at this theatre; baritones—Mr. Rosenthal and Mr. Santley, his first appearance at this theatre; buffo—Mr. George Honey, his first appearance at this theatre; basses—Mr. J. G. Patey, Mr. Bartleman, and Mr. Hermanns. Conductor—Mr. Charles Hallé; Leader—Mr. H. Blagrove. A new and original opera, composed expressly for this theatre, will be produced on the opening night, Monday, October 8th, entitled ROBIN HOOD, Music by G. A. Macfarren, Libretto by John Oxenford, Esq.; with new scenery under the superintendence of Beverley; in which Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. George Perren, Mr. George Honey, Mr. J. G. Patey, Mr. Santley, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, &c., will make their appearances; and shortly afterwards will be presented another new and original grand romantic opera, also composed expressly for this theatre, entitled the AMBER WITCH, from the pen of that popular composer, W. V. Wallace; together with other new operas of importance by eminent native composers. The whole of the splendid and unique appointments of Her Majesty's Theatre, both before and behind the curtain, will be made available in giving effect and comfort to the audience departments. An elegant new dress balcony has been erected, after the most approved Parisian style, combining both convenience and comfort. The scenic department under the superintendence of Mr. William Beverley and assistants; prompter, Mr. Grua; suggeritore, Signor Fontana; costumiers, Miss Dickinson and M. Laureys (de Paris); the machinery, &c., by Mr. Tucker; the properties by Mr. Needham; ballet master, Mons. Massot; acting manager, Mr. Mapleson; stage manager, Mr. Robert Roxby. Particular care and attention has been bestowed on the formation of the Orchestra and Chorus, which will be considerably augmented, the whole having been carefully selected, under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Charles Hallé. This Theatre having hitherto been devoted to the production and performance of Italian Lyric Drama, the lessee (at the suggestion of numerous subscribers and habitues) has been induced to give a few representations of Italian Operas, which will positively be limited to 30 nights, commencing on Wednesday, the 10th of October, to be continued three nights weekly, until the 16th of December, alternately with the English Operas. The lessee has, therefore, at an enormous outlay, secured the eminent services of those renowned artistes Mlle. Titiens and Sig. Giuglini, together with other principal artistes of celebrity, whose names will be found in the following detailed list of Italian engagements:—Soprani, Mlle. Titiens, Mlle. Vaneri, and Mad. Lemaire; baritoni, Sig. Valsovani and Sig. Gassier; buffo, Sig. Ciampi; bassi, Sig. Vialetti and Sig. Castelli; tenori, Sig. Soldi, Sig. Mercuriali, and Sig. Giuglini. Conductor, Sig. Arditi. For the ballet divertissement, Mlle. Moriacchi, &c. The repertoire will be selected from the following favourite operas:—Il Trovatore, Verdi; La Sonnambula, Bellini; Ernani, Verdi; Lucrezia Borgia, Donizetti; Don Pasquale, Donizetti; Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Rossini; Gli Ugonotti, Meyerbeer; Lucia di Lammermoor, Donizetti; La Traviata, Verdi; I Puritani, Bellini; Don Giovanni, Mozart; Norma, Bellini; Rigoletto, Verdi; Marta, Flotow; I Vespri Siciliani, Verdi; Oberon, Weber; &c. The above English and Italian arrangements can only be realised at an enormous outlay; Mr. E. T. Smith looks with perfect confidence for adequate remuneration to the support of the nobility, gentry, subscribers, and the public, whose kind and unvarying patronage has enabled him to hold the reins of management through so many seasons at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, and especially through his late campaign at Her Majesty's Theatre, profitably and triumphantly. Notwithstanding the vast additional expense necessarily incurred in the engagement of such celebrated singers, besides a double company of artistes for both languages, the prices of admission will be at the same reduced rates, both for the English as well as the Italian performances. The subscription list for the first 60 nights, or 30 English and 30 Italian, at the option of the subscriber, is now ready, and may be seen at the box-office, under the portico of the theatre, which is open daily, from 10 to 6, under the direction of Mr. Nugent, and where boxes, stalls, and places may be secured for any period in any part of the house. The doors will open at half-past 7, and the performances commence at 8 o'clock, on each evening throughout the season. All applications respecting the artistes for public and private concerts in town or country, to be addressed to Mr. Mapleson, the musical agent, at the theatre, or 12 Haymarket. Prices of admission:—Pit stalls, 7s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; first circle, 4s.; second circle, 3s.; upper box circle seats, 2s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.; gallery side stalls, 1s. 6d.; gallery stalls, 3s.; private boxes—upper box, half circle, to hold four persons, 10s.; private box, third tier, to hold four persons, £1. 1s.; private box, second tier, to hold four persons, £1. 11s. 6d.; private boxes, first, second, and grand tiers, two guineas, three guineas, and four guineas.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1860.

NOT long since we had occasion to praise in unqualified terms certain excerpts from the new issue in progress ("deuxième édition, entièrement refondue et augmentée de plus de moitié") of a work upon which the reputation of M. Fétis as a bibliographer and musical encyclopedist is destined mainly to rest. In the first edition of the Biographie Universelle des Musiciens, the article "Beethoven"—to say nothing of some hundred others—was notably deficient. The deficiency, with commendable research, has been supplied in the new edition, and we now know all about the great "tone-poet's" genealogy, &c., which untiring industry could obtain, and as much about the scope and meaning of his compositions as the æsthetic perception and critical acumen of M. Fétis enabled him to furnish. This performance, indeed—although we altogether dissent from the Belgian historiographer and theoretical analyser in his narrow views of the later productions of the master—warranted the belief that equal care and diligence would be expended on the sequel. But whether M. Fétis thought he had done enough in perfecting his "Beethoven," and wished that "aperçu" to shine in his musical galaxy, like Sirius among the fixed stars, with such superior brightness as to preclude a nice examination of the others, we have no means of deciding. All we can presume to say is, that some of the lesser luminaries are presented in such opaque confusion as to defy the investigating telescope; and as an instance of this unaccountable disparity we would point to the item, "Balfe"—or "Balph," as M. Fétis orthographically suggests. We do not pretend for a moment to rank our Balfe, or "Balph," among the stars of the first magnitude. He is not an Arcturus, much less a Sirius; but he may be compared to one of those asteroids of the second order, in the constellation "Orion," by help of whose twinkling we are permitted to communicate polyscopically with the most distant of the nebulæ, and to know that they consist of neither more nor less than conglomerates of solar systems closely resembling that in which we have ourselves sempiternally revolved. Balfe or "Balph" was almost the first to pierce the darkness of foreign prejudice, and to show us that the Italian, the German, and the Frenchman—who, in the musical hemisphere, had thitherto loomed in the far open, as misty and impenetrable nebulæ—were very much like ourselves. As with ourselves their ears were tickled by the strains of Balfe, the eyes of whose Muse, if not illuminating the art-universe with a broad light like that of the eyes of the Muses of the demigods of harmony, still twinkled with a pleasant roguish twinkle that it was comfortable to contemplate. Now the item, "Balfe," or "Balph," in the Biographie of M. Fétis, is just as unsatisfactory as the item "Beethoven" (or "Beethowen") is the opposite. Whence illæ lachrymæ?

Not many years ago M. Jules de Glimes came to London with ambassadorial functions. He had been despatched as an emissary from M. Fétis, to pick up scraps of information concerning British music and British musical practitioners. The contrapuntally erudite and historiographically laborious Walloon had suddenly come to the conclusion that, after all, a "Biographie Universelle" would not be a "Biographie Universelle" unless it were (tant soit peu) universal, and that to be universal he must, maugre his beard, include a handful of the British Isles. Man, Wight, Alderney, Sark — even the Orkneys, although King Lot of old was a great patron of minstrels, and Sir Dinadam, one of his knights, is storied to have made "the worst lay that ever harper sung with harp or with any other instrument" * — might be omitted; but England, which gave birth to Purcell and fame to Handel, not; Scotland, where Mary Stuart sang to the accompaniment of Rizzio, not; and Ireland, where grew the melodies to which Moore attuned his lyre, not; at any rate not without punity. So M. de Glimes, accredited to the post of "Charged with Affairs," proceeded straight to Ostend, and without stopping to swallow one huitre at the Flemish Broadstairs, set sail for perfidious Albion, where (as usual) he was received with open cliffs at Dover. His credentials were endorsed, and the nature of his mission, set forth and published in the columns of The Musical World, was made patent to the realm, from Mutton Island to the Wash, from Portland Bill to Lossiemouth—throughout the breadth and length, in short ("bref"),of the three Kingdoms, not rejecting the pugnacious Principality. Are we to reconnoitre the item "Balfe," or "Balph," in the Fétisian sheets, as the first instalment of M. de Glimes' researches? By Hercules!—nay. We, who know and appreciate the moral and artistic stature of that excellent and most worthy musician, should be loth to believe it. Not only is the biography of the minstrel of Loughbrickland scanty and imperfect; not only is it crammed with errors,—but worse than all, it is tempered with a spirit of supercilious acrimony, for which, in the days of King Anguish or Brian Baroimhe, the hosts of Ierne would have invaded the straight and muddy marches of Flanders, in a fleet of flat-bottomed boats. The whole tone of the "item," indeed, is so uncharitable and (as Voltaire may have said somewhere) "acerbe," that we have scarcely patience to quote more than a passage or "so."

"Balph," it appears, was born, not at Dublin—as the Conversations-Lexicon and Mr. Balfe alike assert—but at Limerick. Although endowed with "la plus heureuse organisation pour la musique," he "never made any serious study of composition." He has, nevertheless, "obtained successes as a singer, with a mediocre voice," and "improvised some twenty operas little remarkable for invention," but evidencing, on the other hand, "instinct, a good feeling for harmony, and a knowledge of instrumentation." Va pour la vingtaine d'opéras! ("And thus departed Sir Pedivere of the Straight Marches"). That Balph is "un homme d'esprit," however, M. Fétis admits; and this, we are told, has enabled him to draw more advantages from his faculties than they seemed to promise. This, morever, probably enabled him to compose an opera by the late O'Rourke (Rooke)—viz. Amalia, or the Love-Test—which, according to M. Fétis, Balph "fit représenter à Londres," in 1838, a year after his JEANNE Grey had achieved a fiasco, and three years after his ITALIAN opera, L'Assedio di la Rochelle, was brought out at Her Majesty's Theatre, and "eut QUELQUE succès."

"Here's a coil"—says Nurse to Juliet. "Enter Rommi" —we had almost said. First, Amalia (Amilie)—as all the world (except M. Fétis) knows—was Rooke's, not Balfe's; secondly, Balfe wrote an opera entitled Catherine Grey, but never an opera called Jeanne Grey; thirdly, The Siege of Rochelle was an English, not an Italian, opera, and—as all the world knows (except M. Fétis)—Balfe's first production on the English stage; given, too, not as M. Fétis states, with "quelque succès," but with enormous and long-continued success, at Drury Lane Theatre.*

Next we are told that the book of The Maid of Artois was founded on that of the ballet and opera of Clari, when (except M. Fétis) all the world knows that Clari is almost identical with Linda di Chamounix, while The Maid of Artois is derived from Manon L'Escaut—the name by which it is recognised everywhere on the Continent. Apropos of Manon L'Escaut, we are advised that, "little scrupulous in the choice of ideas, Balph had borrowed from several operas then in vogue in order to fabricate his own; BUT a waltz by Strauss, of which he had made an air, sung by Malibran with marvellous verve, ensured the success of this work!" The Maid of Artois, nevertheless—like AMILIE, Falstaff, and Joan of Arc—"was written too rapidly to find place among real works of art, although connoisseurs recognised some progress, on the score of originality, in Falstaff." Diadeste, we are told, "did not succeed;" Keolanthe had but "a mediocre success;" the Puits d'Amour†—represented at the Opéra Comique in 1843—"destitute of originality," had some good qualities ("du mouvement"—a dash of which would not make the Biographie less readable—among others), and succeeded both at home and abroad; The Bohemian Girl evinced "progress, and showed that Balph had been sensible to the criticism of the Parisian journals" (!!); The Daughter of St. Mark is merely named; L'Etoile de Seville (in Paris—1846) failed, "notwithstanding that the principal parts were entrusted to Gardoni and Mad. Stoltz;" while The Bondman and The Maid of Honour, brought out the same year (three grand operas in one year, we think, would puzzle even Balfe), "created little sensation." The Quatre Fils Aymon‡ escapes animadversion (mirabile dictu!). "Of all the works of Balph this is the one which has achieved the most uniform success," in France, Germany, England, and Holland. "Although it exhibits the same negligence and over-facility of composition" as its predecessors, "it cannot be denied" (what a pity for M. Fétis!) "that the Quatre Fils Aymon is his best work, and that it contains some pretty things." How condescending! The Sicilian Bride, The Devil's in it, Duca e Pittore (Trieste), and The Rose of Castille, not being even mentioned, we must presume the accurate bibliographer was unaware of their existence; and yet all the world knows (except M. Fétis) that The Rose of Castille "ran" for nearly two seasons, and is still considered one of the most popular works of its composer. Satanella, and an elementary work called Indispensable Studies for a Soprano Voice (of which we never heard) are named in a breath, as the sum total of Balfe's exploits between the years 1852 and 1859 inclusive. "According to the journals"

* The Lay of King Mark of Cornwall.

* The Siege of Rochelle was first performed on the 29th of October, 1835.

† Produced at the Princess's Theatre, under the title of Geraldine.

‡ Produced at the Princess's Theatre, under the name of The Castle of Aymon.

—says M. Fétis—"Satanella, a romantic opera in three acts, obtained a brilliant success, and is regarded in England as the composer's best work."

The early career of Balph in Italy, whether as singer or composer, would appear, according to M. Fétis, to have been in no respect luckier than his career at home and across the Manche. Three Italian operas, given successfully at Palermo, Florence, and Milan, in the last of which, Enrico IV., Mlle. Roser (afterwards Mad. Balfe) appeared, must have been heard, if we read aright, with indifference. Enrico IV. was condemned for the "numberless reminiscences" remarked by the public. As a singer Balph was especially unfortunate, his début (as Signor Balfi) at the Italian Opera in Paris (1825) being a failure, in consequence of a barytone voice "mal timbrée," inexperience of the stage, and his association with "excellent singers" in the same opera (Il Barbiere); nor does he ever seem to have redeemed this mishap. Enfin he was fairly driven out of Italy. "At the Fenice (Venice), Balph had the unhappy idea of mutilating the Crociato of Meyerbeer, by introducing pieces of his own composition, and others of Rossini and Donizetti." (We should have termed this amplifying). "The indignation of Italy against this act of barbarism obliged Balph to quit the country."

To which (if true) Mr. Bunn (and the English public) are indebted for The Siege of Rochelle, and a long list of operas, almost every one of which, in spite of M. Fétis, were successful and deservedly successful. We had always looked upon Balfe as one of the luckiest of composers, and contemplated his career as one of uninterrupted sunshine and prosperity. But M. Fétis has opened our eyes to the truth. There was never at any period so *un*lucky a composer, or one whose successive efforts have been received so coldly and rewarded so miserably. Poor Balfe—or "Balph!"

To end with the beginning. M. Fétis informs us that Balph's first instructors were his father and Horn*; whereas all the world (except M. Fétis) knows that Bandmaster Meadows taught him the rudiments of music, and then placed him under Hicky (or Hickie) of Wexford. True Balph was subsequently articled to Horn for seven years, and ultimately studied with O'Rourke (Rooke), of whose best opera, Amilie, M. Fétis makes him out the composer. And all these blunders in a book of reference! Have we been reading a suppositious Biographie?—a Fetisius Hypobolimæus? In that case we must proffer the foregoing remarks as our Confutatio Fabulæ Burdonum. Truly M. Fétis would be a wonderful bibliograph, if (as some one wrote, with less justice, of Joseph Scaliger) "il avoit l'esprit autant posé comme il l'a bizarre." To conclude, every English amateur will protest against the article "Balfe," or "Balph," in the Biographie Universelle des Musiciens, as a tissue of misrepresentations in the form of a libel.

PETIPACE OF WINCHELSEA.

SOME weeks since we protested against an injustice done to the memory of Hoffmann, whose music is generally ridiculed, in the words of a celebrated French critic, as de la musique de littérateur; the fact being that Hoffmann was a professional musician, orchestral conductor, and composer before he wrote any of those tales by which he is now chiefly and indeed almost exclusively known. However, we have shown our readers an article by Weber in which the composer of Der Freischütz expresses with enthusiasm his approbation of Hoffmann's Undine, and if it delighted him, surely it cannot matter much, as far as Hoffmann's reputation is concerned, who is dissatisfied with it. There is another writer, greater than Hoffmann, whose musical pretensions are never questioned in the present day, though numbers of his contemporaries refused to admit them, not on the ground that the music he gave to the public was worthless, but on the very simple plea that it was the composition of another person. We allude to Jean Jacques Rousseau, the author and accredited composer of Le Devin du Village; the Rousseau of the Confessions, who reproaches himself so bitterly with having stolen a ribbon, passes complacently over a hundred acts of meanness committed by him, and ends by declaring that any one who may come to the conclusion that he, Rousseau, is un malhonnête homme, is himself "a man to be smothered" (un homme à étouffer).

Le Devin du Village is undoubtedly the work of Jean Jacques Rousseau, as far as the libretto is concerned, but it can be shown on better evidence, even than that on which the charge of ribbon-stealing rests (for which we have only Rousseau's own word), that the music was the production of Granet, a composer residing at Lyons.

One day in the year 1751, Pierre Rousseau, called Rousseau of Toulouse, to distinguish him from the numerous other Rousseaus living in Paris, and known as the director of the Journal Encyclopedique, received a parcel containing a quantity of manuscript music, which, on examination, turned out to be the score of an opera. It was accompanied by a letter, addressed like the parcel itself, to M. Rousseau, homme de lettres, demeurant à Paris," in which a person signing himself Granet, and writing from Lyons, expressed a hope that his music would be found worthy of the illustrious author's words, that he had given appropriate expression to the tender sentiments of Colette and Colin, &c. Pierre Rousseau, though a Journalist, understood music. He knew that Granet's letter was intended for Jean Jacques, and that he ought to return it with the music to the post office, but the score of the Devin du Village, from the little he had seen of it, interested him, and he not only kept it until he had made himself familiar with it from beginning to end, but even showed it to a friend, M. de Bellissent, one of the conservators of the Royal Library, and a man of great musical acquirements. As soon as Pierre Rousseau and De Bellissent had quite finished with the Devin du Village, they sent it back to the post office, whence it was forwarded to its true destination.

Jean Jacques had been expecting Granet's music, and, on receiving the opera in a complete form, took it to La Vaupâlière the farmer-general, and offered it to him, directly or indirectly, as a suitable piece for Mad. de Pompadour's theatre at Versailles, where several operettas had already been produced. La Vaupâlière was anxious to maintain himself in the good graces of the favourite, and purchased for her entertainment the right of representing the Devin du Village. This handsome present cost the gallant financier the sum of six thousand francs. However, the opera was performed, was wonderfully successful, and was afterwards produced at the Académie, when Rousseau received four thousand francs more—so at least say some authorities who derive their information from the books of the theatre—though, according to Rousseau's own statement in the Confessions, the Opera sent him only fifty louis, which he declares he never asked for, but which he does not pretend to have returned.

* Composer of "Cherry ripe," &c.

Rousseau "confesses," with studied detail, how the music of each piece in the Devin du Village occurred to him; how he at one time thought of burning the whole affair (a conceit by the way which has since been rendered commonplace by amateur authors in their prefaces); how his friends succeeded in persuading him to do nothing of the kind; and how, at last, he wrote the drama, and sketched out the whole of the music in six days, so that, when he arrived with his work in Paris, he had nothing to add but the recitative and the "remplissage"—by which we suppose he means the orchestral parts. In the next page he tells us that he would have given anything in the world if he could only have had the Devin du Village, performed for himself alone, and have listened to it with closed doors as Lulli is reported to have listened to his Armide, executed for his sole gratification. This egotistical pleasure might, perhaps, have been enjoyed by Rousseau if he had really composed the music himself, for when the Académie produced his second Devin du Village, of which the music was undoubtedly his own, the public positively refused to listen to it, and hissed it until it was withdrawn. If the director had persisted in representing the piece the theatre would doubtless have been deserted.

But to return to the original score which, as Rousseau himself informs us, wanted nothing, when he arrived in Paris, except what he calls the "remplissage" and the recitative. He had intended, he says, to have Le Devin performed at the Opera, but M. de Oury, the intendant of the Menus Plaisirs, was determined it should first be brought out at the Court. A duel was very nearly taking place between the two directors, when it was at last decided by Rousseau himself that Fontainebleau, Mad. de Pompadour (and La Vaupâlière), should have the preference. Whether Granet had omitted to write recitative or not, it is a remarkable fact that recitative was wanted when the piece came to be rehearsed, and that Rousseau allowed Jéliotte the singer to supply it. This he mentions himself, as also that he was not present at any of the rehearsals—for it is at rehearsals above all that a sham composer runs the chance of being detected. It is an easy thing for any man to say that he has composed an opera, but it may be difficult for him to correct a very simple error made by the copyist in transcribing the parts. However, Rousseau admits that he did not attend rehearsals and that he did not compose the recitative, which the singers required forthwith, and which had to be written almost beneath their eyes.

But what was Granet doing in the meanwhile? it will be asked. In the meanwhile Granet had died. And Pierre Rousseau and his friend M. de Bellissent? Rousseau of Toulouse, supported by the Conservator of the Royal Library, accused Jean Jacques openly of fraud in the columns of the Journal Encyclopédique. These accusations were repeated on all sides, until at last Rousseau undertook to reply to them by composing new music to the Devin du Village. This new music the Opera refused to perform, and with some reason, for it appears (as the reader has seen) to have been detestable. It was not executed until after Rousseau's death, and at the special request of his widow, when, in the words of Grimm, "all the new airs were hooted without the slightest regard for the memory of the author."

It is this utter failure of the second edition of the Devin du Village which convinces us more than anything else that the first was not from the hand of Rousseau. But let us not say that he was "un malhonnête homme." Probably the conscientious author of the Contrat Social adopted the children of others by way of compensation for having sent his own to the "Enfants Trouvés."

MOLIQUE'S "ABRAHAM."

(From the Morning Post.)

Sept. 21.—Of the new oratorio of Abraham, which is to be performed this morning for the first time, we shall not be able to speak in detail until to-morrow, as the morning concerts here terminate almost simultaneously with the starting of the train that carries our despatch; but having heard a rehearsal of Abraham, we are now in a position to offer some general remarks upon the work which may not perhaps be unacceptable. Firstly, Abraham is the work of a highly educated musician, one brought up in a thoroughly good school, surrounded by the best influences, and perfectly acquainted with the greatest models. All that intelligent study, observation, and experience can confer, Herr Molique possesses completely. A master of harmony, counterpoint, form, and instrumentation, he, at least, enters upon the glorious field where artists contend for immortality, armed at all points, and ready for all emergencies that human skill can meet. It must be further observed that Herr Molique is not only a learned man, but also scrupulously conscientious; one who always does his best, who is incapable of making any concession to the "popular" taste of the day, and with whom, therefore, the dignity of art is safe. The value of an artist like Herr Molique at this really critical period of art can scarcely be over-estimated. Musical conservatives of ability were never more wanted than at the present moment, when in Germany a movement which threatens the very existence of music as an independent art is rapidly progressing, and in Italy all purity of style and loftiness of purpose are as rapidly giving way before mere sensuousness and so-called brilliancy of effect. The state in which Beethoven left musical art was a very dangerous one. The later works of that most extraordinary genius, though betokening exhaustless imagination, and revealing to us a new world of music, also exhibited a certain irregularity of form. The boundless imagination of the true Shakspeare of music could not be imitated, although it might be emulated. Another Beethoven might possibly arise, but there could be no successful follower of that wondrous master. The only characteristic of his later style that his would-be disciples have attempted to imitate (though none of them have understood it) is the irregularity of form of which we have spoken. This, the consequence of an imagination teeming with novel ideas, and a command of artistic means emanating from immense experience, that enabled him instantly to give the happiest expression to any idea whatever (powers which, in his waywardness, he perhaps sometimes abused), has been falsely regarded as the cause of his superlative greatness, and a justification for such wild, licentious theories as strike at the very root of musical art. But fortunately, soon after the death of Beethoven, there arose another very great man, who, fully understanding the situation, knew how to become master of it, and put a salutary curb upon the downward course of Phœbus's chariot. A man who had drunk deeply at the Pierian spring, who had completely infused into himself the spirit which animated Bach and Handel, a man whose sympathy was with order and regularity, whose mind was of the most classic character, but who could place his own stamp upon all he touched, and animate old forms with a new soul. That man's name was Mendelssohn. To him, then, the lovers of genuine art, the true musical conservatives, looked as to the living depository of their most sacred traditions—the most perfect illustration of their fundamental theory, that the great principles of musical art (like those of every other) are immutable, and eternally productive. As Mendelssohn was gifted with the power of expressing all that the most enlightened lovers of musical art had long thought of and hoped for, he naturally became the head and representative of a great and important movement. It is therefore not at all astonishing that Mendelssohn should have had numerous disciples. A safer model, so far as modern art is concerned, there could not possibly be. He has influenced the musical minds of the present generation far more than any contemporary composer. His vast merits have won the homage of all earnest students, and the great success of his works has stimulated them to follow in his footsteps. That the influence of Mendelssohn should not be felt by an artist of kindred spirit like Molique, that the mind of the author of Elijah should exercise no power over the thoughts or feelings of a classic musician of the present day in the composition of an oratorio, is scarcely to be expected.

* * * * * * *

September 22.—From what we have already observed with respect to Herr Molique's new oratorio of Abraham, produced here yesterday morning, it may be readily inferred that the work belongs to the school of Mendelssohn; and in adding that Herr Molique has occasionally followed the illustrious author of Elijah more closely than is consistent with perfect independence of mind, we state at once the greatest, if not the only, reproach to which the music of Abraham is open.

The following are the incidents which Herr Molique has selected for his oratorio:—The departure of Abraham and his family into the land of Canaan; The separation of Lot and Abraham; The captivity of Lot and his rescue; The casting forth of Hagar; and The intended sacrifice of Isaac. These, with appropriate commentaries, reflections, or prayers, in the form of choruses, concerted pieces, or solos, constitute the oratorio, which, though but slightly dramatic in character, is nevertheless sufficiently connected and continuous to make a satisfactory whole, whilst abundantly affording opportunities for the exercise of the musician's art.

The first thing we find to admire in Herr Molique's work is its well-sustained elevation of style. From the first note to the last it is dignified and chaste, whatever may be the passion or emotion the composer was called upon to express. The next thing is the masterly facture of the entire score, of which it might truly be said that not a note, or the position of a note, could be changed without mischief to the whole. Every sound has its purpose, and undeniable reasons could be given for its existence. Anything more clear, rich, or resonant than the voicing and instrumentation, it were difficult indeed to imagine; and very few, if any, masters of the present day could write such scientific and pure double counterpoint, imitations, and fugues, as we discover in Herr Molique's oratorio.

To follow so long and elaborate a work through all its details would be tedious and unnecessary. We shall therefore content ourselves with a selection of certain pieces for special remark, and commence with No. 3, an aria in G major, "Lead me, O Lord," sung by Abraham upon receiving the Divine command to depart into the land of Canaan. This has a flowing, continuous, and eminently vocal melody, full of beauty and expression. The orchestration is of the simplest; one flute, two clarinets, one bassoon, two violas, and violoncellos and double basses being the only instruments employed, and yet the effect is extraordinarily full and rich. One of the violoncellos is treated as a solo instrument; and the manner in which this is made to blend with or support the voice, and impart life and movement to the accompaniment, commands particular admiration. This is, indeed, from first to last a lovely song.

No. 8, "Let there be no strife," is another air for Abraham of a totally different character, but not less charming. Thus, in the key of F major, Abraham appeals lovingly to his brother, praying that there may be no dissension between them. With a lively and affectionate melody is united what we may term a caressing accompaniment, which contributes materially to the expression of that state of feeling in which Abraham is supposed to be. Here, too, Herr Molique exhibits the same economy with respect to means to which we have already alluded. One flute, two oboes (the first of which plays a very prominent part), two bassoons, two horns, and the so-called "string quartet" make up his orchestra.

No. 9, "Who walketh uprightly," an air in A minor, for the tenor voice, evidences still more strikingly Herr Molique's power of making a great effect with a few instruments; for here he uses but one flute, one oboe, two horns, and the string quartet. This air is unquestionably one of the most delightful and original pieces in the oratorio. The accompaniments present the very perfection of part-writing, and although very rich in so-called "figures," the voice part stands out always clearly, and commands all the attention due to it.

No. 15, "Hear our prayer," a chorus in A major for female voices only, is richly and beautifully harmonised, and also illustrates very happily that command over the resources of fugal imitation which so rarely appears in the works of composers of the present day.

No. 17, in E flat, is one of the most spirited and melodious marches ever written, and we expect soon to hear of its being played by every military band in England. Here Herr Molique employs the full orchestra, but he uses it discreetly, and although there is immense brilliancy and force in the "tuttis," they are never noisy or bombastic.

In No. 19, "Praise ye the Lord," a magnificent chorus in F major, Herr Molique has put forth all his strength. The counterpoint, clear, vigorous, full of variety, and eminently vocal, is throughout of the purest and best kind; and the fugue commencing with the tenors on the words "His right hand and His holy arm," is such as nothing less than an eminent master could write. This piece brings the first part grandly to a close.

No. 22, "Let all those rejoice," a trio in E flat major for alto, tenor, and bass, is one of the finest specimens of genuine three-part counterpoint with which we are acquainted. There is scarcely any accompaniment at all to it, and the rich fulness of effect produced by the voices only in every bar is really surprising to those acquainted with the peculiar difficulties of this style of writing. "Let all those rejoice" was repeated by desire.

No. 27, "And the Lord stretched forth His hand against them," a chorus in B minor, also claims our enthusiastic praise. Full of fiery vigour and exciting passion, it quite takes the feelings by storm, and there is deep poetry in the sudden transition to the slow movement on the words "The first-born of death have devoured their strength," with which the chorus unexpectedly terminates. All this belongs to the very highest order of art.

No. 29, "Cast out this bondwoman and her son," a duet in A minor, in which Sarah demands of Abraham the expulsion of Hagar, is another gem, admirable for dramatic expression as for its strictly musical beauties.

No. 32, "Commit thy way unto the Lord," a chorus in F major, in which the composer has used nothing but common chords, though simple and primitive in character, is likewise a masterpiece in its way. This was also redemanded.

In No. 35, "Great is the Lord," a chorus in D major, Herr Molique's command over the resources of imitative counterpoint and fugue, no less than his eminence as an orchestral writer, is again triumphantly displayed.

No. 38, "Pour out thy heart before the Lord," a very lovely tenor song in A flat, and No. 42, a duet in E major, in which Abraham and Isaac rejoice together at their deliverance from the terrible ordeal through which they have passed, may also be reckoned among the best things in the oratorio.

In No. 44 (the last piece), "Great and marvellous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty," a chorus in C major, as in the other choruses we have mentioned, and also in No. 1, "Blessed is the man who trusteth in the Lord" (which we should have mentioned before), Herr Molique's science and lofty musical feeling are again strikingly exhibited.

(To be continued.)

Letter to the Editor.

DEAR SIR,—It was not without some pleasure that I found myself, in your number for Sept. 8th, the subject of a detailed musical review; because your remarks, although not flattering to the works reviewed (three songs), were written without partiality, and were free from what has been my fate on so many former occasions — personal attack. If I venture now on a course of direct contradiction to all you say,—if I proceed to justify each one of the points which you designate "faults,"—it is not without first acknowledging the trouble and pains you have bestowed on that review, nor without thanking you for the kindness with which you counsel me to "reconsider other points."

In the first place, speaking of my "Song of the Survivor," you say that "a transition to A flat (the key of the song being G) in the opening symphony, which being made nothing of subsequently, is (to say the least) superfluous." I say, in defence, is it true that anything in composition is "superfluous" simply because it is not subsequently made use of? Have we not hundreds of instances in which, either to suit the text, or to express some particular feeling or meaning, a transition is used which neither the subsequent text, nor the progress of the composition, will allow to be repeated? And lastly, if, for the sake of roundness of form, or unity of plan, a repetition of the symphony be made (as I have done, page 3, line 4), is it not sufficient to give the whole "figure" and rhythm, without actually reproducing the same harmonies?

Your second objection is to "a false relation" (page 1, line 3, bar 3) in the same song, between G natural in the first chord (6, 3 on F) and G♯ in the next (6, 5, 3 on G♯)." The harmony in question is this,—

I will not fill up your space with a selection of passages from the best authors in which similar progressions of harmony occur. But I will cite no less and no more remote an authority than Mr. G. A. Macfarren, in his new book on "The Rudiments of Harmony," in which (page 12, sect. 21), in the chapter on "False relations," he states distinctly,—"False relation does not exist between two successive chords when the 3rd of the first chord is the root of the second chord." And he illustrates this by an example in the very key in which my "false relation" occurs; thus:— pointing out particularly that the G in one chord, followed by G♯ in the next, does not constitute "false relation."

Your third objection, still in the same song, is to "a dissonance, composed of a major 9th, major 7th, and major 6th on D, most unceremoniously taken, and decidedly objectionable." This—

(occurring at page 2, line 2, bar 3) is, I maintain, not to be considered a discord of the 9th at all; for the bass, D, forms no part of the harmony, but is a Pedal heard previously, and continued subsequently to the discord. The chord, if it occurred suddenly, without preparation, would be certainly objectionable—but it does not; the passage before and after determining the bass note as a pedal.

On these three points, then, I claim to be in the right, and cannot accept your remarks as a "correction."

On the fourth point (your last objection), in reference to my song, "Still waters run deepest," I have firstly to complain that you have not done me justice in transcribing the passage you quote; a reference to the passage, as it stands in my song (page 2, line 1, bar 3), will show that you have *mis*quoted the left hand. Secondly, I urge that the point in question is one upon which there may be a difference of opinion, and which ought to be considered "a matter of taste," not a fault. As you quote the passage, however, it is made to appear wrong beyond doubt, from the fact that the B flat in the left hand appears as a pedal-note, and changes to a different bass when not in concord with the harmony. As I have it, it stands thus:—

You say "What becomes of the F♯ on the chord of B♭?" I consider that it is resolved by the G in the next bar in the right hand. The melody and harmony meet there on the same note, and, as the G on which F♯ resolves is required for the melody, it is a matter of taste not to anticipate the sound of it, and to keep the F♯ unresolved until then. Had I been scoring such a passage I should certainly have put the resolution, G, at the commencement of the bar (in the harmony). It would have been a G of a different tone-colour (i. e. some other instrument) to that G which occurs afterwards in the melody. But on the piano, where we have no such distinctions of colour of tone, it is, I think, quite justifiable to allow the melody to act as harmonic resolution; and in this case it is not only allowable, but, I think, rather elegant not to have the G sounded until the melody does so. At any rate this should remain an open question (as, indeed, should many other things) until some law shall have been laid down, and "accepted" by musicians in general, for all points of "taste" or "school." All ears are not constituted alike; all ears are not equally susceptible of distinguishing the melodic part from the accompanying harmony; nor have they all the same power of retaining the impression of a dissonant harmony, until something "satisfactory" occurs in the melody removing such impression.

Are not all the rules at present accepted in Harmony and Composition the result of "what sounds well, and what does not?" Does not everything we are told to do, and all we are prohibited from doing, emanate from one uniform desire to sound well? If, then, all that sounds well is right, may we not lay down another fundamental law, and say—only "that" is wrong which sounds bad? I think we do make this law in practice, and in our every-day-judgment of new music. The only question raised, but not answered, being—What "does" sound well? So long as we are as far from a settlement of that question as we are at present, it must remain one in which education of the ear, quickness of apprehension, sympathy, taste, fancy, love of novel effects, and a nameless variety of other influences will ever preponderate.

If, then, in looking over new compositions, all of which are earnestly conceived and carefully compiled, we come to points of objection, which are evidently not the work of chance or neglect, but of intention and purpose,—is it right at once to condemn them as "wrong" simply because they differ from our own idea of what is "right?"

I can scarcely hope that this long refutation will find its way into your columns, for which it is designed; but, should you be generous enough to insert it, I feel sure some of the points discussed will not be without interest to some of your readers, while you will be making an "amende honorable" to

Your very obedient servant,

FRANCESCO BERGER.

36 Thurloe Square, Brompton,
Sept. 22, 1860.

MUSIC IN BRUSSELS.*

BRUSSELS possesses a conservatory of music, a royal opera house, a large number of excellent performers on all the principal instruments, a pianoforte in nearly every house, and yet it cannot boast of anything like the musical activity to be found in German towns of far less importance.

Church music is, as a general rule, badly organised, both in Brussels and throughout Belgium; money is wanting to do anything distinguished by the slightest artistic value in this branch of composition. There is no deficiency of good elements for the purpose, and the new organs from the factories of Merklin-Schütze and Company are calculated to give a very satisfactory impetus to the cause, but nothing is done in the quarter where the greatest patronage might naturally be expected.

The theatres have had their periods of success and depression. The Theatre Royal has had some good artists during the past year, but the monotony of its repertory has kept people away. As the repertory can, in accordance with the prevailing taste, be renewed only by means of operas which have been successful in Paris, the difficulty of renewing it consists, in the first place, in the fact that there is scarcely any novelty worth anything produced in Paris itself; and, in the second place, in the fact that what is strikingly new requires very great artistic resources, and a frightful outlay for the mise-en-scène. In Paris, the Grand Opera can satify its ever-changing population of some hundred thousand visitors with its old operas à grand spectacle; but in Brussels, the audience that pays its money to the theatre is constantly the same, and requires something new for what it expends.

* From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

Meyerbeer's Pardon de Ploërmel has been the only lucky hit for the management during the past theatrical year. Mlle. Boulard, whom the Parisians could not appreciate, proved a great attraction. She has turned out an admirable artist, for true talent, when supported by practice and success, soon attains artistic maturity.

Under the above circumstances, Merelli's Italian Operatic Company was most welcome to all lovers of music. It played in the Théâtre du Cirque, a very dirty house, but one exceedingly well adapted for sound. The band was something execrable, and the chorus simply ridiculous. The two combined would have reduced their excellent conductor, Orsini, to despair, supposing such a thing were at all possible in the case of the conductor of a strolling Italian company, who can adapt himself to everything, and has been subjected to every ordeal. In spite of all obstacles and shortcomings, however, some of the performances, for instance that of Don Pasquale with Donizetti's charming music, reminded us, by the merit of some of the artists, as well as the southern warmth and liveliness of the whole representation, of the good times of Italian singing, and afforded a real treat.

By the repetition of his Paris Concerts, Richard Wagner has produced a sensation here also, a fact that was inevitable, considering how the public are so satiated, as I have before mentioned, by the eternal monotony in musical matters. For a considerable length of time, his concerts were the sole topic of discussion in all the local papers, as well as in all the coffeehouses and other places of public resort. The majority of the patrons of music here have left the Future to decide on the real value of Wagner's compositions, although they are convinced the composer is very anxious that his works should be appreciated by the Present.

Good orchestral music is to be heard only at the concerts of the Conservatory, under the direction of M. Fétis. The band has made considerable progress during the past year.

M. Fétis does not, however, confine himself merely to classical masterpieces; so little does he exclude the productions of his contemporaries, that he performs even unpublished overtures and symphonies. It cannot, of course, be asserted that he is invariably lucky in his selection. During the last series of concerts we heard an overture to Shakespeare's Macbeth, by M. de Hartog, a Dutch composer, who resides in Paris, and composes for his own pleasure — and that of his friends also — and has already published several works. The composition of characteristic overtures to tragedies is something peculiar; the only models of this kind of writing, Beethoven's overtures to Coriolanus and Egmont, stand too high to be equalled by the efforts of mere talent, and what have we, now-a-days, among composers but talent at the very most?

Herr Meyenne, one of Fétis' newest pupils, may also, by the way, lay claim to the possession of this quality. He has now come forward, although somewhat tardily, with an unpublished symphony. It was successful, as was likewise, and perhaps more deservedly, a symphony by Samuel, which contains a great deal of originality.

There was a remarkable performance, at the last concert of the Conservatory, of the finale to the second act of Le Nozze di Figaro. Irritated at the mutilation of this magnificent piece of composition at the Théâtre Lyrique in Paris, Fétis determined to let the public of Brussels — that is to say, the "small Parisian" public — hear what was the real effect of it when played as Mozart wrote it, and he succeeded completely in carrying out his intention.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The first of the two farewell performances of Mad. Clara Novello, announced to take place at the Crystal Palace, previous to her final retirement from public life, came off on Wednesday, and attracted a large audience, the number of visitors approximating to thirteen thousand. At half-crown prices of admission so great a crowd at this period of the year proved the immense popularity of the singer, or, at all events, an almost universal desire to hear her for the last time. The performance consisted of the Creation, Mad. Novello—who, by the way, sang the music of Eve in the third part, usually allotted to a second soprano—having for her coadjutors Mr. Wilbye Cooper and Mr. Weiss. The band and chorus together numbered about two thousand five hundred, a powerful force, doubtless, but by no means too powerful to create an effect in the central transept of the Crystal Palace. Mr. H. Blagrove was at the head of the instruments, and the regiment under his command was a capital effective working body. The chorus consisted of the Vocal Association, with draughts from the Sacred Harmonic Society and other choral institutions. The whole was placed under the direction of Mr. Benedict, so that nothing was wanting to insure a first-rate performance. The general execution was for the most part irreproachable, but Haydn's drawing-room oratorio failed to produce any marked sensation. Even the choruses, "The heavens are telling," and "Achieved is the glorious work," which almost invariably strike an audience as with a hammer, passed off with the faintest possible applause. The solos alone created anything like enthusiasm; and indeed the highest amount of excitement was justified in the case of Mad. Novello, whose singing of "With verdure clad," and "On mighty pens," was literally transcendent. "To hear Mad. Novello sing 'With verdure clad,'" as a fluent reporter of the Worcester Festival in a daily contemporary expressed himself, "was worth a long journey and much treasure." More exquisite, refined, and finished singing we never listened to. Mr. Wilbye Cooper was warmly applauded for his careful reading of "In native worth;" and Mr. Weiss, in the two bass airs, "Rolling in foaming billows" and "Now Heav'n in fullest glory shone," displayed his fine voice and manly style to eminent advantage. To-day the Messiah will be given for the second farewell performance of Mad. Clara Novello, who will be assisted in the solo vocal department by Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Messrs. Wilbye Cooper, Santley, and Weiss.

MR. JOHN BROUGHAM — the popular Irish comedian, formerly belonging to the Covent Garden company under Mad. Vestris, and to the Olympic under the same manageress—commences an engagement at the Haymarket Theatre on Monday, October 8, in an original three-act comedy, writen by himself.

MANCHESTER—MAD. JULLIEN'S CONCERT AT THE FREE-TRADE HALL.—On Saturday last, the public of Manchester had an opportunity of hearing, for the last time, we believe, the fine band which, under the magical influences of M. Jullien, for so long a time delighted the ears of the English public. Prince George Galitzin (who assumed the conductorship) could not feel other than satisfied at the welcome bestowed upon him and the compositions of which he is the author, one of which, the "Surprise" Polka, was given with such startling and emphatic precision as to secure for it the honour of an encore, as hearty as could be desired. The solo singers were Miss Poole, Miss Dyer, and Mr. Henry Haigh—old favourites in Manchester—all of whom well sustained their reputation. During the evening, the choir, which has been trained by Mr. D. W. Banks, gave two illustrations of sacred art which were new to Manchester—a Russian chorus, very graceful in its movements, by Bortniansky, and a more weighty composition by Prince George Galitzin, "Sancta Maria." Amongst the pleasant performances by the choir of the Saturday Evening Concerts on this occasion was one we cannot overlook. At the commencement of the evening, Mr. Dixon, a member of the choir, appeared before the audience, and on behalf of the choir presented Mr. Banks with an ivory bâton, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to D. W. Banks, Esq., by the members of the choir of the Saturday Evening Concerts, as a testimonial of their respect and esteem.—Manchester, September 15, 1860." The bâton was a beautiful example of workmanship, from the establishment of Messrs. Ollivant and Botsford. The concert for this (Saturday) evening will, we may remark, be of unusual interest, and will bring before the public of Manchester not one only, but many of the most eminent artists in Europe.—Manchester Weekly Times.

PARTANT POUR LA SYRIE.—It is a well-known fact that the words of the above song, which during the last few years has enjoyed a new career of publicity, were set to music by Queen Hortense. It is not, however, so generally known, perhaps, that the [instrumentation of the song was the work of an artist still living, very advanced in age, but still hale and hearty, in Germany. The ducal Capellmeister at Gotha, L. Drouet—a near relation of the postmaster at St. Menehould, who recognised and arrested the fugitive Louis XVI.—was, in his youth, a member of the band at the court of the King of Holland, and for some time music-master of Prince Louis, now Emperor of the French. It was he who scored the above song, since become so celebrated. The Emperor has not forgotten his former master, to whom, some year or two back, he forwarded a valuable golden snuff-box, set with brilliants.

The Theatres.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—A short extravagant farce, founded on a French vaudeville (Un Tigre de Bengale, we believe) and entitled Savage as a Bear, has been produced at this house. The plot rests altogether on the unreasonable jealousy of a certain Gregory Griffin (Mr. F. Robinson), who insists on tormenting himself and everybody around him by suspecting that Mr. Jujubes (Mr. H. Wigan), his opposite neighbour, smokes cigars and arranges mignonette for no other purpose than that of carrying on a telegraphic flirtation with Mrs. Griffin (Miss Marston). The lady makes matters worse by addressing a letter to the reputed libertine, requesting him to desist from his harmless practices, for Jujubes coming over the way, in the belief that the letter is a hoax, nearly falls into the clutches of the terrible Griffin. The wife, anxious for nothing but peace and quietness, is perpetually concealing her innocent but timid visitor from her enraged husband; but, as the unfortunate Jujubes never hides without leaving behind him some light article, such as a stick, a hat, or a shoe, he forms an ever-lengthening chain of presumptive evidence which renders Griffin more frantic than ever, till at last, discovering the innocence of Jujubes, he becomes equally extravagant in his demonstrations of friendship. The harmless, timid, civil nature of the persecuted Jujubes is represented with much characteristic humour by Mr. Horace Wigan (the adapter of the piece), and there is a blunt, bustling abigail, loyal in the service of her mistress, who is very well played by Mrs. Emden. But the jealous husband, who is, after all, the main personage of the piece, is scarcely to be rendered palateable by any artist who lacks the genius of a Robson, and Mr. F. Robinson in essaying a part altogether out of his line makes an exhibition of mere force that is neither natural nor effective. The success of the piece is moderate.

STRAND THEATRE.—Messrs. Yates and Harrington have concocted an obstreperous little piece which, with the title Hit him—he has no Friends, brings the entertainments at the Strand Theatre to a noisy conclusion. Mr. James Rogers enacts a gentleman of extremely nervous temperament who has fallen into dire misfortunes from the fact that he bears the same name as a wicked personage whose desertion of his wife and children is recorded in the daily papers. The lady to whom he pays his addresses indignantly rejects him, her brother is ever watchful to exterminate him in single combat, a magistrate is prompt with a warrant for his apprehension, and the people of the country inn where he seeks a refuge from persecution attribute to lunacy the excited state of his feelings. The force of the piece consists in the reckless oddity of the dialogue and the hearty self-abandonment of Mr. James Rogers to his manifold miseries. It was completely successful.

DINNER TO MR. BUCKSTONE.—The members of the Haymarket company, in return for a similar invitation given to them a few weeks ago, invited their esteemed and respected manager to a dinner on the 9th inst. Mr. Chippendale, stage-manager, was in the chair, with Mr. Charles Mathews facing him, and amongst the few visitors invited were Mr. Benjamin Webster and Mr. Robert Keeley. As the dinner was entirely of a private nature, we need only record that the numerous toasts and speeches pleasantly commemorated the harmony that has reigned throughout the establishment for so long a period, and that the health of Mr. Buckstone elicited one of the heartiest responses of the evening. The festal accompaniments reflected the highest credit on the taste and judgment of Mr. Wylde, Proprietor of the Café de l'Europe, and showed to every advantage the excellent cuisine and vinous resources of that popular refectory.

THE LIBERATOR AND THE LEVELLER.—We hear from Paris that great preparations are being made for the production of Tannhäuser at the Grand Opera. The only person in Paris, to judge from the newspapers, who likes Herr Wagner's music (of which specimens, it may be remembered, were presented to the Parisians a few months since in a series of some half dozen concerts) is the Emperor Napoleon. The Emperor has had several interviews with Herr Wagner, and the result is that he is charmed with his music; though it is scarcely probable that at these interviews Herr Wagner either sang or played to his Majesty. On the other hand, it is satisfactory to know that Herr Wagner is charmed with the Emperor Napoleon. The Emperor has directed that no expense shall be spared in putting Tannhäuser on the stage in a style worthy of the great Republican and German Unitarian who composed it; and Herr Wagner has shown his appreciation of the great Liberator of oppressed nationalities by introducing into his perfect chrysolite of an opera the meretricious and altogether foreign element of a ballet, so as to qualify it for production at the Académie. This is very civil on both sides; and, even if Tannhäuser does not succeed in Paris (which, however, it must do if enough money is spent on it), the French Emperor will be sure to have some sort of success in Germany—that is to say, among the party to which Herr Wagner belongs, and over which he has an influence which will not appear unaccountable to those who have read any of his writings. We wonder what Napoleon I. would have thought of Herr Wagner's operas—supposing that he had heard them at a moment when there was no question about the possession of the Rhine country. He liked Méhul's Irato, which was written in the Italian style, but not Méhul's other operas; and, when he was asked why he had not appointed Cherubini director of his concerts, replied—ignorantly, but with a meaning that some will understand—that it was "because he liked music, and not noise." It suits Napoleon III. just now to pretend that he likes noise, not music. However, we will say no more about Tannhäuser until it is brought out at the Royal English Opera—which, it is said now, will open the first week in October. Illustrated Times.

POETRY v. PROSE.

By HAYDN WILSON.

THE GREATEST MUSICAL] COMPOSERS.

THESE are reckon'd five in number,
Music made, exciting wonder,
With their deep science, beauty, style;
Though doom'd to please but for a while.
Their names well known and ideas scanned,
When sung or play'd with a full band.
Great Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart,
And Beethoven, all touch'd the heart.
The first in choruses sublime,
Soars high, as if to heav'n would climb.
The second's deep fugues not surpass'd;
The third, for all a mind possess'd.
The fourth, for grandeur not outdone,
He labour'd hard and laurels won:
His years were only thirty-six,
Toil'd day and night his fame to fix.
The fifth, whose depth of mind far fetch'd
Rich harmonies, effects outstretch'd;
A style his own, so grand and new,
That stepp'd beyond the 'ceding few.

CONCERT-ROOM PIANISTS.

THIS class of professionals, when master of their line of business, are of more importance than the public seem to be aware, who have to accompany the singers and sometimes prop them up, anticipating what they are going to do; while so much depends on a good accompanyist that a finished singer has reason to almost dread singing to one not up to the mark, that cannot humour by waiting or retarding the time to afford the other every chance of displaying his taste and energy. Although he has to accommodate vocalists in many ways, and be everything to them, whether comic or sentimental, between the first or second verse of a song the public avail themselves to applaud while he is playing the symphony; and whatever effects he throws into the accompaniment, when done with judgment, so as not to encroach on the vocal part, it passes away unnoticed. In some rooms this functionary is the only thorough musician engaged; and although so much responsibility hangs on his shoulders, he is considered nobody with the public, and not being an attraction equal to the vocalists, because classical instrumental music is little understood in such places, he is sometimes slighted and underrated by his employer, both in importance and his terms, occasioning him who does the most work to be the worst paid.

Advertisements.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—Under this title Messrs. Boosey & Sons have published a new Series of Shilling Books, intended to embrace every description of Standard and Popular Music for the Voice and Pianoforte, and adapted for every variety of taste.

Each Book contains from forty to fifty pages of Music, beautifully printed on fine paper (demy 4to.) in an illustrated Cover, price One Shilling. Prospectuses, with specimen page of paper and type, are now ready, and will be sent post free by the publishers. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET — MENDELSSOHN—No. 1 contains Twenty Favourite Songs by Mendelssohn, with English Words and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—BALFE—No. 2 contains Twelve Popular Songs by Balfe, including "The Green Trees," "The Good Night," "Beloved," &c. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—VERDI—No. 3 contains Fourteen Favourite Songs by Verdi, with English Words and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET — CHRISTY'S SONGS—No. 4 contains Twenty of the most Popular Christy's Minstrels' Songs, with Choruses and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—WALTZES—No. 5 contains Fifty Popular Waltzes by Laurent, Tinney, Gungé, Lamotte, Mellon, &c. Price One Shilling. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET—QUADRILLES. No. 6 contains Twelve popular Sets of Quadrilles (complete), by D'Albert, Laurent, Tinney, Lamotte, Nordmann, &c. Price 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—POLKAS and GALOPS.—No. 7 contains Forty Polkas and Ten Galops (all with their trios), by Labitsky, Lanner, Laurent, Ettling, Gungé, Strauss, Nordmann, &c. Price 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—OPERATIC MUSIC.—No. 8 contains Twenty-five Gems from Verdi's Operas. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Nordmann. Price 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL-ROOM MUSIC-BOOK. Price 4s. superbly bound in crimson cloth, gilt edges, containing Fifty Waltzes, Forty Polkas, Ten Galops, Twelve Quadrilles (complete), Two Schottisches, Two Varsovianas. By all the most popular Composers of the day. Forming the most attractive and cheapest collection of Dance-music ever published. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 VIOLIN DANCES, 1s. (First Series); 100 Dances (Second Series), 1s.; 100 Ballads, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 Reels and Country Dances, 1s.; 100 Waltzes (by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitsky), 1s.; 10 Standard Overtures, 1s.; Boosey's 23 Complete Operas for Violin, 1s. each (including Dinorah, Satanella, Bohemian Girl, Maritani, Il Trovatore, La Traviata, &c.). Boosey's editions must be ordered. Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 DANCES for FLUTE, 1s.; 100 Operatic Airs, 1s.; 100 Exercises and Studies by the great Masters, 1s. All arranged by R. S. PRATTEN. Also 12 Complete Operas for the Flute, arranged by CLINTON, 1s. each, including Il Trovatore, Sonnambula, Les Huguenots, &c. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, Manufacturers of Pratten's Perfected Flutes.

BOOSEY'S 25 DUETS for TWO CORNETS-A-PISTONS, arranged by THOMAS HARPER, price 1s.; Boosey's 100 Dances for Cornet-à-Pistons, 1s.; Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs for Cornet-à-Pistons, 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S 100 CONCERTINA DANCES, 1s.; 100 Popular Melodies for Concertina, 1s.; 100 Sacred Melodies for Concertina, 1s., arranged by GEORGE CASE; Boosey's Concertina Tutor, 24 pages, large size, 1s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

NEW ENGLISH DUET.—"Sweet is the dream," Duet by CAMPANA, being an English version of his celebrated aria "Sera d'Amore." Price 2s. 6d. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

"I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY," as Sung by the Buckley Serenaders, and all their Copyright American Melodies, are just published by Messrs. Hopwood & Crew, 42 New Bond Street, London, W. The Original and Celebrated Buckley Serenaders (from 585 Broadway, New York, U.S.) will make their First Appearance in London at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, early in October. N.B.—Full particulars will be duly announced.

RAMSGATE SANDS QUADRILLE. — The most popular set of the day. Founded on favourite and well-known melodies, illustrating a visit to Ramsgate, in characteristic music. By BURCKHARDT. With a most superb Frontispiece, by Brandard, in Colours. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

NOTRE DAME. Romance for the Pianoforte, by EMILE BERGER. Founded on a very beautiful subject by Pergolesi. Price 3s. Illustrated by Laby. Published this day by Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

SCHLOESSER'S BRILLIANT DUETS for Pianoforte, on Oberon, Dinorah, Traviata, and Rigoletto. 5s. each. All effective, brilliant, and moderately difficult. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL ROOM MUSIC-BOOK, price 4s. in crimson cloth, containing 50 Waltzes, 40 Polkas, 10 Galops, 2 Schottisches, 2 Varsovianas, and 12 Sets of Quadrilles (complete). Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

ASCHER'S CLOCHES du VILLAGE (just published), 3s.; Ascher's "Thou art so near," 3s.; Ascher's Dinorah, 3s.; Ascher's Les Vêpres Siciliennes, 3s.; Ascher's Un Ballo in Maschera, 3s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

AN EVENING WITH MEYERBEER (published this day). Mélange for the Pianoforte, by NORDMANN, introducing beautiful subjects from Crociato, Robert le Diable, Dinorah, Les Huguenots, Vielka, &c. Price 3s.; solo, 6s.; duet also.

AN EVENING WITH BALFE, solo and duet.

AN EVENING WITH CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS, solo and duet.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE DRIPPING WELL, for Pianoforte. By GOLLMICK. Third Edition. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING PIANOFORTE TUTOR. 36 pages, music size.

CHEAP EDITION of IL TROVATORE for Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian Words, in 8 monthly parts, 1s. each, commencing October 1. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

TENNYSON'S EXQUISITE LYRIC—"FOR EVER AND FOR EVER."—has been as exquisitely set to Music by Mr. BLANCHARD JERROLD. Vide Illustrated News, September 8th. It is just published by Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

CZERNY'S 50 BEST EXERCISES (from the 101), 1s. CZERNY'S ETUDE DE LA VELOCITE, 2s. 6d. complete, or in Three Parts, 1s. each. CZERNY'S 101 EXERCISES, Two Parts, 1s. each. HERZ'S EXERCISES and SCALES, 1s. Boosey's editions must be ordered.

KUHE'S ROBERT LE DIABLE, published this day, price 3s. Also, KUHE'S FANTASIAS on DINORAH, SATANELLA, DOMINO NOIR, ZAMPA, LES VEPRES SICILIENNES, 3s. each. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

FOR BEGINNERS.—Thou art so Near, Solo and Duet, 1s.; The Shadow Air (Dinorah), 1s.; The Power of Love, 1s.; Willie, we have Missed You, 1s.; Beautiful Star, 1s.; Maud Waltz, 1s.; Satanella Quadrille (complete), 1s.; König's Hero Polka, 1s. All in the Pianoforte Recreations. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

IN ENGLISH.—Dinorah, 12s.; Il Trovatore, 12s.; Satanella, 15s.; La Traviata, 12s.; Don Juan, 18s.; Figaro, 6s.; Sonnambula, 12s. 6d.; Parma, 10s. 6d.; Lucrezia, 16s.; Iphigenia in Tauris, 8s.; Faust, 12s. 6d.; Fidelio, 15s.; Der Freischutz, 12s. 6d.; Ernani, 15s.; Il Barbiere, 10s.; Zauberflote, 12s. 6d. These Operas are complete for Voice and Pianoforte, with English words and the original Foreign text, in handsome cloth volumes. Boosey's editions must be ordered. 28 Holles Street.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, September 29, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 40 SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Pianoforte / Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English). / Vocal Classes	Mr. POWELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian / Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 20 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

JUST PUBLISHED, RUDIMENTS of HARMONY with Progressive Exercises. By G. A. MACFARREN. Price 7s. 6d. Cramer, Beale, & Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

MAD. CATHERINE HAYES begs to announce her Return to England for the Season. All communications respecting Concerts and Oratorios to be addressed to 13 Westbourne Park, W.

MAD. OURY has RETURNED to Town, to her new Residence, 3 LINDEN GROVE, BAYSWATER, W.

MR. SAINTON and MAD. SAINTON-DOLBY beg to announce that they have REMOVED from Hinde Street to 5 UPPER WIMPOLE STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

MR. WALLWORTH begs to inform his pupils, friends, and the public that he has REMOVED to 81 PARK STREET, GROSVENOR SQUARE, W.—The Second Edition of his "ART OF SINGING" is just published, and may be had at his residence.

MR. GEORGE FORBES respectfully informs his Friends and Pupils that he has REMOVED from 9 Bentinck Terrace, Regent's Park, to 22 PORTSDOWN ROAD, MAIDA HILL, W.

THE ARION EIGHT-PART CHOIR.—The Members meet every Thursday Evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13 Berners Street, W. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. Prospectuses may be obtained.

F. F. RIELLY, Hon. Sec.

THE ARION AMATEUR ORCHESTRA.—Four First Violins, Four Second ditto, Two Violas, and Two Violoncellos are required to form the nucleus of a First Class Amateur Orchestra, which will meet for practice on Saturdays as soon as the requisite arrangements are made. Particulars of the Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT, 13 Berners Street, W.

THE ARION.—In connection with this Society it is intended to establish Classes, conducted by eminent Masters, for Pianoforte and Singing, under the direction of Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. Prospectuses will shortly be issued.

BUCKLEY'S AMERICAN MELODIES.

"I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY," as Sung by the Buckley Serenaders, and all their Copyright American Melodies, are just published by Messrs. Hopwood & Crew, 42 New Bond Street, London, W. The Original and Celebrated Buckley Serenaders and Miss Julia Gould (from 585 Broadway, New York, U.S.) will make their First Appearance in London at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Monday Evening, 15th October. Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Places may be secured at the Libraries, Music-Sellers, and at Mr. Austin's, Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION

9 Conduit Street, Regent Street.—Conductors, M. JULES BENEDICT and Dr. JAMES PECH.—The Orchestral Meetings for the Season 1860-61 will commence on Wednesday Evening, the 10th October, at 8 o'Clock, when the punctual attendance of Members is requested.

12 Moorgate Street. GEO. EMDEN, Hon. Sec.

Amateurs desirous of joining the Association can do so at the Rooms any Wednesday Evening, from 8 to 10, or daily, on application to the Hon. Secretary.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC.—LEFEBURE-WELY'S SIX OFFERTOIRES. Op. 35. Edited by WILLIAM REA. 3s. to 5s. each. HENRY SMART'S ORGAN PIECES, introductory to the characteristic difficulties of the Instrument. Nos. 1 and 2, each 3s. 6d. London: Ashdown & Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

THE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C.—A.D. 1834.—The TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT, Cash Account, Balance Sheet, &c., are now ready, and may be had on written or personal application.

CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Il Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of [illegible] performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Ethiopian Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c. In addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open [illegible] a.m. till Twelve p.m.

ONE PENNY

"THE HARP OF WALES."

Sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES,

COMPOSED BY BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s. 6d.

"'The Harp of Wales' (sung for the first time) is a very graceful song, admirably adapted for Mr. Sims Reeves, and sung by the distinguished tenor with a refinement of expression which produced a magical effect on the audience, and raised demands for repetition which were not to be denied."—Daily Telegraph.

"'The Harp of Wales,' beautifully sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, was unanimously redemanded."—Morning Post.

"The other was new and sung for the first time by Mr. Sims Reeves. It is called the 'Harp of Wales,' and is a lovely and expressive melody. It was enthusiastically encored."—Daily News.

"Mr. Richards did honour to his fatherland by introducing a new song, 'The Harp of Wales,' which is sure to become a favourite of the Cymri, who are justly proud of their bards. So admirably was this sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, that an encore was inevitable, and the ballad was as warmly applauded the second time as the first."—Musical World.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, where may be obtained—

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG," sung by Mr. Santley, price 3s.

"THE BLIND MAN & SUMMER," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.

"ETHEL," Romance for the Pianoforte, price 2s.

"LEOPOLD," Mazurka Favourite, price 2s.

Composed by Brinley Richards

FERRARI'S WORK

ON

THE VOICE AND SINGING,

Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,

DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,

And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

"GOOD NIGHT," by I. LIEBICH. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich (forming No. 2 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte, by the above author), is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," by R. ANDREWS. Reichardt's charming Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), transcribed for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W., where R. ANDREWS'S transcription for the Pianoforte of "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR" (Reichardt) may be obtained, price 2s.

"GOOD NIGHT," Réverie by KUHE on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied (Cradle Song), is now published for the Pianoforte, price 3s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By EMILE BERGER. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, arranged for the Pianoforte by the above popular author, is now published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I LOVE YOU." By I. LIEBICH. SIMS REEVES' popular Ballad, composed expressly for him by Balfe, transcribed for the Pianoforte by I. Liebich, is now published, price 2s. (forming No. 1 of Two Popular Melodies for the Pianoforte by the above author), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by BALFE.—"I LOVE YOU," sung by Mr. SIMS REEVES with such immense success at Mr. Martin's (Exeter Hall), Mr. Lindsay Sloper's, and Miss Susannah Cole's Concerts (St. James's Hall), and at Mr. Balfe's benefit concert at the Royal Surrey Gardens before 10,000 persons, 3s.; as well as Balfe's two charming Ballads, "Oh! take me to they heart again," 2s., sung by Miss KATE RANO (mezzo-soprano) at Mad. de Vaucheran's Concert; and "I'm not in love, remember," 2s. 6d., sung by Mlle. SENLATZEK at the fashionable Concerts at Campden House, are published by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street, W.

"I NEVER KNEW HOW DEAR THOU WERT." New Song, by H. K. MORLEY, composed expressly for and sung by Miss LASCELLES (the Poetry by CATHERINE WARFIELD) is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

ELLIOT GALER'S NEW SONGS, composed expressly for him by W. MEYER LUTZ, are just published, viz.:—"Under the Linden Tree" and "Merry little Maud," price 2s. 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY," by A. SCHLOESSER, sung with immense applause by Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, is published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"IF I COULD CHANGE AS OTHERS CHANGE," composed by M. W. BALFE expressly for Madame LAURA BAXTER, and sung by her with distinguished success at St. James's Hall and the Royal Surrey Gardens, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," New Song by A. REICHARDT, Composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far," is published, with English and German Words, and a Portrait of Herr Reichardt, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison & Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S FOURTH MARCHE AUX FLAMBEAUX ("Royal Wedding March"), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, London, W.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN," for Four Male Voices, as sung by the Choir of 3000 FRENCH ORPHEONISTS, at the Fêtes given in the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, arranged especially for them by CAMILLE DE VOSS, is published in score, price 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

WILBYE COOPER'S NEW SONG, "The Meadow Gate," composed expressly for him by GEORGE B. ALLEN, is now published, price 2s. 6d. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONGS by EMANUEL AGUILAR.—"SYMPATHY," poetry by ELLIS BELL, dedicated to Signor FERRARI, price 2s., and "IN A WOOD ON A WINDY DAY," poetry by ACTON BELL, dedicated to Miss GRACE LINDO, price 3s., are now published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"These songs, written by the younger sisters of Charlotte Brontë (Currer Bell, author of 'Jane Eyre,') have been clothed by Mr. Aguilar in beautiful and expressive music. 'Sympathy' is full of tranquil tenderness; 'In a Wood on a Windy Day' paints the agitated and exulting mood often engendered by the stormy aspects of nature—the wind roaring among the branches and scattering the withered leaves, or the dashing of the billows on the sea-beach. Mr. Aguilar has heightened the effect of this last song by the picturesque character of his pianoforte accompaniment."—Daily News. "In a Wood on a Windy Day," was sung by Miss Grace Lindo with great success at Mr. Aguilar's Concert, Hanover Square Rooms.

NEW SONG BY MRS. BLANCHARD JERROLD.

"FOR EVER AND FOR EVER."—Song written by ALFRED TENNYSON, to whom it is dedicated by MRS. W. BLANCHARD JERROLD.

From the Illustrated News: "Tennyson's exquisite lyric has been as exquisitely set to music by Mrs. Jerrold."

From the Illustrated Times: "The charming little poem of 'The River' has inspired Mrs. Blanchard Jerrold with a very beautiful melody which will henceforth be associated inseparably with Tennyson's words. The air is gracefully harmonised, and, altogether, this is one of the happiest musical 'illustrations' of Tennyson that has been produced."

London: Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE PEOPLE'S PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS, Exeter Hall.—Arrangements have been made with the Committee of Management of the above spacious Hall to establish a series of GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERTS for the PEOPLE, at popular prices. It is proposed to set apart the following evenings in each week for such a purpose, viz., Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. The Directors of these Concerts are particularly anxious to make them essentially educational and in every way suitable and acceptable to the advanced musical taste and feelings of every class of society, and especially to the great industrial masses of the community. The programme each evening will be devoted partly to the best works of the great masters—Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, and others, and partly to compositions of a lighter and more miscellaneous character, such as grand operatic selections and overtures in the various German, Italian, French, and English Schools; added to which will be reproduced, for the first time these last 20 years, the most elegant compositions of those recherché writers of dance music—Strauss, Labitzky, Lanner, and Musard. An especial feature in these Concerts will be the performance of an Oratorio on each Wednesday evening in a style of the utmost completeness. The services of a Band and Chorus of 300 have been secured, and negotiations are also pending with some of our best vocalists and solo instrumentalists. Conductor, Dr. JAMES PECH. The prices of admission have been thus arranged:—Stalls, 4s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; while upwards of 1,000 seats have been allotted at 1s. There will be no extra charge for booking stalls or reserved seats. In conclusion, the Directors confidently hope that this effort will enlist the sympathy and merit the approval and patronage of the people at large.

TO AMATEUR BAND PERFORMERS.—A Large ROOM (to be LET from 6 to 10 in the Evening, for Practising Purposes,) in the neighbourhood of Regent Street and Oxford Street. Gas laid on. Terms moderate.—Apply at the Premises, 10 Poland Street, Oxford Street, W.

THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondents.)

NORWICH, Sept. 22.

THE 13th Triennial Musical Festival of Norfolk and Norwich has fully maintained the right of the East Anglian capital to rank among the most eminently musical cities of Great Britain. The successful production of two new works of pretensions like Herr Molique's oratorio of Abraham and Mr. Benedict's cantata—or, as the composer styles it, "lyric legend"—of Undine, would alone have sufficed to commemorate the present anniversary as one of the most remarkable since the birth of the festival. It is by such bold and enterprising policy that the Norwich music-meetings have been able to preserve their ascendancy, and keep up a fair show of rivalry against all competitors, not excepting even the formidable assemblages at Birmingham. We cannot but think that one new oratorio for the morning, and one new cantata, symphony, or other important composition for the evening, should be provided on every great occasion. The remaining performances might be exclusively devoted to acknowledged masterpieces, in the presentation of which no risk whatever is incurred. This is not the first time by many that Norwich has set so good an example. Its motto would seem to be "Nothing venture, nothing gained." By similar enterprise Birmingham got Elijah; and though a second Elijah is not probable, it is, at the same time, not impossible. Mr. Benedict, conductor of the festival, has always been an advocate for the introduction of novelty into the programmes; and here, as elsewhere, he enjoys the hearty co-operation of Mr. Roger Kerrison, one of the hon. secretaries, the most active, zealous, indefatigable member of the Committee of Management, of which the Earl of Albemarle and Dr. Copeman are chairmen, Messrs. Kellett Long and Hay Gurney sub-chairmen, Mr. F. J. Blake treasurer, and Messrs. Kerrison and J. B. Morgan hon. secretaries—altogether an intelligent and thoroughly efficient working body.

The very inconvenient hour at which the express leaves for London from this ancient and thriving, but to all intents and purposes out-of-the-way city, acts as a stumbling-block in the path of those whose duty it is to forward daily reports of the festival performances. The oratorios terminate on the average about 3 p.m., and the last train by which parcels can reach the metropolis on the same day starts at 3·20. Cathedral towns are not invariably prone to expeditious liveliness in the matter of communication with other parts of the world. Some of them rather discourage than promote frequent and easy intercourse with strangers, and seem to regard the encroachments of commerce and manufactures with suspicion. But Norwich has never been envious of the reputation of a dull cathedral close, a snug roosting-place for Dean and Chapter, a lounge for fat prebendaries, lay clerks, and minor canons. On the contrary, although with some 40 churches, to a population not far exceeding 60,000, it has an eye to business, and is generally looked upon as a shrewd and bustling town. But even from Worcester, Hereford, and Glocester, there is a late "express" at a practicable hour; and, while Glocester may transmit lamperns and Severn-salmon up till 5 p.m., not a Yarmouth bloater, much less a musical report of the festival, can leave Norwich for London after 3·20. Whether the fault lies with the railway companies, two of which are tributary to the Wensum and the Yare, or is due to the apathetic indifference of the inhabitants of Norwich, Yarmouth, and Lowestoft, we are not in a position to say. Under the circumstances, just as a "bird's-eye" view of the city of Norwich was taken the other day from the end of Castle-hill, so a "bird's-eye" retrospect of the performances hitherto unnoticed must be taken from the end of Festival-week.

The most important feature at the second evening concert was Professor Bennett's May Queen, which was quite as successful as at Worcester, and even better executed. Had it been his own composition, Mr. Benedict could not have taken more pains to secure a correct and effective performance. Almost for the first time in our remembrance all the choruses were well rendered, not excepting even "O melancholy plight" and "Ill-fated boy." To dilate upon the perfect manner in which the music of the May Queen, the Lover, and Robin Hood was delivered by Mad. Novello, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Weiss would be merely a repetition of the praises bestowed on their joint achievements at Worcester; we have only, therefore, to pass a word of unqualified commendation upon Miss Palmer, who gave the contralto music of the Queen of England with an emphasis and dramatic expression which left nothing to desire. This charming pastoral has now been performed at four of the great provincial music-meetings (Leeds, Glocester, Worcester, and Norwich); it is already, we understand, set down by Mr. Townshend Smith for Hereford next year; and when Mr. Costa has introduced it at Birmingham and Bradford it will, to use a quaint but not inappropriate phrase, have "achieved the nimbus"—in other language, made the circuit of the Festivals. At the same concert the foreign Opera-singers appeared and again won laurels:—Mlle. Titiens in "Non mi dir;" Mad. Borghi-Mamo in the romance from Otello (harp, Mr. Trust); Signor Giuglini in "M'appari, tutt'amor;" Signor Belletti in an air from one of the Italian operas of Buononcini (Handel's rival in London—the lesser hero of Swift's "Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee"); and the four "ensemble" in the graceful quartet, "Buona notte," from the second act of M. Flotow's Martha, which last was redemanded. There was a regular shower of ballads—Mad. Weiss, Miss Palmer, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Wilbye Cooper, and Santley, each contributing a specimen—all of them well sung, but only two—Mr. Wallace's "Bell-ringer," and Mr. Macfarren's "Ah! why do we love?" (Mr. Santley and Mad. Weiss)—possessing intrinsic merit. There were also excerpts from the Worcester Festival, in the shape of the eternal "Robert, toi que j'aime" (Mad. Novello), the quiet duet from Il Flauto Magico (Mr. and Mad. Weiss), &c. Mr. Pierson had another part-song—"To arms"—not so vigorous and spirited, perhaps, as "Ye mariners of England," but sung by the chorus with equal energy, and applauded by the audience with almost equal vehemence. Mr. Pierson is from Norfolk, we believe; but whether this or the patriotic tone of the words selected for his part-songs had most to do with the remarkable success obtained by both of them we cannot pretend to decide. They are certainly meritorious, but their merits seemed hardly commensurate with the plaudits elicited. Annexed are the words of "To arms!"

"Our swords we'll unsheath for the glorious strife,
And our oath is recorded on high,
To prevail in the cause that is dearer than life,
Or crush'd in its ruins to die.
Then rise, fellow-freemen, and stretch the right hand,
And swear to prevail in your dear native land.

"'Tis the home we hold sacred is laid to our trust—
God bless the green isle of the brave!
Should a conqueror tread on our forefathers' dust
It would rouse the old dead from their grave.
Then rise, fellow-freemen, &c.

"In a Briton's sweet home shall a spoiler abide,
Profaning its loves and its charms;
Shall a foe dare insult the lov'd fair at our side?
To arms! oh my country, to arms!
Then rise, fellow-freemen, &c.

"Shall a tyrant enslave us, my countrymen? No!
His head to the sword shall be given;
A death-bed repentance be taught the proud foe,
And his blood be an offering to Heaven.
Then rise, fellow-freemen." &c.

The second and third lines of the last stanza may be somewhat difficult to reconcile; but the sentiment, which, after all, was the important point, enlisted the sympathies of every hearer. An English Weber to set our patriotic songs in chorus would not be unwelcome just now. Some instrumental solos agreeably relieved the vocal programme. M. Sainton, on the violin, played his own fantasia on Lucrezia Borgia with wonderful fire and brilliancy; Miss Arabella Goddard and Mr. Benedict gave Mr. Osborne's duet on the Huguenots for two pianofortes, with entire success; and the lady selected as a solo the universally popular "Home, sweet home," of which a local paper (the Norfolk News) speaks in the terms subjoined:—

"Arabella Goddard also sang 'Home, sweet home,' not to, but upon the pianoforte, for it was literally singing, with the addition of Thalberg's miraculous accompaniment. Nothing would satisfy the audience but an encore, when she favoured them with 'The last rose of summer.'

This lady's execution, perfect and astonishing as it is, is not so great a charm as the soul with which it is animated."

The second part of the concert was to have begun with Haydn's symphony, No. 6, and to have terminated with Weber's overture to Der Freischütz; but, by some unexplained process, Haydn's symphony was metamorphosed into Weber's overture (a lamb into a lion) and Weber's overture to Bishop's "Tramp" chorus (a lion into a mouse). We presume that at the eleventh hour the programme was found too long. Nevertheless, the changes should not have been made without a word to the audience; and, as a short speech from Mr. Benedict—who is idolised at Norwich just as Mr. Costa is idolised at Birmingham and Professor Bennett at Leeds—never fails to be well received by the audience, a short speech would have been a graceful condescension on this occasion. At the third and last evening concert Mr. Benedict's Undine was produced with unequivocal success. The following outline of the story—altered and compressed from a carefully-made analysis of the different pieces comprised in the Festival programme—may serve to afford the reader a tolerably correct notion of what Mr. Benedict has so happily set to music:—

"Undine, a water spirit, has left her home for the sake of Hildebrand, lord of a castle on the banks of the Danube. Kühleborn, kinsman of Undine, disapproves her attachment, suspecting that the mortal lover will prove unfaithful. Nor are his suspicions ill-founded, for Hildebrand no sooner returns to his castle, than, forgetting Undine, he espouses a lady named Bertalda. To avenge this slight to his race, Kühleborn summons the spirits of the waters, who destroy the castle and its owners, while Undine bewails the fate of her lover. In order to render the contrast between the two female characters complete, Bertalda is supposed to be a lady of rank, and not, as in La Motte Fouqué's tale, the daughter of a fisherman. After an instrumental prelude the cantata begins with a chorus of water spirits, bewailing the loss of Undine. This is interrupted by a bass solo for Kühleborn, who explains the cause of her absence. The burden is then taken up again, and the whole concludes with the antiphonal chorus, describing the life of the Naiads—

"Ancient Nereus' daughters,
Who, free from care and strife,
In their sparkling grottoes dwell,
Listening to the Triton's shell"— in which (for the first time) men's voices are introduced. A colloquy, in recitative between Hildebrand and Undine is succeeded by an air for the latter, explaining to her lover the supernatural attributes that may probably one day deprive her of his affection, and accompanied by a chorus of invisible spirits for women's voices. A short trio between the lovers and the incredulous Kühleborn conducts us to a scene and air for Hildebrand, who dwells on the happiness he would have found with Undine, in a slow movement. A march heard in the distance, announcing the arrival of Bertalda, however, changes the course of his reflections, and in an 'allegro' he expresses his determination to free himself from the trammels of ignoble repose, and following his destiny henceforth lead the life of a knight and hero. The march, which had been faintly heard during Hildebrand's air, now approaches. Bertalda arrives, and is hailed with an epithalamium. In an air she describes her anticipations of happiness as future mistress of the castle; and this leads to a short duet in which Bertalda and Hildebrand exchange mutual words of affection. Undine, however, suddenly appears, and a quartet ensues, in which the water spirit in despairing accents announces her willingness to renounce Hildebrand, if he, on the other hand, will abandon Bertalda: while Bertalda treats the unwelcome intruder with scorn and contempt, Hildebrand himself is divided between a feeling of remorse and his love for Bertalda; and Kühleborn vows vengeance for the insult. The quartet gives way to a bass air, with chorus of ocean spirits, who, at the summons of Kühleborn, bring death and destruction upon all the inmates of the castle. Undine is then carried away by her companions, bewailing the fate of her lover, and lamenting that her immortality prevents her from sharing it. The sound of her voice grows fainter and fainter, till at length, as she gradually retreats to her watery home, it melts into silence, and the 'cantata' terminates. Her parting words are worth quoting:—

"Bright green earth, farewell, farewell.
Now I seek my distant cell,
There, beneath the waters deep,
O'er my short-lived joys to weep,
For in death I may not sleep,
Thou art happier far than I,
Dearest, would that I could die!"

The libretto of Undine is in its way perfect. Not only is the tory well conducted, but the ideas are poetical and the versification admirable. Mr. Benedict has set it to music con amore. He must, indeed, have been enamoured with his subject, or he could not have illustrated it so felicitously. The overture is a masterpiece of fairy music, as delicately instrumented as it is beautifully conceived. The opening chorus of naiads (or "nixes," or "daughters of old Nereus"—or what we will), and all that follows in the scene with Kühleborn is highly picturesque, the whole possessing, moreover, the unusual merit of being an imitation neither of Weber's Oberon nor of Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream. Undine's song, "Mark the waves that rippling play" (of which we are loth not to reprint the words), is just such a graceful inspiration as one might imagine would flow from the lips of the water-nymph—that is, supposing her to be a songstress, like Weber's pet mermaid. The little trio (a round, or canon), for Kühleborn and the lovers, keeps up the spirit of what precedes it, and clearly marks the distinction between the various personages. The next scene, in which Hildebrand's apostrophe to Undine is interrupted by the arrival of Bertalda (announced by the march—a capital march, by the way), and the tender strains of the ballad, "From worldly cares and toils afar," give way to the energetic war song, "Loud sounds the trumpet," is as vigorously imagined as it is artistically executed; the wedding-chorus "Hail to the noble pair," appropriately jubilant and exhilarating, is well carried out by Bertalda's air "The baron's old castle looks proud and bright," in which the haughty maiden exults in the dream of her approaching destiny. Though brief and unpretending, the duet between bride and bridegroom—"Happy day"—is not the less engaging; while the quartet that succeeds it, in which the conflicting emotions of Undine, Bertalda, Hildebrand and Kühleborn are portrayed—is not merely an ingenious composition in an abstract musical sense, but exhibits that power of contrasting while combining—making an harmonious whole, in short, out of conflicting parts—which is one of the rarest and most enviable gifts in a composer. The finale, involving the vengeance of Kühleborn and the destruction of Hildebrand and Bertalda, is of a piece with the rest, as dramatic and forcible as anything in the cantata. The performance of Undine was such as to confer honour alike upon chorus, band, and principal singers—Mad. Novello (Undine), Miss Palmer (Bertalda), Mr. Sims Reeves (Hildebrand), and Mr. Weiss (Kühleborn)—who all did their utmost to show their high esteem for the conductor of the Norwich Festival, and to ensure an adequate appreciation for his new work. We cannot enter into details, but must especially mention Mad. Novello's sweet warbling of the delicious melody, "Mark the waves that rippling play;" Miss Palmer's excellent singing of Bertalda's air; the spirit and energy that distinguished Mr. Weiss's delivery of Kühleborn's solo about "love;" and the superb declamation of Mr. Sims Reeves in the war-song of Hildebrand, which was the more remarkable from its immediate contrast with the amatory effusion (the apostrophe to Undine) that goes before. Had Mr. Benedict wished to provide Mr. Reeves with an opportunity of displaying his equal excellence in two styles essentially opposed to each other he could hardly have written anything more to the purpose. Last not least, the execution of the overture by the band cannot be too unreservedly eulogised. Orchestral playing more delicate and subdued, and at the same time more nicely distinguished for the accurate observance of light and shade, has rarely been heard. The cantata was rapturously applauded, and at the end Mr. Benedict was called for unanimously and greeted with an enthusiastic demonstration.

The remainder of the concert does not call for many words. Among the vocal features were "Qui sola, vergin rosa," which, on being encored, Mlle. Titiens metamorphosed into "The last rose of summer;" a romance by Mercadante, which Signor Giuglini is accustomed to interpolate in Lucrezia Borgia, and which he was now compelled by general desire to sing twice; Hoel's romance in Dinorah (act iii.), which no one sings more admirably than Mr. Santley; "Batti, batti," by Mad. Novello, with Signor Piatti at the violoncello, a faultless combination of voice and instrument, as may be readily divined; "O mio Fernando" (La Favorita), Mad. Borghi-Mamo's execution of which needs no eulogy; the florid air from Il Seraglio, given by Signor Belletti better, if possible, than at Worcester; two new ballads, "The winds that waft" (Wallace) and "The slave's dream" (Weiss), both so well sung, the first by Mr. Wilbye Cooper, the last by Mr. Weiss himself, that the maxim (recently enforced by circumstances), "In the multitude of ballads is not music," did not present itself to the mind; Spohr's delicate romance of the Rose (Azor and Zemira), by Mad. Weiss; "Come into the garden, Maud," which, in spite of the emphatic demand of the audience, the discreet Mr. Sims Reeves could not be prevailed upon to repeat; the sparkling "brindisi" from Lucrezia, by Mad. Borghi-Mamo, and two duets, one from the Trovatore (by Mad. Borghi-Mamo and Mr. Sims Reeves), the other from Il Turco in Italia (by Signor Belletti and Mr. Santley, both sung to perfection, both unanimously encored, but the first only repeated. The instrumental displays were the overture to Guillaume Tell, by the band; Ernst's enormously difficult fantasia on the march and willow-song in Otello, by Mr. Blagrove; and the variations and finale of Hummell's celebrated Septet for pianoforte (Miss Arabella Goddard), flute (Mr. Pratten), oboe (Mr. Barret), horn (Mr. Charles Harper), violin (Mr. Sainton), viola (Mr. Webb), and double-bass (Mr. Howell)—all first-class performances, and the last so well received by the audience as to justify the belief that Hummel's fine work might safely have been presented without curtailment, at the expense of two or three sentimental ballads which no one would have missed. St. Andrew's-hall was "crammed to suffocation" (sic), and in consequence of almost everybody being either encored or summoned back the duration of the concert was protracted until midnight.

The Messiah need only be named. All the principal singers took part in it—that is all the English singers, the foreigners (Titens, Borghi-Mamo, Giuglini, and Belletti) have taken their departure. With all respect for those accomplished artists, we must add that every one was satisfied: for that no singers understand the music of Handel, and especially of Handel's Messiah, so well as our own, cannot, we think, be denied. Had there, however, been a doubt on the subject, it would have been set at rest on this occason by Mesdames Novello and Weiss, Miss Palmer, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Wilbye Cooper, Santley, Weiss and Santley, who one and all sang their very best. Messrs. Cooper and Santley had comparatively little allotted to them, but with this little they took as much pains as though the entire weight of the oratorio had rested on their shoulders. The choruses were superb, the stupendous "Hallelujah," to which the audience rose, producing an effect difficult to portray, and still more difficult to forget. The band was to match: and the conductor, Mr. Benedict, may comfort himself with the reflection that one of the grandest performances ever heard of the sublimest of all oratorios was given under his direction.

The ball in the evening was a splendid affair. All the beauty of Norfolk (and Norfolk enjoys a great repute in that respect) seemed to have assembled there as an appointed rendezvous. There were upwards of 400 dancers and about 500 lookers-on in the galleries. The hall was brilliantly lighted, and dancing was kept up, to the animating strains of Mr. Weippert's excellent orchestra, until "the small hours" were merging into bigger ones, and daylight began to pale the illuminated windows of St. Andrew's Hall. It is calculated that the receipts of this festival will, after some expected donations have come to hand, exceed those of 1857 by nearly 1,000*l*., so that the "guarantees" may button up their pockets without the risk of being accused of stinginess; and although the expenses are stated to be considerably above 4,000*l*., the charities must get something worth accepting. The inhabitants of Norwich have bestirred themselves on this occasion with more spirit than usual. The Mayor (Mr. J. H. Tillett), among others, by his personal example and assistance, has contributed materially to the successful result. Having expressed a wish that the advantage of hearing some good music should be extended to the humbler classes, he has been able to make arrangements with the architect to restore the galleries which which were removed for the ball, and on Monday and Tuesday he intends to give a musical treat to the school children of Norwich. The members of the Norwich Choral Society, greatly to their credit, have offered their gratuitous assistance; and Dr. Buck, to whom the noted efficiency of the cathedral services in Norwich owes so much, has consented to preside at the organ. It is expected there will be about 2,500 children to each performance. The programe will include, among other things, "Before Jehovah's awful Throne," in which the children are to take part, and selections from the Messiah and the Creation. Befitting climax to a festival! The following table (just made out) will afford some general idea of the comparative results, in a pecuniary sense, of the meetings of 1857 and 1860:—

	Total Numbers.	Receipts in 1860.			Receipts in 1857.
		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Monday evening	1,044	322	15	0
Tuesday evening. . . .	674	401	12	6	592	10	0
Wednesday morning. .	973	645	4	6	630	11	6
Wednesday evening . .	1,329	746	11	0	515	4	0
Thursday morning. . .	815	494	11	0	621	1	6
Thursday evening . . .	1,345	790	13	0	893	11	0
Friday morning	1,662	1,055	5	0	851	11	6
Totals	7,842	£4,456	12	0	£3,604	9	6

The policy of introducing new works is not henceforth likely to be questioned after the success of Abraham and Undine. And now that the festival is over, it only remains for us to thank Mr. Roger Kerrison, in the name of the London press, for his unceasing courtesy and politeness, and to congratulate Mr. Benedict not merely upon the deserved success of the musical performances, but upon the admirable organisation which allowed every wheel in the machinery of this immense undertaking to move freely, and to do its work efficiently. With such competent assistants and "devanciers," as Mr. Harcourt (organist), Mr. Bray (leader at the rehearsals). Mr. T. F. Hill (chorus-master), and—why should his name not be added, since without a librarian there would be no music, and without music there could be no festival?—Mr. Goodwin, the labours of the conductor were materially lightened, and the efficacy of his ultimate superintendence made doubly efficacious.

NOT MERELY GIFTED, BUT CONSCIENTIOUS.—Mad. Novello as she always does, took infinite pains, and with great beauty of tone, and that polished elocution and faultless execution which has made her an example worthy of the imitation of all rising professors. Whatever Mad. Novello undertakes to do, whether for the pleasure of the most illustrious, or the least elevated, she always has regard to the honour of the art, and of the composer whose work she is the exemplar, and of her own great fame. Mad. Novello never loses sight of these, as we conceive, most important points; important not only as regards the credit of the artist individually, but as regards the character of a profession which Mad. Novello adorns and elevates in every relation of life, as well as by her great intellectual ability and highest musical attainments. And it is the loss of these at a time when all these powers are in their vigour, which deepens the regret at hearing that this is the last occasion when all these attributes and acquirements are to confer upon those who admire such powers, such pleasure as Mad. Novello produces. To listen to her rich and liquid tone, so pure and bright, is of itself intense pleasure. It is, however, decided as that Clara Novello is soon to be no more heard by the public. Those who look at this determination as more than a mere passing thought, will see that the same admirable good sense and appreciation of her fame as one of the finest of English vocalists that has ever adorned the wonderful art of whose beauties she undertook to be a demonstrator, has guided Mad. Novello in the decision to retire. When she has retired she will leave behind her recollections of her cultivated powers that in no way indicate, that

> "The brightest and the dearest,
> All that's bright must fade."

But that she retires with her laurels as unfaded, and her intellectual and vocal powers as versatile and as unrivalled as she herself could desire them to be in the memory of the living, and in the universal records of her time. This Festival may be her last in Norwich, we hope it will be "her blithest," and that Countess Guilichi will long adorn her name and her happy home with those who are to her dearest and best beloved.—Norfolk News.

MOLIQUE'S "ABRAHAM."

(To the Editor.)

As the description of the book of Herr Molique's Abraham, which was published at Norwich shortly before the Musical Festival, has been imputed to me by one of the local newspapers; as it has been a good deal quoted; and as one particular passage in it has been dissented from both by yourself and by The Times, I trust you will allow me space for a short explanation, which I think you will find to be needed under the circumstances of the case.

Some time since I was requested by one of the Honorary Secretaries of the Festival Committee to write an analysis of the oratorio of Abraham, after the manner of one which I had done many years ago of the music of Haydn's Creation. This I at once declined, thinking that it would be a piece of presumption on my part, and of unfairness both to the composer and to the public, to criticise music which had never been publicly performed. Being much pressed, however, I consented to do what I could to call attention to the work. It then occurred to me that this would best be done by giving an analysis of the story, as found in the book of words. I accordingly accomplished this task as well as I was able, pointing out what I conceived to be the merits and defects of the book, and stating the evidence upon which my opinions had been founded. Being doubtful whether my paper would suit the object in view, I stated, upon sending it in, that I should not be in the least hurt by its rejection, but that if it were accepted, it must be printed verbatim et literatim. This condition was consented to, and I dismissed the matter from my mind.

Some time after, I was told that objections had been made to several of my remarks upon Abraham, but that if I would consent to the excision of about a line, to which my attention was called, the rest of the paper should stand as I had written it. Though I would rather have had it returned than tinkered with, I acceded to this alteration. Judge, then, of my surprise at finding, when the paper came out, that not only had two or three interpolations been made, but that sixty MS. lines of criticism had been altogether expunged! This quite altered the character of the thing, and rendered it in my eyes worthless. One of the interpolations represents me as believing that the composer of Abraham was also the compiler of the book. Now, I had not the most distant idea that such was the case; if I had, I should have alluded to it in a very different way. I think that the knowledge of our translation of the Bible, shown by the compiler of the book, is something wonderful for a foreigner, and I should certainly have said so. Much as I felt vexed at the treatment which my paper had received, I resolved to submit to it in silence. But when I found, first The Times, and then THE MUSICAL WORLD, mistaking the drift of one passage, clearly for want of the light which would have been thrown upon it by others, which had been suppressed without my knowledge or consent, I thought it time to say a word of expostulation. However, as no man is a judge of what is fitting in his own case, if you think what I have here said to be uncalled for, you are at liberty to suppress it, and I shall trouble you no further on the subject. I only ask you, as an indifferent person, to put yourself for a moment in my place, and to do as you may think you would wish to be done by.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

THOS. D. EATON.

Norwich, 1st October, 1860.

MOLIQUE'S "ABRAHAM."

From "The Morning Post."

THE great event of the festival has been of course the production of Herr Molique's oratorio of Abraham, and as our notices of that important work have been necessarily brief, we will now offer some further remarks upon it.

The opening chorus, "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord," with its short but grand introduction, reveals to us at once the powers of Herr Molique as a musician of the first class. The tenors give out in unison a theme which is immediately after taken up by the full chorus, the words being "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord," the theme originally assigned to the tenors being now partially imitated by the sopranos in the third above. In the construction of music of this description the choice of a motivo is of the first importance. The composer has to aim at simplicity; and although rhythmical accent must be sufficiently marked, closes are to be avoided as much as possible. Thus the connoisseur will observe with pleasure how careful Herr Molique has been in the construction of the subject — short as it is — which opens this chorus, and how surely he calculated upon the profitable use that might subsequently be made of it. There is no modulation, but the termination of the theme on the third of the key keeps the ear sufficiently expectant of something to follow. Apparently trifling things like this are of the first importance in the construction of a long continuous piece of music. After a soft and tranquil second part, which reposes chiefly on the dominant harmony, the first motivo reappears, and is conducted through various modulations and forms of free imitation with masterly skill up to the commencement of a spirited quick movement on the words, "For he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water. His leaf shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." For this song of rejoicing Herr Molique has written a strict fugue in four parts, with brilliant and beautiful accompaniments in free, florid counterpoint. The subject given out by the basses, and then repeated in the most orthodox fashion in respective succession by tenors, altos, and sopranos, is bold, striking, and simple enough for even unpractised ears to follow and recognise it through all the many convolutions to which it is subjected. The entrance of the answer (a somewhat critical point) is, we need scarcely say, managed in the best possible way. Nobody, we would presume, would expect to find a musician like Herr Molique upon the fatal "bridge," the "pons asinorum," where destitute contrapuntists are apt to seek refuge from the difficulties of their position. No! here is no cobbling together of subject and answer, no "Schusterfleck" (as old Albrechtsberger called such things), but a genuine and natural exhibition of skill, such as we do not always find even in fugues belonging to very celebrated oratorios of the present day, whose famous authors have not entirely despised the "bridge." But the fugue goes on as well as it begins, and through a long and masterly development — charmingly relieved by episodes and accessory ideas — a close, vigorous stretto and an energetic coda, progresses grandly to the final chord.

Immediately after this fine Hymn of Praise, the "action" of the oratorio commences with a tenor solo. The recitant (tenor voice) tells us with appropriate dignity how Abraham has been commanded by the Almighty to depart into the land of Canaan. Abraham now gives vent to his feelings of gratitude and adoration in a smoothly-flowing, fervent, and dignified air in G major, common time. We have spoken already on a former occasion of the great beauty of this song: — "Lead me, O Lord, lead me in thy righteousness," and described it as one of the very best solo pieces in the oratorio. How charmingly simple and melodious is the first strain; how graceful and interesting the florid accompaniment to the second strain beginning, "I will fear no evil;" how admirable for contrast to the sustained beauties of the first and second strains is the third gang-artige part, where the voice divides melodic phrases with the accompaniments; and how fresh and charming (though the thing is quite simple) is the return to the first subject through the chords of the seventh on B natural, E minor, the seventh on A natural, and the seventh on D natural to the common chord of G. There is certainly nothing at all new in this progression. The manner in which it is employed makes all the effect. The instrumentation, too, for flute, two clarionets, one bassoon, two violas, string basses, and solo violoncello, is throughout original as it is masterly and beautiful. The recitant now describes how "Abraham took Sarah his wife, and Lot his brother, and all their substance, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran, and departed." This leads to a beautiful quartet in B flat for the principal voices, "Go in peace, before the Lord is thy way," written in the composer's finest and best manner. The recitant continues, "And into the land of Canaan they came, and the Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land; and Abraham builded an altar to the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord." Now Abraham sings a song of thanksgiving in E flat — "Lord, my God, thou hast begun to show thy servant thy mercy," with which the prayers and adoration of his people are associated chiefly as responses to the solo voice, in a highly solemn and impressive manner. This is appropriately broad and grand in style from the first note to the last. It is now eloquently told by the reciting tenor-voice how strife arose between the herdmen of Abraham and those of Lot; and an air, in F, for Abraham, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee," follows, than which nothing could be more appealing or more completely to the purpose. Tender and affectionate, yet happy and confiding in character, it expresses most felicitously all the meaning of the words and situation. Abraham never seems to doubt his brother's love; the often-repeated question, "Are we not brethren?" touches the heart, but there is a sweet and loving undercurrent of feeling expressed by the graceful and bright accompaniments, which appear to reflect the rays of life's morning, when Abraham and his brother were too young for ambition's serious strife, and convinces us that there can be but one answer — a very affectionate one — to the question. The conception of this song is poetical as its execution is masterly and beautiful. The following recitative for the tenor voice tells us how the brothers separated. Then comes an air in A minor, also for the tenor voice. The words beginning "Who walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness," convey only moral reflections, which, however, are perfectly à propos to the situation. The distinct and richly-varied part-writing, rhythmical structure, and melodic continuity, remind us a little of Sebastian Bach; but the air is, nevertheless, taken as a whole, one of the most original pieces in the oratorio. We are now told, by "an angel," that the word of God came to Abraham in a vision, saying, "Fear not! I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." Abraham says, "Lord God, what wilt Thou give me, seeing I go childless?" "The angel" replies, in the name of the Lord, that Sarah shall bear a son, and that the seed of Abraham shall be numberless as the stars. Here follows a flowing and eminently graceful hymn of adoration in E, for full chorus, "O how great is Thy goodness which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee." The plain and largely-phrased subject first assigned to the tenors is next repeated by the sopranos an octave higher. Then a second part, begun by the basses, is continued in imitation by the altos. A tutti in four parts, on the same subject, succeeds. A new theme, though resembling the first in rhythm, is now heard from the tenors on the words, "Thou hast given them their heart's desire." This is imitated throughout in the second above by the altos. Then fragments of the first subject are introduced in close imitation, and the chorus finishes with the leading theme in full harmony, with a few bars as coda. The constantly undulating accompaniment to this chorus is very beautiful, and serves, by its florid character, to set off the plain, stately notes of the vocal subjects to the best possible advantage.

A brief and agitated instrumental allegro in C now most expressively announces the arrival of the messenger, who bears the startling news that Lot has been taken prisoner. Abraham instantly determined to rescue his brother, and in a heroic, spirit-stirring recitative calls upon his people to "beat their ploughshares into swords," their "pruning-hooks into spears," and follow him to battle. A grand war song sung in D, with chorus for male voices, "Arise, arise, and let us go by night," sung by Abraham and his adherents, succeeds this exhortation. Then the women offer up their prayers for Abraham's success in a very beautiful chorus in A, "Hear our prayer, O God of our salvation," consisting of a richly harmonical andante, quite ethereal in its purity and crystal clearness, a middle movement più mosso, on the words "Lord tread down thine enemies," in which the fertile resources of imitative counterpoint are most advantageously employed; a return to the first object with a different (a figurative) accompaniment and an appropriate coda. We are now told how Abraham armed his trained servants, and pursued the enemy into Dan, and brought back again his brother and his brother's people. Here occurs the noble march in E flat (a masterpiece in its way) of which we spoke in our first notice; and after a brief recitative, in which Abraham fervently expresses his gratitude for the victory which God has permitted him to gain, the first part of the oratorio concludes most worthily with a superb chorus in F, "Praise ye the Lord, and give thanks to him," one of the largest and most scientific pieces in the score. The massively harmonised melody (reminding us a little of Mendelssohn's famous "Thanks be to God; He loveth the thirsty land") that commences the chorus is presently subjected to the process of partial imitation, with constant modulations in all the voices. Then comes a masterly fugue on the words, "His right hand and his holy right arm has gotten him the victory," the vigorous subject of which, started by the tenors, is successively taken up by the altos, sopranos, and basses; and after a series of close imitations on the pedal bass of the dominant of the key, a return to the first subject again in massive harmony, a magnificent peroration displaying summarily the essential features of the entire piece, brings this majestic and exciting chorus (the orchestral accompaniments to which, written throughout in free, florid counterpoint, are quite equal to the rest of the work) to a splendid termination.

The second part opens with a song of thanksgiving and rejoicing in B flat, "I will extol thee, my God, O King!" It consists of an allegretto, in common time, and an allegro moderato in three-four measure, which recals slightly to our mind the "Be not afraid" of Mendelssohn. In a recitative for a tenor voice the promises of God to Abraham that Sarah shall become a "mother of nations" is related. A masterly and beautiful trio for alto, tenor, and bass, in E flat, "Let all those rejoice who put their trust in the Lord" (already described in our first notice), follows. An accompanied recitative for the bass voice now reveals the Almighty's intention to destroy the "cities of the plain" for their iniquity; and his wrath is very grandly and terribly expressed in a chorus in C minor, "I will rise up against them;" the motivo of which is, however, nearly identical with that of a chorus in Mendelssohn's Elijah. After this, Abraham, in accompanied recitative, implores the Lord not to destroy the righteous with the wicked, but to spare the city, "if, peradventure, there be fifty righteous within it." This supplication, pleading at last for mercy even for the sake of ten righteous that might be within the city, and the replies of the angel (assigned to a soprano voice), are so well managed as to prove that Herr Molique possesses genuine dramatic feeling and genius for the picturesque in music, beside the other high qualities for which he has so long been particularly celebrated. In a recitative for the alto voice it is now declared that "The Lord looked down from heaven to see if there were any that did understand and seek God," and Herr Molique has sought to express the Divine grief that "There was not one that did good" in a Mendelssohnian but very beautiful and deeply-pathetic song for a contralto voice, "They kept not the law," in F minor. The magnificent chorus in B minor, "And the Lord stretched forth His hand against them," that comes next, was like many other pieces described in our first notice of "Abraham." It is worthy of the greatest masters.

A recitative for the tenor voice next relates that "Sarah bare Abraham a son," and that "Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, which she had born unto Abraham, mocking;" but Sarah's demand for the expulsion of Hagar is expressed in a duet in A minor, "Cast out this bondwoman," a piece of which we have already spoken in terms of enthusiastic admiration. Here is another proof that Herr Molique can be a dramatic as well as what Richard Wagner would call an "absolute" musician. "An angel" then declares in recitative the wish of the Lord with respect to Hagar, and the unhappy mother of Ishmael is accordingly cast forth with her child into the wilderness. Here follows a simple beautiful chorus, "Commit thy way unto the Lord," in which nothing but common chords are employed; but this we noticed sufficiently on a previous occasion. A tenor recitative, preceded by a short instrumental movement that admirably illustrates the sufferings of Hagar in the scorching desert, describes how "the water was spent in the bottle," and "Hagar cast the child under one of the shrubs," intending to abandon him. This is followed by a very pathetic and touching air for Hagar in F sharp minor, "Hear my prayer," the melody of which, however, again betrays the Mendelssohnian influence, to which Herr Molique appears at times to submit con amore.

The next recitative relates the mercy of the Almighty to Hagar, and His promises to the forsaken bondwoman respecting her son; and here follows immediately a colossal chorus in D, "Great is the Lord," consisting of an andante maestoso, in full choral harmony, with florid accompaniments—a particularly fine fugue, with a superb peroration, in which all the resources of fugal counterpoint, imitation, and modern orchestration are employed with the happiest possible effect. To this also we have already called special attention. In a recitative the angel messenger now delivers to Abraham the Divine command to offer his son Isaac as a burnt-offering in the land of Moriah. The grief and desolation of Abraham are here expressed in an air consisting of an andante on the words "My delight is turned into sorrow," un allegro con fuoco, "The Lord has turned his hand against me," and a repetition (after a few connecting bars of recitative on the words, "The joy of my heart is ceased") of the first, or rather a portion of the first, movement. This air includes many beauties of a high order, but the key of F minor being used throughout gives a certain monotony to the effect. The following aria in A flat for the tenor voice, "Pour out thy heart before the Lord," is a lovely composition, perfectly Mendelssohnian in phraseology. Of this, too, we spoke in our first notice. In a tenor recitative we now hear that Abraham has made due preparation for the sacrifice of Isaac; and after a short recitative in dialogue between the father and son, Abraham sings a very touching supplicatory song in G minor, "Lord have mercy upon me." The terrible moment is rapidly approaching, and a soprano air for Isaac in A minor, "Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes," followed by a recitative, in which Isaac vainly entreats his father to spare him, sustain the interest, until at length the voice of the angel messenger proclaims the deliverance of both father and son from the awful ordeal to which they were exposed, and the scene terminates joyously with a duet in E for Isaac and Abraham, "It is of the Lord's great mercies that we are not consumed," an admirable piece, which we have already described. After a brief recitative, in which Abraham again expresses his gratitude to God, the oratorio ends with a grand chorus of thanksgiving in C, "Great and marvellous are Thy works, Lord Almighty," in which the composer's powers as a contrapuntist are once more exhibited with the happiest effect.

The latter portion of this very fine work is, regarded from a dramatic point of view, perhaps susceptible of improvement. A little more emotion, energy, and characterisation would, we think, be desirable in the great scenes between Abraham and his son, which move somewhat slowly and heavily along, despite the constant excellence of the music. However, that Abraham, as it stands, is the greatest oratorio written since the time of Mendelssohn, we believe no musician will deny; and we sincerely hope that the great success which has attended its production here may lead speedily to a worthy performance of it in the metropolis.

A WATER SERENADE.—At the moment when Mad. Jenny Lind was about to leave Upsala, where she had been staying some time, by the steam packet for Stockholm, a number of students in a small row-boat approached the side of the vessel and began singing a serenade in honour of the celebrated cantatrice. Just as the steamer was about to depart the too enthusiastic admirers of the singer, in their eagerness to catch a last glimpse of her, all rushed to one end of the boat, which instantly capsized and soused the whole party in the water. This involuntary bath, however, did not in the least cool the ardour of the young enthusiasts, who held on by the thwarts of the boat and continued their serenade as if nothing had occurred. One of the students, who could not find room for his grasp, swam alongside the boat and still made use of his vocal powers. The captain at last prevailed upon the students to make their way to the quay, where having arrived, and dripping like water-rats, they raised a terrific "Hurrah" nine times nine for "Jenny Lind," and separated.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—Season 1860-61.—The admirable situation of this great operatic establishment, its unparalleled acoustic properties, unequalled musical capabilities, and unrivalled lyrical resources, together with the flattering success which attended his late Italian Season, has determined the Lessee to venture on the experiment of producing at Her Majesty's Theatre a series of English Operas, during a certain portion of each year. The Season will commence on Monday, the 8th of October next. As will be seen by the accompanying list, the first vocal and instrumental talent has been secured, and will further be secured, no matter at what expense. The lessee and manager of this vast establishment, not being a vocalist himself, can have no professional jealousies—his only aim, in duty to his patrons and subscribers, will be to put the "right man in the right place." The services of Mr. Sims Reeves are already secured, and negotiations are pending in addition to the following engagements:—Sopranos—Miss Parepa, her first appearance at this theatre; Miss Jenny Bauer, from the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, her first appearance at this theatre; Miss Allesandri, from the principal theatres in Spain and Italy, her first appearance in this country; and Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, her first appearance on the stage; contraltos—Miss Laura Baxter and Miss Fanny Huddart; tenors—Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Parkinson, Mr. George Perren, Mr. Terrott, and Mr. Swift (from La Pergola, Florence, &c.), his first appearance at this theatre; baritones—Mr. Rosenthal and Mr. Santley, his first appearance at this theatre; buffo—Mr. George Honey, his first appearance at this theatre; basses—Mr. J. G. Patey, Mr. Bartleman, and Mr. Hermanns. Conductor—Mr. Charles Hallé; Leader—Mr. H. Blagrove. A new and original opera, composed expressly for this theatre, will be produced on the opening night, Monday, October 8th, entitled ROBIN HOOD, Music by G. A. Macfarren, Libretto by John Oxenford, Esq.; with new scenery under the superintendence of Beverley; in which Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. George Perren, Mr. George Honey, Mr. J. G. Patey, Mr. Santley, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, &c., will make their appearances; and shortly afterwards will be presented another new and original grand romantic opera, also composed expressly for this theatre, entitled the AMBER WITCH, from the pen of that popular composer, W. V. Wallace; together with other new operas of importance by eminent native composers. The whole of the splendid and unique appointments of Her Majesty's Theatre, both before and behind the curtain, will be made available in giving effect and comfort to the audience departments. An elegant new dress balcony has been erected, after the most approved Parisian style, combining both convenience and comfort. The scenic department under the superintendence of Mr. William Beverley and assistants; prompter, Mr. Grua; suggeritore, Signor Fontana; costumiers, Miss Dickinson and M. Laureys (de Paris); the machinery, &c., by Mr. Tucker; the properties by Mr. Needham; ballet master, Mons. Massot; acting manager, Mr. Mapleson; stage manager, Mr. Robert Roxby. Particular care and attention has been bestowed on the formation of the Orchestra and Chorus, which will be considerably augmented, the whole having been carefully selected, under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Charles Hallé. This Theatre having hitherto been devoted to the production and performance of Italian Lyric Drama, the lessee (at the suggestion of numerous subscribers and habitues) has been induced to give a few representations of Italian Operas, which will positively be limited to 20 nights, commencing on Wednesday, the 10th of October, to be continued three nights weekly, until the 16th of December, alternately with the English Operas. The lessee has, therefore, at an enormous outlay, secured the eminent services of those renowned artistes Mlle. Titiens and Sig. Giuglini, together with other principal artistes of celebrity, whose names will be found in the following detailed list of Italian engagements:—Soprani, Mlle. Titiens, Mlle. Vaneri, and Mad. Lemaire; baritoni, Sig. Valsovani and Sig. Gassier; buffo, Sig. Ciampi; bassi, Sig. Vialetti and Sig. Castelli; tenori, Sig. Soldi, Sig. Mercuriali, and Sig. Giuglini. Conductor, Sig. Arditi. For the ballet divertissement, Mlle. Morlacchi, &c. The repertoire will be selected from the following favourite operas:—Il Trovatore, Verdi; La Sonnambula, Bellini; Ernani, Verdi; Lucrezia Borgia, Donizetti; Don Pasquale, Donizetti; Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Rossini; Gli Ugonotti, Meyerbeer; Lucia di Lammermoor, Donizetti; La Traviata, Verdi; I Puritani, Bellini; Don Giovanni, Mozart; Norma, Bellini; Rigoletto, Verdi; Marta, Flotow; I Vespri Siciliani, Verdi; Oberon, Weber; &c. The above English and Italian arrangements can only be realised at an enormous outlay; Mr. E. T. Smith looks with perfect confidence for adequate remuneration to the support of the nobility, gentry, subscribers, and the public, whose kind and unvarying patronage has enabled him to hold the reins of management through so many seasons at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, and especially through his late campaign at Her Majesty's Theatre, profitably and triumphantly. Notwithstanding the vast additional expense necessarily incurred in the engagement of such celebrated singers, besides a double company of artistes for both languages, the prices of admission will be at the same reduced rates, both for the English as well as the Italian performances. The subscription list for the first 60 nights, or 30 English and 30 Italian, at the option of the subscriber, is now ready, and may be seen at the box-office, under the portico of the theatre, which is open daily, from 10 to 6, under the direction of Mr. Nugent, and where boxes, stalls, and places may be secured for any period in any part of the house. The doors will open at half-past 7, and the performances commence at 8 o'clock, on each evening throughout the season. All applications respecting the artistes for public and private concerts in town or country, to be addressed to Mr. Mapleson, the musical agent, at the theatre, or 12 Haymarket. Prices of admission:—Pit stalls, 7s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; first circle, 4s.; second circle, 3s.; upper box circle seats, 2s.; pit, 2s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.; gallery side stalls, 1s. 6d.; gallery stalls, 3s.; private boxes—upper box, half circle, to hold four persons, 10s.; private box, third tier, to hold four persons, £1. 1s.; private box, second tier, to hold four persons, £1. 11s. 6d.; private boxes, first, second, and grand tiers, two guineas, three guineas, and four guineas.

Births.

At Manchester Street, Manchester Square, on the 18th September, Mrs. F. B. JEWSON, of a daughter.

On the 30th September, the wife of HERR WILHELM GANZ, of a daughter.

Notice.

Our Reviews of New Music will be resumed next week.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1860.

THERE are many apostles of Falsehood, but Truth is in want of disciples. The lies begotten by the apostles of Falsehood upon the bodies of Sophistry and Corruption are so numerous that the heavens are darkened by them. But Truth shines behind, like the sun, and it is for her worshippers to make war against the locust host of lies, and, dispersing them, let the world behold the full glory of the light they have for a while obscured. We, as the humblest of Truth's disciples, shall draw sword in the cause, and fight her battles against her enemies. What we shall say will offend many and hurt some; but Truth is vital to the health of art, and the interests of private individuals are as dust in the balance.

Lord Bacon, the wisest of philosophers, in his golden book, exclaims against the idola that blind the eyes of men's judgments and prevent their beholding Truth naked. The idola are the prejudices which are born of divers parents. It is for those who would behold the face of Truth, and make it glorious to mankind, to wage war against them and destroy them utterly. They are stubborn enemies of progress; the poisonous sophists that distort and vilify. Until they are swept away the mind cannot comprehend a single proposition. Let it be then our task to uproot them from the soil they render sterile; let it be for us to cast them into the fire, until they be consumed and infect the air no more. Like good husbandmen, we must weed the pastures or they will not bear crops.

The art of music is but a type of other arts. Its growth is fostered or stinted by favourable or adverse circumstances. But it is the youngest of the arts. There is yet time yet to save it from corruption. From examples in the history of other arts we may know what to do, and what to eschew. Let us then study them and profit.

First, the professor of music should be brought up in the eternal principles that apply to all art. Next, the taste of the laity should be educated. If an artist do well and yet is not appreciated, it is an injury to art. But, if when he does well and is encouraged, and when he does ill he is admonished, it is a glory for art. To promote this end, for the sake of art, should be the aim of all criticism; but to promote it requires certain learning and endowments that not many critics possess, and, indeed, at the present time, scarcely any. We shall not, by a process of logical ratiocination, enlabour to give the reason of this deficiency, but shall strive to make it appear as if it were an inevitable consequence of the facts that we adduce, and the observations we shall make upon them.

It will be said that we make over much of music, and magnify its importance. But this will be an error; for, though music, like history, be not a matter of magnificence and memory, like poetry, it is a matter of refinement and aspiration. Shelley has said that "Poets are the unacknowledged legislators of the world." Translate his meaning largely, and he is right; he speaks of all poets, no matter what their medium of expression. Poetry and music address themselves to the intellect through the medium of the ear; painting, sculpture and architecture through the medium of the eye. There is no art that addresses itself to the intellect through the organs of taste, or touch, or smell; therefore are the organs of hearing and seeing the greatest and most magnanimous of the senses; the ear and the eye may be likened to carriers that bear the mind its food and riches; and, according to the manner of the nourishment and clothing, is the health or sickness of the mind. The important office of these carriers cannot be over-estimated; on them depend refinement and wisdom, and according to their burden is a man a barbarian or a civilian in the universal meaning. Therefore Shelley's apothegm should be written in gold, and inscribed upon the Temple of Truth. "Poets are the unacknowledged legislators of the world." These are the words of an oracle.

Would the world be better, or worse, had Mozart, Handel, Beethoven, never lived? This question has been often asked, but never answered. We say the world would have been much worse for want of them. For the mind, when contemplating sublime images, is admonished of its immortality. That which is body can corrupt and perish, but that which is ideal cannot be effaced; its style is not of earth, but of heaven; not of the finite, but the eternal. In listening to the divine music of these mighty poets, we are walking with them in the country of the infinite. Their inspiration is from God, and is a proof that man is not as the cattle; for if man's mind can comprehend what is inspiration, it can embrace the enigma of imperishability. And surely that which makes us feel and know we are immortal is of the highest consequence. Of how great import is it, then, that art should be rid of all that clogs its wings, and prevents its flight upward; that it be not, as the soul in a weak body, or as the fingers on a defective instrument, unable to declare the hand that enforced it! The perfect accomplishments of art are the endeavours of the immortal spirit to fly up to the anima mundi of which it is a part. Spinoza, in forgetting art, left out what would have made his ethics perfect. He overlooked the link that binds the finite to the infinite; for, insomuch as mathematics is tangible and finite, it is inferior to art, which is intangible and infinite. Mathematics is the symbol for all that man can seemingly reduce to elements and know entirely, but art is the symbol of what he desires to know and cannot, being human. One is the earth we tread upon, the other the heaven we aspire to. In one we walk step by step, in the other we traverse boundless space in an instant. Reason has barriers, imagination none.

WE are glad to see that with our two English opera-houses we are to have several new English operas. The Pyne and Harrison management announces a work by Mr. Balfe, while at Her Majesty's Theatre Mr. Macfarren's Robin Hood is on the eve of production. At the latter establishment, too, Mr. Wallace's Amber Witch is wanted, and will be brought out, it is said, in a few weeks; and at both theatres the directors are evidently determined to perform as many operas by English composers as they can secure. The plan is such a good one, and so clearly conducive to the interests of the managers, that it may seem superfluous on our part to thank them for adopting it. But the same sort of thing may be said of liberal enterprises of all kinds, and, thanksgiving apart, we may at least be allowed to express our approval of the manner in which Miss Pyne and Mr. Harrison at Covent Garden, and Mr. E. T. Smith at Her Majesty's Theatre, view their positions as conductors of English opera-houses. The latter, as we have said, promises two new works by native composers for the approaching season, and we find that the former, during the two past seasons at Covent Garden, have produced four (Mr. Balfe's Satanella, Mr. Leslie's Romance, Mr. Mellon's Victorine, and Mr. Wallace's Lurline), besides the English version of Meyerbeer's Dinorah, which was performed infinitely better than any opera of equal difficulty and importance was ever performed on the English stage before.

But we took up the pen not in a humour to praise but to condemn. Let all who do well continue to do well; our business to-day is with those who are pursuing an evil path which may lead not only to their own destruction (a catastrophe for which we might be able to console ourselves), but to the destruction, or at least the abasement, of the art which they direct. We mean the art or artistic pursuit known as the Italian Opera, which is not in a fine position anywhere in Europe just now (being supported by one composer who every now and then breaks down), but which in England is gradually being degraded into a spectacle with musical accompaniments. A friend of ours in Paris, who was not ashamed to confess openly his impotency to enjoy dramatic music, used to go frequently to see the Prophète. He said he should go oftener if all the music were left out, except the march (which he acknowledged to be a stirring composition), but as there was no chance of any such omission being made, he continued to attend the Académie from time to time when the Prophète was played, and always came back in raptures about the decorations and processions, and especially about the coronation scene. We have no doubt many persons in London who frequent the Royal Italian Opera go there when one of its magnificent spectacular pieces is being played, for the same reasons that induced our anti-musical friend to visit the Grand Opera in Paris. We do not mean to go the length of saying that they would like Tamberlik's and Mad. Csillag's music left out, but that the scenery and general "setting up" is to them the major attraction. But, on the other hand, are there not, we ask, hundreds and thousands in London to whom the scenery is only so much pasteboard and canvas, who care little or nothing for troops of warriors and monks on the stage, except in so far as they strengthen the choral body, and who would rather sacrifice the whole of the spectacular paraphernalia of the Huguenots, than lose a single phrase of the duet between "Raoul" and "Valentine." even though "Raoul" were as incorrectly attired as "Valentine" invariably is, and though the whole scene between them took place in a barn. We are not admirers of shabby scenery, still less of anachronistic costumes, but we should listen with delight to the music of such operas as the Cenerentola, the Count Ory, and the Elisir d'Amore, however barely they might be put upon the stage, and the reason why we are not enabled to hear them oftener is, that they present no opportunity for the introduction of spectacle, and that the managers of our principal Italian theatres reserve their energies and their money for spectacular pieces alone. Of course the money question has a great deal to do with the matter; for, with the enormous sums spent at the Royal Italian Opera on the getting up of any new work taken in hand, it is utterly impossible to bring out more than about one a year. The tailors', carpenters', and painters' bills for the Prophète (for instance) must have been sufficiently large to make Mr. Gye feel somenatural hesitation about producing the Sicilian Vespers. The production of a grand opera in the style of the Académie-Impériale (of which the Royal Italian Opera is in many respects a copy) may be attended with enormous success, but two such triumphs in one season would be the theatre's ruin. If our managers could afford it, they might spend a million on the mise en scène of every opera they represented, and we would not complain. Splendid decorations do not injure an opera very much; they distract the attention from the music for a little while, but are soon forgotten. The evil becomes serious, however, when so much money is lavished on the production of one immense spectacular opera that no other new opera can be given the same season. Moreover, the director, to get back the capital he has invested in it, must continue running his expensive show-piece for such a number of nights that it wearies mere lovers of music. Thus, who was not tired last season of Martha, which was tiresome enough when it was brought out at the Royal Italian Opera three years ago, and which in "supers" and stage finery, must have cost more than would have been needed for the production of three Italian operas, full of beautiful music. There is some trouble, we are aware, in finding new Italian operas just now; but one would like to hear the latest composed by Verdi, if only from curiosity; and it is a curiosity, which, under a reasonable system of management, might easily be gratified. Besides, an old opera by Rossini is always better than a new one by Flotow.

We owe this love for spectacular pieces to the absurd mania for imitating the French, with which our stage has been afflicted, more or less, ever since Charles the Second's reign. In Handel's time we could not establish an Italian opera without giving it the stupid title of "Academy," merely because the French (whose opera just then was in a contemptible condition) had blunderingly given that name to their national lyrical theatre, of which the patent, as we explained in a previous article, was originally granted for an académie,* in the sense of accademia or concert. At present everything that is good enough for the Parisians (whose Opera has always been one third a dancing booth and one third a panorama) is thought good enough for us; and the effect of reproducing the costly mise en scène of their favourite works as fast (which is not very fast) as they happen to be brought out, is to render it impossible for our operatic managers to give as many "novelties" as amateurs of music have a right to expect.

We hope the directors of our English operas will not fall into the mistake (which it will be easy and pleasant to avoid), of spending enormous sums of money upon the decoration of their pieces, otherwise there will soon be an end to two new operas a season, or five in two seasons, which is the number given by the Pyne and Harrison management at Covent Garden. Compare this with the number of new works produced at the Royal Italian Opera which is certainly one of the very first lyrical theatres in Europe, but which appears to us to sacrifice a great deal too much to spectacle. Its last new Italian opera, the Traviata, was brought out in 1857, and since the opening of the new theatre in 1858, we have had Martha, Dinorah, and Orfeo. That is to say, at a great Italian theatre, one opera by an Italian composer, two by Germans, and one by a Germanised Russian, in four years. However, we welcome the production of the thoroughly beautiful and comparatively inexpensive Orfeo as a good sign. When the present fails us we must go back to the past; and if Mr. Gye wishes to gain our unqualified approbation he will give us more Orfeos and fewer Marthas.

* The Americans of the present day, as ingenious as the English of 1720, call their principal Opera House at New York the Academy of Music.

ELSEWHERE will be found "a rhapsody" (appropriately styled) on the Ninth Symphony (the Choral) of Beethoven. The pen of the writer, Mr. "Aries le Fise Vascher," must have been dipped in sunbeams. We envy him his faculty of composition, which appertains to the "streamy-beamy" style; but we dispute his facts. It is plain from the assertions of Schindler, which have a more solid basis than mere conjecture, as well as from the internal evidence of the work itself, that the introduction of Schiller's Ode to Joy into the Ninth (whereby it became the Choral) Symphony was an afterthought of the composer. Schiller's fine poem is governed by one idea and purpose. The spirit of happiness, joy, universal brotherhood, and love pervades every line of it. It includes no sombre thoughts whatever. The poet never has occasion to say, in allusion to his own work, "But away with these tones; let us have something more joyful." Beethoven merely inserted the words because he was conscious that the predominant qualities of his first three movements were not those of an "Ode to joy."

There is much more real joy and calm happiness in his Eighth Symphony (F major), in the Pastorale, and in a portion of the Seventh (A major), than in the exclusively instrumental movements of the Ninth. The first parts of this, like many other compositions of the same hand, are simply an eloquent expression of the deep and varied emotions by which the writer's soul was agitated. They are noble, magnificent pieces of music; so wonderful, indeed, and gigantic in their proportions—so vast in their design—as to create the necessity for something unusually grand and colossal as a worthy climax to the whole. It was then, probably, when Beethoven, oppressed with the great difficulty of the task he had set himself, was reflecting upon the best means of accomplishing it, that he conceived the happy idea of introducing Schiller's ode, which, with vocal solos and choruses, could scarcely fail to give a novel and extraordinary grand character to the movement, such, in fact, as would render it thoroughly fit to crown the magnificent work. This is our conjecture; but we offer it with submission, and are ready to give it up when we see good cause. We can discover in this symphony no general design which points to Schiller's Ode to Joy. There is no one idea in a constant and gradual state of development throughout; but the workings of the human heart, in alternate joy and sorrow, in all its mysterious forebodings, bright imaginings, and dark despondencies, appeal irresistibly in every bar to our warmest sympathies.

The New Philharmonic Society, like Moses and Warren, formerly kept a poet—an æsthetical and critical poet, whose business it was to explain, in touching language, the occult beauties of great works, and to instruct the audience when and why they should applaud. His inspired lucubrations appeared in a little book, with a pretty and perfectly appropriate green cover. This production was industriously circulated amongst the thousands who thronged Exeter Hall to hear the new society's admirable concerts, and must, perforce, have exercised considerable influence over the minds of all who could not, or would not, think for themselves; and these, as a matter of course, constituted the majority. That the little green book's opinions were not lightly estimated, was sufficiently proved by the fact that its commentary upon the "Ninth Symphony" was reprinted verbatim, as an original article, in the columns of one of our leading morning contemporaries. There was in this odd lucubration so much of the same kind of "steamy-beamy" element which distinguishes the "rhapsody" of Mr. "Aries le Fise Vascher," that we are forced into a sudden remembrance of what we should otherwise inevitably have forgotten. Mr. Vascher's "Rhapsody" is indeed a wonderful ebullition of mysterious poetry, and replete with a peculiar kind of truth "utterly at variance" with received ideas, and which, while common-place people do not profess to understand, it is still nevertheless permitted to admire.

"The sublime edict of Pythagoras" looks remarkably well in print, and has an overwhelming sound; and we hope that we can appreciate that kind of joy which comes "like an appalling voice, speaking in thunder from Heaven," even though it may frighten us out of our senses. We also know the value of such grim mirth as finds vent in violent ebullitions and wild manifestations, in minor modes and broken rhythm. We have even felt inclined to associate this with the proceedings of operatic devils (who always, for some unaccountable reason, sing and dance with horrid glee whenever they get upon the stage), or the ravings of despair, rather than with an ode to true joy, breathing pure happiness and universal love. But the eloquence of our great "Aestheticker" coupled with "the sublime edict of Pythagoras," is too much for us, and, though unable (perhaps disinclined) to be corroborative, we will venture no uncourtly antagonistic opinion. The reasoning of Mr. "Aries le Fise Vascher" is quite equal to his imagination; nay, the very construction of his sentences carries with it a certain sort of conviction, whilst a thick stream of inscrutable poetry gushes from each well-selected word.

Is not the logic truly marvellous which shows us that Beethoven considered extreme joy a fitting theme for the loftiest poetical treatment, because it enabled him to employ the minor mode, protracted cadences, &c.? Are not the passages, also, very fine wherein the writer tells us that, whatever may be the merits of Schiller's poem, its triumph consists in its having originated a great musical work—and speaks of the measure of joy being so unlimited, and "of our being in love with the whole world," and inclined to caress every living and inanimate thing (tigers, serpents, polecats, and putrefactions included), "whilst all objects seem to be robed with a splendour born of delight, and emanating like rays from ourselves?" Ordinary folk might imagine that if Schiller's poem contained every possible beauty, its author's greatest triumph would be found in his own work, rather than in Beethoven's music, they might also fail to discover with nicety the various degrees or limits of the unlimited; they might object to hug polecats, caress cobras, or kiss hyenas, whatever their state of happiness, or however bright "the rays emanating from themselves to robe objects with splendour." But, as we said before, this commentary is to be admired rather than understood by ungifted minds; and we must not set a thing down as bad, simply because it baffles our reason. We should be humble, and reflect that the fault may be in our own obtusity, made still more dense and rigid by stiff-neckedness.

Petipace of Winchelsea.

MR. BENEDICT'S Undine, one of the interesting novelties at the recent Norwich Festival, belongs to a style of art totally different from that which is exemplified in Herr Molique's Abraham, but is no less admirable in its way. Here we have the genial spirit and picturesque orchestral colouring, the light fancy and dramatic purpose which distinguish the best works of the so-called romantic school of which Weber was the head, if not the founder. La Motte Fouqué's story of Undine, which is the subject of Hoffmann's opera (so highly praised by Weber and Dr. Marx) has been slightly altered by Mr. John Oxenford, the author of Mr. Benedict's libretto; for Bertalda is here supposed to be a lady of rank, and not, as in La Motte Fouqué's tale, the daughter of a fisherman. This change has been made to gain a more complete contrast between the two female characters. Mr. Oxenford's version of the legend is, then, as follows:—Undine, a water spirit, has left her home and her companions on account of her love for Hildebrand, lord of a castle on the banks of the Danube. Kühleborn, the principal kinsman of Undine, disapproves of this attachment, suspecting that the mortal lover will prove unfaithful. Nor are his suspicions ill founded, for Hildebrand no sooner returns to his castle than, regardless of Undine, he espouses a lady named Bertalda. To avenge the wrong thus done to his race, Kühleborn summons all the spirits of the waters, who destroy the castle and its owner, while the gentle Undine bewails the fate of her unfaithful lover.

After a picturesque and spirited overture in F minor and major, in which Mr. Benedict's genius as an orchestral writer is most strikingly exemplified, the "lyrical legend" (for so the authors term it) opens with a very ethereal and poetically-conceived chorus of water spirits in D minor for female voices only, the words of which, by Mr. John Oxenford (whose libretto is indeed throughout a master-piece), we cannot refrain from quoting:—

"Female Spirits.

"Undine, Undine,
Sad without thee have we been.
Why hast thou left us, sister fair,
To dwell beneath a chilly sky?
We miss the glance of thy light blue eye,
We miss the flash of thy golden hair;
The foamy waves as they roll along,
Mingle a sigh with their ceaseless song,
They call thee back, Undine."

This is followed by a spirited and vigorous bass solo in G minor for Kühleborn—"Love, a tyrant on the earth"—appropriately deep in colour and wild in character, bearing, moreover, the genuine stamp of the German romantic school from first to last. Mr. Benedict is particularly happy in music of that description. After a repetition of the opening chorus comes a full chorus in the key of D major, charmingly fresh, and joyous in expression:—

"Storms may lash the waves to foam,
Scatt'ring death and terror round,
But we scarcely hear the sound
In our tranquil home," sing the water-spirits, male and female, to most appropriate music. We have described the above-named pieces separately; but it must be understood that they are all connected, and form together one symmetrical whole. This is succeeded by a recitative for Hildebrand and Undine, leading to a sparkling, sportive, and charmingly tuneful song and chorus in E flat (with harp, obbligato), in which Undine first reveals to her lover that she is a spirit, in the following lines :—

"UNDINE.

"Mark the waves that rippling play
Crown'd with silver light,
On each crest of glittering spray
Rides a joyous sprite.
Sportive Nixies yonder pass,
Tripping o'er the liquid glass.
Can'st thou not their form descry ?
Know that such a sprite am I;
Wilt thou, dearest, from me fly ?"

An exceedingly graceful and purely-voiced trio in A flat, in which the lovers express their mutual passion, and Kühleborn betrays his suspicions of Hildebrand's constancy, leads to a highly dramatic scena for the tenor voice. The struggles between affection for the mysterious water-spirit, and the ambition of a warrior that can only be gratified by abandoning Undine, struggles which are now racking the bosom of Hildebrand, form the subject matter of the scena. An opening recitative, (accompanied) leads to a sweetly flowing cantabile in B flat, in which Hildebrand dwells fondly upon the happiness he might have enjoyed with Undine. This state of feeling is, however, presently interrupted by the sound of a distant trumpet, heralding the approach of the noble Lady Bertalda, to whom Hildebrand is betrothed. His martial ambition now gains the ascendancy, and the scena terminates with a dashing and vigorous movement, perfectly expressive of the words and situation. It is followed by a melodious and graceful wedding march in G, which will doubtless become highly popular in its arranged form for the pianoforte.

The march is succeeded by a joyous and brilliant wedding chorus in E flat. Then come in immediate succession a highly effective aria in two movements for Bertalda, in the somewhat unusual key of B major, expressive of the lady's happiness and exultation, and a pretty little love duet in G major, for Bertalda and Hildebrand. Undine now comes to warn the happy pair, and her willingness to renounce Hildebrand if he will renounce Bertalda. Undine is agitated by the strife between love and pride within her breast, the haughty Bertalda affects to treat the strange intruder with scorn, Hildebrand is struggling between love and duty, while Kühleborn vows vengeance for the insult offered to his race. All these conflicting emotions are most truthfully and excitingly expressed in a powerfully written and thoroughly dramatic quartet in G minor; but even this is surpassed by the deeply poetical and picturesque finale in which Kühleborn invokes the aid of the water-spirits to destroy the faithless Hildebrand, his bride, his kinsmen, and the voice of Undine is heard faintly in the distance, after the destruction of Hildebrand's castle, mourning for her mortal lover.

The following are the admirable words of this scena; and when we state that Mr. Benedict has done ample justice to them, we believe that higher praise could scarcely be given :—

"KUHL.

"Attend ye kindred spirits to my call,
Chieftains of the countless waters,
A mortal wrongs the fairest of your daughters,
And by his guilt insults you all.

"CHORUS.

"We hear thy call—we hear thy call,
Through valley, mountain, grot, and hall.

"KUHL.

"Naiads who sport in the restless waves,
Rising in hosts from your coral caves;
Sirens who warble a song so sweet,
Ye are charg'd by man with his own deceit;
Tritons who bid the ocean cell,
Echo the note of your sounding shell;
Nixies who from your wild hair fling
Sparkling drops of the crystal spring;
Spirits, who hurl from the beetling rock.
Torrents that fall with tremendous shock.
Wonders of beauty, monsters of fear,
Hear me—hear.

"CHORUS.

"We hear—we hear.
Called by thy voice we are gath'ring near.
"CHORUS WITH KUHL.
"Leap on the bank, rush from the spring,
Death from the mountains in torrents fling,
Smite the turret, batter the wall,
Levell'd with dust be the ancient hall,
Shatter the trees, scatter the corn,
Till the land is made a waste forlorn,
Without a trace,
That man has known it as a dwelling-place.

"UNDINE.

(Solo.) "Bright green earth, farewell, farewell.
Now I seek my distant cell,
There, beneath the waters deep,
O'er my short-lived joys to weep,
For in death I may not sleep.
Thou art happier far than I,
Dearest—would that I could die!"

On the whole, this cantata is eminently calculated to raise Mr. Benedict's reputation as a composer.

THE "NO. IX."

(A RHAPSODY.)

BEETHOVEN had long cherished the idea of giving a musical expression to Schiller's Ode to Joy, a poem which, in glowing and harmonious numbers, apostrophises Hope and Faith, inculcates a belief in the good, preaches the doctrine of universal brotherhood, and typifies the beauties of nature. Such a poem was just the one to impress Beethoven, and it won his entire admiration. But whatever its intrinsic merits, its great triumph—its greatest triumph—was that of having indirectly originated one of the noblest inspirations of the human mind. Beethoven not only availed himself of a portion of the verses, which he set to music as a finale to his colossal symphony, but gave the world his own notions of the subject, in three instrumental movements of surpassing beauty and grandeur. The first of these, in D minor, allegro non troppo, is the longest single movement known. Its style is passionate and sublime. Poetically regarded, it is an attempt to suggest, by musical sounds, that vague and indefinable feeling which accompanies unbounded joy, when the heart, overflowing with exultation—when, from some happy circumstance, the very sense of being is a delight that cannot be restrained—when the measure of joy is so unlimited that we are in love with the whole world, and feel inclined to caress every animate or inanimate thing, when all the objects around us seem robed with a splendour not their own—a splendour emanating like rays from ourselves, and born of the delight that overwhelms us. In joy, as in sadness, when the heart is overstocked, the first desire is to impart to others what we feel; for the sublime edict of Pythagoras applies to both, and men must neither exult nor despair alone. Beethoven's development of this feeling is utterly at variance with the common-places that pass for truth; the prevalence of the minor mode, the mysterious character of many of the passages, the alternations of calm and violent ebullitions, the broken and varied rhythm, the long-protracted cadence, and the overpowering magnificence of the climaxes, demonstrate that Beethoven contemplated the extreme manifestation of the passion of joy as a subject for the loftiest æsthetical development. The knowledge he possessed of all the resources of the orchestra enabled him to double the intensity and endow with stronger contrast the fitful changes of expression with which this movement abounds. The crescendos are so artfully managed that they appear to be continually accumulating power until the full orchestra peals out in the fortissimos. The return to the theme is appalling as a voice from heaven speaking in thunder. The enormous difficulties of this movement are dreadfully perplexing to the players, and should never be attempted without careful rehearsal. To expect it to go satisfactorily without would be preposterous. The scherzo, also the longest movement of its kind ever written, is in the same key as the allegro, D minor; but the striking opposition of character obviates the monotony that would otherwise accrue. The style of this scherzo is playful and fantastic, and exhibits the same passion of joy, but a less wild manifestation of it. In the second bar occurs a curious development of a phrase in three-bar rhythm. The trio, by its flowing character, the alteration of rhythm from three to four, and the peculiarity of its instrumentation, offers a beautiful contrast to the scherzo. The adagio, the third and last of the instrumental movements, and of a different character from either, suggests a state of calm and unruffled happiness, in which joy and all the passions are at rest. The tender key of B flat lends itself easily to the soft delineations of orchestral colour, and of these Beethoven has made prodigious employment. The stream of melody is almost voluptuous, in the sinuosity of its outline, and the smooth unbrokenness of its measure. Nothing can be more soothing, beautiful, and tuneful. The finale, in which the chorus and solo voices are introduced, opens with a kind of recitative for the orchestra, where the violoncellos and basses officiate, so to speak, as the voice part. This conducts to a melody—allegro, in D minor—executed in unison by the same instruments, subsequently treated in three parts, and ultimately in full harmony for the whole orchestra. A recitative for a solo bass voice introduces a quartet and chorus in D, of which this melody constitutes the subject. A movement à la marcia, in B flat, 6-8 time, with triangle and side-drums, forms the subject of a tenor solo, which is afterwards developed as a full chorus: this is further elaborated through a masterly instrumental movement in the fugued style. The chorus in D is then resumed fortissimo, with a variation of florid passages in triplets for the orchestra. A chorus, maestoso, in G intervening between this and the second resumption of the chorus, is diversified by other devices of counterpoint and instrumental combination. Two choruses, in which the same words are treated with accumulating brilliancy, conclude this movement and the symphony.—ARIES LE FISE VASCHER.

BLIND SCHOOL, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—The pupils of this useful Institution gave an interesting Concert on Monday last, under the direction of their musical professor, Mr. Edwin Barnes. The programme included works of the highest class, among which we specially noticed organ solos by Haydn, Mendelssohn, Rinck, Handel, with choruses from Judas Maccabeus, Mr. Costa's Eli, and other works. The performance reflected great credit both upon the pupils and their instructor.

The Operas.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—The winter campaign may be said to have commenced in reality. Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. W. Harrison have been the first to blow the trumpet at Covent Garden. Dr. Wylde blew a faint blast at St. James's Hall a few nights after, and Mr. E. T. Smith on Monday next is expected to blow trumpets enough, his own included, to batter down the walls of Jericho. The managers of the Royal English Opera have this year displayed extraordinary forbearance in issuing no prospectus, when perhaps it was never more needed, seeing that for the first time since they attempted to establish a national opera, five years since, they have encountered a bona fide opposition. Even the bills and advertisements state no more than that Mr. Balfe has written a new opera, and that "various novelties are in preparation." This unusual reticence on the part of the management implies great dependence on present resources. No doubt a continuous success for Lurline is anticipated, and a revival of Satanella is looked forward to with confidence. Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. W. Harrison are very tories in their administration. They are opposed to all change, and like to keep an opera as long as possible before the public, as thinking that an old friend is better than a new one. Unhappily this is the age of reformation, and the desire for novelty is supreme. In the good old days of Bunn and the Bohemian Girl at Drury Lane, the run of a hundred nights for an opera was considered necessary to a genuine success. These tory days are gone, and managers now must move with the times and be swayed by the feelings of the people. The success of Lurline last season was incontestable; but even that admirable opera nowadays cannot expect to obtain a never-ending career, and run like works produced under the Bunn dynasty. If Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison attempt it, we think they will do so at their cost.

The season opened on Monday night. Lurline was the opera. The cast has undergone important changes from last season. Miss Leffler has been substituted for Miss Pilling in the part of Ghiva; Mr. Henry Wharton for Mr. Santley in that of the River King; Miss Albertazzi for Miss Fanny Cruise in that of Liba; and Mr. Grattan Kelly for Mr. George Honey in the Baron Truenfels. Miss Leffler (daughter to the late popular baritone, Mr. Adam Leffler) is a great improvement, in voice and singing, on Miss Pilling. Her voice is a mezzo soprano of charming quality, sufficiently powerful, and produced without the least effort. Her singing proves the good style and method of her masters, Signor Schira and Mr. Frank Mori. Miss Leffler made a decided hit, and created quite a sensation in the ballad "Troubadour enchanting," which was loudly and unanimously encored. An apathetic manner, listless even for the sacred concert-room, will doubtless vanish with experience. At present she is a very novice to the boards, and appears to have been taught nothing whatsoever. In the small part of Liba, Miss Albertazzi (daughter, if we mistake not, to the favourite singer, Mad. Albertazzi) displayed a nice voice and much feeling, and will no doubt be an acquisition. Mr. Henry Wharton has a high baritone of fair quality, and sings well in tune. He wants power and style. His most satisfactory performance was the air, "The nectar cup may yield delight," in which he was encored. Mr. Grattan Kelly is no improvement at all on Mr. George Honey, either as singer or actor. He does not appear to have appreciated the part of the Baron as intended by the poet. In addition to Ghiva's song and the Rhine King's air, encores were awarded to the drinking-song, "Take this cup of sparkling wine," sung by Miss Louisa Pyne and chorus; to the ballad, "My home! my heart's first home!" by Mr. Harrison; and to the unaccompanied quartette, "Tho' the world with transports bless me," by Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Albertazzi, Mr. Henry Wharton, and Mr. Corri.

The general performance was admirable, the band under Mr. Alfred Mellon's direction exhibiting their usual excellence. The overture was splendidly executed and loudly applauded. Of Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison it is enough to state that they were in their best voice, and sang in their best manner. They were recalled separately at the end of the first act, and received with thunders of applause. After the opera the national anthem was sung.

Lurline has been played every night during the week.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—The season for English and Italian opera commences on Monday next. Mr. E. T. Smith has issued a prospectus almost as important and longitudinous as that presented last season for the Italian Opera proper. For the first time we believe at any theatre in this country two distinct series of operas in different languages will be given. The English lead the van and will inaugurate the season on Monday with a new romantic opera, entitled Robin Hood, the music composed by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, the libretto by Mr. John Oxenford. Could anything look more promising? If Mr. Macfarren and Mr. Oxenford do not produce between them a first-rate work, the public will be disappointed. Moreover, Mr. E. T. Smith has spared neither pains nor expense to ensure the new opera a success. The artists who will appear in it are Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mad. Lemaire, Mr. Santley, Mr. Parkinson, and Mr. Sims Reeves. Mad. Sherrington, we believe, is not quite a novice to the boards, having performed some years ago at one of the Belgian theatres. Of her vocal capabilities we need not speak in this place. Mr. Reeves, we are told, has a part that suits him admirably, histrionically and vocally. This is an essential matter, and we have no doubt that both poet and musician had our great tenor in their mind's eye when they put pen to paper. On Wednesday the Trovatore will be given in Italian with Mlle. Titiens, Mad. Lemaire, Signors Giuglini, Vialetti, Soldi, Mercuriali &c.

The list of names is much more formidable for the English than the Italian Opera. To the artists just mentioned we may add, among the sopranos, Miss Parepa, Mlle. Jenny Bauer, and Miss Allesandri (from the principal theatres in Spain and Italy; her first appearance in this country); among the contraltos, Miss Laura Baxter and Miss Fanny Huddart; among the tenors, Mr. Swift, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Terrott; and among the basses, Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. J. E. Patey, Mr. Bartleman, and Herr Hermanns. Mr. Charles Hallé is the conductor, and Mr. H. Blagrove leader of the band.

The undertaking is curious and important, and may prove hazardous. We think it somewhat bold in Mr. Smith, after securing so capital an English company—one indeed, which almost insures success à priori—to engage an Italian company to interfere with that success. Mr. Sims Reeves, no doubt, is a powerful attraction, and he has a public of his own who will not be moved from him by any Italian allurements. But we cannot hide from ourselves the fact that an immense temptation is proffered to the public in being afforded the means of hearing Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini at play-house prices. We hope that two audiences may be found for both operas; but we are inclined to think, taking all things into consideration, that the odds is in favour of the Italian.

Miss Josephine Gougenheim.—This young actress, from the United States, whose services Mad. Celeste has secured for the Lyceum Theatre, and of whom report speaks in the highest terms, will make her début next Monday in a comedy, by Dion Boucicault, Esq., entitled The Irish Heiress. Although not a native of the States, Miss Gougenheim's professional career commenced on the American stage, where, at a very early age, she took the highest rank as an actress of leading comedy, both of the modern and the old school. Her range is, however, not limited to this higher region, and in domestic humour and pathos she follows in the footsteps of Mrs. Keeley, as in the more refined heroines she emulates the sprightly graces and impulsive vivacity of Mrs. Nisbitt, adding to them, however, a greater power of dramatic expression. If half what the native critics say of this young lady's abilities be true the American stage will have returned in her person a very large instalment of the talent they have so long borrowed from ours.

The Sisters Marchisio.—Two young candidates for lyric honours, named respectively Carlotta and Barbara Marchisio, recently made their début at the Grand Opera of Paris in Rossini's Semiramide, as the Babylonian Queen and Arsace. The opera has been frequently repeated, and the success of the new artists chronicled by the entire press. At the first representations indeed, the impression they made was but partial, owing to their extreme timidity, more especially that of the soprano, Mlle. Carlotta, whose nervousness amounted to positive terror. A few performances, however, restored self-possession to both ladies, and the flattering rumours from Italy that heralded their advent to the French capital were more than confirmed by their subsequent performances. Although the voice of each débutante is spoken of in high terms of praise, and the artistic powers of both universally lauded, it is the ensemble singing of the sisters above all that seems to excite astonishment and delight. Even on the first night of their appearance when, as we have said, both were under the dominion of fright, their duo singing elicited the most rapturous praise from all the critics. "The sisters Marchisio," wrote the Ménéstrel, in allusion to the first performance of Semiramide, "were satisfied with singing the music of Rossini, in a manner so unctuous, so communicative, that the auditors felt spell-bound, and at the end the enthusiastic bis came from all mouths at the same time. Such was the effect of the adorable duo of the third act. The fact is that at a given moment the two voices of the sisters Marchisio are governed but by one soul, by one sentiment. For a long time we have heard nothing so completely harmonious, so full of an indefinable charm; and this alone, we repeat, would suffice to gain for them a high reputation, independent of any special vocal qualities." The sisters Marchisio, we understand, are about to pay a visit to England. We shall be happy to corroborate the unqualified eulogies bestowed on them by the Ménéstrel and other Parisian journals.

Provincial.

Leeds, Oct. 4.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Professor Bennett has accepted the offer of the Committee to become conductor of the Leeds Festival in 1861. I believe I am right in stating that the celebrated Professor is engaged in the composition of an oratorio to be produced for the first time on that occasion. "Such a work," says the Leeds Express, "from the pen of our gifted countryman, would be hailed with great satisfaction by all lovers of good music, and would draw hither connoisseurs from every part of England."—The members and friends of the Leeds Madrigal Society celebrated its tenth anniversary in Bullivant's Refreshment Rooms at the Leeds Town Hall on Tuesday evening last. George Young, Esq. (honorary treasurer), presided, the vice-chairmen being Mr. Cooke and Mr. Burras, two of the oldest members of the society.—The Leeds Town Hall Concert Society inaugurated their winter season last Wednesday evening with one of the most brilliant and successful concerts ever given in Leeds. The singers were, Mlle. Titiens, Signor Giuglini, Signor Valsovani, and Signor Vialetti. Signor Giuglini's first song, from Martha, "M' appari," was rendered with impassioned energy and expression, and with a voice of unequalled purity. An encore was insisted on. Mlle. Titiens followed in a vocal waltz, by Signor Arditi, in which she displayed the most brilliant execution and a magnificent, clear, ringing soprano voice. This was also re-demanded and re-sung. In "The Last Rose of Summer," nothing could possibly excel the pathos and heart-stirring tones with which this simple ballad was delivered by Mlle. Titiens, who pronounces English with great accuracy for a foreigner. The applause which followed was almost deafening. Signor Giuglini was equally successful in the ballad "Tu m' ami" ("When other lips"), and, being encored, sang the serenade from Rigoletto, "Le donna e mobille." At the commencement of each part Mr. Spark played a solo on the grand organ. Signor Vialetti sang the drinking song from Martha, and was unanimously encored. The concert closed with the celebrated "Miserere," from Trovatore, with both organ and piano accompaniments, and constituted an admirable finish to a very superior concert.

Crystal Palace.—Mad. Clara Novello's second and last farewell performance came off on Saturday, when the Messiah was given. The audience was even more numerous than at the first concert on Wednesday, their numbers amounting to between fourteen and fifteen thousand. The execution of Handel's great work, on the whole, was not irreproachable. The band and chorus had had no rehearsals together, and did not go always as smoothly as might have been desired; and the organist, Mr. J. Coward, was now and then at fault from the same cause. Mr. Benedict, the conductor, did all in his power to achieve a perfect performance; and if his efforts could have tended to such a result he would have accomplished it. The managers of the concert, doubtless, conceived that as the entire interest would be absorbed in Mad. Novello's singing, it would hardly be worth while taking any extra trouble, or going to any extra expense. In that case, they should not have procured so large a choral and instrumental force, nor have vaunted so much about their numbers and efficiency in the advertisements. To bring together such a phalanx was a waste of time and material, unless they were brought together for good purpose. The execution of the Messiah, we repeat, was by no means first-rate, a thing to be reprehended, the more so as it was within the possibility of accomplishment. On such an occasion, we are inclined to think it especially behoved the directors of the Crystal Palace to see that every pains was taken to ensure a satisfactory, if not a great, performance. That such was not attained was no fault of the soloists, all of whom not only sang their best, but were in the best condition to do so. Indeed, we do not remember to have heard the solos more admirably rendered than they were on Saturday by Mad. Clara Novello, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Santley. Of course complaints were made as usual by persons not being able to hear, even in the reserved places; and we must own, that from block K K we ourselves were unable to catch, with any distinctness, the florid passages in "Every valley shall be exalted," and "Why do the nations so furiously rage together?" sung respectively by Messrs. Wilbye Cooper and Santley. This, we are assured, was no fault of the singers. The oftener we hear music in the central transept of the Crystal Palace, the more we are convinced it is not suited, in its present state, for the equable transmission of sound; and that, as a concert-room, the most radical alterations are imperatively called for. However, on Saturday, the visitors seemed to think little about acoustical properties, Handel's music, or anything except the fair songstress who sat before them for the last time, and who never again was to pour her divine warblings into their ears in the same place. Such considerations, indeed, were sufficient to stifle all grumbling and fault-finding, and to arrest attention to one point. The demonstration in favour of the artist was more intense than enthusiastic. The audience being for the most part composed of the gentler sex, precluded that vehement display and external ebullition of feeling, which must be sought for in other localities than in the Crystal Palace on special occasions. Mad. Novello, indeed, was received on her appearance with genuine warmth, and the thrill of admiration that went through the hearers like an electric-shock after "Rejoice greatly," "Come unto him," and "I know that my Redeemer liveth," was far stronger proof of the artist's power than the most boisterous acclamations. That Mad. Novello never sang more exquisitely, never sang with greater command of voice in every way, and with more faultless intonation, was the universal opinion. So perfect a performance, perhaps, has never been remembered at any former leave-taking by any singer. So perfect, indeed, that the expression involuntarily came to every tongue, "Why does Mad. Novello think of retiring into private life?" It is fortunate for those who were unable to attend the two farewell performances at the Crystal Palace, that further opportunities will be offered them of hearing Mad. Novello in London, before her final retirement. Her real last appearance in public will, we understand, take place in the metropolis.

Advertisements.

THE SON of a PROFESSOR of MUSIC seeks employment. as a well-grounded knowledge of music. A small salary only expected to commence with.—Address A. Z., 18 Salmon Parade, Bridgewater, Somersetshire.

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT
OF
FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,
IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY
DURING THE LAST 30 YEARS,
Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,
TO BE SOLD AT
ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,
BY
MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,
28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.
MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.
VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.
VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.
FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.
CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.
HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.
PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.
VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.
Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.
THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.
Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.
Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—A New Series of SHILLING BOOKS of VOCAL and PIANOFORTE MUSIC.—Eight Books are now ready.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:

"We had imagined that the extreme point in cheap music had long since been attained; but that we were in error is proved by the present publication, which consists of a series of shilling quarto volumes embracing the best music of the best composers at a price below anything yet published; admirable in typography, correct in the text, and as excellent a production as the musician could possibly desire, it is really a marvel of cheapness. In one volume we have twenty of Mendelssohn's songs; in another, twelve of Balfe's most popular songs; another embraces fourteen songs from Verdi's favourite operas; whilst another gives twenty of the Christy minstrel songs—so much for the vocal. The instrumental is no less extraordinary; for in one book we have fifty waltzes, chiefly by Laurent, Gungl, and Tinney; another gives twelve quadrilles, by D'Albert, Laurent, Nordmann, &c.; another, fifty polkas and galops; and another contains twenty-five of Verdi's gems for the pianoforte. Now, as all these are given at a shilling a volume, and as they are clear, distinct, and admirably printed, it is certainly an event in musical publishing, and will attract much attention, as it affords every musician an opportunity of having the best music at the smallest price."—News of the World, Sept. 30th.

"Eight numbers have been forwarded to us of a work, called "Boosey's Musical Cabinet," which is a perfect marvel of cheapness, and is, moreover, brought out in as good a style as if four times the money were charged. It will scarcely be believed that No. 1, price one shilling, contains twenty of Mendelssohn's songs, not a cramped printing of the mere melodies, or an arrangement of them for pianoforte or other instrument, but the actual songs, with English words, either original, as in the case of the setting of some of Byron's lyrics, or translations by Messrs. Desmond Ryan, John Oxenford, and George Linley, and with pianoforte accompaniment. The printing is clear, the paper is good, and the size convenient. No. 2 contains twelve songs by Balfe, including some of the settings of Longfellow; No. 3, fourteen by Verdi; No. 4, twenty of the Christy's Minstrel's songs; and Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 contain pianoforte music, thus assorted—fifty waltzes, twelve sets of quadrilles, fifty polkas and galops, and twenty-five favourite morceaux from Verdi's operas. Thus all tastes are consulted, and we can confidently predict for the 'Musical Cabinet' a great success."—Sunday Times, Sept. 30th.

MISS SELINA PYKE (Pupil of Mr. Charles Salaman) begs to announce that she has RETURNED to TOWN, and has resumed giving LESSONS on the PIANOFORTE. Miss P. attends Schools and her Pupils westward twice a-week.—52 Great Prescott Street, E.

ORGANS.—A Large Stock of Church Organs, varying from Two to Twenty Stops, for SALE at reduced prices, and on very liberal Terms, in consequence of dissolution of partnership. A detailed List on application. Bryceson & Fincham, Brook Street, Euston Road, London.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK FOR 1861 will be issued early in December, Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Advertisements, Lists of Music, Names and Addresses of Professors and the Trade must be sent in before the 12th November, to Rudall, Rose, Carte, & Co., 20 Charing Cross.

G. B. ALLEN'S New FANTASIA on "OBERON," composed expressly for and dedicated to Miss Arabella Goddard, is now published, price 5s. by Duncan Davison and Co. 244 Regent Street, W.

MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, an ASSISTANT for the Country, one who can also Tune a Pianoforte tolerably.—Apply by letter to E. Harrison, Regent House, Clifton, Bristol.

Holles Street, 6th October, 1860.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CHEAP EDITION OF BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

On the 20th October will be Published, in two very handsome Volumes, bound in cloth, gilt edges (490 pages), price 10s. 6d. each,

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

Edited by W. DORRELL, with Life of Beethoven by G. A. MACFARREN, and Portrait by J. LYNCH.

This Edition will be found the most perfect and correct of any that has appeared in England. It will be beautifully printed on excellent paper from newly engraved plates.

NEW ARRANGEMENT OF SCHUBERT'S SONGS.

In the press, a New Arrangement of the most favourite of

SCHUBERT'S SONGS,

As brilliant and effective Pieces for the Pianoforte, by W. KUHE.

CHEAP EDITION OF VERDI'S GREATEST WORK, "IL TROVATORE," IN MONTHLY PARTS.

Just Published, PART I., price 1s., of a complete Edition of VERDI'S celebrated Opera,

IL TROVATORE,

With English and Italian Words, beautifully printed on excellent paper, uniform with the Cheap Edition of "DINORAH"

IL TROVATORE will be completed in EIGHT MONTHLY PARTS, 1s. each.

SUBSCRIBERS' NAMES RECEIVED BY ALL MUSICSELLERS AND THE PUBLISHERS.

NEW MUSIC FOR CORNET AND PIANO.

THE CORNET MISCELLANY,

Arranged by THOMAS HARPER.

Extra Numbers just Published:—

FANTASIE ON ENGLISH AIRS.
FANTASIE ON SCOTCH AIRS.
FANTASIE ON IRISH AIRS.
FANTASIE ON AMERICAN AIRS.

Twenty-eight Numbers are already Published. (3s. each.)

NEW MUSIC FOR VIOLIN AND PIANO.

THE VIOLIN MISCELLANY,

Arranged by W. WATSON.

No. 1.—DINORAH, ... 3s.
No. 2.—IRISH AIRS ..... 3s.
No. 3.—SCOTCH AIRS ..... 3s.
No. 4.—ENGLISH AIRS ..... 3s.

 The above will be published next week.

NEW MUSIC FOR FLUTE AND PIANO.

THE FLUTE MISCELLANY,

Arranged by R. S. PRATTEN.

1. MAZURKA BRILLANTE.
2. POLKA DE CONCERT.
3. GRANDE VALSE BRILLANTE.
4. FANTASIE DINORAH.
5. FANTASIE IRISH AIRS.
6. FANTASIE SCOTCH AIRS.
7. FANTASIE ENGLISH AIRS
8. FANTASIE AMERICAN AIRS.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS,

Just Published, price 5s. each, Brilliant PIANOFORTE DUETS, by A. SCHLOESSER, OBERON (published this day)—LA TRAVIATA—MARTHA—DINORAH.

NEW ENGLISH VOCAL DUETS.—MUSICAL EVENINGS.

A series of Popular Duets, translated by GEORGE LINLEY.

1. SWEET IS THE DREAM.—CAMPANA.
2. TENDER BLOSSOMS.—BELLINI.
3. WE LOVE THEE SWEET NIGHT.—BELLINI.
4. PEACE TO THY SPIRIT.—VERDI.
5. O'ER THE BLUE WAVE.—PANOFKA.
6. THE BRIDESMAID'S DUET.—DONIZETTI.

LAURENT'S NEW WALTZES.

Just Published, by HENRY LAURENT,

MARGARETTA WALTZ, on Balfe's popular Song, illustrated by BRANDARD. KILLARNEY WALTZ, on Irish Airs. LOCH KATRINE WALTZ, on Scotch Airs. SANTA LUCIA WALTZ, the celebrated Neapolitan Canzonet.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, October 6, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 41 SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

List of Music in G. A. MACFARREN'S New Opera,

ROBIN HOOD,

AS PERFORMED AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Opera complete, in cloth folio . . (net) £1 5 0

The following Pieces are published separately:

ACT I.

	s.	d.
BALLAD—"The hunters wake with the early morn," Alice with Chorus ...	2	0
DUET—"When lovers are parted," Marian and Robin (published in A flat and in F) ... ... each	2	6
SONG—"A dark and troublous time is this," (Sheriff)	2	6
BALLAD—"True love," (Marian (in B flat or in G)	2	0
SONG—"The mouk within his cell," (Sompnour	3	0
SONG—"Englishmen by birth are free," Locksley, with Chorus (in G) ...	2	6
Ditto (without Chorus, in E flat)	2	0
ROUND—"May the saints protect and guide thee," Alice, Allan, Sheriff, and Sompnour	3	0

ACT II.

FOUR-PART SONG—"The wood, the gay greenwood," Chorus of Men (separate voice parts, 6d. each)	2	6
TRIO—"A good fat deer makes lusty cheer," Robin, Much, and Little John	2	6
SONG—"Confusion to the Norman," Robin Hood with Chorus (in E flat) ...	2	0
Ditto (without Chorus, in B flat)	2	0
SCENA—"Hail! happy morn," and "Power benign," Marian	4	0
AIR—"Power benign," (printed separately from the above, in F, and with a second stanza)	2	6
DUET—"To the Fair, to the Fair," Marian and Alice (in C or in B flat) ...	3	0
BALLAD—"From childhood's dawn," Sheriff (in A flat or in G)	2	0
BALLAD—"My own, my guiding star," Robin (in D flat, in B flat, or in G)	2	0
QUINTET—"My heart from its terror reposes," Marian, Alice, Locksley, Allan, and Sheriff	2	6

ACT III.

DUET—"Greatest plague on earth is love," Alice and Allan	3	0
SCENA—{"My child has fled," and "She has left me to mourn," } Sheriff	4	0
BALLAD—"She has left me to mourn" (printed separately from the above, in G, and with a second stanza)...	2	0
DUET—"To King Richard at once you must go," Sheriff and Sompnour ...	4	0
FOUR-PART SONG—"Now the sun has mounted high," Chorus of Men (separate voice parts, 6d. each)	2	6
Ditto, arranged as a Trio for two Trebles and a Bass	2	6
SONG—"Sons of the Greenwood," Marian with Chorus (in E, or without Chorus in D)	2	0
SCENA—{"Vain was the proud ambition," and "Life to me is no longer dear," } Robin	4	0
BALLAD—"Life to me is no longer dear" (printed separately from the above, in D, and with a second stanza)	2	6
TRIO—"By all the love that you have shown," Marian, Robin, and Sheriff ...	3	0

PIANO-FORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

THE OVERTURE, arranged by E. F. Rimbault	3	6
Ditto, as a Duet ... ... The Author (in the Press)
THE FAVOURITE AIRS, in 3 Books, W. H. Callcot ... ... each	5	0
Ditto, as Duets, in 3 Books, W. H. Callcot ... ... each	6	0
QUADRILLES... ... ... Charles Coote	4	0
DE VOS (Polydore)—Fantaisie-Transcription on "Power benign"	4	0
FAVARGER (René)—Fantasia on Favourite Airs...	4	0
——— "My own, my guiding star"	3	6
RICHARDS (Brinley)—"From Childhood's dawn"	3	0
——— Grand Fantasia	4	0
MACFARREN (Walter) "True love"	3	0
"Life to me is no longer dear," and "Courage fires me" ...	4	0
BRISSAC (Jules)—Fantaisie de Salon on "My own, my guiding star"	3	6
RIMBAULT (E. F.)—Six Favourite Airs, arranged (easy).—No. 1. "True love." 2. "My own, my guiding star." 3. "From childhood's dawn." 4. "Life to me is no longer dear. 5. "Confusion to the Norman." 6. "Sons of the greenwood ... ... each	1	0

OTHER ARRANGEMENTS IN PREPARATION.

[CRAMER, BEALE, AND CHAPPELL, 201, REGENT STREET.

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Principal, Composer, and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Pianoforte Organist	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola...	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) ... ... Vocal Classes	Mr. POWELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian ... ... Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for
THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or
THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instruments and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

JUST PUBLISHED, RUDIMENTS of HARMONY with Progressive Exercises. By G. A. MACFARREN. Price 1s. Beale, & Chappell, 201 Regent Street.

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

VOCAL.

Composer.		Poetry by
ADELAIDA.	"The Cuckoo,"	Logan	2/0
„	"Sunshine,"	Mary Howitt	2/0
AGUILAR, E.	"In a wood on a windy day,"	Acton Bell	3/0
„	"Sympathy,"	Ellis Bell	2/0
ALLEN, G. B.	"The meadow gate,"	Beatrice Abercrombie	2/6
BAKER, H.	"The stepping-stones,"	Charles Mackay	2/0
BALFE, M. W.	"I'm not in love remember,"	Jessica Rankin	2/6
„	"Oh! take me to thy heart again,"	„	2/0
„	"I love YOU,"	G. P. Morris	3/0
„	"If I could change as others change,"	Jessica Rankin	2/6
„	"Fresh as a rose,"	„	3/0
BENEDICT, J.	"Now the shades grow deeper,"	J. Oxenford	2/0
BERGER, E.	"That handsome volunteer," Sung by Miss E. Stanley		2/6
BRAHAM, C.	"Persevere," (The career of Havelock)	J. Oxenford	3/0
BRUCE, E.	"When I was young,"	D. Ryan	2/0
„	"When first you shone before me,"	„	2/0
COBHAM, M.	"Awake little pilgrim,"		2/6
„	"Look on the brightest side,"		2/6
CRUWELL, G.	"One night as I did wander,"	Burns	4/0
	(Flute and Violin, Violoncello or Horn accomp.)		0/6
„	"Mournfully, sing mournfully,"		2/6
	(Violin or Flute accomp.)
„	"Where is the sea,"		3/0
	(Violoncello or Viola accomp.)
DESSAUER, J.	"Quick arise, maiden mine,"	J. Oxenford	2/0
DIEHL, L.	"Yet ere I seek a distant shore,"		2/0
ENDERSSOHN, M.	"My Mary,"	John Ellison	2/0
„	"Sweet little Jenny,"	„	2/0
FOSTER, ALICE.	"Merrily shines the morn,"	Rev. W. Evans	2/0
FERRARI, ADOLFO.	"The Voice and Singing."
	(The formation and cultivation of the voice for singing)		8/0
„	Three Italian Songs:
	No. 1—"Vieni, Vieni,"	Maggioni	2/0
	2—"Ah se piacer mi Vuoi,"	„	2/0
	3—"L'onda che mormora,"	Metastasio	2/6
„	Eight Ballads:
	No. 1—"Sweet days of youth,"	Mrs. Gent	2/0
	2—"Long years of care,"	W. W. Cazalet	2/0
	3—"When mid the festive scenes,"	Ann Riskey	2/0
	4—"Break not by heedless word,"	Lady Flora Hastings	2/0
	5—"Sweet hope,"	W. W. Cazalet	2/0
	6—"Remembrance,"	„	2/0
	7—"Gratitude,"	„	2/0
	8—"I love the oak,"	Right Hon. W. M. S.	2/0

Composer.		Poetry by
FERRARI, ADOLFO.	Two Trios, (Sopr. Mez. and Contr.)
	No. 1—"Come sisters let us dance and sing,"	C. C.	2/6
	2—"Come fairies come,"	F. A. L.	2/6
GREVILLE, Hon. Mrs.	"Oh! I would wend with thee,"		3/0
„	as a Duet for Soprano and Barytone,		3/0
„	"Quand on me donnerait," (with Guitar accomp.)		1/0
„	Do. as a Duet for Soprano and Tenor,		2/0
HARGITT, C. J.	"Tomorrow,"	R. S. Gowenlock	2/6
HALEVY, F.	"Lord hear us we implore thee,"	J. Oxenford	2/0
„	"He will be here,"	„	2/0
JOHNS, Mrs.	"The merry lark,"	Rev. C. Kingsley	2/0
LUTZ, W. M.	"Under the Linden tree,"	J. P. Wooler	2/6
„	"Merry little Maud,"	„	2/6
MEYERBEER, G.	"Here on the mountain," (Clarionet, or Violin, or Violoncello accomp.)	J. Oxenford	4/0
„	"Near to thee," (with Violoncello,)	„	4/0
MCKORKELL, C.	"Flowers, lovely flowers,"	J. H. Horncastle	2/6
MACFARREN, G. A.	"The thoughts of youth,"	Longfellow	2/0
„	"Paquita," (I love when the sun has set,)		2/6
MONK, E. G.	"Go sit by the summer sea,"		2/0
MORI, F.	"Wert thou mine,"	Charles Mackay	2/6
MORLEY, H. K.	"I never knew how dear thou wert,"	C. Warfield	2/6
MOZART, W. A.	"The very angels weep, dear,"	J. Oxenford	3/0
NORTH, E.	"Hurrah for old England,"	Gerald Massey	2/0
OSBORNE, G. A.	"The dewdrop and the rose,"	Isabella Hampton	2/6
PECH, Dr. J.	"Fare thee well,"	Lord Byron	2/6
"	"Weeds and flowers,"	Mrs. Alfred V. Newton	2/6
PHILLIPS, LOVELL.	"The Christmas rose,"	M. A. Stodart	2/6
RICHARDS, BRINLEY.	"The harp of Wales,"	E. Gilbertson	2/6
„	"The blind man and summer,"	W. Jones	2/6
„	"The Suliote war song,"	E. Gilbertson	3/0
REICHARDT, A.	"Thou art so near, and yet so far,"	J. Oxenford	3/0
„	"Are they meant but to deceive me,"	„	2/6
„	"Good night," (Wiegenlied)	„	2/6
SELIGMANN, J.	"Pretty rosebud,"	M. S. Malcolm	2/0
ST. LEGER, H. J.	"The old willow tree,"	S. Whittesley	2/0
SCHLOESSER, A.	"I would I were a butterfly,"	Zeila	2/6
STIRLING, E.	"Leonora,"	R. Howitt	2/0
WHITE, CLEMENT.	"My ain Donald,"	John Brougham	2/6
YARNOLD, E.	"The Troubadour's lament,"	Hon. Mrs. Greville	2/6
„	"The maiden's lament,"	„	3/0
„	"La Giovinezza del poeta,"	Prati	2/0
VIVIER, EUGÈNE.	"When o'er the meadows green," (with Horn or Violoncello obligato.)		3/0

PART SONGS.

MACFARREN, G. A.	Three Four-part Songs, for two Tenors and two Basses.
	No. 1—"The fairy's evensong,"	G. Macfarren	2/0
	2—"The world's festivals,"	Douglas Thompson	3/0
	3—"The arrow and the song,"	Longfellow	2/0
	Separate vocal part each,		0/6
MEYERBEER, G.	"The Lord's Prayer," for four voices, (in score) Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass, and Organ, ad lib.		3/0
	Separate vocal parts, each		0/6
„	"Aspiration," for Bass solo, and chorus of three Sopranos, two Tenors, and Bass, (in score)		4/0
MEYERBEER, G.	"This house to love is holy," for eight voices, (in score) two Sopranos, two Altos, two Tenors, and two Basses		4/0
	Separate vocal parts, each		0/6
MONK, E. G.	"The Battle of the Baltic," for four voices, (in score) two Sopranos, Alto, Tenor, and Bass,	Campbell	2/0
	Separate vocal parts, each		0/6
PECH, Dr. J.	"The bridal morn," for four voices, (in score) Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass		2/0
VOS, C. DR.	"God save the Queen," for four voices, (two Tenors, and two Basses) in score		0/6

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street.

[MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

[Paris, Oct. 4.

News of all sorts is scant this week. The most prominent item is the assurance, which is very commonly promulgated and believed in, that Meyerbeer's long-talked-of Africaine is at last about to be drawn from her long captivity in the escritoire of her illustrious progenitor and proprietor. She is to be made over, after the horrors of that middle passage, a rehearsal, to be a possession of the world at large, or rather, she is to be emancipated and become a free citizeness of every civilised community, on the stage of the Imperial Opera in Paris. The name under which this opera has been so long talked of is not, however, to be retained. Meyerbeer invariably rebaptises his productions on giving them to the world. It is to be entitled, say the gossips, Vasco di Gama. The motive which has led the composer to consent at last to the production of his work, the composition of which is said to have preceded that of Le Prophète, is, that in the existing company, under the direction of M. Alphonse Royer, for the first time has presented itself that combination of talents and attributes, which the master judges necessary to give entire fulfilment to his intentions. The simultaneous engagement of Mad. Tedesco and of M. Niemann, the tenor, has brought about this tardy determination. M. Alphonse Royer has engaged M. Morelli, the baritone, who is to play Wolfram in Tannhaüser; but he is to sing in Guillaume Tell first, in which, it is said, he appears to great advantage.

The rehearsals of the Pardon de Ploermel have commenced at the Opera Comique. It is said that the air which Meyerbeer composed for the second act, and which Mad. Nantier Didiée sang when Dinorah was produced at Covent Garden, will be introduced on its revival here. Mlle. Darcier is to be entrusted with it. This young lady is the niece of the actress Mlle. Darcier, now retired from the stage, and become Mad. Mamiguard. Before appearing in Le Pardon she will make her début in Le Pré aux Clercs. I mentioned to you last week a disagreement which had taken place between M. Ernest Reger, the composer of Maître Wolfram, and the manager of the Théâtre Lyrique, who, finding himself trammelled with the previous engagement of his predecessor to produce a new opera by this composer at the opening of the season, had first got the day of production postponed by consent, and then sought to free himself from all definite terms on the subject. An action was threatened, which would most certainly have issued in an award of damages to the injured authors of the work. A better result has been obtained, however, by amicable negotiations. The opera, which is entitled Les Ruines de Baalbec, will be shortly produced without the intervention of any legal process whatever. The Bouffes Parisiennes is in a vein of wondrous good fortune. The twenty first performances of Orphée aux Enfers, revived this season, have brought in a clear receipt of 40,060 fr. (1,600*l.*), or about 80*l.* per night.

The Italian Opera opened on Tuesday night with La Sonnambula. Mlle. Marie Battu and MM. Gardoni and Angelini were the principal artists. Next week I will tell you at length about the doings at this establishment.

At the theatres, at least those of the higher class, there has been nothing new, except a little comedy in one act, called Une Tasse de Thé, produced at the Vaudeville by MM. Mitter and Derby. I have not seen it yet, but it is said to abound in comic situations, and to be very well acted by St. Germain and Mlle. Marquet.

At the Variétés a new drama, in three acts, is shortly forthcoming. Meanwhile La Fille du Diable has been revived. A thorough-bred melodrama of the fine old stock has sprung up at the Ambigu. It is entitled La Maison du Pont Notre Dame, and is divided into five acts and six tableaux. The authors are MM. Theodore Barrière and H. de Kock.

It appears that the intelligence I communicated not long since to your readers of Mr. Lumley having taken the Théâtre du Cirque in Brussels for a series of operatic performances by Italian artiste is without foundation. The ex-manager disposes of the destinies of many artists whose professional horoscopes are studded with laurel crowns and sheaves of banque notes, and he is besieged, it would seem, with applications from all quarters to transfer his interest in them, but that he is prepared to incur the risks of management does not appear. By the way, an anecdote which has gone the round of the papers concerning some enthusiastic demonstration elicited by Jenny Lind at Stockholm, reminds one of the skilful manipulation with which Mr. Lumley was wont to work up and lash into fury the popular curiosity about this retired divinity. The students of the Swedish capital, in their eagerness to shower down their good wishes on the departing nightingale, upset a boat into which a party of them had got. Soused over ears, the ardour of their admiration was nevertheless unquenched, and, clinging to the upturned keel, they still gurgled forth their farewell chorus amidst the regurgitated liquid they had involuntarily swallowed. What a puff would this have been for the sails of the impresario when Jenny sailed among his crew! What a tempest of second-hand enthusiasm would Prospero have conjured out of it with the firmly-grasped wand of the free and independent British press! Alas! all is over now. Miranda is married to Ferdinand, Caliban is dead in a distant land; Ariel has bartered her new-given liberty to a magician of inferior glamour; and Prospero has buried his wand and books five fathoms deep under the Lord Chancellor's woolsack, and wanders on the continent under the conventional and colourless guise of rentier. As for the "oft-vext Bermoothes," if Trinculo and Stephano are not masters over it, yet merry doings and high jinks are there, and as usual the "air is filled with sweet sounds that give delight and hurt not," so far as the public are concerned.

Oct. 10.

The long-promised revival of Le Prophète at the Grand Opera is again put off, and with it the reappearance of Mad. Tedesco. The cause of this fresh procrastination is the illness of Mlle. Hamakers. Last Saturday the Théâtre Lyrique gave a représentation extraordinaire, or, as we should say, a benefit in favour of the funds of the Association des Artistes et Musiciens. The performances consisted of the opera Les Rosières, a comedy from the Gymnase, entitled Une Partée de Piquet, and a musical interlude contributed by the military band under the direction of M. Mohr. The rehearsals of the Val d'Andorre are nearly brought to a close, and the opera will be produced this week. M. Retz, the manager, has just engaged a pupil of the Conservatoire, Mlle. Baretti, for three years.

There is still but little doing at the theatres. At the Odéon a new comedy has been produced from the pen of M. Galoppe d'Ouquaire, entitled Les Vertueux de Province. The author has aimed at conveying a moral, but avoided being dull in so doing, a feat not always accomplished by modern playwrights when making the same attempt. Dalila has been revived at the Vaudeville, and at the Variétés a new piece, entitled Ce qui plaît aux Hommes is announced, in which Mlles. Lejars and Marie Garnier are to make their first appearance. The Palais Royal has put forth two new one-act pieces, La Famille de l'Horloger and Un gros Mot. The latter by MM. Labriche and Dumoustier, has turned out the most successful of the two, and Ravel is fitted in it with a character in which his original and fantastic humour finds full scope.

The series of Rossini's musical evenings at home at his villa in Passy has been brought to a close, the venerable bard and his lady having returned to their winter quarters in the Chaussée d'Antin. The baritone, Signor Della Siede, who sang with so much success in Rossini's and Mad. Orpila's salons, has returned to Berlin, where he is engaged for the Italian Opera there during the ensuing season. It is said that he is to return to Paris in March next, when he will appear in public.

Thalberg is at present in Paris. He is going to London, and thence to Germany, to look after family affairs. Another virtuoso of celebrity, M. Vieuxtemps, is reported to have bid adieu to the wandering life of an artist, and in proof of this it is alleged that he has purchased a house at Frankfort. The German papers announce the death of M. Horzalka, a pianist and composer. Among his best works are mentioned a song called The Miller and his Child, the words of which were by Ranpach, and another, The Waves of the Sea, by Grillpazer. He was sixty-two.

The approaching marriage of Mlle. Virginie Ferni, the female violinist, is spoken of, to a merchant of Nice, to whom she has been affianced since her tenth year. She will thereupon retire into private life.

LETTERS FROM ADOLPHE NOURRIT TO FERDINAND HILLER.

THE letters which, during the last few years of his life, Adolphe Nourrit wrote to Ferdinand Hiller,* are the purest reflex of the most secret emotions and inward struggles which agitated, and at length brake, the great artist's heart—they are the outpourings of a noble soul, gradually consumed in the flame of ambition and a passionate love for art, and laid open without the slightest reserve to the gaze of an intimate friend.

For the better comprehension of these letters, we will first present our readers with a few of the principal events in Nourrit's life, our authority being the excellent article by F. Halévy, "Adolphe Nourrit," in the Revue Cotemporaine for May and June, 1860.

Adolphe Nourrit was born on the 3rd March, 1802, at Montpelier. His father, Louis Nourrit, then only 22 years of age, possessed a fine tenor voice. He went to Paris, and entered the Conservatory. He was patronised by Méhul, and received instruction from Garat. In the year 1805, he appeared as Rinaldo in Gluck's opera of Armida. He remained at the Grand Opera. Not feeling any real passion for his art, in addition to exercising his talent as a singer, he traded in jewels, of which he was a good judge. His sole object was a quiet life and a certain income. He sent his son to the college of Sainte-Barbe, and afterwards placed him in a house of business. Adolphe became a good accountant, and when just seventeen, obtained a situation in the offices of a life insurance company. By his intelligence and industry, by the beauty of his writing and figures, and by his correctness in calculation, Adolphe gave the greatest satisfaction to his employers. His father was delighted, and he himself perfectly contented with his condition.

Suddenly, after his voice had fully changed, there was developed in him the germ, till then completely unsuspected, of a highly harmonious, pleasing, and yet powerful tenor, inclining to a barytone, and at the same time there awoke within his breast a strong love, slumbering up to that moment, for the art. Garat fostered both, calming the apprehension his father felt at the young clerk's resolution to devote himself to music, and on the 1st September, 1821, Adolphe made his first appearance as Pylades in Gluck's Iphigenia. His success was such as to decide his future career.

He now shared with his father all the tenor parts, and the name of Nourrit soon became universally famous, but to the public it represented only Adolphe. On the 9th October, 1826, at the first performance of Rossini's Siege of Corinth, father and son sang together, the former taking the part of Cleomenes, and the latter that of Neocles. Nourrit senior then retired and resided in the country, near Paris, but did not long enjoy the repose for which he had yearned. He died, still young, in 1831.

Every one knows how brilliant was Adolphe Nourrit's career at the Grand Opera in Paris. He reigned there as undisputed first dramatic singer, without a rival. His performances as Masaniello, Count Ory, Arnold, in Guillaume Tell, Eleazar, and Raoul were wonderful; in all these characters he displayed his great creative talent. It is not so generally known that he was, also, the author of two ballets, La Sylphide for Taglioni, and La Tempête (taken only in part from Shakspeare) for Fanny Elsler, the latter produced on the 15th September, 1834.

The last character Nourrit "created" at the Grand Opera was that of Stradella, in Niedermeyer's opera of the same name, on the 3rd March, 1837. The subject of the opera was taken from the well-known anecdote, according to which the bravoes hired to murder Stradella let their poniards drop from their hands on hearing him sing. This scene, the principal one in Niedermeyer's work, takes place in the church. But Nourrit had long previously made up his mind to break off all connection with the Grand Opera in Paris.

It was on this subject that he wrote as follows, on the 26th October, 1836, to Ferdinand Hiller.†

Things were certainly as Nourrit described them. Duprez came from Italy to Paris with all the advantage of an immense reputation; after long study he had gained in Italy that in which he had been previously deficient—but for which he was afterwards distinguished—great power of tone. In addition to this, he was

* From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

† We give this and the following letters in their integrity, because even the little details in them add to our means of estimating the character of Nourrit, both as a man and an artist.—ED. Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

"My dear Friend,—In the first place, receive my thanks for your welcome letter; I had heard of your indisposition and awaited with impatience the news of your recovery. You are now quite well again, and about to pass the winter agreeably in the bosom of your family, with a contented heart and spirit, engaged in pursuits which you like, and under circumstances which render you happy. I am delighted at this, though I am sorry at losing you; but we ought to love our friends for their own sake, and judge their happiness by their own standard.

"I have a great deal to tell you—a great deal—which will greatly surprise you; but we will take everything in due order, especially as I can begin with a gratifying piece of intelligence.

"My wife has been safely confined of a girl, who is lively and well; the event took place twelve days ago, and both mother and child are going on admirably. A great many persons made a wry face at the news of the arrival of a fifth little girl! We, however, receive with joy what God gives us, and offer him our thanks. May the little creature be like her sisters; may she be worthy her mother; if she is, we are sure there will be one more good woman in the world. There is a chance that our children's children will be better than we are. Hallelujah!

"But now—what I have to tell you, at present, is of an important and serious nature, and will, perhaps, affect you painfully. But I can at once quiet you; everything you are about to hear has been done solely out of consideration for my repose, my happiness, and, before all, my family.

"I leave the Opera and retire from the stage. Listen to the reasons which have induced me to do so.

"The management of the Opera has engaged Duprez, who, for some years past, has occupied the first place among the tenors of Italy. He naturally could not be contented with the second place in Paris: my position must therefore have been changed in order to make one for him. At first, I willingly and cheerfully consented to this, and, indeed, believed that I should, by a rivalry which would spur me on to fresh exertions, advance the interests of my art. But I too soon remarked the uneasiness of my family, as well as the apprehension of my friends, and my peace of mind was at an end! I have, too, had opportunities of convincing myself that I needed peace of mind to satisfy the demands of my art, that every care or anxiety is prejudicial to me, and that, in a word, I am not a man for rivalry.

"After reflecting maturely on my new position, I perceived that my future would not resemble my past life; that since the circumstances which favoured my development no longer existed, I could not foresee to what ordeals I should still be subjected, both as a man and an artist; as I cannot be more than the former, it is clear that I can gain nothing in a conflict in which my opponent has nothing to lose. Besides, you already know that it was always my intention to retire early; early enough to devote myself to other pursuits. I have six children, and as long as I live, I will work.

"I am very well aware that I shall not find another career so brilliant, and consequently so profitable, as my present one; but in four or five years I should, under all circumstances, be obliged to give it up, and if I do so now I shall gain four years for my future.

"My engagement with the Opera ends in March; I shall give my farewell performance, take my pension—to which I am entitled by sixteen years' service—and close with a tour through the departments, which will bring me in more in twelve or eighteen months than I could save in four years at the Opera.

"I shall then crawl like a snail into my shell, sing Hiller, Schubert, and all my dear German masters for my amusement, and devote myself to those studies to which I have always looked forward. It is true that I do not yet know in what form the fruits of my labour will be displayed, but when I once know what I want to know, when I have achieved for myself a higher value personally, it is impossible for me not to make my abilities available for the benefit of my family.

"I assure you, however, beforehand, that I shall busy myself only with art. Whatever you may think of my determination, believe me that I am not taking any rash and foolish step; I have sought the advice of all my friends, and did not decide until after a family council.

"I can assure you that since my resolution has been immutably fixed, tranquillity has returned to my house; my mother is happier, my more fortunate than Nourrit, in having had from his youth received a thorough musical education, and was then a most accomplished singer. Donizetti had written for him the part of Edgardo in Lucia di Lammermoor.

Nourrit's voice had certainly suffered somewhat; as far back as 1830 he had strained it too much in the days of the Revolution, on the stage and in other public places; and, at the period of which we are treating, his mental excitement, moreover, was not advantageous to the exercise of his art. But worse than all was the fact that this excitement cast a gloom over him, rendering him suspicious of others and unjust to himself. At one of his last performances of Masaniello, he remarked Duprez, of whose return to Paris (for after signing his engagement with the opera, Duprez had again proceeded to Italy) he was not aware, in a box with the manager of the opera. He instantly fancied they had both come to criticise his performance. His mental agitation scarcely allowed him to play out the first act; in the following acts, Lafond was obliged to take his place.

After the resolution which he took a short time subsequently, he really became, as he says in his letter, calmer; he sang the part of Stradella in March, and carefully and zealously prepared for his farewell appearance.

This took place on the 1st of April, 1837. He first played in the second act of Armida. The house was crammed to the ceiling, and the audience were indefatigable in showering upon him the marks of their approbation from beginning to end.

He began his tour by proceeding through Belgium and France. The success he everywhere met with led him astray; his resolve to devote himself to some other occupation was forgotten; the demon of the stage again seized on and carried him away. Nourrit determined to go to Italy, and replace at the San Carlo the man who had replaced him at the Opera in Paris.

While performing at Marseilles, he was seized with sudden hoarseness in the third act of the opera; pale, and with a look of despair, he left the stage. Two of his most intimate friends hurried round behind the scenes and found him in a state bordering on madness. He did not recognise them. With difficulty they placed him in an arm-chair, where he sat exhausted and without consciousness. Next morning, one of them went to see him. "How are you now, my dear Nourrit," he inquired. "Very bad," replied Nourrit, "I have not slept, and have wept a great deal; this very moment I was collecting all my moral energies to arm myself against evil thoughts. Life is becoming insupportable to me; but I know my duty. I have dear friends, a wife and children, whom I love, and for whom I must preserve myself—and I believe in an eternal life. With such thoughts a man can obtain the mastery over himself. I fear, however, for my reason—if I lose that for a single instant, it is all over with me. Last night, here in this chair, did I pray to God for courage and strength, and read this holy book." The book was The Imitation of Christ.

The consequence of this attack was that he fell seriously ill, and was obliged to return to Paris. In the bosom of his family he recovered his health, and busied himself at the Conservatory of Music. But he did not persevere; his plan of going to Italy had become a fixed idea, and his unlucky star enticed him onward.

He set out in the spring of 1838. He stopped for some time in Milan, where he frequently charmed the most distinguished society by his singing at Rossini's, and proceeded, by the way of Venice, Florence, and Rome, to Naples.

On the 7th April, 1838, he wrote as follows to Ferdinand Hiller:—

"I trust, my dear friend, that since we bade each other farewell at Naples, you have sometimes thought of me; if not, you are an ungrateful man, for I have thought often, very often, of you. I have always looked back with delight to the pleasant week which we spent together in Venice, and remembered what a beneficial effect your company had upon me.

"I have not written to you before, because I wanted to wait for the termination of the business which Rossini took in hand for me, previous to my departure from Milan. We were not able to come to any arrangement with the manager of La Scala; we should soon have agreed about money matters (you already know that money was never the principal consideration with me), but he could not give me the guarantee I required for my first appearance, and, in addition to this, the presence of Donzelli, who is engaged for the autumn and carnival season, would have rendered my position a difficult one. Merelli must have a tenore sfogato, and that is not in my way. I thanked Rossini, therefore, for the trouble he had taken, and broke off the negotiation with the Milan management. For other reasons I am not sorry, however, that the engagement came to nothing. At the time of the Emperor's coronation as King in Milan, every one will be more taken up with the public festivals and ceremonies than with the theatre, and you know how important for me is the impression produced by my first appearance in Italy. I am not, on this account, the less resolved to follow up my Italian career; on the contrary, every step I take in this country enlists me the more in its favour, and I have a greater desire than ever to settle here and endeavour to regain the rank I held in Paris. The task is not an easy one, but it is that very reason which excites me.

"When we are not contented with doing things by halves, we often strike on more than one rock of which we had no suspicion, and frequently overcome one obstacle merely to perceive another which we have to conquer with a fresh effort of our energy.

"It would not, however, have been worth while to give up so brilliant a position as that which I enjoyed, to leave my home, to care nothing for the fatigues of a long journey, and to bear the grief of parting and absence, if such sacrifices were to be made for something easily obtainable. No, by my troth! What I want is difficult to effect, and it is for this I want to effect it. A man does not lay aside the habits of five-and-twenty years in a fortnight, change his nature, or transform himself from a Frenchman into an Italian. Yet I must accomplish this, and I am working at it, from morning till evening, with courage and delight. It makes me eighteen years younger to begin my career afresh, nay, to be obliged to go through a new course of musical and vocal instruction; but, instead of costing me an effort, this state of studentship gives me pleasure. I do not shirk making myself very little in order to become greater; I stoop down, and take a spring, in order to rise as high as possible. Naples is an excellent place for me to gain the Italian accent, and get into the Italian ways; then again, if I must still remain separated for any length of time from my family, Naples is the place which offers the most healthy diversion, without taking into consideration the fact that the air cures sick singers, and must, consequently, be extremely beneficial to those who are well. Besides this, the people are very kind to me. Barbaja insists on my coming out here in Guillaume Tell, and I am only waiting till I have sung enough ih Italian in order to be no longer obliged to sing in French; this is not a joke; the two manners and the two methods are so different, that, in my opinion, no one can sing both just as it suits his fancy. Donizetti supports me with his talent and with the influence his position gives him. His advice is excellent, and I already feel how beneficial it is to me. He treats me as a friend and as an artist, paying me no compliments and suffering no fault to pass unobserved; I sing with him every evening. He corrects me in every turn which smacks of the French style, in every sound which does not agree with the laws of Italian intonation, and, thanks to his frankness, and talent as a singing-master, I hope that, in a month or two, I shall not be recognisable. I shall not be satisfied with people's saying, 'He sings in Italian very well for a Frenchman;' I mean them to say, 'Any one would take him for an Italian.' These are lofty pretensions, are they not?

"Adieu, my dear friend; think of me and write to say how far you have got on with your opera. I remain the whole summer in Naples. My address, &c.

"Ad. Nourrit."

---

wife calmer, and my sister fell round my neck with joy on hearing my decision.

"I have never striven to obtain great wealth; as, however, I have five daughters to provide for, I wish to place my retirement from the stage in such a light before the world as to command as much respect and consideration as possible. My present position is, on this account, especially favourable to me. All who love me approve of my intention; your approbation alone is wanting. I trust that you will not make me wait for it long, and that you will permit me to reckon on it beforehand.

"Farewell, my dear friend; if my reasons do not convince you, do not be in a hurry with your answer, for I am certain that in the end you will agree with my views.

"Yours with all my heart,
"Ad. Nourrit."

Letters to the Editor.

BELLISLE'S MARCH.

SIR,—Returning lately in one of the mail steamers from Brazil, some of our passengers were Welsh emigrants, who had been wrecked on that coast, and were on their way home to England. On the calm evenings they entertained us with singing as part songs their national melodies. Amongst these was the air of which I enclose my own reminiscences. My recollection of it is most imperfect, but it will be sufficient to enable any of your readers to recognise it who happen to know the original, which, to my mind, is one of the most beautiful national melodies extant.

I have searched the music shops of London, and consulted all ordinary collections of Welsh melodies; but I have hitherto failed to discover any air resembling the one I send you. I myself, and I think all musical people to whom the air is unknown, will be glad if any of your correspondents can say what the air is, and where it is to be found. The Welshmen informed me that the English name was "Bellisle's March." They gave me also the Welsh name, but this I cannot remember. I can only recollect that the burden of the Welsh words related to a goose and a gander, which appeared to me a sorry subject for so pathetic a melody.

Pimlico, Sept. 26th. J. G.

QUERY?

SIR,—Do you think, say in a few years, that we shall get through an English festival without being obliged to call in Mesdames "this" and Signors "that," not because they sing better or have better voices, simply because they are not English? Now, at the Worcester festival they got on WELL—at least it was supposed they did—and had not even a foreign conductor to put them right. Now, Mr. Editor, how was it done, and was it true that more cash for the charity was taken than for some years past? Now, is it not a pity that we do not help our own people, not that I dislike the foreign artists? On the contrary, I like them in the Italian season, and enjoy an Italian opera as much as an English one; but we ought not to be obliged to have them all the year round. Now, poor Mr. Smith at Her Majesty's cannot get on without making it half and half. WHY do our poor English singers put up with it?

This is from one that loves music, and hears all she can afford to pay for. I should have sent this before, but I could not find out if you were an Englishman or not; and glad enough I was to find that prince of papers was edited by an Englishman. I have posted this in London, that you might be sure to get it, and put it in your paper for the good of the singers.

A TO A?—OR C TO C?

SIR,—Having seen the account of the presentation of a seven-octave piano to Dr. Miller in the MUSICAL WORLD, will any of your readers inform me, through the same source, whether the compass is from A to A or C to C? The latter would be preferable, and I find they are, with the little makers, creeping into stock; and, as a natural consequence, the larger makers must follow suit.

Your obedient servant,

PIANO.

MEYERBEER, &c.

BY C. L. G.

THREE Dinorahs! The first at the Théâtre de l'Opéra Comique in Paris, on the 4th of April, 1859; the second at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, on the 26th of July, 1859; and the third at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, on the 3rd of October, 1859. Three successes in French, Italian, and English, within six months! Three remarkable displays of executive skill, by artists of three countries! Who is the mighty magician whose potent spells have so fascinated and charmed such varied audiences as those assembled in London and Paris? Whose music is this that has so penetrated into the deepest recesses of the soul? Who is the musician whose privilege it is thus to bring nationalities together within one sympathetic and united circle—the domain of the lyric drama? Who has established this bond of union between two capitals on the neutral ground of art influence? Can any hesitation exist as to the composer whose works alone can account for the affinity? It is scarcely necessary to repeat here the name of Meyerbeer; it must at once suggest itself. He is now the master of the lyric world. He has revolutionised the lyric drama, as much as Beethoven revolutionised the symphony. "Let Meyerbeer," wrote in 1811 his friend and fellow-student Weber, "only go forth in the paths of art, exercising the perseverance, assiduity, and discretion so manifest in him hitherto, and in his genius we may prophesy a rich ripe fruit." Weber's prophecy has been fulfilled; but even he could not have anticipated the extent to which Meyerbeer's invention and imagination have progressed. In his career there has been no finality. Germany gave him theory and technicalities, Italy inspired him, and France consolidated the transformations in his school and style, destined to produce the masterpieces which the entire world now claims as the triumphs of lyric art. It has been a work of time with Meyerbeer. His blanks were drawn in the springtide of life; his prizes have become more valuable as he has advanced to the winter of his days. He is now in his sixty-sixth year, for he was born in Berlin in 1794, and yet musical Europe is anxiously waiting for his next grand opera, convinced that the culminating point in his career has not yet been reached, and that even another phasis of development may be expected from his ever-enduring fancy, matured judgment, and inexhaustible resources. With Meyerbeer music is both a faith and a mission. He looks upon the past as a mere apprenticeship—a beacon for the future—an incentive to go on—to ameliorate, to refine, and to purify. With this innate persuasion, he will not trust to chance and the chapter of accidents. He scorns to trade on his name—to presume on his popularity. He must have his artists; he must prepare his public. He must be sure of his venture; he will not risk a reverse. A failure would kill him—he never could survive a defeat. His sensitiveness is the result of conscientiousness; hence his exactions from executive skill, his delays, his hesitations. Before the vessel is launched he will modify the form, alter the details. He has begun with a cockboat sometimes—he has left off with the construction of a ship of the line. Nothing will he neglect to accomplish a great end; the most minute details will not escape his vigilant eye, for with him it is not the ear alone which makes the opera. M. Henri Blaze de Bury, in his admirable article, De l'Esprit du Temps àpropos de Musique, has cleverly pointed out that Meyerbeer has gone beyond thorough bass and double counterpoint in his new system. It is not with him a succession of ordinary and commonplace sensations—a mere tune-grinder; but, like Beethoven, it is a regeneration of musical forms in design, colouring, orchestration, and combination—novel elements of effects and ensemble—ideas well expressed by M. de Bury as "extra musical." On these points we have something to urge, and for this reason, namely, that Meyerbeer has exercised on the lyric drama of this country a most powerful influence. To him do we owe the vitality of the Royal Italian Opera, which, happily for art progress, has survived feud and fire; and to the eventual triumph of this enterprise, under Mr. Gye's courageous and clever combinations, are we indebted for the establishment of an English opera-house, under the able direction of Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison, which bids fair to realise what has been so long a dream—a national opera on a permanent basis. To appreciate accurately the great strides art has made in this country, it will be necessary to go back for half a century, to follow rapidly the brilliant career of Meyerbeer abroad, and to show how at last his works have brought about such important changes at home.

It is fortunate for art that Meyerbeer had rich parents. His father was Beer the banker; his brothers were William Beer, the celebrated astronomer, and Michael Beer, the author of the tragedies Paria and Struensée. Giacomo Meyer Beer adopted the two latter names as one—hence he has been known as Meyerbeer. His musical gifts manifested themselves from earliest childhood. At five years of age he improvised on the pianoforte; at six he played at amateur concerts; at nine he performed in public; the Musical Gazette of Leipzic criticising him not merely for his manipulation, but also for the elegance of his style. The pianist Clementi became his master, as also Bernard Anselm Weber, leader of the Berlin opera orchestra. Struck by a fugue in eight parts, written by Meyerbeer at fifteen years of age, the Abbé Vogler accepted him as a fellow-pupil with Winter, Ritter, Carl Maria Von Weber, &c. After a musical tour with his teacher, Meyerbeer, at seventeen years of age, was appointed composer to the court of Darmstadt. Religious music seems to have been his earliest predilection. He composed two oratorios, God and Nature for Darmstadt and Berlin, and Jepthah's Daughter for Munich. Both works were comparative failures, if such terms can be applied to the reception of compositions by a youth of eighteen. Dry scholastic forms—the fruit, no doubt of the drilling by the contrapuntist Vogler—were the characteristics of Meyerbeer's earliest attempts at writing. On his pliant mind every novelty and style made an impression. Thus, at Vienna, he became as much enamoured with the charm of Hummel's pianoforte playing, as he had been previously impressed with the dignity of Clementi's style. He practised for nine months, and then created such a sensation that Moscheles assured Fétis the historian, Meyerbeer might have become one of the greatest pianists of the age. It is a happy circumstance that his attention was turned from his pianoforte pursuit. He was not successful in his first opera, Abimelech; or, the Two Caliphs, produced at Vienna when he was nineteen: although Weber subsequently tried it at Prague, and it met with great favour. It was at the advice of Salieri that Meyerbeer left Germany for Italy, to study the mechanism of the human voice. At Venice he heard Rossini's Tancredi, which converted him at once to the Italian style. Rossini little contemplated, at that period, he would write William Tell for the Grand Opera in Paris, and that his style would undergo as great a transformation as that of Meyerbeer. Les extrêmes se touchent. The two great composers are firm and fast friends. On a fine sunny day on the Boulevards—and when is there not one in that charming rendezvous?—Rossini and Meyerbeer are seen walking and chatting together; the former, with his never-ceasing vivacity, rallying perhaps his fidgetty companion on his over-anxiety to secure an unexceptionable execution of a new work on his excelsior principle. Let us, however, leave the laughing philosophical musician, and his sedate, serious, and uncompromising brother in art, and return to Italy. Meyerbeer's contact with Rossini caused the production at Padua, in 1818, of a semi-serio opera, called Romilda e Costanza, written especially for the celebrated but ill-looking contralto, Mad. Pisaroni, a cantatrice not altogether forgotten in this country. The work gave an immediate status to the composer amongst the Italians, confirmed by his subsequent works, Samiramide Riconosciuta and Emma di Resburgo, the former written for Carolina Bassi at Turin, in 1819, and the the latter for Venice, in 1820. Emma di Resburgo came into collision, the same season, with Rossini's Eduardo e Christina—Berlin versus Pesaro—but Emma stood the shock; nay, more, she left the Lagunes for the Rhine, and the Germans hailed her with the same delight as the Italians, to the great disgust of Weber, who was always strongly opposed to the Italian style, and "pitched" into his fellow-pupil without remorse. Weber lived long enough, however, to recognise the peculiar direction which the genius of Meyerbeer was taking; although the death, in London, of the gifted composer of Der Freyschutz and Oberon took place in 1826. Passing over a manuscript opera, La Porte de Brandebourg, written in 1821, for Berlin, but never performed, it was in the following year that Margherita d'Anjou was brought out by Meyerbeer, at the Scala, in Milan, a work which went the round of Europe. Levasseur, the French basso, who was so identified afterwards with Meyerbeer's operas in Paris, sang in the Margherita. In 1823, L'Esule di Granata appeared in Milan, Pisaroni and Lablache being the leading interpreters, a duo between them in the second act creating unbounded enthusiasm. Meyerbeer then visited Rome, and wrote an opera for Carolina Bassi, Almansor; but, owing to her illness, it remains in the composer's portfolio. After a brief return to Germany, he went again to Venice, and at the close of December, 1824 (not 1825, as erroneously recorded by Fétis), the Crociato in Egitto was first represented, the libretto by Rossi. The principal parts were sustained by the famed Veluti, Crivelli, Bianchi, and Mad. Méric Lalande, the mother of Mlle. Méric, the contralto, married to one of Lablache's sons. The Crociato was the second stage in the development of Meyerbeer's genius. His individuality commenced to be a tangible reality. The Crociato had the same effect on musical Europe as Weber's Der Freyschutz. After Venice, it was at Trieste that the magical success of the new style was indicated. Nothing was heard on the shores of Illyria, Etruria, and Adria, but the airs of the Crociato. Signor Villa was the contralto, but he was far inferior to Veluti; Signora Canzi, and Signora Carolina Bassi, soprani; Signor Tacchinardi, tenor; and Signor Bianchi was the basso. There was a torchlight procession and a military demonstration in honour of the composer. We dwell on these details, for the Crociato was our first impression of Meyerbeer's music. We cannot forget that it was to the late Mr. Ayrton, a scholar and a gentleman, an admirable critic, and a classic manager, this country is indebted for the introduction of the Crociato; the same Mr. Ayrton, be it never forgotten, who, in the palmy days of the King's Theatre (the Italian Opera), first produced Mozart's Don Giovanni in England. Veluti was engaged for his original part, being thirty years since a Musico had appeared at the Opera House. Veluti took great pains with the Crociato, and he trained for their respective characters Mad. Caradori Allan and Mlle. Garcia (Malibran), Mad. Castelli, Curioni, Crivelli, and Remorini. It is related in Ebers' book that the event was regarded with such interest, that the late Duke of Wellington had a large dinner party at Apsley House, the amateurs of distinction present afterwards going in a body to applaud the Crociato, which ran to the end of the season, producing for ten successive representations immense receipts. Such was Meyerbeer's first introduction in England, and for years his music was known in our concert-rooms by the gleanings from the Crociato, amongst which is the captivating canzonette and terzetto, "Giovinetto Cavalier," sung at the last Royal Academy concert in July, in honour of the composer, who sat beside the lamented founder of the institution, the good and generous patron of art, the friend of artists, the late Earl of Westmoreland. The revival of this work has been recently promised at the Italian Opera in Paris, although it was not so successful when first brought there, in 1826, as in Italy and England—Rossini's star being then in the ascendant in the French capital. The Crociato, to our minds, would bear resuscitation here. Our reminiscences of this work are those of very youthful amateurship; but we are still impressed with its melodious flow of ideas, and the fire and animation of its concerted pieces. The Harmonicon, and the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, in their notices of the Crociato, in 1825, wrote in the most eulogistic terms; one passage from the last-mentioned organ so rightly appreciates the composer, that it merits quotation:—"If a man unites the fulness of the German harmony with the grace of the Italian melody; if he collects the antecedents which are scattered here and there, and uses them to new and better purposes and effects; if he accumulates imagery, introduces unexpected, bold, and beautiful transitions; converts an ornament into an exclamation of passion, or gives an outline which a singer of expression fills up magnificently,—the man who does all this at this time of day, we say, must be considered as an original and highly-gifted genius. And such we esteem Meyerbeer." The above might be written in 1860 as well as in 1825.

(To be continued.)

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (Saturday), October 13, will be repeated Macfarren's new and highly successful Opera of ROBIN HOOD. The music composed expressly for this theatre by G. A. Macfarren. The scenery by William Beverley and assistants. Robin Hood, Mr. Sims Reeves; Sir Reginald de Bracy, Mr. Santley; Hugo, Mr. George Honey; Allan-a-Dale, Mr. Parkinson; Little John, Mr. Bartleman; Much, Mr. Patey; Alice, Mad. Lemaire; and Marian, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington. Conductor, Mr. Charles Halle. On Monday, October 15, will be repeated Verdi's Opera of IL TROVATORE. Leonora, Mlle. Titiens; Azucena, Mad. Lemaire; Il Conte di Luna, Signor Briani; Ferrando, Signor Vialetti; and Manrico, Signor Giuglini. Conductor Signor Arditi. To conclude with the new ballet divertissement of ORFA. On Tuesday, October 16, will be repeated (for the third time) Macfarren's new and highly successful Opera of ROBIN HOOD, with Sims Reeves, Santley, Honey, Lemaire, and Sherrington. On Wednesday, October 17, first night of IL DON GIOVANNI: Titiens, Vaneri, Parepa, Gassier, Vialetti, Castelli, Hermanns, and Giuglini. Reduced prices:—Pit Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; First Circle, 4s.; Second Circle, 3s.; Upper Box Circle Seats, 2s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Gallery 1s.; Gallery Side Stalls, 1s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 3s. Private Boxes: Upper Box, to hold four persons, 10s.; Private Box, third tier, to hold four persons, £1 1s.; Private Box, second tier, to hold four persons, £1 11s. 6d.; Private Boxes, Pit, first and Grand Tiers, two, three, and four Guineas. The Box-office of the theatre open daily, from 10 till 5 o'clock, under the direction of Mr. Nugent. Acting Manager, Mr. Mapleson. Stage Manager, Mr. R. Roxby.

Marriage.

On the 2nd instant, at St. Peter's, Isle of Thanet, Henry Cipriani Potter, eldest son of Cipriani Potter, Esq., to Fanny, third surviving daughter of G. W. K. Potter, Esq., Secondary of London.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1860.

ITALIAN Opera has of late years become almost as popular in the provinces as in London. No autumn, or winter, is now allowed to pass away in the principal towns of England, Ireland, and Scotland, without a visit from the song birds of the sunny south. Time was when, the great theatre in the Haymarket having closed its doors for the season, the singers took immediate flight to Paris, St. Petersburg, Vienna, or some of the Italian States, where their services were imperatively called for. Now, on the contrary, when the operatic year is over, many of the principal artists hasten neither to Paris nor Germany, to Italy nor Russia but prefer taking their course to the capitals of Ireland and Scotland, or to the large manufacturing towns of England, where, we have no doubt, they meet with far greater success, in a monetary sense, than in any of the continental cities. Why they prefer this country to any other is simply because they are better paid. It does indeed seem extraordinary that towns with no artistic reputation attached to them should be able to compete, in the engagement of celebrities, with Naples, Milan, Turin, Venice, Vienna, or Madrid. At this moment, when nearly all the principal Italian theatres in Europe have their doors open, an operatic company with Mesdames Grisi and Viardot and Signor Mario at their head are performing in the provinces, and Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini have just returned from a provincial tournée to commence a new season at Her Majesty's Theatre. The number of operatic singers who come to London is doubtless more than doubled since the opening of the Royal Italian Opera in 1846, and this gives entrepreneurs a greater chance of securing efficient artists for the country. Nevertheless, when all is surmised and the reasons sifted, we may, without violence, infer that the growing taste for Italian music is the principal cause of the establishment of Italian opera in the provinces.

The Italian performances this year in the provinces have been more than usually important and significant. Signor Verdi's Macbeth—one of his latest, and, if we are to trust continental reports, most powerfully dramatic operas—has been produced at Liverpool, Dublin, Glasgow, Manchester, and other towns with unequivocal success. Whatever the merits of this work, coming from the pen of the most popular composer of the day, it should not have been left to provincial managers or enterprising speculators to introduce it to the English public out of London. What has Mr. Gye been about, what Mr. E. T. Smith, both of whom are so deeply indebted to the author of Il Trovatore, Rigoletto, La Traviata, &c.? Moreover, that great artist, Mad. Viardot, who of late years has so strangely been overlooked by Italian, French, and English impresarii, has been starring in many towns in the three kingdoms, with a success that really—if we are to accredit the local journals—may be denominated "unprecedented." Hear the Liverpool Journal of last Saturday, speaking of her performance of Azucena in the Trovatore:—

"The greatest performance of the night, however, was Madame Viardot's Azucena. We have never witnessed on any stage a more splendid triumph of acting. The house was perfectly electrified by it; all that feeling of awkwardness which is apt to arise in one's mind at the opera in hearing men and women sing their feelings and hold passionate dialogues in music completely disappeared, and for the moment no allowance needed to be made for stage illusion; it seemed perfectly natural and necessary for the old gipsy to do exactly what she did. Nothing could be felt except the intense frenzy with which her every nerve appeared to vibrate; and the best compliment to the music is to record that even that passed unnoticed and unregarded whilst the wonderful paroxysms of rage lasted. It is only when thoroughly appropriate music meets with a thoroughly dramatic interpreter that such effects can be produced; in any other case either the singer spoils the music, or the music dwarfs the singer. We know of no living actress, unless it be Ristori, who, even without the additional difficulty of having to sing through it all, could have approached the abandon which Viardot threw into these passages; and those who could make the most promising attempt would have lessened its effect by the absence of that ineffable gracefulness which preserved this great artiste, even in the wildest moments of her frenzy, from the least appearance of exaggeration. Madame Viardot was as remarkable in every part of the performance as she was in these great bursts of power; and, it is quite unnecessary to say, sang the music perfectly."

Are Azucenas so plentiful * that a singer and actress like Mad. Viardot is not a negotiable commodity in the music

* There are already two of them at the R. I. O., and four of them at H. M. T. Six of them is enough. We want Mad. Viardot for something better than a shrieking old gipsy.—"Sub." market? We fear the directors of the Italian Operas do not always satisfy their subscribers in their selection of representatives of the gipsy mother. But Mad. Viardot obtains no engagement nevertheless. In a character immeasurably beyond that of Azucena, Lady Macbeth, in Signor Verdi's Macbeth, to the production of which at Liverpool we have just alluded, Mad. Viardot has obtained equal honour and praises.

"The one great redeeming feature of the performance," writes the Manchester Guardian, "was the perfect and splendid performance of Madame Viardot Garcia. It will readily be conceived by those familiar with that lady's histrionic powers, that the character of Lady Macbeth falls peculiarly within her range. While goading on her less bold partner to the murder of Duncan, the subtlety and dark cruelty of the woman were truthfully interpreted; nor less striking was her power when her husband, the 'deed being done,' glares in blank horror at his blood-stained hands, and she scornfully bids him look away—'Storne da questo il ciglio.' Madame Viardot's crowning effort was rightly reserved for the sleep-walking scene. It was indeed a fearful realisation of the poet's purpose; and she received a well-deserved meed of applause."

A slight difference of opinion must certainly exist between the London and provincial public, or between London and provincial managers, when an artist lauded to the skies for her singing and acting by one is entirely ignored by the other. We are not sufficiently philosophers to find out the cause, but must leave it to time to unravel. How different in the case of Grisi and Mario, Titiens and Giuglini, whose successes everywhere have been nothing more than the echoes of their metropolitan triumphs.

Musical attraction in the provinces, however, has not been confined to Italian opera. Mr. Charles Hallé's Grand Concert at Manchester was a great event, although somewhat dulled by the non-appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves, whose duties at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the rehearsals of Robin Hood, precluded the possibility of his singing in Armida, which had been looked forward to with so much interest by all classes of Manchestrians. The Ninth Concert of the Philharmonic Society at Liverpool was another noticeable affair, at which Grisi, Viardot, and Mario sang, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 was executed.

Verily speculation is rife in the provinces, and metropolitan managers must not look to preserve a monopoly in Italian singers as they were wont to do in the olden times. Fortunately for the freedom of song, our country cousins have been taught to know the difference between a ballad and a cavatina, between a shake and a roulade, and hence Grisi or Titiens, Mario or Giuglini, is as welcome to a Hull or Bradford audience as to an audience metropolitan.

LAST week we published an article enjoining operatic managers to practise economy in their manner of producing new works. Some may imagine that this was only an ingenious way of flattering them, for as a class they are not remarkable for any particular recklessness in theatrical expenditure. But we meant precisely what we said. At such establishments as the Académie Impériale of Paris, and our own Royal Italian Opera, the directors give too much new scenery and too little new music. We would not willingly accuse them of prodigality, and we have no doubt that they bargain in a proper commercial spirit for their stage magnificence, and purchase it on the lowest possible terms; but they fancy the public is to be taken by the eye more readily than by the ear, whereas we maintain that to take it by the ear is the great point, and that once having it by the ear, the manager may hold it as long as he thinks fit. It has often been said, and in a particularly loud voice, by J. J. Rousseau, and after him by R. Wagner (who has borrowed every idea that he possesses), that "opera" does not mean exclusively a musical work, but a musical, poetical, and spectacular work all at once; that "opera," in fact, is "the work," par excellence, to the production of which all the arts are necessary. The very titles of the earliest operas prove this notion to be as absurd as we all feel it to be. The earliest Italian plays of a mixed character, not being constructed according to the ancient rules of tragedy and comedy, were called by the general name of "opera," the nature of the "work" being more particularly indicated by some such epithet as regia, regicomica, comica, tragica, scenica, sacra, esemplare, regia ed esemplare, &c.; and in the case of a lyrical drama, the words per musica, scenica per musica, regia ed esemplare per musica, were added, or the production was styled opera musicale alone. In time the mixed plays (which were imitated from the Spanish) fell into disrepute in Italy, while the title of "opera" was still applied to lyrical dramas, but not without "musicale" or "in musica" after it. This was sufficiently vague, but people soon found it troublesome, or thought it useless, to say opera musicale, when opera by itself conveyed, if it did not express, their meaning, and thus dramatic works in music came to be called "operas." A stupid abbreviation, perhaps, but scarcely more so than that of pianoforte into piano, general officer into general, Oporto wine into port, &c. We have even heard Frenchmen speak of the cornet à pistons as "le piston;" in spite of which a cornet and a piston are two very different things, and so also are the opera, as imagined by Rousseau and Wagner, and the opera musicale of reality. Algarotte's work on the opera (translated into French, and entitled Essai sur l'opéra) is called in the original Saggio sopra l'opera in musica. "Opera in music" would in the present day sound like a pleonasm; but it is as well to consider the true meaning of words, when we find fantastic pedants perverting their signification to suit their own ridiculous theories.

OUR exquisite con-temporary, con-philosopher, con-wit, con-humourist, and com-panion, Mr. Punch, of Temple-bar (outre), is even now, in this year of grace, 1860—or year of luck, "38" (dating the regeneration of criticism from the first volume of the MUSICAL WORLD)—occasionally seized with fits of harmonious madness, or as some might term it, melodious satire, or as others might term it, rhythmical pepsy. His jokes on such occasions assume the shape of sly digs at the shivering aristarchi who are permitted to stand on feet at the "sittings" of the Musical Union (as though for them the director was a monarch—Johnella I.—and the quartets a perpetual "God save"), and quiet pokes at popular Pantagruelism, or enthusiasm, from the æsthetical point of view. When Mr. Punch begins to squeak, however, in a tone of raillery, it may be accepted as an axiom that something wrong, directly or indirectly, de bonne volonté or à rebrousse poil—in Latin, nolens volens—is being perpetrated. Pedantry or mock zeal is sure to offend his nostril (an old inveterate habit of snuff-taking has made of him an uninarine), and invite his pinch. Under such provocation, ordinarily (as the wines of Champagne are reported to say "pish" to every other grape-yield), the ironical bites of Mr. Punch, though tant soit peu "Socratic," verily and truly—as our peninsular-snipping (and "vivacious") neighbours have it—"font nargue à toutes les autres morsures. From divers sharp sentences—which might have been traced by the "trenchant glaive" with which Sir Gawaine and his brethren slew King Pellinore, or by the point-kissing extremities of the shears of the Parcæ, and which Mr. Punch has put forth earlier or later in the current of this same year of luck, "38—" it is clear that he is at intellectual odds with the present style, or want of style, of musical criticism now obtaining in the ancient city of King Lud. Mr. Punch finds our reviewers either too affectedly profound or too profoundly affected, and girding up his loins, brandishes a spear pointed with venom and dipped in gall, smiting one after another under rib No. 5. The aim of the "Notice of a Street Concert," reprinted by ourselves—ante, vol. 27, page forgotten (we quote from memory)—was not to be mistaken. Still less open to conjecture was an article intituled Classical Pantomime Quartets, which we declined to reprint under the (then existing) circumstances, but which—Time having more or less softened its asperity—may peraunter (Head-printer * volens) find an out-of-the-way corner in our actual impression. Since then the doors of our office have been shut to further extracts of a similar "kidney," for reasons which fully account for the occlusion of portals previously patulous. But now in the very recentest issue of Mr. Punch's square sheet, which, up to the point under cited, we had perused with hungry avidity, we are compelled to note a return to the old sin. As Sir Launcelot, after failing to "achieve the Sancgreall" (or Holy Pot), returned to his old passion for Queen Guenever, so Mr. Punch, after having failed to roast the musical critics, has returned to his old passion for spitting their technical vocabulary.

Our hook-nosed brother would now place in the index expurgatorius the Italian terms of "obbligato" and "tremolo." Read his Erasmic quirk:—

THY VOICE, O HARMONY!

Conductor—"Heasy with them bones, Bill."

Bones—"But I'm a playin Hobligarter."

Conductor—"Well, I didn't say as no yer wasn't; but yer needn't go and drownd my Tremerler."

We have enclosed this mordant Juvenalium in a mourning frame. Is our contemporary about to follow at the obsequies of his own vivacity? Or whence this Naninaric crunch?

"Neuviémement"—as our absorbing (and "volatile") neighbours say—(we omit the first eight protests); neuviémement—what language would Mr. Punch have our musical reviewers entertain? Would he make of them neologists? or reduce them to the dimensions of the necydale? Seriously, does he consider that ignorance of the terms which musicians use to express the forms and conditions of their art is a recommendation to the critic's office? Would he revive (in this fleeting period of "revivals") those "palmy" days when the report of a new opera consisted of a column of plot, a half column of scenery and decorations, a quarter column on the performers, and half a line on the music? That Mr. Punch is no less a stiff reformer than a griping satirist and an oily-headed citizen, none will deny; but it is a new manner of reforming to disturb the grave of the past, and rake up the bones of old-exploded error. There can be nothing absurd in the use of appropriate terms, while speaking or writing of any subject whatever—even music. The ridiculous side of technical expressions (unless they are misemployed) is beyond our observation. Why, then, should they be used as pegs upon which to hang the gibus of gibing, or the mackintosh of merry-punchism? The little boy in the squares was wont to cry (he don't now, since Lord Brougham has been "abroad") "Parley wow," to the ambulant alien. Mr. Punch, even in his nonage, much less in his teens, was never that little boy—far from that little boy! Yet, we put it to his wisdom,—what is there to laugh at in obbligato? what in "tremolo?" what in "C major?" what, we will venture so boldly as to inquire, in "D minor?" These terms express what can be intelligibly expressed by no others (let Mr. Punch himself try). They are sans synonyme, "every each one," therefore not legitimate ground for pleasantry. "Op. 20," too means the 20th work ("Op." is the short for Opus, as Mr. Punch's Latinity may have helped him to detect); "Op. 30" signifies the thirtieth work, neither more nor less. Where then is the joke, or rather the point of it, so frequently iterated, of "Q minor," "Z major," "Op. 926," and "Op. 9,000,000? If there were as many keys as there are letters in the alphabet, or if any composer lived and wrote long enough to produce nine million operas, "Z major," would very aptly express the key of a piece in the key of z major, and "Op. 9,000,000 precisely designate the nine-millionth work of that extremely prolific composer. No one quizzes a painter for calling red "red," blue "blue," an easel "an easel," a brush a "brush," a pallet a "pallet," or—we may even go so far as to add—Green Bice, "Green Bice," Burnt Sienna, "Burnt Sienna," and Burnt Umber, "Burnt Umber. Green Bice, Burnt Sienna, Burnt Umber! Here are themes to pun and play upon! Veuillez les aborder — cherissime Monsieur Punch? Our critics are not all angels, we admit; nor, on the other hand, are they all getæ; but if they must be roasted for calling C "C," and Op. 50 "Op. 50," they may just as well "slope" into some other arena for bread-winning. At any rate, C major does NOT mean radish, nor Op. 50 a hole in the wall; they mean exactly what they express. Not less explicit are "tremolo" and "obbligato." To conclude—when A is flat, B (according to the theory of J. M. Langford) being sharp, discusses how C may make A natural. In other language (that of the late Canon Smith)—"When A is in difficulties, B begins to consider what C ought to do for him. Quod est to be demonstrated. "ENTER ROMMI."

PETIPACE OF WINCHILSEA.

* There is no Latin for Head-printer, as there were no printers, head or heel, in Latium.—Printer's Devil.

MR. CHARLES BRAHAM leaves London on Monday for Italy, where he is about to make his appearance on the stage, for the first time, as a baritone singer.

DEPTFORD.—(From a Correspondent.)—The concert at the Lecture Hall, under the patronage of Capt. C. H. Buckle, R.N., Superintendent of Her Majesty's Dockyards in this town, took place last week; and as the profits were to be given to aid the band fund of the Royal Dockyard 27th Kent Royal Volunteers, it was not surprising to see a very numerous and elegantly dressed audience assembled. The programme consisted of modern songs, duets, &c., together with some pieces from the well-known Scotch repertoire of the Misses Bennett and Mr. Angus Fairbairn, who assisted on the occasion. The audience were very enthusiastic, and insisted on encoring a great number of pieces, among which, as deserving especial notice, we may name "The Death of Nelson," sung with great spirit by Mr. George Tedder, and Rossini's "Largo al Factotum," given with immense activity and a deal of comic humour by Mr. Leonard, who also sang Wallace's "Bell-ringer." Miss Rebecca Isaacs and Miss Jane Palmer were the principal lady vocalists. The former, among other things, sang a new "Rifle" song composed expressly for her by Mr. Hodgson, and the latter the ballad of "The Skipper and his Boy." Some instrumental pieces were included in the programme, among which were a duet for two flutes on "The Last Rose of Summer," executed by Messrs. Hardy and Nightingale, and a violin solo by Mr. E. Saunders, who are all members of the 27th Kent Volunteer's Band. Mr. H. Parker was the accompanist at the pianoforte.

SAVED BY A DRUM.—The drummer boy of the Milwaukee Light Guard was saved from the wreck of the Lord Elgin by means of his drum. He had presence of mind sufficient to whittle a plug and close the air vent, then lashing the drum to his shoulders he trusted himself to the waves. The drum supported him, and also four others who seized hold of it; but these, one after another, dropped off. The drum carried the boy nearly ashore, when by some means one head was burst in and it filled with water. The boy abandoned it, and seizing a fragment of the wreck succeeded in reaching the shore. The drum afterwards came ashore, and was returned to the boy whose life it had saved.—New York paper.

The Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Mr. E. T. Smith is in the position of a skilful sportsman who shoots with a double-barrelled gun. If one barrel miss fire the other is sure to hit—that is, provided the aim be straight and the gun properly loaded. But sometimes, even with these provisions, though the hand be steady and the sight be clear and well-directed, though the powder be from the best mills and the shot be undeniably spherical, the object is not hit, or hit to no purpose. The bird flies away unscathed and leaves the sportsman to lament over his bad luck, for what sportsman would admit that the failure was to be attributed to himself. Mr. Smith has fired his double gun this week—one barrel on Wednesday night and one on Thursday—with such deadly effect, as to have bagged the public in large numbers on both occasions. The English barrel was to have been fired off on Monday night, when the season was announced to be inaugurated with Robin Hood, but in consequence of the ammunition not being prepared, the shooting was deferred until Thursday, and sportsman Smith fired off the Italian barrel on Wednesday, bringing down an immense flock at long range. It was not to be wondered at, indeed, considering that the gun was loaded with such piercing pellets as Mlle. Titiens, Signor Giuglini, Signor Vialetti, Mad. Lemaire, &c., &c. To drop metaphor, however, Mr. E. T. Smith's "Anglo-Italian Company," according to one morning contemporary, or, according to another, the "Grand Coalition Company," opened the campaign on Wednesday with the Trovatore in Italian, the principal singers being Mlle. Titiens, Mad. Lemaire, Signors Giuglini, Vialetti, Francesco Briani, Soldi, &c., &c. The only new appearance was Signor Briani. This gentleman, who sustained the part of the Count di Luna, must not be judged by his performance on Wednesday, seeing that he was labouring under the effects of hoarseness. He seems to be an experienced artist, and acted with considerable fire and animation. Of the performance generally, it is only necessary to say that Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini were in great force; that Mad. Lemaire displayed much energy in the part of Azucena; that the band and chorus are just the same as during the regular opera season; and that Signor Arditi presided in the orchestra. The theatre has undergone considerable alterations. A capacious and handsome balcony has been erected in front of the grand tier, and several boxes on the first, second and third tiers are thrown open, and made into dress and undress circles. Moreover, the amber curtains have faded away before the crimson which were used last year in the cheap season, and all the splendid pile carpets have been removed to make way for less expensive and perishable oil-cloths and matting.

A greater and more legitimate success than that achieved by Mr. Macfarren's new opera, Robin Hood, on Wednesday night we never witnessed. The crowd was immense, the excitement unusual, and expectation on tiptoe. That Mr. John Oxenford was the author of the libretto gave a new interest to the performance, and all the musicians and poets in London, and many far from London, were in their places anxious and expectant long before the curtain rose. Moreover, the cast of parts presented an unusual attraction in itself. Mr. Sims Reeves, who, except during his annual visit to the National Standard, in the oriental suburbs, has not appeared for years on the London boards, was to play the principal character, and Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, who never appeared on the stage at all, was to make her début. Mr. Santley, too, and Mr. George Honey, from the Royal English Opera, were both included in the cast, as were also, from the same company, Messrs. Bartleman and J. E. Patey, and Mr. Parkinson, the tenor, a real Armstrong great-gun with the audiences at Canterbury Hall, Weston's, and the Pavilion Theatre in Whitechapel. To these were added Mad. Lemaire, whose pretensions as a contralto singer are by no means dispicable. With all these causes of interest it was no wonder, indeed, that the excitement was very great and the congregation immense.

We are not going to criticise the music on the present occasion. A general notice of the performance is all we feel called upon just now to render. The story of Robin Hood is not, we believe, taken from any of the many ballads and legends appertaining to the stalwart freebooter of Sherwood Forest, all of which may be perused in Ritson's Collection. Mr. Oxenford's plot is entirely his own, and a very merry and exciting plot it is, clear to follow, natural in its incidents, with an appropriate and striking dénouement. The story may be thus detailed:—

The scene is laid in the High-street of the city of Nottingham, where a number of armourers are actively engaged at their trade, while a party of women are occupied with the spinning-wheel, and a little harmless flirtation is carried on by Allan and Alice. The name of Robin Hood is soon mentioned with terror, and Alice records one of the recent exploits of the celebrated outlaw. Presently Robin Hood himself appears, under the assumed name of Locksley, and addresses Marian, the Sheriff's daughter, as an accepted lover. The greetings of the young pair are overheard by the Sheriff, who declares that he will gladly take Locksley as his son-in-law if he will prove his skill in marksmanship at the fair, which is to be held on the following day. At the same time he issues a proclamation, offering a reward for Robin Hood, in the name of Prince John, little suspecting that the outlaw is the same person as the apparently wealthy yeoman, Locksley. The Sompnour, who has collected from the peasantry the dues of the neighbouring abbey, applies to the Sheriff for a guard to assist him through the forest. Accidentally perceiving Allen, who is in arrear with his dues, he demands immediate payment; and the poor fellow being unable to comply, is ordered to the stocks by the Sheriff, who invites the Sompnour to the castle. This proceeding is deemed so tyrannical by the multitude, that it almost occasions a tumult, when Locksley, coming forward, pays Allan's dues, and thus liberates him from the Sheriff's retainers. As the sun sets, the Sompnour, accompanied by the Sheriff's escort, commences his homeward journey, while Marian and Locksley take leave of each other, exchanging protestations of fidelity and affection. Already has Locksley, to test the heart of Marian, asked her if she would still love him were he placed in the same situation as the prescribed Robin Hood, and has been told that her affections are beyond the reach of all worldly considerations.

The second act opens in the greenwood, near the trysting-tree, where the outlaws commonly hold their meetings. The "merry men" are reposing from their toils beneath the light of the moon, and anticipate, with much delight, a feast on the fat buck which some of them are roasting in the forest. Robin Hood making his appearance, informs Little John of the proposed journey of the Sompnour through the forest, and arranges a plan for entrapping him. The outlaws conceal themselves behind the brushwood, while Robin Hood, Little John, and Much, the miller's son, attire themselves as shepherds, and attend to the roasting of the deer. The Sompnour entering, orders the Sheriff's retainers to seize the three supposed shepherds, on the charge of stealing the king's venison. With affected humility they supplicate for mercy; and when this is sternly refused, Robin Hood, throwing off his disguise, sounds his bugle. The Sheriff's retainers fly in turn from the numerous archers who start from every nook of the forest, and capture the astonished Sompnour, whom Much proposes to hang on a tree without further deliberation. Robin Hood, more merciful, invites the Sompnour to supper, at the same time making him pay largely for the repast, by dividing among the band the money contained in his sack, which is taken from his shoulder, and emptied into a huge cloak by Little John. Much reiterates his proposition for hanging the plundered man; but

Robin Hood declares that all such cruelty shall be dispensed with if the Sompnour will dance for the amusement of the band. With the dance, and the loud laugh of the outlaws, the scene closes. The second scene represents Marian's bower. She watches the dawn of day, imploring Heaven for the success of her lover at the approaching trial of skill. Alice entering, assists her in making preparations for the ensuing fair. The Sheriff, who expresses his sympathy with his daughter's wishes, receives an unexpected hint from Much, the miller's son, who states that Robin Hood will be at the fair, and offers to betray him for the promised reward; but he is soon interrupted by the Sompnour, who recognises him as the most sanguinary of the band, and he is at once taken to prison. Having heard that Robin Hood is to be at the fair, the Sompnour himself prepares to discover him, assuming for that purpose the disguise of a mendicant friar, and the Sheriff heartily approves the plan. The fair, held outside the town, is represented in the third scene, with its various appurtenances of sport and pastime. The Sompnour vainly endeavours to discover Robin Hood among the assembled throng, but is soon perceived by the outlaw himself, who is present in his assumed character of Locksley, and persuades Allan to get the intruder out of the way. At Allan's suggestion the Sompnour is blindfolded and hustled off by a party of merry girls, who are amusing themselves with the game of "Hoodman Blind." When he is removed the archery match begins, and Robin Hood, who can now make his appearance with impunity, defeats all competitors. The prize is bestowed upon him by Marian herself, and the happiness of the lovers seem complete, when the Sompnour, suddenly returning, denounces the victor as the notorious Robin Hood. The Sheriff instantly commands the seizure of the outlaw, and the act closes amid general dismay.

Of act the third, the first scene represents the castle garden. Allan and Alice lament the fate of Robin Hood, who is to be executed on the morrow. The Sheriff, who requires from King Richard I. (newly returned from Palestine) a warrant for the death of the outlaw, is indignant at Allan's refusal to go for the document; but is taunted by Alice, who informs him that his daughter Marian has escaped from the apartment in which she has been confined. The Sompnour, who comes to claim his reward for the apprehension of Robin Hood, and likewise a compensation for the loss of abbey dues, is told that he must first procure he required warrant, a duty which he readily undertakes to fulfil. The "merry men" are then shown in the greenwood, wondering at the long absence of their chief. Marian, who enters the wood disguised in boy's clothes, is at first attacked by the outlaws; but she soon reveals to them her real character, and exhorts them to follow her to the castle, in which he is confined, and to give him notice of their proximity by singing one of their most familiar airs. In the third scene, which represents the dungeon, Robin Hood is seen awaiting his fate. At first his case appears desperate, but new hopes are kindled by the voices of Marian and the outlaws, which are heard from without. The last scene is the place of execution. Robin Hood, brought from the castle, and exhorted to confess his sins, requests that his right hand may be set at liberty—a request which is no sooner granted, than he sounds his bugle, and summons his faithful followers, who, headed by Marian, release him from the custody of the Sheriff, to the joy of the surrounding multitude. The outlaws are in their turn overpowered by the force which accompanies the Sompnour, and Robin Hood's case again seems hopeless. But the document brought by the Sompnour proves not to be a death-warrant, but a pardon to the outlaw and all his band, on condition that they enter the service of the king. The Sheriff now consents once more to the union of Robin and Marian, and the piece terminates amid general rejoicing.

The distribution of parts was as follows:—

Robin Hood, Mr. Sims Reeves; the Sheriff of Nottingham, Mr. Santley; Hugo, the Sompnour, Mr. George Honey; Allan-a-Dale, Mr. Parkinson; Little John, Mr. Bartleman; Much, the Miller's son, Mr. Paey; Maid Marian, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington; and Alice, Mad. Lemaire.

The pieces which received most applause on Thursday were the overture, encored and repeated; the duet for Locksley and Marian, "When lovers are parted," exquisitely warbled by Mr. Sims Reeves and Mad. Sherrington; song, for Marian, "True love, true love in my heart," the subject of which is frequently employed throughout the opera; Locksley's song, "Englishmen by birth are free," magnificently sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, who refused to accept the encore called for by the entire audience; the finale to the first act, commencing with the round, "May the saints protect and guide thee;" Robin Hood's song, "The grasping, rasping Norman race," another splendid piece of vocalisation by Mr. Sims Reeves; the whole fair scene at Nottingham, a masterpiece throughout; Locksley's ballad, "Thy gentle voice would lead me on," the most graceful and flowing air in the opera, and given to perfection by Mr. Sims Reeves; the finale to the second act, the most elaborate and powerful composition in the opera; and Locksley's grand scena in the prison. These are by no means all the good pieces, but they appeared most to enlist the sympathies of the audience. Perhaps there is nothing more charming in the opera than the trio in the last scene, "By all the love that you have shown me," for Marian, Robin Hood and Sheriff, which, we feel assured, will become as popular as any thing in the whole work.

Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington literally took the audience by storm, not only from the brilliancy and exquisite finish of her singing—which everybody was prepared for who had heard her in the concert-room—but from the ease, animation, and reality of her acting. A slight awkwardness in certain situations excepted, Mad. Sherrington was perfect mistress of her movements and gestures, every one of which seemed instinct with purpose and meaning. That the lady had studied stage tactics off the stage we are bound to suppose, or she is indeed the most extraordinary and gifted actress who ever trod before the foot-lights. Regarding her début from any point of view, a greater acquisition than Mad. Sherrington has not been made by the English operatic stage for many years. Of Mr. Sims Reeves it is impossible to speak too highly. He was never in finer voice, never sang more magnificently, nor, in the course of his lengthened career, did he ever create a more profound impression. The music of Robin Hood is extremely varied, and whether as the sentimental lover wooing Marian, as the free-born Saxon denouncing foreign oppression, or the doomed outlaw in the gaol, lamenting his approaching fate, thesinging of Mr. Reeves was equally admirable.

Mr. Santley sang the music of the Sheriff splendidly, and Mr. Honey made one of the hits of the performance by the humour he infused into the part of the Sompnour. The scene when the outlaws rob the Sompnour and then make him dance for his dinner, was, in Mr. Honey's hands, irresistibly comic, and created roars of laughter. Mad. Lemaire and Mr. Parkinson sustained the small but important parts of Alice and Allan-a-Dale with tolerable success.

All the artists were recalled after the acts, and at the end Mr. Smith had to come before the curtain, and Mr. Macfarren to bow from his box in obedience to an enthusiastic summons from all parts of the house.

We cannot close our notice without expressing in unqualified terms our admiration of Mr. Charles Hallé's services in the orchestra.

THE LATE WORCESTER FESTIVAL.

(From the Worcester Journal.)

A comparison of the numbers attending our late festival and the visitors at Norwich Music Meeting last week is flattering to Worcester. The highest number that attended any performance at Norwich, was on the last morning, when 1,650 persons went to hear the Messiah. On the corresponding morning of the Worcester Festival, 2,416 persons were present in our Cathedral. The festival at Norwich commenced on Monday, finishing on Friday; whereas the Worcerter festival did not begin until Tuesday, nevertheless the aggregate of the Worcester attendances made up 8,534 persons, while Norwich stopped at 7,832, although there were two novelties given for the first time—the oratorio Abraham, and Mr. Benedict's new cantana Undine. In addition to the supplementary donations to the fund of the Clergymen's, Widows' and Orphans' Charity, announced in our last Journal, we may state that a further sum of 20*l.* has been contributed by Mr. E. P. Shirley, M.P., and that G. J. A. Walker, Esq., has given a donation of 1*l.*, making the total collection to this time 1,198*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.*

We learn that this morning the accounts of the honorary secretary of the late festival (Rev. R. Sarjeant) have been audited, as usual, by J. W. Isaac, Esq., preparatory to the final meeting of the stewards; and we have the gratifying announcement to make that, after meeting all the expenses of the festival, there is the unprecedented result of a surplus of 66*l.* 5*s.* 4d. This will have to be added to the amount already invested to the credit of the Worcester charity. An additional donation of 10*l.* 10*s.* has this week been sent in by T. Chalk, Esq., one of the stewards of the festival, making the total amount received for the charity (independent of the surplus already mentioned) no less than 1,209*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*

Further a Correspondent writes:—

I thought you would like to know the exact result of our Festival, and as everything connected with it is completely wound up, I am enabled to send you full particulars.

The expenses of the Festival being a little more than 200*l.* above those of 1857, when there was a deficiency of 352*l.* 10*s.* to cover present expenses without a call upon the Stewards, there had to be received for sale of tickets over and above the "take" of last Festival those two sums united, 554*l.* I am glad to inform you that there is a surplus of 66*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* The collections for the Charity are also most gratifying, amounting to 1214*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.*, which exceeds those of Gloucester of 1859, the largest till now, by 71*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*

ROBERT BROUGH IN LIVERPOOL.

Having been intimately acquainted and on the most friendly terms with the late Robert Brough when he lived in Liverpool, and noticing that the memoirs of him, which have been published by G. A. Sala and others do not afford much information as to the origin and commencement of his literary career, I am induced to try and throw a little light upon the facts connected with his residence in the "good old town." I first became acquainted with poor Brough on the day that the Birkenhead Docks were opened, when I was introduced to him by a mutual friend, Mr. G. J. Keet, of Renshaw-street, who informed me that they had decided upon starting a local Punch-like publication, under the title of the Liverpool Lion. At this time Brough (several of whose relatives resided in Liverpool) was an artist by profession, gaining a livelihood chiefly by portrait painting. With Brough and Keet I witnessed the various ceremonies connected with the opening of the docks, and when the first number of the Liverpool Lion appeared, I, in company with some few hundreds who had the curiosity to buy it, was astounded at the wit, humour, and fluency of the versified report of the Birkenhead fêtes which Brough wrote. This, his first published literary effort, was written in various metres, and the styles of several of our most popular poets were imitated à merveille. In addition to his literary articles in the first number of the Lion, Brough also contributed several very amusing sketches after the manner of H. G. Hine, and a full page woodcut, à la John Leech, proving himself as smart with his pencil as with his pen. Though literary prophets, more particularly, are rarely honoured in their own country—London, according to English provincial ideas, being the only true literary Zion—the Liverpool Lion soon attracted considerable notice, as its contents were found to be very superior to all previous local attempts to imitate the great Punch, and much curiosity was excited as to the identity of the contributors. By degrees, the Lion gradually became to be talked about, for Brough attacked local abuses in a style of trenchant humour, and with a cutting, scorching satire, to which our local magnates were unaccustomed, and men, whom the ordinary sledge-hammer style of denunciation could not move, began to wince at the keen and polished witticisms—pictorial and literary—of the Lion, the circulation of which gradually increased, and for many months reached as high as 1,500 a week. This was, indeed, something wonderful in those days for a local periodical, devoid of news, appealing to no sectional class, capable of being appreciated only by persons of education, and costing also at one time 2d., and at another, 3d. a number. By degrees Robert Brough gradually became recognised as the editor of the Lion, and, to the credit of our townsmen, I am happy to state that the rare literary talents of the poor unknown artist were promptly appreciated by many of them in various stations of society, and that he soon succeeded in gaining a perfect "troop of friends." The Lion (commenced about 1846-7) was, I believe, in existence about two or three years, and during that period Brough was the editor and principal contributor to it, and, in fact, the life and soul of it. He was assisted by his brothers William, Lionel, and John (the two latter then being quite boys), as well as by several local writers, but all the principal articles, particularly those wonderful parodies of Chaucer, which he never surpassed in the days of his metropolitan fame, were written by Brough, who also always sketched the large "cuts," though he received much artistic assistance at times in connection with the smaller ones, from Mr. Keet, and a gentleman named Fletcher. Several laughable stories might be told in connection with the Liverpool Lion. Brough, like many wits, including poor Hood, was ever delicate and ailing, and I never knew any one who was such a perfect martyr to dyspepsia in its worst form. Then, again, he had no business habits, and like Charles Mathews, he "never did to-day, what he could put off till to-morrow." The natural consequence of all this was, that the poor publisher (Horridge, of Fenwick-street) was often at his wit's end for "cuts" and literary "copy," particularly when the day of publication drew ominously nigh, and nothing was "set up." On these occasions Brough and I, frequently at the last moment, rushed up to the printing office determined to make a decided effort to put a stop to the printers' importunities. We first looked over the correspondence, and sometimes, but rarely, out of fifty contributions, we would find one (with a few alterations) up to the mark. We then read over the newspapers, and consulted as to what portion of their contents was available food for fun; and, as a last resort, Brough would often take up a song-book—always kept at hand in his desk—and, after looking over it for a few minutes, and humming different airs, he would fix upon one, and quick as the pen could move in his fingers, he would write a parody on it,—so closely adhering to the sound and spirit of the original that, spoken hurriedly, it required a quick ear and a keen sense of the humorous to detect the imitation from the reality. In fact, as a parodist, Brough was sui generis; and for neatness and wonderful mastery of language his imitations of the poetical chefs-d'œuvre of our principal writers are unsurpassed. On one occasion, being anxious to obtain correct portraits of some of our leading public men, he went into the Council Chamber amongst the reporters, and he had just "hit off" a worthy alderman, when he noticed that his presence had excited the attention of the august assembly, and after a whispered colloquy amongst some of the local rulers of that day, Mr. Samuel Holme came up to him and said that his early retirement from the Council Chamber would, perhaps, spare him some annoyance. Brough thanked the worthy alderman (who was, we believe, one of his warmest admirers), and telling him that he had got all he wanted, he left the Mayor and his confrères to pursue their deliberations without the fear of a "chiel" being "amang them takin' "—portraits—for Mr. Earle, Mr. Parker, and other local "big-wigs," were to the Liverpool Lion what Brougham, Peel, Palmerston, and others have been to Punch. In the next number of the Lion this incident was the ground-work of a very funny article, illustrated by a sketch of old Solomon (the keeper of the Town-hall in those days), accompanied by the members of the Corporation, searching the vaults of the Town-hall for the Lion,—as Guy Faux was looked for in the Houses of Parliament. In the latter numbers of the Lion, Brough commenced a series of papers in imitation of "Lamb's tales from Shakspeare," which he intended to collect and to publish in a book, with additions. The portions contributed to the Lion were excessively clever and witty, and it is a pity the writer did not carry out his intentions, though these "Lion's tales" were doubtless the origin of the famous "Life of Sir John Falstaff."

While connected with the Lion, Brough frequently took part in various amateur performances, and his first appearance on the Liverpool stage, was at the Theatre Royal, when a corps of local amateurs played The Twelfth Night and Taming the Shrew, for the fund raised to purchase Shakspeare's house. In these pieces he played Sir Andrew Aguecheek and Petruchio, and in the former character, more particularly, he displayed considerable original quaint and comic humour. For this performance he wrote a very clever epilogue, which materially increased his local literary reputation. He was also at this time much sought after in society—to the detriment of his health—and in domestic circles, his child-like simplicity, his fondness for innocent fun, and his wit and humour made him a general favourite. On these occasions he often sang a medley song of his own, called "Cinderella," which was quite equal to many of his better known compositions. He never saw it in print himself, but, from my own recollection and those of some of our mutual friends, I have got it printed for circulation amongst those who knew him, and who often heard him sing it with what critics call "great éclat." From a variety of causes which those initiated in the mysteries of publishing can easily imagine and appreciate, the Lion—not from any falling off in circulation—ceased one fine day, and the editor found himself under the necessity of doing something decided to earn a livelihood. Urged by his numerous friends, he resolved to return to London, where his family resided, and where the fame of his talents had, to a certain extent, preceded him. I may here remark, that it is a mistake to speak of the Broughs as Liverpool people. Robert alone resided for a few years in Liverpool. His father (also, in his early youth, a dramatist and littérateur), having failed as a brewer in Wales, owing to the Chartist riots, returned to London, and at the time I first knew Robert, he was an accountant and connected with the financial department of the Illustrated News, in the printing-office of which journal, William Brough was also employed. Mr. Brough père had two brothers, one of whom was formerly known in London and the United States as a vocalist. The other has been for many years, I believe, connected with a mercantile business in this town.

But to return. Before leaving Liverpool, Robert Brough's friends determined to mark their appreciation of his literary talents. A handsome gold watch and chain were purchased by subscription, and these, with an appropriate inscription engraved on the watch, were formally presented to "Bob," as he was always called by his friends, at a public dinner at the Brunswick Hotel, which was attended by the principal resident "gentlemen of the press," and his numerous admirers of all classes, —Mr. Dignan being in the chair, and Mr. Wintle acting as the vice-chairman. From my intimacy with Robert Brough, I was aware of his fondness for all "things theatrical," and I had often urged him to devote his talents to dramatic composition; but he always distrusted his own powers, and said that if he did write anything for the stage he could never get a manager to look at it. I thought otherwise; and, strangely enough, I had the pleasure of being mainly instrumental in getting the "Brothers Brough" an order for their first burlesque. One day I met the well-known manager of our theatre, and, in the course of a conversation, I asked him why the provincial managers did not produce original pieces at intervals as their brethren in London were obliged to do, at the same time expressing an opinion which I have long maintained (and I still do so) that such a course of policy would, in the end, benefit all parties concerned—the public, managers, actors, and dramatists. After discussing this question for some time, Mr. Copeland said, "Well, if you'll write me a piece—say a burlesque—I'll promise to read it, and, if suitable, I'll produce it and pay for it." I replied that I had no talent that way, but that I knew friends who were quite capable of writing a burlesque, and who would be delighted at such a proposal. Mr. Copeland told me I might repeat his offer to Robert Brough. I did so. Robert and his brother set to work at once, and the result was the Enchanted Isle, decidedly the freshest and wittiest (though perhaps somewhat unpolished) burlesque ever produced on the English stage. The "Brothers" came down to superintend the production of the Enchanted Isle, and the excitement consequent upon its first performance aroused a degree of interest rarely felt in Liverpool with regard to theatrical matters. The piece was placed on the stage with splendour and liberality; all concerned acted con amore, and the result was a "hit," which far surpassed the expectations of both the authors and the "management." After a successful "run" of the Enchanted Isle, the authors took a benefit, themselves playing Box and Cox in the famous farce of that name. They had a splendid house, and in every respect the novel experiment of producing an original burlesque in a provincial theatre far surpassed their most sanguine hopes. At that time Mr. Webster (then the lessee of the Haymarket and Adelphi theatres) was "starring" at the Theatre-Royal, and knowing that his connection with Planché (who wrote his burlesques) was likely to cease, I went to him at his hotel, and strongly recommended him to engage the services of the Broughs. He said that he could not get to see the Enchanted Isle himself, but if my opinion of its merits was corroborated by those of other friends, he would follow my advice. He did so, and soon afterwards the Enchanted Isle was produced at the Adelphi Theatre in London. It was a decided triumph for the "Brothers;" and from that day forward their literary history is too well known to need mention here.

Both William and Robert Brough married sisters—Annie and Elizabeth Romer—the daughters of Mr. William Romer, of Tarleton-street, in this town, and the sisters of Mr. Travers—once a favourite tenor, and of Mrs. Ansdell, the wife of the well known animal painter. William's wife—(whose performances as Amina, Maria (Daughter of the Regiment), and Giselle at our Liver Theatre during the management of Mr. Howard Glover, at one time excited the highest hopes of all lovers of the English art), died shortly after her marriage; but poor Robert's wife, with the burden of several young children, lives to mourn the untimely death of her highly gifted husband, cut off in the prime of his life and the meridian of his literary career. On behalf of this poor widow and her helpless family, have the London Savage Club and our Literary and Dramatic Society appealed to our townsmen: and though London, Manchester and Liverpool, have each contributed liberally to the "Brough Memorial Fund;" yet I would fain hope that hundreds who have conscientious objections to all things theatrical, and yet who cannot but admire the exquisite poetical talents of Robert Brough, will contribute their mite to it; and I am sure Mr. Charles Millward, the local secretary to the fund, will gladly receive donations however small. Poor Brough himself was "open as the day to melting charity;" and if my imperfect and hurried mémoire pour servir of his Liverpool career excites the sympathies and generosity of any readers and subscribers of the once popular Liverpool Lion, I shall be amply repaid. The talents of Robert Brough—I have reason to know—were considered, in the literary world, to reflect honour on Liverpool, and Liverpool cannot afford to ignore such a compliment. We ought to repay it with interest.

J. H. NIGHTINGALE.

Advertisements.

MAD. CATHERINE HAYES begs to announce her Return to England for the Season. All communications respecting Concerts and Oratorios to be addressed to 13 Westbourne Park, W.

MAD. OURY has RETURNED to Town, to her new Residence, 3 LINDEN GROVE, BAYSWATER, W.

MR. WALLWORTH begs to inform his pupils, friends, and the public that he has REMOVED to 61 PARK STREET, GROSVENOR SQUARE, W.—The Second Edition of his "Art of Singing" is just published, and may be had at his residence.

HERR ENGEL begs to announce that he has REMOVED from Bentinck Street, to No. 71 NEW BOND STREET, W.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON has RETURNED to Town for the Season.—Letters, for town or country engagements, to be addressed to 24 HOLLES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

MLLE. MARIA DE VILLAR begs to announce her RETURN from the Continent.—All communications for Concerts, Oratorios, and Lessons, to be addressed to her residence, 10 MANCHESTER STREET, MANCHESTER SQUARE, W.

THE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C.—A.D. 1834.—The TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT, Cash Account, Balance Sheet, &c., are now ready, and may be had on written or personal application.

CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

BUCKLEY'S AMERICAN MELODIES.

"I'D CHOOSE TO BE A DAISY," as Sung by the Buckley Serenaders, and all their Copyright American Melodies, are only published by Messrs. Hopwood & Crew, 42 New Bond Street. The Original Buckley Serenaders and Miss Julia Gould (from 585 Broadway, New York, U.S.) will make their First Appearance in London at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Monday Evening next, 15th October, at 8 o'clock, and a Day Performance on Saturday at 3. Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Places may be secured at the Libraries, Music-Sellers, and at Mr. Austin's, Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed, as its name implies, expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24 Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147.—May now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

NEW PIANO MUSIC, by ADOLPHE SCHLOESSER.

MOZART'S BATTI, BATTI . . . . 3s.
VEDRAI CARINO . . . . 3s.
HAYDN'S MERMAID'S SONG . . . . 3s.

Brilliant but not difficult Drawing-room Pieces.

London: Ashdown & Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,

Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,

DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,

And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK FOR 1861 will be issued early in December, Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Advertisements, Lists of Music, Names and Addresses of Professors and the Trade must be sent in before the 12th November, to Rudall, Rose, Carte, & Co., 20 Charing Cross.

SANTA LUCIA, by WILHELM GANZ. A brilliant and effective Transcription for the Piano of this Popular Air. Price 3s. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel and Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

JOHN FIELD'S SIX CELEBRATED NOCTURNES, edited by Franz Liszt. Price 2s. each. London: Ashdown and Parry (successors to Wessel & Co.), 18 Hanover Square.

KULLAK, LES ARPEGES.—This celebrated piece, played by Mr. Charles Hallé with immense success, is published by Ashdown and Parry, 18 Hanover Square, London.

MUSIC ROOM,

HOLYWELL STREET, OXFORD.

THIS ROOM, built expressly for Music, and acknowledged to be admirably adapted for sound, has been entirely renovated, and can now be engaged for Concerts, Lectures, &c.

Particulars may be obtained on application at the Room.

NEW SONG BY MRS. BLANCHARD JERROLD.

"FOR EVER AND FOR EVER."—Song written by ALFRED TENNYSON, to whom it is dedicated by MRS. W. BLANCHARD JERROLD.

From the Illustrated News: "Tennyson's exquisite lyric has been as exquisitely set to music by Mrs. Jerrold."

From the Illustrated Times: "The charming little poem of 'The River' has inspired Mrs. Blanchard Jerrold with a very beautiful melody which will henceforth be associated inseparably with Tennyson's words. The air is gracefully harmonised, and, altogether, this is one of the happiest musical 'illustrations' of Tennyson that has been produced."

London: Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

LAURENT'S KILLARNEY WALTZ ON FAVOURITE IRISH MELODIES, illustrated, price 3s. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

LAURENT'S MARGARETTA WALTZ on BALFE'S Popular Song is in the same style as the Maud and Beloved Star Waltzes. It is superbly illustrated in colours. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

KUHE'S ROBERT LE DIABLE. 3s.

KUHE'S DOMINO NOIR. 3s.

KUHE'S ZAMPA. 3s.

KUHE'S DINORAH 3s.

KUHE'S SATANELLA. 3s.

KUHE'S SATANELLA VALSE. 4s.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL-ROOM MUSIC-BOOK. Price 4s. handsomely bound, contains Fifty Waltzes, Forty Polkas, Ten Galops, Two Varsovianas, Two Schottisches, and Twelve Sets of Quadrilles. By popular composers, being the cheapest and most entertaining collection of music ever published. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BEDOUIN GALOP, by R. MINTON TAYLOR, is one of the best Dancing Galops ever published. It is illustrated in colours, price 3s. In the press for Military, Brass and String Bands.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

GOLLMICK'S DRIPPING WELL (Sixth Edition) for the Pianoforte. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

GOLLMICK'S FANISKA (Second Edition) for the Pianoforte. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT

OF

FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,

IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY

DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,

Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,

TO BE SOLD AT

ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,

BY

MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,

28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.

MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.

VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.

VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.

FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.

CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.

HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.

VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.

Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.

THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.

Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.

Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—A New Series of SHILLING BOOKS of VOCAL and PIANOFORTE MUSIC.—Eight Books are now ready.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:

"We had imagined that the extreme point in cheap music had long since been attained; but that we were in error is proved by the present publication, which consists of a series of shilling quarto volumes embracing the best music of the best composers at a price below anything yet published; admirable in typography, correct in the text, and as excellent a production as the musician could possibly desire, it is really a marvel of cheapness. In one volume we have twenty of Mendelssohn's songs; in another, twelve of Balfe's most popular songs; another embraces fourteen songs from Verdi's favourite operas; whilst another gives twenty of the Christy minstrel songs—so much for the vocal. The instrumental is no less extraordinary; for in one book we have fifty waltzes, chiefly by Laurent, Gungl, and Tinney; another gives twelve quadrilles, by D'Albert, Laurent, Nordmann, &c.; another, fifty polkas and galops; and another contains twenty-five of Verdi's gems for the pianoforte. Now, as all these are given at a shilling a volume, and as they are clear, distinct, and admirably printed, it is certainly an event in musical publishing, and will attract much attention, as it affords every musician an opportunity of having the best music at the smallest price."—News of the World, Sept. 30th.

"Eight numbers have been forwarded to us of a work, called "Boosey's Musical Cabinet," which is a perfect marvel of cheapness, and is, moreover, brought out in as good a style as if four times the money were charged. It will scarcely be believed that No. 1, price one shilling, contains twenty of Mendelssohn's songs, not a cramped printing of the mere melodies, or an arrangement of them for pianoforte or other instrument, but the actual songs, with English words, either original, as in the case of the setting of some of Byron's lyrics, or translations by Messrs. Desmond Ryan, John Oxenford, and George Linley, and with pianoforte accompaniment. The printing is clear, the paper is good, and the size convenient. No. 2 contains twelve songs by Balfe, including some of the settings of Longfellow; No. 3, fourteen by Verdi; No. 4, twenty of the Christy's Minstrel's songs; and Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 contain pianoforte music, thus assorted—fifty waltzes, twelve sets of quadrilles, fifty polkas and galops, and twenty-five favourite morceaux from Verdi's operas. Thus all tastes are consulted, and we can confidently predict for the 'Musical Cabinet' a great success."—Sunday Times, Sept. 30th.

"FOR EVER AND FOR EVER," Song by TENNYSON, to whom it is dedicated by Mrs. JERROLD.

"A delicious melody."—Illustrated Times.

"Exquisitely set to music."—Illustrated London News.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE ARION EIGHT-PART CHOIR.—The Members meet every Thursday Evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13 Berners Street, W. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. Prospectuses may be obtained.

F. F. RIELLY, Hon. Sec.

THE ARION AMATEUR ORCHESTRA.—Four First Violins, Four Second ditto, Two Violas, and Two Violoncellos are required to form the nucleus of a First Class Amateur Orchestra, which will meet for practice on Saturdays as soon as the requisite arrangements are made. Particulars of the Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT, 13 Berners Street, W.

THE ARION.—In connection with this Society it is intended to establish Classes, conducted by eminent Masters, for Pianoforte and Singing, under the direction of Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. Prospectuses will shortly be issued.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC.—LEFEBURE-WELY'S SIX OFFERTOIRES. Op. 35. Edited by WILLIAM REA. 3s. to 5s. each. HENRY SMART'S ORGAN PIECES, introductory to the characteristic difficulties of the Instrument. Nos. 1 and 2, each 3s. 6d. London: Ashdown & Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

GUINEA EDITION OF BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

To be Published Next Week, in Two Volumes, Handsomely Bound in Cloth, Price 10*s.* 6*d.* each,

BEETHOVEN'S
SONATAS FOR THE PIANOFORTE,

EDITED BY W. DORRELL, ESQ.

Of the Royal Academy of Music,

WITH

LIFE OF BEETHOVEN BY G. A. MACFARREN,

AND

PORTRAIT BY J. LYNCH.

THIS COMPLETE EDITION OF THE SONATAS

Will be found the most perfect and correct of any published.

It is Beautifully Printed on the Best Paper from newly Engraved Plates.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.

		Page
SONATA. Dedicated to Haydn.	No. 1.—Op. 2.—F Minor	1
SONATA. Dedicated to Haydn.	No. 2.—Op. 2.—A.	12
SONATA. Dedicated to Haydn.	No. 3.—Op. 2.—C.	28
SONATA	Op. 7.—E Flat	46
SONATA. Dedicated to Mad. la Comtesse de Browne.	No. 1.—Op. 10.—C Minor	64
SONATA. Dedicated to Mad. la Comtesse de Browne.	No. 2.—Op. 10.—F.	74
SONATA. Dedicated to Mad. la Comtesse de Browne.	No. 3.—Op. 10.—D.	84
SONATA PATHETIQUE. Dedicated to Prince Lichnowski.	Op. 13.—C Minor	100
SONATA	No. 1.—Op. 14.—E.	112
SONATA	No. 2.—Op. 14.—G	120
SONATA. Dedicated to le Comte de Browne.	Op. 22.—B Flat	133
SONATA, with FUNERAL MARCH. Dedicated to Prince Lichnowski.	Op. 26.—	150
SONATA QUASI UNA FANTASIA. (Known as the Moonlight Sonata) Dedicated to the Countess Giulietta di Giucciardi.	No. 1.—Op. 27.—C♯ Minor	165
SONATA QUASI UNA FANTASIA. Dedicated to the Princess de Lichtenstein.	No. 2.—Op. 27.—E Flat	176
SONATA PASTORALE. Dedicated to M. de Sonnenfels.	Op. 28.—D.	188
SONATA	No. 1.—Op. 31.—G.	206

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.

		Page
SONATA	No. 2.—Op. 31.—D Minor	226
SONATA	No. 3.—Op. 31.—E Flat	244
SONATA	No. 1.—Op. 49.—G Minor	262
SONATA	No. 2.—Op. 49.—G.	268
SONATA. Dedicated to Count de Waldstein.	Op. 53.—C.	274
SONATA	Op. 54.—F.	298
SONATA APPASSIONATA. Dedicated to Count de Brunswick.	Op. 57.—F Minor	306
SONATA. Dedicated to Mad. la Comtesse de Brunswick.	Op. 78.—F Sharp	330
SONATA	Op. 79.—G.	338
SONATA CARACTERISTIQUE. Dedicated to the Archduke Rodolphe.	Op. 81.—E Flat	346
SONATA. Dedicated to Count Maurice Lichnowski.	Op. 90.—E Minor	358
SONATA. Dedicated to Mad. la Baronne Dorothea Ertmann.	Op. 101.—A.	370
GRAND SONATA. Dedicated to the Archduke Rodolphe.	Op. 106.—B Flat	384
SONATA. Dedicated to Mlle. Maximiliana Brentano.	Op. 109.—E.	420
SONATA	Op. 110.—A Flat	434
SONATA. Dedicated to the Archduke Rodolphe.	Op. 111.—C Minor	448

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, October 20, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 43 SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1860 PRICE {4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

List of Music in G. A. MACFARREN'S New Opera,

ROBIN HOOD,

AS PERFORMED AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Opera complete, in cloth folio . . (net) £1 5 0

The following Pieces are published separately:

ACT I.

	s.	d.
BALLAD—"The hunters wake with the early morn," Alice with Chorus ...	2	0
DUET—"When lovers are parted," Marian and Robin (published in A flat and in F) ... ... each	2	6
SONG—"A dark and troublous time is this," (Sheriff)	2	6
BALLAD—"True love," (Marian (in B flat or in G)	2	0
SONG—"The monk within his cell," (Sompnour	3	0
SONG—"Englishmen by birth are free," Locksley, with Chorus (in G) ...	2	6
Ditto (without Chorus, in E flat)	2	0
ROUND—"May the saints protect and guide thee," Alice, Allan, Sheriff, and Sompnour	3	0

ACT II.

FOUR-PART SONG—"The wood, the gay greenwood," Chorus of Men (separate voice parts, 6d. each)	2	6
TRIO—"A good fat deer makes lusty cheer," Robin, Much, and Little John	2	6
SONG—"Confusion to the Norman," Robin Hood with Chorus (in E flat) ...	2	0
Ditto (without Chorus, in B flat)	2	0
SCENA—"Hail! happy morn," and "Power benign," Marian	4	0
AIR—"Power benign," (printed separately from the above, in F, and with a second stanza)	2	6
DUET—"To the Fair, to the Fair," Marian and Alice (in C or in B flat) ...	3	0
BALLAD—"From childhood's dawn," Sheriff (in A flat or in G)	2	0
BALLAD—"My own, my guiding star," Robin (in D flat, in B flat, or in G)	2	0
QUINTET—"My heart from its terror reposes," Marian, Alice, Locksley, Allan, and Sheriff	2	6

ACT III.

DUET—"Greatest plague on earth is love," Alice and Allan	3	0
SCENA—{"My child has fled," and "She has left me to mourn," } Sheriff	4	0
BALLAD—"She has left me to mourn" (printed separately from the above, in G, and with a second stanza)...	2	0
DUET—"To King Richard at once you must go," Sheriff and Sompnour ...	4	0
FOUR-PART SONG—"Now the sun has mounted high," Chorus of Men (separate voice parts, 6d. each)	2	6
Ditto, arranged as a Trio for two Trebles and a Bass	2	6
SONG—"Sons of the Greenwood," Marian with Chorus (in E, or without Chorus in D)	2	0
SCENA—{"Vain was the proud ambition," and "Life to me is no longer dear," } Robin	4	0
BALLAD—"Life to me is no longer dear" (printed separately from the above, in D, and with a second stanza)	2	6
TRIO—"By all the love that you have shown," Marian, Robin, and Sheriff ...	3	0

PIANO-FORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

THE OVERTURE, arranged by E. F. Rimbault	3	6
DITTO, as a Duet ... ... The Author (in the Press)
THE FAVOURITE AIRS, in 3 Books, W. H. Callcot ... ... each	5	0
DITTO, as Duets, in 3 Books, W. H. Callcot ... ... each	6	0
QUADRILLES... ... ... Charles Coote	4	0
DE VOS (Polydore)—Fantaisie-Transcription on "Power benign"	4	0
FAVARGER (René)—Fantasia on Favourite Airs...	4	0
———— "My own, my guiding star"	3	6
RICHARDS (Brinley)—"From Childhood's dawn"	3	0
———— Grand Fantasia	4	0
MACFARREN (Walter) "True love"	3	0
"Life to me is no longer dear," and "Courage fires me"	4	0
BRISSAC (Jules)—Fantaisie de Salon on "My own, my guiding star"	3	6
RIMBAULT (E. F.)—Six Favourite Airs, arranged (easy).—No. 1. "True love." 2. "My own, my guiding star." 3. "From childhood's dawn." 4. "Life to me is no longer dear. 5. "Confusion to the Norman." 6. "Sons of the greenwood ... ... each	1	0

OTHER ARRANGEMENTS IN PREPARATION.

CRAMER, BEALE, AND CHAPPELL, 201, REGENT STREET.

MAD. CLARA NOVELLO'S FAREWELL—most positively her only and Last Appearance in London—will take place at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday evening, November 21st. For particulars see programmes. Tickets to be had of Leader and Cook, 63 New Bond Street, corner of Brook Street.

THE LONDON TONIC SOL-FA CHOIR will give their FIRST CONCERT at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Tuesday, 27th November, 1860. Conductor, Mr. W. S. YOUNG. Admission 1s. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. Sofa stalls, 5s. For further particulars, see small bills.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded Houses every performance. Evening at 8. Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.

MR. GEORGE COLLINS (Violoncellist) being about to proceed on a Continental tour, from which he intends returning at the end of March next, requests that all letters may in the mean time be addressed to him at 24 Primrose Street, Bishopsgate, E.C.

HERR ENGEL begs to announce that he has REMOVED from Bentinck Street, to No. 71 NEW BOND STREET, W.

MISS LASCELLES begs to announce she has RETURNED from the Continent.—All letters for engagements and pupils to be addressed to 34 York Street, Portman Square, W.

MR. W. SEYMOUR SMITH begs to announce his REMOVAL to 5 Great Vine Street, Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, L'ETOILE DU NORD, complete, with English version, by F. H. CHORLEY. Price £1 1s. Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street.

MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, LE PROPHETE, complete—Italian version by S. M. MAZZIONI. Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street.

MEYERBEER'S TRIUMPHAL MARCH, composed for the Schiller Festival. Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street.

Just Published,

TROIS MORCEAUX DU SALON. ZAMORA, ROSETTA'S DREAM and the TOURNAMENT.

Addison, Hollier, Lucas & Co., Regent Street.

VIOLONCELLO to be SOLD, the property of an Amateur. A fine mellow-toned Instrument, in first-rate condition, by NICOLO ALBANI, Antwerp, 1765.—Apply to Mr. John Osborne, Albion Place, Northampton.

NOTICE.

BOOSEY & SONS' New and complete edition of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS, in 2 vols. 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait of Beethoven, will be ready for delivery early next week. Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

JULLIEN FUND.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Coutts; Messrs. Hayward, Rennard, and Co.; the London and County Bank; the Hon. Treasurers, Mr. J. Mitchell, Mr. T. Chappell, and Mr. W. H. Sams; and Shilling Subscriptions to 18th October... ... ... £756 12 2

Amount paid to M. Jullien during his illness, and for his funeral expenses, and debts	£136	7	3
Amount voted for M. Jullien's two adopted children ...	134	0	0
" " " Sister and Nephew	80	0	0
" " " Mad. Jullien	336	7	8
Expenses of collecting books, advertising, printing, postages, &c., &c.	69	17	8
	£756	12	2

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE
Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.
To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a
NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TYNDELL.
Pianoforte	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TYNDELL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute and Piccolo	Dr. TYNDELL.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) Vocal Classes	Dr. TYNDELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DAWSON.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for
THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or
THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.
Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.
Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.
For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.
Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,
Price 8s.
MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,
DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,
And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.
"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.
"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

THE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C.—A.D. 1834.—The TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT, Cash Account, Balance Sheet, &c., are now ready, and may be had on written or personal application. CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

NEW AND CHEAP PARIS EDITION
OF
THE WORKS OF FREDERICK CHOPIN,
Revised and corrected by the Composer's Pupil and Friend,
T. A. D. TELLEFSEN.
FULL MUSIC SIZE, AND PRINTED FROM ENGRAVED PLATES.
Price 8s. per Book, or £4 the Complete Collection in Twelve Books.
CONTENTS:
Book 1.—NOCTURNES.
2.—MAZURKAS.
3.—MAZURKAS (continued) and WALTZES.
4.—POLONOISES.
5.—IMPROMPTUS, Scherzos, and Berceuse.
6.—BALLADES, Bolero, Barcarolle, and GRAND FANTASIA in A flat, Op. 49.
7.—RONDOS, Fantasia on Polish Airs, and TARANTELLE.
8.—SONATAS and Air Allemand varie.
9.—CONCERTOS and Allegro de Concert.
10.—TRIO (Piano, Violin, and Violoncello), POLONOISE and GRAND SONATA (Piano and Violoncello).
11.—PRELUDES, Three Studies, and Variations on La ci Darem.
12.—The TWENTY-FOUR GRAND STUDIES.
LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY, Successors to WESSELL & Co.,
18 HANOVER SQUARE.

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT
OF
FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,
IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY
DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,
Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,
TO BE SOLD AT
ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,
BY
MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,
28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,
In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;
ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.
MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.
VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.
VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.
FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.
CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.
HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.
PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.
VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.
Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.
THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.
Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.
Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK FOR 1861 will be issued early in December, Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Advertisements, Lists of Music, Names and Addresses of Professors and the Trade must be sent in before the 12th November, to Rudall, Rose, Carte & Co., 20 Charing Cross.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC.—LEFEBURE-WELY'S SIX OFFERTOIRES. Op. 35. Edited by WILLIAM REA. 3s. to 5s. each. HENRY SMART'S ORGAN PIECES, introductory to the characteristic difficulties of the Instrument. Nos. 1 and 2, each 3s. 6d. London: Ashdown & Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

Reviews.

BEFORE proceeding to the next number of Messrs. Ashdown and Parry's new issue, it will be as well to say a few words about such of the works of M. Stephen Heller as are not comprised in the collection of that spirited firm, and which have been politely forwarded to us by the Messrs. Schott.

Ops. 1 to 6 of the works of M. Heller consist of sundry Airs Variés, the themes selected from popular authors, and the whole of which were composed between the ages of twelve and fifteen. From a glance at these effusions we come to the conclusion, that, although not without considerable promise and a certain feeling of originality, they do not evince any decided indications of that peculiar and distinguished talent which was later evinced by the composer. They should, nevertheless, be included, if possible, in every complete collection of M. Heller's work, as illustrating a particular point in the progress of his talent as a pianist and composer. Op. 7 consists of Three Impromptus, in which the originality hinted at in the Airs Variés is further and happily developed. In these pieces a boldness of progression is occasionally evinced, not observable in his previous works. Op. 8 is a Scherzo. Here already the deep sentiment and largeness of outline, which subsequently became prominent characteristics in the style of M. Heller, are strongly shadowed forth.

But the first remarkable effort of M. Heller's genius is incontestably the sonata, Op. 9 (Première Sonate, pour piano seul), in which the style of the young composer exhibits a complete and unexpected transformation. What was before merely hinted at, and regarded by the critics as a momentary caprice of the fancy, becomes a prominent feature. The evidence of a recent and enthusiastic study of the works of Beethoven and other great masters is too positive to admit of doubt. The ideas, formerly treated with the minute elaboration of a petit maître, are clearer, simpler, and made to depend more often on their unadorned simplicity. The outlines become wider, and at the same time more consistent, while the general style evinces a feeling of decision which is not impaired even by the profuse manual difficulties that spring from the young writer's unlimited command of the instrument. Altogether this sonata is a work of high interest, as containing the seeds of those peculiarities which have since become such attractive characteristics of M. Heller's manner.

Ops. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 seem to have been written to order. M. Heller's fame had by this time reached Paris, and his music was already considered a marketable commodity by the publishers of that soi-disant centre of modern civilisation. The influence of Paris upon M. Heller was what the influence of Paris has invariably been upon all young composers when they have first experienced it,—deleterious and abasing. We can, indeed, see little in these works beyond a certain readiness in appealing to what is styled so complacently the "popular taste." They are easy and sometimes elegant, but there is nothing in them that any one capable of writing with facility might not have written with facility. They obtained much popularity, however, and for a time their vogue acted as a check upon the original genius of the composer, who did not emancipate himself from the dangerous position in which he stood, until "one fine morning" he produced the Art de Phraser, 24 Etudes, Op. 16, one of the most charming and ingenious of his earlier works.

To return, however, to the edition of Messrs. Ashdown and Parry, which in our opinion those gentlemen would do wisely to further enrich by the addition of those pieces at which we have just now hastily glanced.

Op. 21 consists of another set of Two Impromptus on another melody of Henri Reber (Deux Impromptus sur une Mélodie de Reber—Op. 21)—"La Bergeronnette," a truly charming little pastoral. M. Stephen Heller's partiality to the melodies of Reber is fully excused by the specimens he has chosen for the basis of his caprices and impromptus. There is a freshness about them which now-a-days is rare indeed. Perhaps "La Bergeronnette" is the best of the three. The theme is first given simply—as in the other pieces we have noticed—in the key of A major. The impromptus are both very short. The first is an allegretto con moto in the key of the melody, of which it is a beautiful development. The second, in F sharp minor, also an allegretto con moto, is more fantastic and capricious, more lengthened, interesting, and difficult to play. In both impromptus the pastoral style of the subject is well preserved, the gaiety of the first presenting a happy contrast to the melancholy of the last. In their way we know of nothing more attractive than these ingenious bagatelles, which have the merit of perfect originality.

Op. 24 is an agreeable trifle for young performers. (Petit Bijou sur une Romance de la Chaste Susanne—Op. 24.) The Chaste Susanne is unknown to us. The name of the romance is "Helas! comment dans ma jeune âme?" M. Heller has turned it into a sparkling little rondo in C major, extremely easy to execute. We recommend this strongly to all masters who have young pupils under their care.

Op. 25 is another short piece, but not so easy as the preceding one. (La Kermesse—Danse Neerlandaise). It is a waltz movement in E major, a perfect gem in its way, full of pretty harmonies and graceful passages, as clever and as interesting as the best of Chopin's Mazurkas.

The Art de Phraser, Op. 16, already alluded to, is dedicated to Mlle. Josephine Rist, and consists of twenty-four studies of various lengths, in all the major and minor keys, in the course of which almost every kind of measure and rhythm, simple and compound, is employed. The pupil who diligently practises these studies will soon acquire the most important element of expression—a satisfactory manner of phrasing, without which the utmost mechanical facility becomes cold and monotonous. This is the principal aim of M. Heller in the present work. Each of the studies is a song, more or less elaborately developed, with a peculiar figure of accompaniment. In some the melody is given to the right hand entirely, in others to the left; and is as often divided between the two. Occasionally the song is confined to the bass throughout, occasionally to the top line, and sometimes arranged in the form of duet. Almost every species of figure is employed in the accompaniments, and out of the four and twenty studies there are not two which bear any resemblance to each other. The style is exquisitely finished, and the effects, though various and rich, are never irrelevant to the instrument in which they are composed. Except some of those in extreme keys, the studies are of moderate difficulty, within the reach of performers of moderate pretensions. Viewed in this light alone the Art de Phraser is the most attractive, as well as the most useful, compendium of practice which the pianoforte possesses. It advances the taste of the pupil, while it assists the development of his mechanical capability. At the same time there is quite enough of purely musical interest in them to enchain the admiration of the most cultivated professor of the art. We had entered into a separate analysis of each of the twenty-four studies; but, on further reflection, having so much to say on works of greater length and importance, we have come to the conclusion that the introduction of such minute criticism would be superfluous as well as inconvenient. We may, therefore, leave the Art de Phraser with the general recommendation embodied in the forgoing remarks, backed by the simple asseveration that a more profitable compendium of exercises for the pianoforte, or a better introduction to the elaborate and difficult works of the greatest masters, ancient and modern, does not exist. They teach style and execution together, through the fascinating medium of music, at once simple, expressive and beautiful. Had M. Stephen Heller produced nothing else, the Art de Phraser would alone have sufficed to rank him among the most original and distinguished of modern composers for the piano. Let us hope that this strong and sincere testimony to their value may serve to draw the attention of the professors and students of Great Britain to their merits. The London edition of the Messrs. Ashdown and Parry is divided into four books, each book containing six studies, and of course to be had separately.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Oct. 18.

SINCE my last Mad. Vandenheuvel-Duprez has made her début in another new part at the Grand Opera, that of Lucy in the Bride of Lammermoor, and I may add that her success was in every way as complete as her warmest friends could desire. It is somewhat curious that the association of the name of Duprez with Donizetti's opera dates as far back as the creation and production of the work itself. It was written in 1835 at Naples, for Gilbert Duprez, and on the 9th of January, 1851, it was selected as the medium for presenting Mlle. Caroline Duprez to the public for the first time in the Salle Ventadour, when she appeared side by side with her father, who resumed his old part of Edgar, in order to become sponsor at his daughter's theatrical initiation. The part of Lucy brought good fortune with it then, which, as might be expected, has not deserted it now that it is again essayed with matured talents and all the confidence gained by a series of successes. Mad. Vandenheuvel was recalled at the close of the mad scene, and also after the farewell duet with M. Michot, who was the Edgardo on the occasion. After a protracted delay and a succession of disappointments, Mad. Tedesco has at last made her appearance in Le Prophète, and was warmly received by her admirers.

At the Italian Opera Il Trovatore has been revived, and Mad. Penco made her first appearance this season as Leonora, meeting with a most enthusiastic reception. Mad. Alboni, in Azucena, of strong passions and swart and matronly beauty, shared the chief honours of the evening with the baritone Graziani. M. Pancani, the new representative of Manrico, had also cause to congratulate himself. Without the sweetness of Mario, or the vigour of Tamberlik, he is, nevertheless, a tenor of considerable merit, singing with taste and lacking neither power nor energy. For some time past it had been announced that M. Calzado, the manager of the Italian Opera, had obtained, or was about to obtain, a renewal of his privilege or license. The fact is corroborated by the official announcement that his privilege has been extended to October 1861. It is said that Ronconi has been engaged for ten nights; if the news be true the subscribers are fortunate. The Barbiere is announced for the beginning of November. The cast will include Mad. Alboni, Gardoni, Badiali, Zucchini, and Angelini. Mad. Alboni is also to appear in the Cenerentola, which has not been given these two years. Gardoni, Badiali, and Zucchini will be grouped round her. Two other operas are announced as shortly forthcoming:—Il Matrimonio Segreto and Ernani. MM. Pancani, Graziani and Angelini with Mad. Penco will play the principal characters in the latter.

At the Opéra Comique, now that Sainte Foy has returned, Galathée has been revived, Mad. Ugalde still playing the heroine, while the part of Pygmalion has been taken possession of by Troy. Le Docteur Mirobolan with MM. Coudere, Berthelier, and Lemaire, and Le Petit Chaperon Rouge with Montaubry and Mad. Faure-Lefebvre, still hold on the course of uninterrupted success. Rumour speaks of two new operas recently accepted by M. Beaumont, one in three acts entitled L'Elixir de longue Vie, the other in one, baptized L'Illustre Gaspard. The authors of these two works are respectively M. Duvert and M. Lanzaune, both tried hands, and it is said their productions will be confided to composers of no less experience.

The Val d'Andorre has been revived at the Théâtre Lyrique, where a young pupil of the Conservatoire, Mlle. Ida Gilliess (query, the Caledonian cognomen Gillies?) who last year carried off the first prize, has been making her début in Les Dragons de Villars, with undoubted success. She possesses a mezzo-soprano voice of excellent quality, and deficient neither in charm nor flexibility. At first a paroxysm of stage fright left her scarcely any command over her powers, but in the duet of the second act she had sufficiently recovered herself to make a most favourable impression, and in the grand finale of the third act her triumph was complete. Mlle. Gilliess is said to aim at eventually appearing at the Grand Opera. The new comic opera by M. Aimé Maillart—Nella—is still in rehearsal and is promised for the 10th of next month.

Much is in preparation for the theatres, but as yet little has emerged from the resounding workshops. The Vaudeville is still preparing M. Octave Feuillet's new work, Redemption. In the meanwhile, as a whet to the public appetite, it has produced an amusing little one-act, entitled M. Prosper, by M. de Noireterre. It appeared for the first time on the occasion of Mlle. Marquet's benefit. At the Variétés, a "fantaisie vaudeville," by M. Meilhac, called Ce qui plait aux Hommes, has furnished a laughable rejoinder to M. Ponsard's Ce qui plait aux Femmes. M. Charles Potier is amusing in it, and is well seconded by two new actresses, Mlles. Lejars and Garnier. A popular vaudeville, entitled La Gamine, has also been successfully produced here, and is much indebted to the exertions of MM. Leclèrc and Christian and Mad. Judith Ferregra.

I hear from Berlin that at the Court Theatre it is intended to execute, on the occasion of Schiller's birthday, the 10th of November, the cantata and march composed by Meyerbeer for the great centenary festival last year. During the performance of the march the principal characters in Schiller's dramas will appear on the stage, forming appropriate groups. A dialogue, written for the occasion by M. Pfau, will then be declaimed, and the whole is to wind up with the cantata. The Stuttgart theatre has re-opened with St. John's Night, an opera by M. Pressel. It is said to be the composer's maiden attempt. M. Flotow, I am informed by a correspondent who writes from Schwerin, is engaged on a new opera. The libretto, the subject is said be drawn from the Minne-Saenger, is by M. Emilius Pohl.

There has been a paragraph current in the French papers lately, calling to mind the once celebrated flautist, Drouet, who, at an extremely advanced age, now occupies the post of chapel master at Gotha. His name has chances of becoming historical. It was he who harmonised and orchestrated the now national air, "Partant pour la Syrie," which Queen Hortense had composed; and it is said to have been his brother who, being postmaster at Ménéhould, recognised and arrested Louis XVI. during his attempted flight. The French government has been mindful of M. Drouet's title to its sympathies, and he has lately been presented by the Emperor with a snuff-box set in brilliants, the invariable form in which inscrutably enough Imperial gratitude or favour expresses itself. By what capricious fiction is it supposed that those who have deserved well of their country, or attracted the attention of the rulers of the world by their special merits, should be snuff-takers? I suppose in royal minds there is a special significance attached to a snuff-box, as with the Red Indian the pipe is a direct allusion to peace. As the one talks of smoking the calumet of peace, the other would speak of their protegés as taking the snuff of distinction. But to return to the venerable M. Drouet, I believe he is now in England on a visit to his son, who is educating at York.

Mad. Miolan Carvalho, who is back from her Berlin engagement, sang the other day at the church of Notre Dame de Grace, at Passy, on the occasion of the marriage of Mlle. Amélie Heugel, daughter of the manager of your French contemporary and compeer, Le Ménéstrel, with M. H. Chevalier, the sculptor. The event was especially honoured, and received the highest musical sanction by the presence of Rossini and Auber. Both these great masters of their art expressed their admiration of Mad. Carvalho's talents, as displayed in the Ave Maria of Gounod, in which she was accompanied by the violinist Hermann. M. Lefebure Wély presided at the organ, and M. Nollet played the harp part. This was followed by a Salutaris, the composition of the former, and executed by his wife, the organ being taken by M. Auguste Durand.

THE YANKEE OPERA IN DIFFICULTIES.

(From the New York Herald.)

A few weeks ago, in the course of some comments upon the war between the rival opera companies at the Academy of Music and Niblo's Garden, we took occasion to say that the result of the war could be nothing else than ruinous to both parties. Without pretending to be a prophet or the son of a prophet, we can still claim in this instance to have had a small glimpse into futurity. The martial Servadio, after a brief campaign of two weeks only, found his military chest entirely empty, and fell back upon the provinces, putting his trust in Boston enthusiasm and State street bank notes. Like the late lamented Mr. William Walker, he left some of his wounded on the field of battle, and the groans of the sufferers were distinctly heard above the dying wails of Medea and the shrieks of the trombones. However, this suspension is understood to be only temporary. Servadio kept his troops together, and made a successful descent on the modern Athens, commencing operations at the Boston theatre on Monday.

Meantime, the artistic skies of Irving Place began to show signs of a gathering storm. Prime donne "looked dark and cowld, like a short winter's day," as an Irish poet delightfully observes. An equinoxial was threatened among the tenors, and distant thunder was heard from among the bassos and baritones. There was a financial crisis, likewise mysterious hints as to a rupture of the entente cordiale between the managers, and a cabal among the stockholders against Strakosch and in favour of Ullman and Maretzek, the latter always looming up, like a lighthouse in a storm, when there is any kind of a row going on or about to be raised. Then there was a double company, and the prime donne must be kept apart, and so a separation of the "combined troupe" was suggested; and that is the way the matter will probably eventuate. It has not yet taken place, although some of the papers have so stated. The whole affair is, as usual, enveloped in mystery, and its history has as many versions as the Bible; but the question of money seems to be at the bottom of it. The artists demand to be paid, and the managers claim that they have disbursed all the funds at their command, and that if the singers do not see fit to go on and trust to luck, the season will be closed. On the other hand, they have, like the politicians, the prospect of the spoils to animate them. Next week the Prince of Wales attends the opera in Philadelphia, and a great crowd is expected. Then comes the great ball at the Academy, for the rent of which the committee pay the round sum of forty-five hundred dollars; so that the managers, thanks to his Royal Highness and the Chamber of Commerce, will have some cash on hand. It is this hope which keeps them together, we presume. For the next week, however, the metropolitan public is not to go without its opera. Corporal Patti, who has already redeemed the fortunes of one desperate campaign, has returned from the provinces, and boldly essays the Traviata, the most important rôle she has yet attacked. The habitués are expected to rally around their favourite, and if they do so the present aspect of operatic affairs may be changed—the Muses may find themselves again in easy circumstances, and all the clouds that have lowered over Irving Place be buried in an ocean of dimes. Come, then, dilettanti, to the rescue.

At the same time we cannot refrain from expressing our surprise at the constant recurrence of these quarrels between the artists and the managers, and the wars between the managers themselves. Here we have a first-class operatic city, people whose musical taste is second to none in the world, capable directors like Maretzek, Ullman, Strakosch, and Servadio; first rate artists like Fabbri, Colson, Cortesi, Patti, Brignoli, Musiani, and many others; and yet it seems that we cannot have the pleasure of hearing them in one company because of their internecine difficulties. It really appears as if Satan, not satisfied with his experiences among the politicians, has gone to work among the opera managers and singers, and we suggest that some kind of a revival is absolutely necessary. The opera folks must join a Christian or moral reform association, or visit the Fulton-street prayer meeting, or be awakened to grace in some way.

As for the politicians, we have given them over to Satan long ago. He knows them thoroughly, from the Presidential candidates down to the nominees for the smallest ward offices, and he will take good care of them. But the artists and impresarii may yet be redeemed. As Doctor Watts remarks—

> While the lamp holds out to burn
> The vilest sinner may return;

so we have some hopes yet for the rival opera managers. Let them imitate the little lambs in their intercourse with each other. So shall they delight the public and reap the reward of its approbation.

Letter to the Editor.

THE LEEDS TOWN HALL ORGAN.

Sir,—It is reported that the Town Hall Committee have refused Mr. Burton the use of the town's organ on the occasion of Mad. Clara Novello's farewell performance of the Messiah on the 29th instant, unless he will employ their organist.

I believe it was understood, when the question of Town Hall organist was discussed, that the appointment would not give the organist the exclusive right of the instrument, and, if I am not very much mistaken, Mr. Shaw or some other member stated that it was not intended to give the organist the sole power. As there is to be a general meeting of the Council next week, I sincerely hope that some independent member will feel it his duty to bring the subject forward, that the ratepayers may have an opportunity of seeing where this apparent partiality exists. There is another question which, in my opinion, demands investigation—that is the charge for the Victoria Hall. It is stated that Mr. Burton is charged 10*l.* per night, the Town Hall Concert Society 2*l.* 10*s.*, while the charges for admission to both concerts are 1*s.* and 6*d.*, except the first concert given by the latter society, when their charges were 4*s.*, 3*s.*, and 1*s.* Surely these charges are not intended for the working classes.—I am your obedient servant,

Justitia.

Leeds, Oct. 19th, 1860.

[We are really unable, not being Leedsmen, to afford our correspondent any information on the subject, or subjects, of his inquiry, or inquiries, the receipt of which, or whichs, came upon us like a clap,or claps, of thunder.—Petipace.]

Death of Mr. Edmund Glover.—Mr. Edmund Glover, eldest son of the late celebrated actress, Mrs. Glover, and for some years past manager of the Theatre Royal, Glasgow, expired yesterday morning at Edinburgh, after a long and painful illness.

Mad. Clara Novello will most positively and assuredly take her farewell of the public on Wednesday evening, Nov. 21st, at St. James's Hall. There will be a grand orchestral performance of M. Benedict's lyrical legend, Undine, a work which created so much interest and enthusiasm at the late Norwich festival. Mad. Novello will also sing some of her most favourite pieces, selected from her extensive repertoire, and conclude the performance with the National Anthem. The band engaged for the occasion will be the same as performed with her at Norwich, and the chorus will consist of the members of the Vocal Association,—the whole under the direction of M. Benedict.

Provincial.

OUR PROVINCIAL notes for the week, if not marked by much variety, are sufficiently important. Mad. Clara Novello's "Farewell Performances" at Manchester and Bradford in point of interest have eclipsed all recent musical entertainments. The first "Farewell" concert, given at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, has already been noticed. The second, on Saturday last, which included the Messiah, attracted so great a crowd that hundreds were turned from the doors, and it was determined to give a third performance this day, with additions from the programme of the first concert of those pieces which had proved most successful. Mad. Novello, therefore, will give specimens of her versatility in selections from the sacred oratorios, and in Italian, Irish and Scotch songs. "Com è bello," the beautiful cavatina from Lucrezia Borgia, will afford the singer an opportunity of exhibiting her bravura powers and dramatic style; while the Irish air, "How dear to me the hour"—one of the loveliest and most touching melodies in Moore's collection, and but little known in England, we are sorry to say—and the old Scotch Jacobite strain, "Cam' ye frae Athol?" will display the graces of her ballad singing in the most favourable light. Mad. Novello will also introduce Handel's song, "Angels ever bright and fair," and Meyerbeer's, "Robert, toi que j'aime," and will take part in Bishop's part-song, "Blow gentle gales," and sing the solos in the National Anthem, so that those who are present will be enabled to hear her in all styles of music. This, we believe, will positively be Mad. Clara Novello's last appearance before a Manchester public. At Bradford on the occasion of the "Farewell Concert," which was given at St. George's Hall on Wednesday evening, the 17th, the attraction was not less great nor the excitement less intense. On this performance our spirited contemporary, the Leeds Intelligencer, thus enthusiastically descants:—

"There is no reason why Mad. Novello should not have a final appearance before her troops of friends, as well as Mad. Lind Goldsmidt, or Mad. Grisi. She has been longer before the public than either of those celebrated artistes,* and as the "Queen of Sacred Song," she has enjoyed at least an equal repute. For many years past no great musical festival has been complete without her, and where managers have endeavoured to dispense with her services they have discovered that they have made a woful mistake. Great, more than merely great, both in sacred and secular music, it is in the former that she has shone most triumphantly; and it will be for her numerous successes in The Messiah that she will be most fondly remembered by all who have heard her. Even with Jenny Lind as a competitor in singing sacred music, Mad. Novello has not met with her superior, and only those who can remember Malibran, and who from fond remembrance are prejudiced in behalf of their former favourite, can prefer any claim to say that Mad. Novello does not stand first on the list of all soprano singers of sacred music. It may not be out of place here to mention that Mendelssohn, being asked to recommend the two most accomplished sopranos in Germany to the Philharmonic Society, named as one of them Mad. Clara Novello, who was then at Leipsic, and who was then Miss Clara Novello. This was, we believe, after Mad. Novello had left the stage, upon which she made her first public appearance, and had devoted herself chiefly to sacred music. The judgment of the great modern maestro has been fully borne out by the public approval, and for many years Mad. Novello has stood at the head of all sopranos in oratorio. Nor is it only in sacred pieces that Mad. Novello has sustained to the last, and not only sustained but increased, the fame of her youth; in opera and ballad music she has been almost equally successful; always at home, always charming her audiences. Especially is Mad. Novello entitled to a farewell to Bradford. Hers were the notes which first broke out upon an audience in St. George's Hall, when on the 31st of August, 1853, it was opened, and she inaugurated the ceremony with the National Anthem. Since that period she has frequently appeared in Bradford; she has been present at both festivals that have since taken place, and seems almost part and parcel of St. George's Hall. Hence, we repeat, she was especially deserving of a bumper from the Bradfordians on taking her leave of them, and on Wednesday evening she got it, with measure full and flowing over, from every part of the house."

* Non è vero—Giulietta Grisi was a woman when Clara Novello was a girl.—ED. M. W.

Under any other circumstances we should have been surprised at the Leeds Intelligencer passing over Herr Molique with a word—a complimentary one certainly; but the occasion was unusual and the interest isolated, and the critic was bound to be partial.

Miss Diana Ashton, a young pianist, residing at Durham, made her first appearance in public at a concert given by herself in the Town Hall of that city, on Tuesday evening, the 16th instant, with very great success. Who the lady is, what her antecedents (and relatives!) and what the effects of her performances, may be learned from the Durham Chronicle, bearing date October 18:—

"Miss Diana Ashton, daughter of Mr. Charles Ashton, of the Durham Cathedral Choir, is a pupil of the celebrated Moscheles. The expectations which had been entertained of her abilities as a pianist were fully realised; the reception she met with was most enthusiastic, and we hope to see her take a high position amongst the pianists of the day. Possessing undoubted musical genius, Miss Ashton has been in no hurry to court public renown, but wisely abstained from seeking professional honours, until she had made fitting preparations by a long course of diligent study in the Conservatorium of Music at Leipsic. The pieces she selected on Tuesday evening were the march from Wagner's Tännhauser, and Weber's sonata in C. The march from Tännhauser was not well calculated to find favour with a mixed audience, as it does not possess those rhythmical qualities—those duly regulated cadences—which secure for many indifferent compositions a high degree of popularity. It is, however, peculiarly adapted to test the executant powers of a pianist, and only an accomplished player can hope to surmount its difficulties with any degree of success. Amazing as were the powers of execution which Miss Ashton displayed, her merits were not confined to mechanical accomplishment, but the fire and vigour exhibited in some passages, and the softness and delicacy imparted to others, evinced good judgment, and a refined and cultivated taste. Both the march and the sonata were encored, and Miss Ashton substituted more pleasing but less difficult compositions, one of which was a beautiful and characteristic study of her famous master Moscheles."

HULL.—It scarcely seems twelve months since the beautiful organ, built by Messrs. Forster and Andrews, for Clowes's Chapel, Jarratt Street in this town, was opened; and yet if there be meaning in the word "anniversary," a year has really gone round. Huge bills have announced for some weeks past that on Sunday last sermons would be preached at the chapel in connection with the organ anniversary, and that on Tuesday evening there would be a musical service in the same place to celebrate the event. Now, there is something pleasant in the plan thus proposed. Music, with all its charms, is in itself a pleasure which all may enjoy with innocence. The only objections which are ever raised to its more frequent enjoyment is the difficulty of having it dissociated from that which is offensive to the tastes, opinions, and even religious convictions of very many. When it is provided in chapels and places of worship, under the sanction and with the presence of ministers, no one can fail to enjoy it. In introducing these musical services, the authorities at Clowes's Chapel have done good service. No one could listen to the thrilling choruses of Handel, and Haydn, and Mozart, without feeling how deeply it is to be regretted that in Hull we have no musical society capable of giving the oratorios and masses which have made these composers famous. There was last night a chorus of some sixty voices, under the conductorship of Mr. Stephenson, and the admirable manner in which they acquitted themselves showed in the first place that there are all the vocal elements for a good society, and secondly, that Mr. Stephenson has made good use of them. It has often been objected in Hull, that, so far as the voices are concerned, there cannot be got sufficient strength in the sopranos; and last night scarcely disproved this. The heavier voices overwhelmed the lighter ones, and the result was frequently a loss of brightness, so to speak, in the choral effect. This, however, we should suppose might be obviated by dint of some exertion, and it will be a subject of great gratification if the musical service of last night lead to the establishment of a good Sacred Harmonic Society in the town.

When the organ at Clowes's Chapel was opened we took the opportunity of speaking favourably of it. The opinion then expressed we have no reason to change. It is wonderfully equal in tone, and beautifully sweet in the soft stops. Messrs. Forster and Andrews have done themselves infinite credit. Nor did it suffer under the hands of Mr. J. Rodgers, of Doncaster. He played most admirably, and brought out to the full the beauties of the instrument. The opening voluntary was an Offertoire of Wely's, delightfully rendered. This was followed by Dr. Hayes' Anthem, "the Lord descended from above," in which Miss Evison displayed a very sweet voice, and sang with Miss Newman with considerable taste. Kent's anthem, "Hear my prayer," came next, with Miss Craven and Miss Wilson in the solo parts. It was sung very well; though Miss Wilson was suffering from indisposition; for which the indulgence of the audience was asked. Whitfield's anthem, "Behold how good and joyful," was spoiled by the bass solo. Mrs. Craven sang, "Hark! 'tis the linnet," from Handel's Joshua, and was succeeded by Miss Wilson, in "With verdure clad," which she gave very finely. "In splendour bright," was creditably sung by Mr. Buffey, and lead up to "The Heavens are telling," which went probably better than anything else during the evening. It would have been perfection if the trebles had been strong enough. The second part opened with the overture to Verdi's Nabucco, arranged by Mr. Rodgers for the organ, and splendidly played. The "Kyrie" from Mozart's 12th Mass followed; but was not so well given as we could have wished. The music was written for Latin words, and to wed it to an English anthem of totally different signification is absurd, while it throws considerable difficulties in the way of the singers. In the opening solo the bass was nervous. The choral parts went very well. The solo, "Eve's Lament," by King, was sweetly sung by Miss Wilson, and elicited the heartiest applause. The first movement of Mozart's No. 12, "Gloria," went rather tamely. The programme was brought to a close by the "Coronation Anthem," well played by Mr. Rodgers. Great credit is due to this gentleman, who was assisted by Mr. R. Hall, of this town, and also to Mr. Stephenson, who conducted with tact and ability.

It had been announced that the mayor would take the chair, but, in his unavoidable absence, it was well filled by the Sheriff (W. Hodge, Esq.). The Rev. Wm. Garner, the the Rev. Edward Dixon, the Rev. Mr. Medicraft, the Rev. Mr. Brownson, and the Rev. G. O'Dell successively addressed the meeting. A vote of thanks was given to the Sheriff and the singers. There was a very good attendance, and a delightful evening was spent.—Hull Advertiser, Oct. 20.

Leicester.—The restoration of St. Mary's Church is now completed, and the sacred edifice will bear comparison with any Protestant church in the country for its beautiful, simple, and original specimens of architecture. The cost has been incurred by Mr. Nevinson, a liberal subscriber to former restorations.

The organ, of which we recently gave full details, has at length been erected by Messrs. Forster and Andrews, of Hull. It has an exceedingly handsome and noble appearance, the case being of carved oak, in keeping with the style of the church, and the cost, which will be defrayed by voluntary subscription, is between £500 and £600. It has three rows of keys, thirty-three registers, thirty notes of German pedals, and four composition pedals. The following is a list of the stops:—

GREAT ORGAN, CC TO G.

	Pipes.
1 Open Diapason	56
2 Horn Diapason	56
3 Stopt Diapason, Bass ... }	56
4 Claribel Trebel ... ... }
5 Principal	56
6 Twelfth	56
7 Fifteenth	56
8 Sesquialtra, 4 Ranks	224
9 Trumpet	56
	616

SWELL ORGAN, CC TO G.

	Pipes.
1 Double Diapason	56
2 Open Diapason	56
3 Viola di Gamba	44
4 Stopt Diapason	55
5 Principal	56
6 Fifteenth	56
7 Mixture, 3 Ranks	168
8 Cornopean	56
9 Oboe	44
10 Clarion	56
	648

CHOIR ORGAN, CC TO G.

	Pipes.
1 Dulciana	56
2 Stopt Diapason, Bass ... }	56
3 Stopt Diapason, Treble ... }
4 Stopt Flute	56
5 Gemshorn	56
6 Fifteenth	56
7 Cremona	37
	317

PEDAL ORGAN, CCC TO F.

	Pipes.
1 Open Diapason, 16 ft.	30
2 Bourdon, 16 ft....	30
	60

COUPLETS.

1 Great to Pedals.
2 Swell to Pedals.
3 Choir to Pedals.
4 Swell to Great.
5 Swell to Choir.

Total number of Pipes 1641

The opening services to commemorate the completion of the restoration were held on Wednesday last. The congregations were large, both morning and evening, a great number of the clergy being present. Dr. Edmund Chipp, of London, organist to the Church of the Holy Trinity, Westbourne Terrace, presided at the organ, assisted by a choir of about sixty voices. The indefatigable organist of the church, Miss Deacon, had been for some time preparing the musical arrangements, and her skill and taste have been rewarded with unequivocal success. The "Te Deum" and "Jubilate" (composed by Dr. Chipp) were rendered with great spirit and correctness by singers from churches and chapels in the town. The Psalms for the day were sung by the choir, divided for the purpose in cathedral style into the Decani and Cantoris sides, which chanted alternate verses. We were much pleased with the pointing of the Psalms, which preserved the proper expression of the words unimpaired by the music. The anthem "I will sing of thy power," by Dr. Greene, was rather unsteady at the commencement, but this was speedily rectified, and the performance, on the whole, was exceeding effective. The other music introduced into the morning service consisted of a Psalm, and the never-tiring "Hallelujah" from the Messiah, which, of course, was admirably rendered.

The organ solos by Dr. Chipp fully deserve a separate notice. We were struck by the absence of pretension in this gentleman's playing. The opening voluntary was devotional and appropriate, and well adapted to show the suitability of the instrument for congregational music. The accompaniments were subdued and careful, while the occasional voluntaries in the course of the service showed the skill of a cultivated musician, and the adroit manipulation of a practised performer. The concluding voluntary was Handel's "Occasional Overture"—a splendid performance, bringing out the full power of the noble instrument, and detaining a large portion of the congregation until the close.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Jenkins, Incumbent of Hazlewood, Derbyshire, and after the services the sum of £37 was collected.

In the evening the "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" of King were performed with excellent effect. The anthem was from Mendelssohn's St. Paul, "How lovely are the messengers," introduced by a characteristic voluntary on the organ, followed in due course by the Old Hundredth Psalm, given in the plainest and simplest manner, and the last verse sung in unison. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Daniel Moore, M.A., Incumbent of Camden Church, Camberwell.

During the collection a voluntary was played, leading into the "Hallelujah" Chorus, again most correctly and forcibly rendered by the choir. The organ, under the skilful management of Dr. Chipp, again afforded a rich treat to the lovers of sacred music. The opening voluntary was "Blest are the departed," from Spohr's Last Judgment. The voluntary during the collection especially delighted us; the delicacy and rich fancy of the composition, with the subtle combination of the various stops, rendered the whole effect most charming. The services were followed by the concluding voluntary, comprising "Worthy is the Lamb" and the "Amen" from the Messiah, with "The horse and his rider," from Israel in Egypt, inducing the congregation to stay to the last. We hope to hear Dr. Chipp again here before long, and congratulate the managers of the church in having secured so able an artist for these services. The collection at the close amounted to £41 2s. 8d.

With respect to the tone of the new organ, we believe we are correct in stating that it gave unqualified satisfaction, and we understand that Dr. Chipp, who exhibited it in such a spirited and masterly manner, expressed his high approval of the instrument, observing that he had never played upon an organ of the same size that he liked better. We have great pleasure in thus recording the favourable opinion of one standing foremost in the ranks of modern organ players. To particularise, we thought the diapasons very round and smooth, the flute clear, and the mixtures sufficiently brilliant without being piercing. The reed stops, however, are the great features of the instrument, being particularly fine. The swell, which has vertical shutters, and the box of an unusual thickness, told remarkably, the crescendo and diminuendo effects being very striking.—(Abridged from the Leicester Journal, October 20th.)

Mr. Sheridan Knowles.—Mr. G. F. Train writes to the London journals, contradicting the statement that Mr. Sheridan Knowles, the dramatist, was drowned in the wreck of the Hull steamer Arctic. Mr. Train says,—"I have the great happiness of being able to say, that my esteemed friend is now near Torquay; though not so well bodily as all wish him to be, yet mentally as brilliant as ever."

The National Sunday League held a meeting on Tuesday, at which was developed a new plan for enabling the lower classes to get into the Crystal Palace on Sundays. "Crystal Palace Share Clubs" have been established. The following resolution was carried on the subject:—"That inasmuch as the Crystal Palace and grounds are open to shareholders on Sunday afternoons, and considerable numbers of the working classes have already become shareholders through joining the Crystal Palace Share Clubs, whereby they are allowed to pay for their shares by small weekly instalments, it is highly desirable that such share clubs should be encouraged and extended, in order that those who cannot afford to visit the Crystal Palace on week-days may be enabled to do so on their only leisure day, and at the same time become part proprietors in that magnificent institution, which is so eminently calculated to promote the intellectual, moral, and social improvement of the people."

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

THE MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS

WILL RE-COMMENCE

ON MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12th.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (Saturday), will be repeated ROBIN HOOD; SIMS REEVES, SANTLEY, GEORGE HONEY, LEMAIRE, and LEMMENS SHERRINGTON. Reduced scale of prices:—Pit Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; First Circle, 4s.; Second Circle, 3s.; Upper Box Circle Seats, 2s.; Pit, 3s. 6d.; Gallery 1s.; Gallery Side Stalls, 1s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 3s. Private Boxes: Upper Box, to hold four persons, 10s.; Private Box, third tier, to hold four persons, £1 1s.; Private Box, second tier, to hold four persons, £1 11s. 6d.; Private Boxes, Pit, first and grand tiers, two, three, and four Guineas. The Box-office of the theatre open daily, from 10 till 5 o'clock, under the direction of Mr. Nugent. Acting Manager, Mr. Mapleson. Stage Manager, Mr. R. Roxby.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. — In reply to the numerous applications, the subscribers, gentry, and the public are respectfully informed that Macfarren's new and highly successful opera of ROBIN HOOD will be repeated every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday until further notice. Early application at the Box-office to secure seats is recommended to prevent disappointment.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE. — Mr. E. T. SMITH has much pleasure in announcing that he has arranged with Mr. Webster for Mr. J. L. Toole to appear in Mr. Watts Phillips' new drama, to be produced on Monday, November 12.

To Correspondents.

WINDSOR.—The communication relative to the "Concerts of the People" is an advertisement.

J. T.—Robert Schumann died at Endenich, on the 26th of July, 1856. He was buried at Bonn, on the 31st. Marschner is still living, and working honestly for the benefit of his art at Hanover. About Logier our correspondent had better consult Cocks's Almanack.

TURBOT.

Tu ne l'auras pas,
Ne l'auras pas
Jeanne ma mie;
Tu ne l'auras pas,
Ne l'auras pas:
C'est aux lilas.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1860.

THERE are rumours afloat which point to a coming period of trouble for music and musicians in this country—or at least in this metropolis, the turn of the provinces being less imminent, although pretty sure to arrive in time. What would our readers think if informed that the oldest and most honourable institution of its order in England—we mean, of course, the Philharmonic Society—stood in immediate peril of its existence? After such a brilliant and profitable season as the last, they might reasonably urge, such a misfortune was very improbable. Not so, however. The Philharmonic Society without an orchestra becomes virtually defunct; and, unless the 40 members and 60 associates, constitute themselves an orchestra, and with a view of performing for the entertainment of subscribers, the Philharmonic Society, at the present moment, is by no means sure of preserving that indispensable auxiliary next March.

Not to mince words, there is a conspiracy going on against the Philharmonic society. At the head of the conspirators is Mr. Gye, director of the Royal Italian Opera; and his chief confederate is Mr. Costa. Mr. Gye is the Brutus, Mr. Costa the Casca of this conspiracy. Casca has already struck the first blow (ab retro); Brutus is pointing his dagger to inflict the last. If the first prove mortal, however, the next will be superfluous, and "the most unkindest cut of all" be spared.

"The most unkindest cut of all!" We reiterate the phrase, which—as Marcus Brutus Gye is likely to repudiate its application to himself—we must endeavour to explain.

But for the Philharmonic Society there would have been no Royal Italian Opera. The first bone of contention between Mr. Lumley and Mr. Costa—who at that juncture assumed the style of Publius Cimber—was the offer of the Philharmonic Society to engage Mr. Costa's services as conductor. To this proposal Mr. Lumley—who was then assuming the style of "Imperious Cæsar" (we are compelled to shift the disposition of the dramatis personæ), now unimperiously worn by the semi-unanimated Philharmonic—would on no account listen. In vain was the petition,

"To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber."

Cæsar Lumley, "constant as the northern star," was obdurate. He (Cæsar Lumley) could be well moved, if he were as the Philharmonic which at that time took the semblance of Metellus Cimber; if he could pray to move, prayers might move him (and remove Publius Cimber Costa—to Hanover Square, every Monday fortnight); though man, and therefore flesh and blood, he was not apprehensive; firm as a rock, lofty as a tower, inflexible as a pig (of iron), he answered—NAY! and in the language of our immortal bard (whose plays he kept, together with Bacon's essays—as Alexander the Great kept Homer's Iliad—under his bolster) thus forcibly illustrated his inexorable resolve:—

"I do know but one
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion; and that I am he Let me a little show it, even in this:"—
That I was constant Costa should not go,
And constant do remain to keep him here." *

Publius Cimber Costa, nevertheless, was not to be put off with threats and frowns. As Cæsar Lumley refused to let him go, he dispensed with Cæsar Lumley's consent, and departed "on his own hook." The first year that Costa directed the Philharmonic Concerts was the year in which the opposition to Her Majesty's Theatre became settled and matured. Costa took his legions away with him, and his post in the Haymarket was assigned to Marcus Antonius Balfe, who brought fresh legions, for the most part getæ. In 1847 Costa rejected the style of Publius Cimber, and assumed that of Richelieu, which he retained magnanimously, until a vigorous director arose—by name Gye—who, regarded as a "Louis," had more of the "11th" and "14th" in his temperament than of the "13th" and 15th."

However, the Royal Italian Opera was speedily an established fact. The Philharmonic Society had done the deed; for the Philharmonic Society abstracted Costa, and Costa

* "That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so."

abstracted his cohorts, vocal and instrumental, male and female. For a period the debt of gratitude was acknowledged—or at any rate not disputed; but at length the sceptre of the Philharmonic orchestra was abandoned by Richelieu-Costa, who had reigned nine years; and was succeeded by Lamoricière Wagner, who reigned one year; and was succeeded by Garibaldi Sterndale-Bennett, who still reigns.

Thence (from A.D. 1855) the acknowledgment, or rather non-repudiation, of the debt of gratitude due to the Philharmonic began to be regarded as a myth. To make short tale, there has been more than one attempt to lure away its free-lances, but without result. The Philharmonic, lanceless, must succumb. Snick-and-Snee was never its mode of warfare.

* * * * * *
* * * * * *

To resume. The dramatis personæ, or rather the distribution thereof, being once more shifted, the preamble goes for nothing—or for so much as it is worth, which amounts to the same thing. The Philharmonic is (or was, in the summer of this year of grace, 1860) Cæsar; but now the conspiracy against Cæsar, which had long been hatching, is hatched, or quasi-hatched. Casca has inflicted the inaugurative thrust. Brutus is in readiness to consummate the catastrophe, when the portals of Hanover Square shall be patulous—March 1861. Having reached the Capitol, the Philharmonic (Cæsar) may find itself bereft of legions. Beethoven will then be dumb, and the subscribers (if not quite blue) aghast.

We cannot, at present (without indiscretion), be more explicit. Are our readers able to penetrate the mystery of this hieroglyph? Perhaps not. Let them wait, however, the completion of Pope Anderson's prothonotary, and without protervity await the issue. It is better to be suasory, hortatory ("protreptical," as Sir E. Lytton would express it, through the mouth of the progenitor of Pisistratus Caxton) than impetuous. At the same time, those who are well-disposed towards the Philharmonic Society may comfort themselves with the protasis, that the very protoplast, or (to be prothetic) arch-protoplast of musical institutions cannot be annihilated (even though Brutus follow Casca, blow for blow) without some pains. The legion will not exultingly behold themselves under the sway of a blind despotism—which, if their services are never to be rewarded further off than a stone's throw from Floral Hall, must inevitably be the case; they will rather bethink them that free-lances are still to be had abroad; that Pope Anderson is a wary ecclesiastic; and that "feathered bipeds of advanced age are not to be entrapped by the outer husks of corn."

THE eighteenth century produced a prodigious number of great singers. Their voices have gone with them, but we know from the music they sang, from the embellishments and cadences which have been noted down, and which are as good evidence now as when they were first executed, that these virtuosi had brought the vocal art to a perfection of which in these later days we meet with only the rarest examples. Is music to be written for the sake of singers, or are singers to learn to sing for the sake of music? Of the two propositions we decidedly prefer the latter; but it must at the same time be remembered that unless the executive qualities of the singer be studied to a considerable extent, the singer will soon cease to pay much attention to his execution. Continue to give him singable music, however difficult, and he will continue to learn to sing, counting the difficulties to be overcome only as so many opportunities for new triumphs; but if the music given to him is such as can—perhaps even must—be shouted, it is to be expected that he will soon cease to study the intricacies and delicacies of his art; and in time, if music truly vocal be shown to him to sing, he will be unable to sing it. The great singers of the seventeenth century, to judge from the music of Caccini's, Peri's, and Monteverde's operas, must have cultivated expression rather than ornamentation, though the description given by Mancini (quoted by Rousseau in the Dictionary of Music) of Balthazar Ferri's singing, and the manner in which it was received, proves that the florid highly adorned style was also in vogue. Queen Christina sent a vessel of war to fetch Ferri to Stockholm, and it is said that the Florentines, when he was about to visit their city, went in thousands to meet him at three leagues' distance from the gates. These early Italian virtuosi (a name which they adopted at the beginning of the seventeenth century to distinguish themselves from mere actors) not only possessed great acquirements as singers, but were also excellent musicians, and many of them displayed great ability in matters quite unconnected with their profession. Stradella, the only vocalist of whom it is recorded that his singing saved his life, composed an opera, La Forza dell Amor paterno, of which the manifold beauties caused him to be proclaimed "beyond comparison the first Apollo of music"—a certificate to that effect being stamped by authority on the published score. Atto, an Italian tenor, who came to Paris with Leonora Baroni, and who had apartments given him in Cardinal Mazarin's palace, was afterwards entrusted by that minister with a political mission to the Court of Bavaria, which, however, it must be remembered was just then presided over, not only by an elector, but by an electoress. Farinelli (Carlo Broschi) became the confidential adviser, if not the actual minister (as has been often stated, but without foundation) of the King of Spain. In the present day, the only virtuoso we know of (the name has now a more general signification) who has been entrusted with quasi-diplomatic functions is Vivier, the first horn-player, and, in his own way, the first humourist of the age; we believe it is no secret that this facetious virtuoso fills the office of secretary to his Excellence Vely Pacha.

Bontempi, in his Historia Musica, gives the following account of the school of singing directed by Mazzocchi at Rome in 1620:—"At the school of Rome the pupils were obliged to give up one hour every day to the singing of difficult passages till they were well acquainted with them, another to the practice of the shake, another to the feats of agility*, another to the study of letters, another to vocal exercises under the direction of a master, and before a looking-glass, so that they might be certain they made no disagreeable movement of the muscles of the face, of the forehead, of the eyes, or of the mouth. So much for the occupation of the morning. In the afternoon half an hour was devoted to the theory of singing; another half hour to counterpoint; an hour to hearing the rules of composition and putting them in practice on their tablets; another to the study of letters, and the rest of the day to practising the harpsichord, and to the composition of some Psalm motet, canzonetta, or any other piece according to the scholar's own ideas. Such were the ordinary exercises of the school on days when the scholars did not leave the house. When they went out they often walked towards Monte-Mario and sang, where they could hear the echo of their notes, so that each might judge by the response of the justness of his execution. They, moreover, sang at almost all the musical solemnities of the Roman churches; following, observing with attention the manner and style of an infinity of great singers who lived under the Pontificate of Urban VIII., so that they could afterwards render an account of their observations to the master, who, the better to impress the result of these studies on the minds of his pupils, added whatever remarks and cautions he thought necessary."

* Note for Punch. Vocal agility not gymnastics.

With such a system as the above it would have been impossible, supposing the student to have possessed any natural disposition for singing, not to have produced great vocalists; for we meet with them even in the present day when they are for the most part educated on no system at all.

MACFARREN'S ROBIN HOOD.

(From the London Review.)

The production of this new opera at Her Majesty's Theatre is an occurrence worthy of more than ordinary notice, for this simple and sufficient reason, that Robin Hood is, we have no hesitation in saying, the greatest work that has been produced for the English musical stage since the days of Purcell. Indeed, we doubt whether it is right to make even this qualification; for though our immortal countryman ought ever to hold the highest place among English musicians, yet in his time dramatic music was almost unknown in England; and though his mighty genius carried him far in advance of his age, yet his essays in writing for the theatre are scarcely entitled, in our day, to the name of operas. The Tempest, King Arthur, Bonduca, and Purcell's other so-called operas, were merely plays with music introduced. None of the dramatis personæ sang a note; the music consisting of incidental airs, choruses, and other pieces, sung and played by performers who took no part in the action of the piece. Of the opera, properly so-called, music is an essential element; it is the language in which persons of the drama express their sentiments and feelings. It is as necessary to an opera as blank verse is to a tragedy; but as tragedy sometimes relapses from the dignity of verse in scenes where the dialogue is light and trivial, a similar relaxation has been allowed in opera, the performers, in such scenes, using only ordinary speech, without music. But this relaxation is not at all permitted on the Italian stage, where every word of the dialogue is uttered in music. So it is in the French and German serious opera, talking being admitted only into the opera buffa, and sparingly even there. In this country, in the progress of the stage, musical pieces called operas came into vogue, in which the actors themselves sang; but still the chief part of the dialogue was simply spoken, the performer every now and then breaking into a song, as is now done in the French vaudevilles. Such were all our English operas of the last and the beginning of the present century, including the works of Arne and his successors, down to Bishop. Since then the foreign models have been more and more adopted, and the language of the stage has been more and more associated with music.

Mr. Macfarren's Robin Hood is the most complete specimen of English Opera, in its modern shape, that we possess. The works of his greatest predecessors were produced in immature states of the art; and he has unquestionably carried away the palm from the most eminent of his contemporaries. Whether his rivals who are most competent to contend for it, will yet do so successfully, remains to be seen. Meanwhile he holds it by the general voice of the public. The composer has been fortunate in having for his collaborateur, Mr. John Oxenford, whose poem is a rara avis among opera librettos. It is a pretty drama; elegant, interesting, and admirably suited to the requirements of the musician. For materials, Mr. Oxenford has had recourse to the fine old traditional ballads of which Robin Hood is the hero, and to Walter Scott's Ivanhoe, in which the gallant outlaw is so delightfully introduced. The plot and construction of his piece, however, seem to be original.

Mr. Macfarren is already well known, by numerous productions in various branches of the art, not excepting the stage. His Devil's Opera, Don Quixote, and King Charles the Second, are works of a high order and deserved success, but Robin Hood is a step much in advance of both. It evinces genius, matured by experience and study, and especially by the study of the national music of his own country. Mr. Macfarren emulates the modern foreign composers, Rossini, Auber, and Meyerbeer, but does not imitate them. He has profited by the study of their works in acquiring their constructive skill, their power of combination, and knowledge of dramatic and orchestral effect; but he never forgets, or allows the audience to forget, than he is an Englishman, and that they are listening to English music. This gives a peculiar charm to the music of this opera, which distinguishes it from that of his contemporaries, who, while their clever, and often brilliant, productions show that their minds and memories are imbued with the foreign schools of music, betray an entire neglect of the rich stores of our own national melodies.

Foreign.

New York.—Mad. Csillag is immediately expected from Europe, and is announced to appear at the Academy of Music with Herr Formes.

Naples.—The San Carlo opened the season with Rossini's Semiramide. Auber's Muette de Portici (Masaniello), and Meyerbeer's Prophète, are in rehearsal, and will be given shortly. Neither opera has ever been heard in Naples. It will be interesting to behold Masaniello treading his native stage for the first time. The performance of Auber's masterpiece is expected to create an enormous sensation, and it is to be produced with great magnificence. The revolution has done good to music at all events, and to the Tepsichorean art as well, if it be true that the Dancing Academy, abolished by the prudish Bourbons (who also locked up the Venuses), is about to be re-established.

Madrid.—Mad. Charton-Demeur made her début at the opera, on the 10th of October, with the most brilliant success. The representation was a complete triumph. After each act the singer was called on several times and received with enthusiasm.

Berlin.—The Victoria Theatre opened on the 18th ult., with the Barbiere, Mlle. Astol sustaining the part of Rosina. Mad. De Bries had appeared in Norma. The Pardon de Ploërmel is in rehearsal; and the Catharina Cornaro and Nourmahal of Spontini will be revived.

Nice.—Mad. Sanchioli, whom the subscribers and habitués of Her Majesty's Theatre some ten or a dozen years ago cannot have forgotten, has created a "sensation," as Fides, in the Prophète, and as Leonora, in the Favorita.

St. James's Theatre.—Extensive alterations and improvements are now being made by Mr. Wigan, preparatory to the theatre being opened on Monday night under his management. The interior is newly furnished, the stalls are rendered more commodious, the private boxes more elegant, and the general arrangements for the comfort of the audience more complete. A new drama by Mr. Tom Taylor, and Mr. Planché's King of the Peacocks will be performed.

The Opera.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—On Monday night an audience less numerous than appreciative was entertained with an unusually fine performance of Donizetti's always welcome (however somewhat hackneyed) Lucrezia Borgia. The three chief personages were assumed by Mlle. Titiens, Signor Giuglini, and M. Gassier; and it must be admitted that the German, Italian, and French artists worked together as heartily, and with as much consentaneousness of purpose, as if they had been compatriots, instead of belonging to three different countries. To complete the medley of nationalities, Mad. Lemaire, an Englishwoman, we believe—though married to a Belgian—stood forth as Gennaro's faithful friend, the vivacious Maffeo Orsini, and delivered the sparkling "brindisi" with a great deal of animation.

Perhaps in not one of her parts—unless we except her magnificent Donna Anna—does Mlle. Titiens support the credit, now almost unanimously accorded her, of being the worthiest claimant to the "mantle of Grisi," more triumphantly than in that of the wicked and passionate Duchess of Ferrara. She has all the personal, physical, and mental requisites for the characters, which she looks, sings, and acts alike to perfection. On Monday night she shone conspicuously in each of the situations which stand out as culminating points in the progress of the story:—the scene where Lucrezia is unmasked and insulted by the young nobles in presence of Gennaro; that where after the dispute with Alphonso, she is compelled to administer the poisoned wine to her unsuspecting son, the effects of which she subsequently neutralises by forcing him to swallow the antidote; and that in which, having wreaked vengeance on her enemies, finding that Gennaro, among the rest, has fallen into the snare, and unable to persuade him again to accept her remedy, with harrowed feelings, she beholds him die in long-protracted agony before her. To each of these grand histrionic displays Mlle. Titiens showed herself fully equal, her whole performance leaving an impression not easy to efface. Her vocal declamation, everywhere effective, was brilliantly so in the air sung while Gennaro is sleeping, in the two duets of Act II. and in the justly celebrated passage that follows the revelation of Gennaro's parentage—the touching and appealing "M'odi, m'odi!" Rarely has Signor Giuglini gave the music of Gennaro with more perfect grace of style or execution more elaborately finished. His sympathetic voice ("voce sympatica") is never heard to greater advantage than in the tender and melodious phrases through the medium of which Donizetti has so expressively marked out his hero from the rest of the dramatis personæ; and from "Di pescatore ignobile" to the pathetic strains of the death-scene, all was in the highest degree satisfactory, the air interpolated at the beginning of Act III.—which, though scarcely worthy its usurped place in the opera, cannot be altogether overlooked—being quite equal in taste and refinement to what preceded and followed it. The Duke of M. Gassier is one of the very best impersonations of that intelligent, clever, and eminently serviceable artist, who has the entire repertory of Italian opera so to speak, "at his fingers' ends"—from Don Giovanni to Figaro, from Alphonso of Ferrara to Belcore. On the present occasion, M. Gassier—who sang the well known declamatory air of Act II. with admirable vigour—did much to enhance the effect of the "ensemble;" in the scene of contention with Lucrezia, and that where, with bland hypocrisy, the duke cajoles Gennaro—which includes the famous trio (unnecessary to specialise by name)—sharing the honours and plaudits with Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini.

The subordinate parts were all creditably supported; and Signor Arditi presided in the orchestra with his accustomed talent.

The Huguenots was to be given last night.

Robin Hood was repeated on Saturday, Tuesday, and Thursday, and is underlined to be given three times a week until further notice. The attraction, so far from abating, appears nightly to increase, and there are literally no places to be obtained unless secured some days previously.

Royal English Opera.—The chief incident of the week has been the production of the Crown Diamonds (on Tuesday evening). We should have gladly welcomed a more numerous attendance to witness such a delightful work, and so generally good a performance. Since the year 1844, when it was first presented in an English dress (at the Princess's Theatre, Mad. Anna Thillon, the French original, in the principal character), the Crown Diamonds has always been a favourite opera with the London public. The drama is one of the most interesting, improbable, and ingenious of its prolific author, M. Scribe; the music is of the raciest and most genuine of Auber, who sustained the fortunes of the Opéra Comique for more than a quarter of a century by an uninterrupted succession of masterpieces, beginning with the Maçon and the Fiancée, and ending with the Domino Noir, the Ambassadrice, and the Diamans de la Couronne, which last may be said to combine the essence of (modern) French melody with the quintessence of (modern) French "esprit." What Auber has composed since, though unexceptionable from the point of view of art—which could hardly be otherwise than the case, coming from such a thoroughly accomplished artist—represents, in colours more or less glowing and attractive, the decline of his inventive powers; and the gradual descent from Haydée to Jenny Bell and Manon L'Escaut may be regarded as the antithesis (or reverse) to the gradual ascent from La Neige to Le Domino Noir. In the Crown Diamonds we find Auber in the very perfection of his prime, and served, too, by M. Scribe—partner no less of his first and only failure than of his many subsequent successes—in a manner to satisfy the most exacting of dramatic, or, to "speak by the card," theatrical, musicians. Who cares a straw whether the story of Les Diamans—founded (M. Scribe being our sole authority) on "a legend connected with a certain Queen of Portugal"—is or is not so improbable as to trench on the borders of absurdity? Si non è vero è ben trovato; anything that can be related in a manner at once so specious and amusing, if not true, at least deserves to be true.

The Crown Diamonds was the first opera which, at the Lyceum Theatre in 1857, brought the Pyne and Harrison management before the London public in a light at once conspicuous and favourable. As it was then so it is now—in very many respects one of the most efficiently represented operas in their repertory. The orchestra, under Mr. Alfred Mellon's direction, is perfect, from the overture to the end; and those who are aware how delicate and consummately artistic is the instrumentation of Auber, can hardly fail to appreciate the laudable exertions of this admirable band of executants. Mr. Harrison's Don Henrique is one of his most natural and unaffected assumptions; and so thoroughly has he imbued himself with the spirit of the music, with such vigour does he deliver the recitatives and phrases of declamation, that we are almost inclined to overlook the want of taste—or, perhaps, the avidity for winning applause from the galleries, no matter at what expense—which leads him to introduce, in the third act, a ballad, however intrinsically pleasing, having nothing in common with the music of Auber. Mr. Corri, too, who gives a somewhat rough, but by no means ineffective, portraiture of Rebolledo, chief of the coiners, enters into his task with such unmistakable energy and good-will as to extort absolution for a scarcely more condonable offence, in the shape of an interpolated song, about the days when he (Rebolledo) was a "muleteer"—days to which M. Scribe makes no allusion whatever. Of the other subordinate parts, the best sustained is that of Diana de Montemajor, by Miss Thirlwall (daughter of one of our most eminent orchestral players), a very young aspirant, who already promises well, and if she continues to use the same diligence which has hitherto marked her professional career, is likely to attain a solid and durable position. In the famous bolero-duet with Catarina (Act II.) Miss Thirlwall seconded her more experienced and accomplished partner in a way so entirely satisfactory that she may fairly be said to have divided the honours with her accomplished partner. As an actress Miss Thirlwall has much—almost everything, indeed—to learn; but this, like many other things appertaining to her art, must be left to time and her own industry.

The most faultless exhibition of the evening was the Catarina—Queen of Portugal, and prime manufacturer of the false jewels—delineated by Miss Louisa Pyne with an intelligent and histrionic completeness which (allowing for a certain degree of frigidity apparently innate in this otherwise consummate artist) left nothing to desire. Her execution of the sparkling and delicious music of Auber was from end to end irreproachable. Her most dazzling and surprising display was, of course, the air with variations following the duet in the second act, which in one or two salient points bears so strong an affinity to the well-known effusion of Rode, that Miss Pyne might reasonably dispense with so heterogeneous an interpolation into an opera, not only one of the most highly finished of its composer, but of a school remarkable for finished workmanship, of which he is the most gifted and illustrious representative. That Miss Louisa Pyne warbles the plaintive theme of Rode's variations "like any nightingale," and executes the variations with a fluency, neatness, and brilliancy only within reach of the most perfect acquirement; that the sensation produced, moreover, is proportionate to the talent exhibited is incontestable: nevertheless, in spite of these strong claims to admiration, it may be urged, without discourtesy, that Auber is the best judge of the effect he intended, and that had he considered it expedient to introduce an elaborate feat of vocalisation as a climax to his everywhere perfect work, he could have written as good, if not a better thing of its kind, than even the hackneyed "bravura" of the celebrated French violinist, which brings down the curtain with an amount of applause that would be more flattering if legitimately earned. The part of Don Sebastian was allotted, as in former years, to Mr. St. Albyn; that of Campomayer (Minister of Justice) to Mr. H. Horncastle, an old stager, whose performance was considerably more laboured than diverting.

After the opera, Rossini's overture to Semiramide was superbly performed by the band.

Mad. Palmieri is an English lady (née Croft), and studied in Italy for some years. She was engaged last season at the Barcelona opera, and had previously sung at some of the Italian theatres, always as prima donna. We understand Mad. Palmieri has much to recommend her as a dramatic singer. Her voice is a true soprano—not naturally a high soprano, we should say—extensive in compass, of good quality, and sufficiently powerful. She vocalises with facility, and has evidently been well taught, and turned her teaching to good account. Great allowance should be made on the occasion of a first appearance, and all minor faults reserved for after consideration. The débutante made a most favourable impression in Verdi's heroine, and was recalled with enthusiasm after the cabaletta of the opening air, "Tacca la notta." As an actress, Mad. Palmieri is extremely easy and lady-like, and does not want for energy or passion. Her whole performance of Leonora was earnest and impressive, and she only failed when she attempted to grapple with the realities of tragedy. Mr. Alberto (why not plain Albert?) Lawrence is, we believe, an American, and, like Mad. Palmieri, has been singing within the year at Barcelona. His voice is a powerful baritone of fine quality, and, as far as we could judge, flexible. He sings well, but is somewhat deficient in style. His acting betokens care rather than impulse, and no doubt he will be seen to greater advantage in a part less exacting than the stormy Count di Luna. His most decided hit was in the popular air "Il balen," although we preferred him in the third act. It was an act of injustice to Miss Leffler to ask her to perform such a part as Azcgena. All her shortcomings must consequently not be laid to her charge. We shall only say of her performance that she sang some of the music with great charm of voice, and draw a curtain over the rest. Mr. Theodore Distin was too nervous to do himself justice either as actor or singer in Ferrando. Taking all things into consideration, any other opera perhaps would have been perferable to to the Trovatore. The Manrico of Mr. Haigh, by the way, is entitled to a strong word of praise. The music for the most part was sung excellently, and everywhere purpose and meaning were evident in the acting. No singer on the stage of late years has made greater progress in his art than Mr. Henry Haigh.

The Theatres.

Drury Lane Theatre.—During the present week Mr. Charles Mathews has hard work to do at Drury Lane. First in the order of the evening's performance comes the Game of Speculation, rendered more famous in London by his masterly representation of Mr. Affable Hawk than the original piece, Mercadet, in the French metropolis. Little Toddlekins, another old favourite of his Lyceum days, comes last, and inserted between the comedy and the farce is a trifling "commedietta," called Cherry and Blue, in which Mr. Charles Mathews acts a married gentleman, who mars his own domestic felicity by plunging into an intrigue for the mere love of romance, and is righteously tormented by his wife, who knows all about the affair, inasmuch as it was to herself, amid the shades of night, that his attentions were paid. A smart Abigail, played by Mrs. Charles Mathews, likewise conduces to the success of the piece. A new comedy, in which Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mathews will sustain the principal characters, is announced for Monday.

Haymarket Theatre.—The Love Chase has suddenly become the most accessible play in the whole English repertory. While at the Lyceum it is the vehicle for making the public acquainted with the merits of Miss Josephine Gougenheim, the Haymarket manager remembers that Neighbour Constance was found equally serviceable to Miss Amy Sedgwick, when that excellent actress was at the commencement of her fortunate career. It has accordingly been revived with much success, and Miss Sedgwick is as warmly applauded as ever.

Lyceum Theatre.—The new drama, entitled the Pioneers of America, is a piece of Transatlantic workmanship put together, not with much compactness, for the purpose of providing Mr. Watkins with a negro character, usually comic in expression, but thoroughly melodramatic in action. The incidents are supposed to occur during the American wars of the French and English, in the middle of the last century, and an abominable gentleman, who insists on marrying a young lady against her will, is also hateful as a renegade to the French side, whereas the interesting lover of the story, the master of the negro Jocko, is correct in his politics,—the cause of the Britisher being popular in 1755, and capable of being adorned with all the claptraps which were levelled against it a few years afterwards. However, the chief value of the war, as far as the action of the play is concerned, is the military character which it gives to the successive captures and recaptures of the fair victim, and the consequent opportunities afforded for the display of the Negro Jocko's miraculous capabilities. Though nearly bent double by a deformed spine, this Hercules of niggers is not only a host in himself, but an overmatch for any host that may be employed to check his progress. His fist knocks down Indians by tribes; he deprives an armed French sentinel of his gun, and makes him divest himself of all his upper garments, which he then puts on, holding a knife in his teeth as a weapon of defence, while the operation of dressing compels him to lay aside the musket. Finally, when all other means have failed to prevent the marriage of his master's beloved Isabel to the horrible renegade, and the nuptial ceremony has actually begun, he adopts the very ingenious and efficacious plan of shooting the bridegroom, in the presence of the wedding assembly. At first we were afraid he had shot the officiating chaplain, as a rough way of forbidding the banns, and consequently it was a relief to see the wicked bridegroom rush out with a red blotch on his forehead, for as he is a renegade, and also once tried to poison Jocko, he does not merit our pity. What matters it that the dead man's father, who has a body of Indians at command, tries to hang the virtuous lover on a tree by way of reprisal? Jocko has a universe of resources at command,—sets the house on fire, pitches an Indian out of window, and quietly throws about half-a-dozen more down a well, so that virtue triumphs in the most gymnastic fashion, and when the English soldiers arrive to establish her conquest, we feel that she is rather encumbered by their aid.

Mr. H. Watkin's impersonation of Jocko is really worth seeing, though the piece itself has no pretension to rank even with the humblest transpontine melodrama. His hearty love of fighting, the cat-like agility of his movements, the animal cunning which accompanies all his feats, constitute a character of a novel kind, for the delineation of which, moreover, a peculiar physical training is requisite. But it was in an evil hour that the author, while lavishing all sorts of gifts on his pet personage, ventured to give him two scenes of a thoroughly sentimental kind. Jocko fighting, Jocko slaughtering, Jocko chuckling, Jocko jumping about is a merry fellow enough, but Jocko drawling forth yards of pathos is the dismallest of company. Let him be healed of his melancholy propensities, and likewise let the portions in which he does not appear at all be cut down to the smallest possible dimensions, inasmuch as they are utterly uninteresting, and the only use of the piece is the exhibition of Jocko. Neither Miss Kate Saville, nor Mr. T. Lyon, nor Mr. H. Neville, nor Mr. J. Johnstone will, we are certain, deprecate an operation that shortens a toil from which they can derive no glory, and Mr. Watkins will have a short play to himself, in which he can develope his fun without intermission.

The "Bijou" Theatre.—It may not be generally known—certainly not so generally as it ought to be—that in prodigious London there actually exists a sort of wonder—a theatre within a theatre. And this little theatre is really worth seeing. We need hardly say that, inasmuch as Her Majesty's Theatre is one of vast size, it is, of course, the likeliest place in which such a wonder could be created. There is no staying the spirit and enterprise of these days. Could our forefathers look up and see this simple announcement they would merely shrug their shoulders, shake their heads, and sceptically grunt—"Impossible." However, there this "Bijou" Theatre is, and it is not too much to say that Mr. E. T. Smith, under whose care and guidance Her Majesty's Theatre is, has added another to his many extraordinary feats, in fitting up Her Majesty's Concert Room as a theatre, which to the fullest extent deserves its title, within the walls of the colossal establishment over which he holds sway. But it must not be understood as a mere "room" economically spared (so far as space is concerned) from the great pile of which we speak. It is really and truly a theatre more spacious than is to be found in most of the towns in England containing even 10,000 inhabitants. And more than this—it is elegantly appointed in every respect. We have less space than inclination to particularise, yet we may say that, with an ample stage, most commodious "sofa stalls," excellent "stalls," a very spacious pit, and very numerous private boxes (fitted up with all the appliances which belong to elegance, simplicity, and comfort combined), the whole is, to use a very old but very expressive and not less true description, "Multum in parvo." A superb chandelier brilliantly lights the whole, which has been most ably carried out by Mr. B. Hurwitz, of Southampton Street, Strand. On Tuesday evening the 16th, the "Bijou" was opened for the season by an amateur performance, commencing with Sheridan Knowles' play of The Hunchback, and closing with Planché's Loan of a Lover.—Era.

Princess's Theatre.—This theatre re-opens to-night, with an adaptation of Victor Hugo's Ruy Blas, in which M. Fechter will make his first appearance on the English stage. The lessee, Mr. Harris, has made several additions to his company, and promises to bring out some interesting novelties.

People's Philharmonic Concerts.—A series of concerts under the above by no means unpretending title, was commenced last week at Exeter Hall, with a band of eighty and a chorus of nearly two hundred performers, Dr. James Pech conducting. To bring together so large a cohort of voices and instruments, in all respects efficient, was a manifest difficulty, seeing that all the available talent had been secured for the operas. The band includes some first-rate players, among whom we may mention Mr. Willy, who presides over the first violins, and M. Lavigne, the eminent oboeist. The chorus the first night were "all abroad" in the finale to Lorely, but were more satisfactory in Mendelssohn's part-song, "O hills, O vales." The programme of the first concert, which we give in extenso, will afford some idea of the sort of entertainment presented:—

Part. I.

Overture	"Ruy Blas"	Mendelssohn
Part-Song	"The Departure"	Mendelssohn
Concerto—violin—E minor	M. Victor Buziau.	Mendelssohn
Finale	(Lorely) Mad. Catherine Hayes.	Mendelssohn
Italian Symphony		Mendelssohn

Part. II.

Overture	"Oberon"	Weber.
Prelude	(Robert le Diable)	Meyerbeer.
Introducing the two favourite airs—"Quand je quittai," "Robert, toi que j'aime," Mad. Catherine Hayes.
Solo—flute	"Malbrook" Mr. Benjamin Wells.	Bucher.
Waltz	"Elizabethan"	Strauss.
Madrigal	"Down in a flowery vale"	Festa.
Overture	"La Gazza Ladra"	Rossini.

We did not remain after the conclusion of the Mendelssohn selection. The second performance, which took place on Wednesday the 18th, was even more important than the first, the Messiah being executed by a band and chorus of nearly five hundred performers. Saturday's programme comprised Mozart's Twelfth Mass and a miscellaneous selection, in which Mad. Catherine Hayes, Miss Laura Baxter, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Pinkess sang; and on Monday a Weber night was given, when Mad. Lemmens Sherrington was the prima donna. On Wednesday the Messiah was repeated, and a miscellaneous concert was given on Thursday, in which Mad. Catherine Hayes and Miss Clari Fraser were the principal vocalists. There has also been a second "Weber night," in which, however, the major part of the programme was selected from the works of other composers besides Weber. Our inquiring contemporary, the Era, gives the following biographical, critical, and controversial details about the conductor of these entertainments:—

"(from a correspondent.)

"Dr. James Pech, who has so suddenly appeared upon the musical horizon, is (says a correspondent) a very rising and indefatigable young musician, of about thirty years of age. He is the only child of a major in the British army, who died in 1830, while on service with his regiment in India, and of Mary Agnes Manners, daughter of a gentleman of the name of Sutton, whose ancestors were of a highly respectable origin, and one of whom was created Archbishop of Canterbury. He has been very liberally educated at various public schools, but from his earliest years he has shown considerable predilection and precocious talent for music, and has, all his life, applied himself very assiduously to its study and practice. He has travelled much in all parts of Germany, where he has enjoyed the friendship and been the pupil of various great masters in his art, amongst whom we may mention the venerable Schneider, the great pianists—Chopin, Czerny, and Döhler. He has written in a variety of schools; but few of his compositions are known to the general public. Those few, however, in style and character are remarkable for their elegance and beauty, as well as for a great amount of originality of sentiment and construction. The position he is now, however, called upon to occupy as a conductor will, doubtless, afford him opportunities of producing many compositions for the orchestra which, under other circumstances, would be difficult of accomplishing.

"As regards his merits as a chef d'orchestre, there appears to be many conflicting opinions. It is asserted by some that he requires more experience, but that he has all the elements within him necessary for becoming one of our best conductors. Others again advance that he is in every way qualified for such a distinguished position, for that he has more than an average amount of intellect in his interpretation of musical compositions, while his "beat" in the orchestra, is bold, decisive, remarkably distinct, and intelligible. Others again assert that in conducting he is, perhaps, a little too redundant in action, and allows his enthusiasm to carry him too much away.

"As all these opinions, various as they are, can only at the present moment be esteemed as purely speculative, especially so when it is remembered that, with the exception of his début as conductor at the English Opera, Drury Lane, there has been but little opportunity of forming a correct estimate of his abilities or capabilities in London, it must be left to time and the public as to his future position and prospects. The opening of the 'People's Philharmonic Concerts' at Exeter Hall has, however, given him another opportunity of distinguishing himself; and undoubtedly he has done so, as may be gathered from the various criticisms that have appeared in the several papers regarding these concerts, at which he is conducting some of the most classical as well as miscellaneous music. He is a graduate in music of New College, Oxford, and has also been further distinguished by the present Archbishop of Canterbury, who conferred upon him by diploma the degree of Doctor in Music. At present he is the principal organist of Kensington Park Church; he holds also the appointment of pianist and composer to the Countess of Darnley, and is a joint conductor with M. Benedict of the London Orchestral Association. Apart from his public life, and in his private spheres, he is generally esteemed and admired for the amiability of his disposition, while his manners and bearing are ever those of the educated and polished gentleman."

Although we have no doubt that the "correspondent" of the Era is well informed about the immediate subject of his communication to that journal, we must correct him on one point—Mr. Benedict is in no way connected with the London Orchestral Association.

MEYERBEER, &c.

By C. L. G.

(Continued from page 652.)

After the Crociato there was an interregnum in Meyerbeer's lyric labours, owing to his marriage and the loss of his first two children; he ceased to write, until the pressing invitations from Paris induced him to commence the Robert le Diable for the Académie Royale de Musique. It was ready in July, 1830, when the revolution broke out which ended with the banishment of the elder branch of the Bourbons, and the raising to the throne of the Orleans dynasty, Louis Philippe reigning in the place of Charles X. A memorable night was the 21st of November, 1831—a red letter day in art's annals. Thereon was based the great success of the Grand Opera in Paris, under the direction of M. Véron, the fortunate manager, quack medicine vendor, and, eventually, newspaper proprietor. It was his destiny to produce the Robert le Diable, but Véron himself was unconscious of its transcendent beauties. At the final rehearsal he ran up to Fétis, at that time editor of the Revue et Gazette Musicale, and exclaimed that he was a ruined man—the opera would be a dead failure! He had been earwigged by some of the pedants, who perceived nothing but the past, and by some of the commonplace critics, who have no ear but for a quadrille. Fétis quietly consoled the trembling impresario by the simple assurance—"Robert le Diable will go the round of the world." The learned historian was a true prophet. It was the destiny of an amateur, who subsequently strove for years and years to induce Italian and English managers to do justice to Meyerbeer, to produce his works with the care and attention exacted by the elaborate details, and their success would be certain. His assurance was disbelieved—his judgment was questioned—his taste was sneered at. He was told that the music of Meyerbeer was a puzzle—that it defied execution unless there were years of preparation—that the style was too French and too German—that there was no melody—no inspiration; and that the arias of the principals were wanting in form, inasmuch as the prima donna or leading tenor came on the stage without the preliminary recitative, to be followed by the cantabile, and to be wound up with the customary cabaletta. What an innovator is this Meyerbeer! Actually to dare to individualise his characters—not to make Marcel sing like Raoul, and to draw the line of distinction between Raimbaut and Robert—to present Alice and the Princess under different aspects—to create a Valentine as a decided contrast to Margarita di Valois—to elevate Fides to the level of a Siddons or Ristori, whilst Bertha is noted as simple peasant girl. Such have been the heresies of Meyerbeer; but an amateur, whose privilege it has been to follow the works of that great master, from the Crociato in London to the first nights of all his operas in Paris, has also witnessed the reaction in this country; and when the Royal Italian Opera House rang again and again with the cheering on the opening performance of the Huguenots, those who said to him, "Well, the French Grand Opera has triumphed at last!" met with the rejoinder, "It is not that only; it is more—it is the foundation laid of a National Opera here on a permanent basis." The grounds for this belief were the indications of improved execution at divers places, after the masterly ensembles effected under Mr. Costa's baton at Covent Garden Theatre; and the fact, which is too often lost sight of, that the orchestra and chorus at the Royal Italian Opera have been, since its formation to the present day, principally English artists. We are, however, anticipating, and must return for a moment to Robert le Diable in Paris. It was reserved for Meyerbeer to refute Kant's notions of music—"that it was a language of pure sensation, without any intellectual idea." Now this was the revolution that Meyerbeer caused in the lyric drama. It is precisely because his music is based on "intellectual idea" that he has produced new and powerful emotions. The hearers of his operas must follow the incidents on the stage—they are not doomed merely to listen to a cloying melody, shut their eyes, and cry "Brava" to the cantatrice. No! The opera habitué is irresistibly impelled to watch the stage, to follow the orchestral developments, to interest himself in the plot, to identify himself with the leading personages. He knows the Page will not be like St. Bris; the Catholic and courtly Nevers will be distinguished from the old Puritan Marcel. This is the individuality of the composer, based on his ideality; and herein he has extended and widened the art domain beyond the limits of all his predecessors. But he breaks the rhythm, and cares little about cantabile. How terrible, but then how true, his realisation of character! In Robert le Diable was the third transformation Meyerbeer's genius had undergone, his first stage being the dry fugual forms acquired by hard study to master theory—his second being the impressions produced on a young and enthusiastic mind, under the influence of a sunny sky, and moved by the successes of Rossini, who himself had revolutionised art in Italy.

(To be continued.)

Miss Lydia Thompson was married on Monday (the 22d inst.), at New St. Pancras Church, to William East, Esq., of Forest-hill.

Lecture-Hall, Walworth.—Mr. Edwin Harriss, the pianist, gave a concert in the above hall some time since. He is a very unobtrusive pianist, and in that respect certainly might stand as a good example to many a player who thinks of nobody but himself when he gives a concert. Now Mr. Harriss on the present occasion appeared to think very little of himself, having introduced into the programme, containing twenty pieces, but one solo. Perhaps it was as well to have done so, since he was so nervous that he could hardly perform that one—Mr. Vincent Wallace's Le Rêve. The other instrumental performance was a solo on the French horn by Dr. Bennett Gilbert, which pleased the audience to the extent of an encore. The vocalists were Mad. Gilbert, Miss Emily Gresham, Messrs. George Tedder, Francescos, Haughton, and Reilly, and a chorus of fifty voices. The choir sung five part-songs—Mr. Henry Leslie's "Hail to the chief," Dr. Bennett Gilbert's "Good night" (encored), A. Mullen's "Oh bright summer flowers!" (encored), Franz Abt's "Gaily o'er the scene" (encored), and Mr. W. C. Filby's "England's defence." They sang commendably. Encores were awarded to Miss Emily Gresham in "Comin' thro' the rye," and the Scotch song (made into a duet with Mr. George Tedder) "Huntingtown," and Mad. Gilbert was loudly applauded in Donizetti's cavatina "L'amor suo"—although we are inclined to think something indigenous would have been far more acceptable to the Walworthians. The hall was by no means crowded.

Advertisements.

LIBRARY EDITION OF

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.—Edited by J. W. Davison. In one volume, music size, beautifully engraved and printed, price 8s., or superbly bound price 10s. 6d.

The MAZURKAS of CHOPIN for PIANOFORTE complete, with biographical and critical introduction, by J. W. Davison; and portrait of Chopin by Lynch.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—contains 35 pages of music. With a true method for acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where pupils are also received.

THE ONE PIANOFORTE TUTOR.—272nd Edition.—HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, fingered by CZERNY, recently enlarged to 70 pages, with modern airs and preludes and arrangements, by Vincent Wallace, Brinley Richards, and A. Leduc.—N.B. Ask for Hamilton's Tutor, 70 large folio pages. Price 4s.

ALL PERSONS engaged in MUSICAL TUITION should write without delay for ROBERT COCKS and Co.'s LIST of MUSICAL NOVELTIES; also for their list of highly popular Educational Works. Address Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

A GOOD TUNER seeks an Engagement. No objection to the provinces. Good references, &c.—Address, E. S., care of Messrs. Boosey & Sons, 28 Holles Street, W.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

PIANOFORTE.

		s.	d.
AGUILAR (Emanuel)	"Sunset Glow," Rêverie	3	0
ANDREWS (R.)	"Thou art so near," Rêverie on Reichardt's popular Lied	2	0
" "	"Good night," Rêverie on Reichardt's popular Cradle Song	2	0
ALLEN (G. B.)	Fantasia on a Theme from Oberon	5	0
"BACHIANA"	Select pieces (preludes and fugues) from the Pianoforte works of John Sebastian Bach (not included in the forty-eight preludes and fugues) as played in public by Miss Arabella Goddard.
	No. 1.—"Fuga Scherzando," in A minor	2	0
	2.—"Prelude and Fugue on the name Bach," in B flat ...	2	0
	3.—"Fantasia con Fughetta," in D major	2	0
	4.—"Fantasia con Fuga," in B flat	2	0
	5.—"Preludio con Fuga," in A minor	2	0
	6.—"Two Fugues," in C major	2	0
BADARZEWSKA	"Marie, ou la prière d'une Vierge	3	0
BERGER (Emile)	"I love you," Morceau de Boudoir on Sims Reeves's popular Ballad	3	0
"BLUMEN CLASSIQUES"	Selected for pupils from the works of the great pianoforte composers, by Miss Arabella Goddard.
	No. 1.—Dussek, "Il pastore Alpigiano," Air varié...	3	0
	2.—Steibelt, "Papageno" (Zauberflöte) Air varié	3	0
	3.—Steibelt, "Monostatos" (Zauberflöte) Air varié	3	0
	4.—Dussek, "La Chasse"	3	0
BRISSAC (Jules)	"Bella Figlia" (the quartet from Rigoletto)	2	6
" "	"Quando le Sere" and "Ah fu giusto" (Luisa Miller) ...	3	0
" "	"Bella Adorata" (Il Giuramento)	3	0
BURGMULLER (F.)	"Blanche," Polka Mazurka	2	0
CZERKASKI (J.)	"Sans Souci," Galop	3	0
" "	"La Bella Contessa Valses	3	0
COBHAM (Maurice)	"The Glory of Scotland" (favourite national melodies)...	3	0
DAWES (Albert)	"Auld Lang Syne," with variations	5	0
" "	"South Down" Polka	1	0
" "	"Hastings" Waltzes	3	0
" "	"Hastings" Polka	2	0
" "	"Anacreontic" Quadrille on popular Glees	3	0
DIEHL (L.)	"The Reindeer Galop" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
EGGHARD (Jules)	"Chanson Erotique" (chanson d'amour)	2	0
FUMAGALLI (A.)	"Clarice," (morceau de concert, played by Miss Arabella Goddard)	4	0
GOMION (E. A.)	"Elise," Romance	2	0
GREVILLE (Hon. Mrs.)	"Ballabile Militaire"	2	6
GUENEE (L.)	"La Chasse" (morceau caractéristique)	3	0
HANDEL (G. F.)	"The harmonious Blacksmith" (the only correct edition, as played by Miss Arabella Goddard)	2	0
HARGITT (C. J.)	"Three Lieder ohne Wörte"	3	0
HARVEY (R. F.)	"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0
"	"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	2	0
HOFFMAN (R.)	"Maritana" (grand fantasia on subjects from Wallace's popular Opera)	3	6
HOLMES (Georgiana)	"Les Etoiles et leur langage" (nocturne)	3	0
"	"Air, with variations"	3	0
HOLMES (W. H.)	"Highland Echo"	3	0
"	Selection for the drawing-room of Pianoforte Works by celebrated Composers.
	No. 1.—"Inspiration." (E. Wolff.)	1	0
	2.—"Gaiety." (Handel.)	1	0
KUHE (W.)	"Good Night," Rêverie on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied	3	0
LIEBICH (Immanuel).	Two popular melodies transcribed.
	No. 1.—"I love you," (composed expressly for Sims Reeves, by Balfe)	2	0
	2.—"Good Night," (Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied)	2	0
LINDLEY (R.)	"Caprice Bohème"	4	0
LUDERS (Charles)	"Le Corsaire," Mélodie Historique	3	0
"	"La Tarentelle"	3	0
MCKORKELL (C.)	"March," (dedicated to Capt. Barr and the officers of the Northamptonshire Volunteers)	3	0
"	"La Joyeuse," Souvenir des Champs Elysées	3	0
"	"Souvenir de Gluck." (Armide)	3	0
MARRIOTT	"The Woman in White," Grand Valse mystérieuse, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq.	4	0
MEYERBEER (G.)	"Royal Wedding March," (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux). Composed for the marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia	5	0
MONIOT (Eugène)	"A Summer's Day," Romance	3	0
"	"A Summer's Eve,"	2	6
"	"Santa Lucia," Cottrau's admired Neapolitan air, transcribed for young pianists	1	0
"	"Schottish d'amour"	2	0
MONREAL (G.)	"La divina Melodia," Notturno	3	0
NORDMANN (Rudolf)	"Thou art so near," (Reichardt's popular song, arranged for young pianists)	1	0
OSBORNE (G. A.)	"Pauline," Nocturne	3	0
PECH (Dr. James)	"May Dew Polka"	2	0
RICHARDS' (Brinley)	"Ethel," Romance	2	0
"	"Leopold Mazurka"	2	0
ROECKEL (E.)	"The Bride's Farewell" (Song without words)	2	0
ROSENFELD (F.)	"Weber's last Waltz" (transcribed)	2	0
SCARLATTI (D.)	"Fugue" in G minor (Cat's Fugue), as played by Miss Arabella Goddard at the Monday Popular Concerts ...	2	6
YARNOLD (Louisa)	"Fantasia," or "Oh I would wend with thee"	3	0

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

CZERKASKI (Joseph) "The Bridesmaids' Album."

		s.	d.
No. 1—	"Bridal Quadrilles"	2	0
2—	"Shorncliffe Waltzes"	2	6
3—	"Beatrice Mazurka"	2	0
4—	"Frederick William Waltz"	3	0
5—	"Princess Victoria Quadrille"	2	0
6—	"Polish Varsoviana"	2	0
7—	"Exeter Polka"	2	0
8—	"Apethorpe Galop"	1	6

REPERTOIRE DES BOUFFES PARISIENS.

		s.	d.
No. 1—	"Tromb-al-Cazar" Waltz	2	6
2—	"Rêve d'une nuit d'été" Waltz	2	0
3—	"Les deux Pêcheurs'" Waltz	2	6
4—	"Les deux Avengles" Waltz	2	6
5—	"Le Violoneux Polka"	2	0
6—	"Une Nuit blanche" Quadrille	2	0
7—	"Vent du Soir" Quadrille	2	0
8—	"Le Violoneux" Waltz	2	0

* The "Bridesmaids' Album," complete in one volume, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

		s.	d.
BARTHOLOMEW (Mrs. Mounsey)	"The last rose of summer" (varied)	3	0
LINTER (Ricardo)	"Don Pasquale" (introducing "Com è gentil")	5	0
NORDMANN (Rudolf)	"Thou art so near, and yet so far" (Reichardt's popular Lied, arranged for young pianists)	1	0

HARP MUSIC.

OBERTHÜR (Charles) "Thou art so near, and yet so far" (Reichardt's popular Lied), transcribed for harp solo 3s. 0d.

FLUTE MUSIC.

		s.	d.
MINASI (Antonio)	"Venice" Duo on the "Carnival of Venice", for two flutes and pianoforte	5	0
"	"Per Scalas Ascendimus," containing Scales, Arpeggios, and Intervals, with Remarks upon their Construction and Method of Practice	7	6

ORGAN MUSIC.

PECH (Dr. James) "Introduction and Fugue" ... ... 3s. 0d.

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street.

EVANS'S
ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

The Cottage Harmonium, at Six Guineas

Has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft agreeable quality of tone, suitable for a cottage or a small sitting-room.

The Ten-Guinea Harmonium

In a handsome Oak Case, possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone which characterises all EVANS'S Instruments.

The Nineteen-Guinea, or Three-Stop Harmonium

With Unison Trebles, and Bourdon in the Bass, is a powerful instrument, and designed expressly for leading Public Worship.

The Twelve-Stop Harmonium, price 36 Guineas

Is a brilliant and powerful instrument, suitable either for a church or drawing-room.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium, at 68 Guineas

Is in a very handsome Rosewood Case, has two rows of keys, and five and a half octaves of vibrators. This is acknowledged by the profession and press to be the most perfect Harmonium, without pedals, that has yet been produced.

The Organist's or Pedal Harmonium, at Forty-Seven Guineas

Is in an American walnut case, has Ten Stops and Two Octaves, and a Third of Pedals, with independent reeds.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium,

WITH TWO ROWS OF KEYS AND PEDALS,

In Oak Case, and Eighteen Stops, price 130 Guineas, possesses the attributes of an Organ, and is the most complete Harmonium that has yet been constructed.

An Illustrated Catalogue of EVANS' English Harmoniums, with One and Two Rows of Keys, with or without the Percussion Action, and with Pedals, at prices ranging from 6 to 140 Guineas, is now ready, and may be had upon application to the Manufacturers,

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, October 27, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 44 SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a
NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TYNDELL.
Pianoforte	Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TYNDELL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Flute and Piccolo	Dr. TYNDELL.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, Clarionet, Oboe, and Piccolo	Mr. DOWLING.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Dr. TYNDELL.
Vocal Classes	Dr. TYNDELL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DAWSON.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for
THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, and conducted by Dr. Mark, is composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist,—or
THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

THE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C.—A.D. 1834.—The TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT, Cash Account, Balance Sheet, &c., are now ready, and may be had on written or personal application. CHARLES INGALL, Actuary.

44

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON: Season 1860.—The Fellows are hereby informed that an Ordinary Meeting of Fellows will be held at the Society's Rooms, 28 Piccadilly, on Wednesday Evening, November 7th, at 8 o'clock, when Professor POLE, F.R.A.S., Mus. Bac., Oxon, will read a paper, entitled, "Illustrations of some points connected with the subject of Musical Pitch."

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.

St. James's Hall, 28 Piccadilly, W.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Evening at 8. Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 21 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 5s.; area, 3s.; gallery, 1s. Books of the Words, 6d. each.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

HERR ENGEL begs to announce that he has REMOVED from Bentinck Street, to No. 71 NEW BOND STREET, W.

MISS MARTIN begs to inform her friends and pupils she has RETURNED to town for the season. Communications to be addressed to her residence, 40 Southampton Row, Russell Square.

MISS PALMER begs to announce to her friends and pupils that she has REMOVED to Sherwood Cottage, 25 Park Village East, Regent's Park, N.W., and requests that after Nov. 7th, all letters respecting engagements, &c., may be directed there.—10 Salisbury Street, Strand.

MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, L'ETOILE DU NORD, complete, with English version, by F. H. CHORLEY. Price £1 1s. Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street.

MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, LE PROPHETE, complete—Italian version by S. M. MAZZIONI. Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street.

MEYERBEER'S TRIUMPHAL MARCH, composed for the Schiller Festival. Cramer, Beale & Co., 201 Regent Street.

NOTICE.

BOOSEY & SONS' New and complete edition of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS, in 2 vols. 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait of Beethoven, will be ready for delivery early next week.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK FOR 1861 will be issued early in December, Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Advertisements, Lists of Music, Names and Addresses of Professors and the Trade must be sent in before the 12th November, to Rudall, Rose, Carte & Co., 20 Charing Cross.

JULLIEN FUND.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Coutts; Messrs. Hayward, Remnard, and Co.; the London and County Bank; the Hon. Treasurers, Mr. J. Mitchell, Mr. T. Chappell, and Mr. W. H. Sams; and Shilling Subscriptions to 18th October ... £756 12 2

Amount paid to M. Jullien during his illness, and for his funeral expenses, and debts	£136	7 8
Amount voted for M. Jullien's two adopted children	134	0 0
" " " Sister and Nephew	80	0 0
" " " Mad. Jullien	336	7 3
Expenses of collecting books, advertising, printing, postages, &c., &c.	69	19 8
	756	12 3

MUSICAL WORLD ONE PENNY NEWSPAPER

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

PIANOFORTE.

		s.	d.
AGUILAR (Emanuel)	"Sunset Glow," Rêverie	3	0
ANDREWS (R.)	"Thou art so near," Rêverie on Reichardt's popular Lied	2	0
" "	"Good night," Rêverie on Reichardt's popular Cradle Song	2	0
ALLEN (G. B.)	Fantasia on a Theme from Oberon	5	0
"BACHIANA"	Select pieces (preludes and fugues) from the Pianoforte works of John Sebastian Bach (not included in the forty-eight preludes and fugues) as played in public by Miss Arabella Goddard.
	No. 1.—"Fuga Scherzando," in A minor	2	0
	2.—"Prelude and Fugue on the name Bach," in B flat ...	2	0
	3.—"Fantasia con Fughetta," in D major	2	0
	4.—"Fantasia con Fuga," in B flat	2	0
	5.—"Preludio con Fuga," in A minor	2	0
	6.—"Two Fugues," in C major	2	0
BADARZEWSKA (T.)	"Marie, ou la prière d'une Vierge	2	0
BERGER (Emile)	"I love you," Morceau de Boudoir on Sims Reeves's popular Ballad	3	0
"BLUETTES CLASSIQUES"	Selected for pupils from the works of the great pianoforte composers, by Miss Arabella Goddard.
	No. 1.—Dussek, "Il pastore Alpigiano," Air varié...	3	0
	2.—Steibelt, "Papageno" (Zauberflöte) Air varié	3	0
	3.—Steibelt, "Monostatos" (Zauberflöte) Air varié	3	0
	4.—Dussek, "La Chasse"	3	0
BRISSAC (Jules)	"Bella Figlia" (the quartet from Rigoletto)	2	6
" "	"Quando le Sere" and "Ah fu giusto" (Luisa Miller) ...	3	0
" "	"Bella Adorata" (Il Giuramento)	3	0
BURGMULLER (F.)	"Blanche," Polka Mazurka	2	0
CZERKASKI (J.)	"Sans Souci," Galop	3	0
" "	"La Bella Contessa Valses	3	0
COBHAM (Maurice)	"The Glory of Scotland" (favourite national melodies)...	3	0
DAWES (Albert)	"Auld Lang Syne," with variations	5	0
" "	"South Down" Polka	1	0
" "	"Hastings" Waltzes	3	0
" "	"Hastings" Polka	1	6
" "	"Anacreontic" Quadrille on popular Glees	3	0
DIEHL (Louis)	"The Reindeer Galop" (beautifully illustrated)	3	0
EGGHARD (Jules)	"Chanson Erotique" (chanson d'amour)	2	0
FUMAGALLI (A.)	"Clarice," (morceau de concert, played by Miss Arabella Goddard)	4	0
GOMION (E. A.)	"Elise," Romance	2	0
GREVILLE (Hon. Mrs.)	"Ballabile Militaire"	2	6
GUENEE (L.)	"La Chasse" (morceau caractéristique)	3	0
HANDEL (G. F.)	"The harmonious Blacksmith" (the only correct edition, as played by Miss Arabella Goddard)	2	0
HARGITT (C. J.)	"Three Lieder ohne Wörte"	3	0
HARVEY (R. F.)	"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0
HARVEY (R. F.)	"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	2	0
HOFFMAN (R.)	"Maritana" (grand fantasia on subjects from Wallace's popular Opera)	3	6
HOLMES (Georgiana)	"Les Etoiles et leur langage" (nocturne)	3	0
"	"Air, with variations"	3	0
HOLMES (W. H.)	"Highland Echo"	3	0
"	Selection for the drawing-room of Pianoforte Works by celebrated Composers.
	No. 1.—"Inspiration." (E. Wolff.)	1	0
	2.—"Gaiety." (Handel.)	1	0
KUHE (Wilhelm)	"Good Night," Rêverie on Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied	3	0
LIEBICH (Immanuel).	Two popular melodies transcribed.
	No. 1.—"I love you," (composed expressly for Sims Reeves, by Balfe)	2	0
	2.—"Good Night," (Reichardt's popular Wiegenlied)	2	0
LINDLEY (R.)	"Caprice Bohème"	4	0
LISZT (Franz)	"L'Etoile du Soir," Romance de l'Opera Tannhauser de Richard Wagner	2	0
LUDERS (Charles)	"Le Corsaire," Mélodie Historique	3	0
"	"La Tarentelle"	3	0
MCKORRELL (C.)	"March," (dedicated to Capt. Barr and the officers of the Northamptonshire Volunteers)	3	0
"	"La Joyeuse," Souvenir des Champs Elysées	3	0
"	"Souvenir de Glück," (Armide)	3	0
MARRIOTT (C.)	"The Woman in White," Grand Valse mystérieuse, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq.	3	0
MEYERBEER (G.)	"Royal Wedding March," (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux). Composed for the marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia	5	0
MONIOT (Eugène)	"A Summer's Day," Romance	3	0
"	"A Summer's Eve," "	2	6
"	"Santa Lucia," Cottrau's admired Neapolitan air, transcribed for young pianists	1	0
"	"Schottish d'amour"	2	0
MONREAL (G.)	"La divina Melodia," Notturno	3	0
NORDMANN (Rudolf)	"Thou art so near," (Reichardt's popular song, arranged for young pianists)	1	0
OSBORNE (G. A.)	"Pauline," Nocturne	3	0
PECH (Dr. James)	"May Dew Polka"	2	0
RICHARDS' (Brinley)	"Ethel," Romance	2	0
"	"Leopold Mazurka"	2	0
ROECKEL (E.)	"The Bride's Farewell" (Song without words)	2	0
ROSENFELD (F.)	"Weber's last Waltz" (transcribed)	2	0
SCARLATTI (D.)	"Fugue" in G minor (Cat's Fugue), as played by Miss Arabella Goddard at the Monday Popular Concerts ...	2	6
YARNOLD (Louisa)	"Fantasia," on "Oh I would wend with thee"	3	0

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

CZERKASKI (Joseph) "The Bridesmaids' Album."

No. 1—	"Bridal Quadrilles"	2	0
2—	"Shorncliffe Waltzes"	2	6
3—	"Beatrice Mazurka"	2	0
4—	"Frederick William Waltz"	3	0
5—	"Princess Victoria Quadrille"	2	0
6—	"Polish Varsoviana"	2	0
7—	"Exeter Polka"	2	0
8—	"Apethorpe Galop"	1	6

REPERTOIRE DES BOUFFES PARISIENS.

No. 1—	"Tromb-al-Cazar" Waltz	2	6
2—	"Rêve d'une nuit d'été" Waltz	2	0
3—	"Les deux Pêcheurs'" Waltz	2	6
4—	"Les deux Aveugles" Waltz	2	6
5—	"Le Violoneux Polka"	2	0
6—	"Une Nuit blanche" Quadrille	2	0
7—	"Vent du Soir" Quadrille	2	0
8—	"Le Violoneux" Waltz	2	0

 The "Bridesmaids' Album," complete in one volume, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

BARTHOLOMEW (Mrs. Mounsey) "The last rose of summer" (varied) 3 0
LINTER (Ricardo) "Don Pasquale" (introducing "Com è gentil") 5 0
NORDMANN (Rudolf) "Thou art so near, and yet so far" (Reichardt's popular Lied, arranged for young pianists) 1 0

HARP MUSIC.

OBERTHÜR (Charles) "Thou art so near, and yet so far" (Reichardt's popular Lied), transcribed for harp solo 3s. 0d.

FLUTE MUSIC.

MINASI (Antonio) "Venice" Duo on the "Carnival of Venice", for two flutes and pianoforte 5 0
" "Per Scalas Ascendimus," containing Scales, Arpeggios, and Intervals, with Remarks upon their Construction and Method of Practice 7 6

ORGAN MUSIC.

PECH (Dr. James) "Introduction and Fugue" ... ... 3s. 0d.

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Dépôt Général de la Maison Brandus, de Paris; 244 Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street.

Reviews.

PASSING over some numbers of Messrs. Ashdown and Parry's edition of M. Stephen Heller's pianoforte works, less interesting, or at any rate less important, than those already noticed, we come to the "Quatre Morceaux de Salon," on Melodies by Schubert, which unite the brilliant characteristics of the modern school with a solidity that entitles them to rank with things of a higher order, even amongst the best productions of that school. M. Heller is evidently a contemplative musician, and, though frequently marked by the mechanical redundancies so prevalent in modern music for the instrument, his compositions are for the most part imbued with a genuine poetic spirit. Were it not for his manifest originality he might be pronounced, in some measure, a disciple of Frederic Chopin. At any rate, there is no other to whom he can reasonably be compared, even while, as we are inclined to think, the comparison does him more or less injustice. Passages may be singled out from the works of M. Heller which, for force and novelty, cannot be parallelled in those of any other pianoforte composer of the last twenty years, excepting only Mendelssohn and Professor Bennett. The "Quatre Morceaux de Salon" form Ops. 33 to 36 inclusive in the catalogue of his compositions. The melodies of Schubert, which M. Heller has selected for the present work, are four of the most well-known and popular—Die Forelle, Der Erl Konig, Das Lob der Thranen, and Die Post ("The Trout," "The Erl King," "The Praise of Tears," and "The Post"), all of which he has treated in a new and masterly manner. But the best of the set is, beyond comparison, Die Forelle ("The Trout"), one of the most sparkling and fanciful "caprices" that modern pianoforte music can boast. The melody is one of Schubert's prettiest and freshest, and M. Heller has invested it with a hundred new charms. A light and elegant arpeggio is made the accompaniment to the air, which is diversified with the brightest fancy and consummate tact. Nothing can exceed the delicate and tripping effect of this little piece when skilfully executed. It turned the heads of all the Parisian pianists, from Liszt to Emile Prudent, at the time of its early publication, and is even now to be found in almost every fashionable saloon of the French metropolis. M. Stephen Heller had always been acknowledged by the French critics as an excellent musician and one of the most accomplished masters of the pianoforte; but until the appearance of "La Truite" his popularity was not so remarkable as the respect he inspired among cultivated judges. But when Chopin, through the influence of Georges Sand, his sex-contemning mistress, became absorbed in the pseudo-metaphysical—when Herz and Thalberg lay dozing on their oars, with Döhler asleep at the rudder—M. Heller may be said to have had no competitor among contemporary followers of the "popular æsthetic school" which obtained with the young composers of the day—a necessary condition of the astonishing progress but recently achieved in a certain department of executive art. Since that period the works of M. Heller have made a great advance in the estimation of pianists on this side the Channel, where, perhaps, he is more seriously appreciated than on the other, or perhaps—when we recall Leipsic and Weimar, not to speak of Gotha—not. M. Heller is a man of ability independently of his art. One of the best musical critics of the Parisian and German press, his many contributions to some of the principal journals are written with the facility and elegance of a practised pen, the depth of an annalist, and the acumen of a musician. It must not be supposed that M. Heller is a Frenchman. Like his intimate and talented friend, Mr. Charles Hallé, the pianist, he is a Teuton by birth—but being less Titanic than the ordinary race of Teutons, and less Teutonic than the ordinary race of Titans, circumstances have made a more suitable home for him in Paris than he would be likely to have found in Ulm or Heligoland.

"Constancy," ballad—poetry by Delta, music by T. M. Mudie (Cramer, Beale and Chappell)—is a model of which a ballad should be. The melody, simple and vocal, is at the same time expressive, while the accompaniment displays the art of a musician, devoid of all superfluous elaboration. The words treat with agreeable fluency a sentiment which, if a little worn by the hands of poetasters, is both natural and poetical. The key of the song is A flat, the tune lies within the range of ordinary voices, and the accompaniment can be easily mastered by players of moderate capability. "Constancy," in short, will find admirers of all grades, being genuine and unaffected to a fault.

"The Wood Nymphs," duet—composed by G. A. Macfarren (Chappell and Co.)—is a charmingly graceful effusion, full of musical points of interest, skilfully voiced, and thoroughly expressing the sentiments of the words. Mr. Macfarren is one of our most successful composers of chamber duets, trios, &c., and the revival of this happy specimen of his ability will be generally welcomed. Simple, natural, and flowing as is the melody, it does not prevent the harmonisation from being here and there marked by features which declare no common hand to have been at work.

"Per Scalas Ascendimus," by Antonio Minasi (Duncan Davison and Co.).—The above work, although especially written to elucidate the fingering of a particular kind of instrument (Carte's Council and Prize-medal Flute), can also be consulted with equal advantage by students of the ordinary flute — and, indeed, of all other varieties of the instrument — merely by adopting the fingering peculiar to each. "Per Scalas Ascendimus" consists of scales, arpeggios, and intervals, with remarks upon their construction and method of practice, &c., and a useful extract from Berlioz's treatise upon modern instruments. The exercises, which illustrate the greatest intricacies of fingering, as well as difficulties to be surmounted by the lip (embouchure), are so arranged that a tyro, provided always he pay attention to the rules laid down for his guidance ("playing slowly at first," "observing the double bar," &c.), will soon be able to conquer them. The study of intervals, scales, and arpeggios is absolutely necessary to those who desire to become masters of the instrument. The construction of the diatonic, minor, and chromatic scales is lucidly explained by Mr. Minasi; and, in connection with arpeggios, a full description is presented of all the chords, as well as an interesting note on the enharmonic diesis and harmonic sounds. To flute students these explanations (which we do not remember to have seen in any other work) will be of great value, and the examples of chromatic passages and chromatic intervals will be found eminently serviceable. We can recommend Mr. Minasi's work to all students who are desirous of attaining perfection on the flute, as a means of facilitating the performance of the most elaborate and difficult studies composed for that instrument.

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Oct. 20, 1860.

FROM Paris to Vienna in 38 hours viâ Strasburg. A wonderfully short journey compared to that of ten years since over the same ground, but still wearisome enough. While indulging in a few hours' rest, which such fatigue rendered indispensable, I was this morning, at eight o'clock awoke by the most tremendous storm of pianoforte thunder and lightning that ever disturbed the sleep of a worn-out traveller—a perfect hurricane of harmony—a chaotic mass of sound, in which the music of the past, present, and the future was jumbled together in the most unintelligible confusion. Tarentellas, triumphant marches, scherzos, and allegros seemed to my unaccustomed ear to be commingled without any definite purpose or design, excepting that of making as much noise as the unhappy instrument was capable of producing, according to the rhapsodical mood of the performer. I listened for a time, and then tried to sleep again in vain. I rose and went to the window, which looked out upon the court-yard of this most respectable hotel, "Zur Kaiserinn Elizabeth." The domestics were at their usual vocations; the boots was busily employed in polishing the last of at least fifty pairs of shoes; the housemaid was sweeping the room opposite. No one appeared to pay the slightest attention to the tempest which was raging in the apartment on the first floor opposite, of which the window had been opened in order, very probably, to allow the deafening volumes of sound means of escape in safety. Tranquillity, under such circumstances, was hopeless. I rang the bell and inquired, more or less indignantly, who was allowed to create such a disturbance at such an early hour to the annoyance of all reasonable people.

"Ich weiss nicht, mein Herr," replies the Stubenmädchen, "aber Doctor Liszt wohnt in dem Zimmer gegenüber." Further information was unnecessary. The mystery was solved; the pianoforte thunder and lightning by one word explained. Liszt, and Liszt alone, could have evoked such a torrent of sound from any instrument. It ceased almost as soon as I had learned its origin. The morning rhapsody of the lion-pianist had exhausted itself.

During the day I met Liszt, and had an opportunity of seeing that time has not spared him any less than it has more ordinary mortals. The long lanky hair still falls over the lofty brow; the eagle-eye still glances brightly; but the hair is tinged with grey; the brow is furrowed with wrinkles, and ugly crow's-feet radiate from the eagle eye, somewhat disfiguring the kaiserliches gesicht of the eminent virtuoso. We talked of England, of which, for some reason or another, Liszt is evidently not very much enamoured. Whether he is disappointed at the cold reception we have given to Wagner, and our want of faith in the music of the future, I know not. It is, however, not improbable, seeing what an energetic disciple he is of the new school. He is as usual travelling en prince, attended by a suite of hangers-on, soi-disant admirers. Liszt now resides in Weimar, and rarely extends his travels beyond Germany.

At the Kärntnerthor Theatre, of such universal reputation, operas are still given with the same perfection of ensemble in respect to execution, and the same slovenly mise-en-scène, as distinguished the representations ten years ago. This evening M. Halevy's La Juive, a work but little known in England, was performed with the following cast:—Prinz—Herr Gunz; Eleazar—Herr Wachtal; Prinzestin—Fraulein Liebhart; Rachel—Mad. Csillag; Cardinal—Herr Drachsler. The primo tenore, Herr Wachtal, is a German Tamberlik, who indulges in B flats and C's dipetto to any extent without the slightest apparent effort. It is truly a magnificent voice which, with judicious care and study, will ensure a brilliant career to its possessor. Herr Wachtal is new to the stage, young and good looking, perhaps the most promising "Helden tenor" of the day. The rôle of Eleazar is one requiring more experience in stage business than he can yet bring to bear. Nevertheless, he sustained the part respectably, and by his singing of the music elicited the fullest approbation of the audience.

Mad. Csillag, the prima donna, is well known in England; but the London public have had as yet no opportunity of judging of those remarkable vocal and histrionic powers which have made her such a favourite in Vienna. The operas in which she appeared at Covent Garden were but little adapted to her talents compared to such as La Juive, Macbeth, the Huguenots, &c. As Rachel in La Juive Mad. Csillag is unrivalled. In common with Mad. Viardot, to whom there is a striking resemblance both in her acting and appearance, she contrives so completely to identify herself with the heroine of the opera, that the artiste is forgotten in the interest excited in the part she represents. The illusion is sustained throughout and never once disturbed by any extravagant effort at effect. The Ars celare artem is the maxim fully carried out, and the impression upon the audience consequently deep and lasting. Mad. Csillag's enthusiastic reception, and the frequent calls before the curtain during and after the opera, proved the admiration of the Viennese public for their favourite prima donna.

In Herr Drachsler it is painful to observe the evil effect of forcing a naturally fine bass voice into a weak basso baritono, as the Italians call it. As the Cardinal he has but little to do, but enough to show that he has not made much progress either as a singer or an actor during the last ten years.

Mlle. Liebhart is a soprano of the Persiani school, with an agreeable voice, and as little pretensions to dramatic talent as most of the soprani leggieri.

The band and chorus were admirable under the direction of Herr Esser. Altogether the opera was given, as I have before said, with the same perfection as to execution, and the same carelessness as to the costumes and scenery, which distinguished the performances at the Kärntner-Thor any time the last ten years. It is here that Wagner rejoices in more willing executants and a more appreciative audience than elsewhere in Germany. Tännhauser and Lohengrin are to be heard weekly, and the Fliegender Holländer is in active rehersal.

So much for music in Vienna for the present. Next week Tännhauser shall be duly noticed.

Oct. 27.

A hearty greeting to all his friends in England from Ernst. He has been an invalid ever since he left London, now three years ago. After trying many of the German baths, without any beneficial result, he has come to Vienna to consult the medical men, who have given him hopes of a speedy restoration to health, if he follow their advice. He suffers acute pain, and is at times quite unable to stand or walk without support. I called yesterday at the house of Mad. Wertheimber, the most liberal friend of music and musicians in this musical capital, with whom Ernst and his wife are staying. The doctors had just left, and had given a favourable opinion as to the progress of their patient. Ernst was in better spirits than usual, and expressed the greatest interest to know what had been doing in the musical world of London since his absence. During his illness, he has been unable to perform in public. The last time he played was to some members of the imperial family of Russia at Nice, and was then obliged to be seated during his performance. His account of the reception accorded him by the Court, reminded me of the "pitying duchess" in "the Last Minstrel." Thalberg is also here. It appears that he has altogether neglected the pianoforte for the last two years. A large fortune and a lazy disposition make him careless of his professional career.

Of all the hospitable receptions in this city, renowned for hospitality, that given by the amiable Jetty Treffz is the most agreeable with which an Englishman can meet. Having amassed a handsome fortune, the result of a brilliant career in Germany and England, the fascinating Teutonic prima donna resides in Vienna, the delight and ornament of a large circle of acquaintance. Her house is furnished in the English style, and the hospitality is most decidedly after the same approved model. The charming hostess always speaks with gratitude of the pleasant time she passed in England, and does her best to prove the sincerity of what she says by the invariable kind-hearted welcome she gives to those English friends who visit her in in this her native country.

The performances at the Kärntnerthor Theatre this week have been interesting. On Sunday 21st, Wilhelm Tell was given with a perfection of ensemble which intimate knowledge of the work, and frequent performances by the same executants, can alone attain. Objection might be made to the tempi of some of the principal morceaux, as being different to the English reading of the same subject; but deference must be paid to the Kärntnerthor authority, as being very probably the most correct in such matters. As the hero of the opera, Herr Beck, fully justified the reputation he has of being the best German baritone of the present day. Voice, appearance, and dramatic talent are happily combined in this artist, all of which qualities are requisite in such a rôle as Wilhelm Tell. Herr Wachtal, as Arnold, again displayed his remarkable vocal powers. The grand duet, "Dove Vai"—to give the Italian and best known title—was magnificently rendered by these two artists and the band, every member of which seemed to devote heart and soul to the performance. Mathilde was represented by Mlle. Krands, a good-looking soprano of great promise, with a charming voice. Gemmy was performed by Mlle. Ferrari. The other rôles were ably sustained by Mlle. Sulzer, Herr Hrabaneek, Gunz, &c.

On Monday, 22nd, the German version of Verdi's Trovatore was given, with the following cast:—Manrico, Herr Walter; Azucena, Fraulein Sulzer; Fernando, Herr Mayerhofer; Leonora, Mad. Csillag; Conte di Luna, Herr Hrabaneck. The tenor, Herr Walter, has cultivated an ungrateful voice with evident perseverance. Strange to say, the falsetto is powerful, but the chest notes are weak, and not of an agreeable quality. Fraulein Sulzer was suffering from cold, and thereby prevented from doing justice either to the music or herself. Herr Mayerhofer, a pupil of Staudigl, has acquired in his singing and action the style of his celebrated master. The Leonora of Mad. Csillag is of very much more dramatic importance than the "walking lady" who wears black, white, and party-coloured raiment alternately, and sings a couple of arias upon our Italian stage. Mad. Csillag takes quite another reading of the part, and by the earnestness of her acting, and the grandeur of her declamation, greatly increases the interest of the opera. This is particularly remarkable in the "Miserere scene," where Leonora hears the voice of Manrico from the prison tower. The situation is heightened in effect by the passionate despair pourtrayed in every note and gesture of this most intelligent artist. The music suits Mad. Csillag admirably, and the character altogether is one of the most successful in which she has appeared. Herr Hrabaneck (a name which will probably puzzle some of your readers) sang the music of the Conte di Luna well. His personal appearance is unfortunately not favourable for the amorous Templar; he is, however, a good actor, and overcomes this defect to a great extent.

On Monday a new ballet, entitled Carnival's Abendlheuer in Paris, was produced. It is surprising how an educated public can find amusement for a whole evening in the gesticulations and pas seuls of dancers, not one of whom possesses that grace which is the intrinsic charm of such an entertainment. The greatest success of the evening was nothing more than a veritable Parisian cancan, better done at any of the gardens whence it originated. It created a furor among the military, who frequent the theatre in crowds on these occasions. It is a blessing to think that such an entertainment would not be endured by a London audience.

On Wednesday, 24th, a very different representation took place, being none other than Wagner's Tännhauser; or, "The Singer's Strife," which, according to the prophecy of his admirers, is to be the Don Giovanni, Guillaume Tell, and Fidelio, of the next century. From all I had heard of the mysterious character of the work, I prepared myself for an evening of hard labour to understand this music of the future. According to the prognostications of the lovers of the Italian school, I was to be overcome by the first act, and sleep out the rest of the opera; nay, so soporific was the music pronounced, that I fully anticipated not perhaps awaking again until the following evening. Such antagonistic opinions naturally excited my curiosity, and rendered the performance of Tännhauser the most interesting of all those I had yet attended at the Kärntnerthor. The libretto is a combination of the fabulous and romantic, and the story is doubtless already well known to the readers of the MUSICAL WORLD. However, for the benefit of the inexperienced, it is perhaps as well to say that Tannhäuser, a minstrel knight of the thirteenth century, is in Act. I. discovered in the terrestrial dwelling of the goddess Venus, complaining of his exile from the world of mortals. He is allowed by his mistress to revisit his native land, and takes part in a contest for the hand of Elizabeth, daughter of the Landgraf of Thüringen, who is to be given in marriage to the most successful of the singers in praise of love. Tännhauser succeeds, but is denied the prize on account of his guilty sojourn with the goddess. The contest of the singers and subsequent refusal of his bride to Tännhauser conclude the second act. In the last act Elizabeth awaits the return of Tännhauser from Rome, whither he has made a pilgrimage to obtain absolution. She dies before they meet. Tännhauser returns excommunicated by the Pope, and calls upon Venus to receive him again. The goddess appears at the moment Tännhauser learns the death of Elizabeth, upon whose body he expires as it is being carried to the grave. Such is the outline of the libretto. Of the music it is impossible to judge after one hearing. It is unquestionably the effort of a man of genius and of original ideas. The overture is perhaps the least important part of the whole work, and in which the constant repetition of the same phrase or figure produces anything but a favourable impression. The song of a shepherd in the valley to which Tännhauser is transported, in the first act, is remarkable for the contrast it makes to the prayer of some passing pilgrims. The ensemble, a most artistic bit of colouring, is the first morceau which seizes the attention. The finale to the same act, when Tännhauser meets the Landgraf and the minstrel knights, is dramatic and effective; and in this Wagner has condescended to avail himself of the accepted form of similar compositions, produces his effect by the ordinary means, this finale being more continuously melodious than any other part of the opera. In the second act the strife of the singers affords a great opportunity for musical display, which the composer has allowed to pass by; the poetry, nevertheless, shows that Wagner (who writes his own librettos) was impressed with the interest of the situation, it being the most imaginative of the whole work. The march preceding the strife of the singers is monotonous. In the third act, Elizabeth's prayer, and the "Abendlied" (the latter sung by the baritone) are the most intelligible of all the solos, both exquisitely harmonised and instrumented by a master hand. The cast of the opera was as follows:—

Hermann, Landgraf von Thüringen		HERR MAYERHOFER.
Tannhäuser	Minstrel Knights	HERR ANDER.
Wolfram		HERR RUDOLF.
Walter		HERR GUNZ.
Biterolf		HERR HRABENECK.
Heinrich		HERR KAMPE.
Elizabeth		MLLE. KRAUS.
Venus		MLLE. HOFFMANN.
Hirt		MLLE. KUDELKA.

As Tännhauser, Herr Ander (who is known in London as having appeared at the Royal Italian Opera some five years ago) sang and acted with the greatest vigour. His voice is not so fresh as formerly, and must undoubtedly suffer from constantly singing the music of Wagner, which, for the tenor particularly, is even more irksome and wearing than that of Verdi. It would be difficult to find another artist who could give so much effect to the part of Tännhauser as Herr Ander. Mlle. Kraus was an interesting and efficient Elizabeth. The other parts were creditably sung. To me the first impression of the opera was decidedly favourable, and induced a strong desire to hear the music a second time. Without siding either with those who so enthusiastically uphold or unequivocally condemn Wagner as the master of a new school, which is or is not to be the music of the future, an impartial judge must recognise in his compositions much that is original and artistic in form and treatment, and will listen with respect to the productions of such a writer who, however mistaken may be his views, will never degrade the art for the sake of popularity.

On Thursday Der Postillion Von Lonjumeau was performed with Herr Wachtal and the well-known basso, Hölzel. Last night, Friday, Der Schauspiel's Direktor of Mozart was given, and another long ballet. In the operetta, Mad. Wildauer sang the principle soprano part. This lady has been the admiration of the Viennese public for many years, appearing alternately at the Burg and Kärntnerthor theatres, at both of which she has been simultaneously engaged. An artiste with a charming voice and great dramatic talents, Mad. Wildauer occupies a position which is only comparable to that of Miss Louisa Pyne and Miss Keeley combined.

Next week we are to have Der fliegender Holländer. At the Carl theatre in the Leopoldstadt, Nestroy, the Viennese Buck-stone, is taking a quasi farewell, the lease of the theatre of which he is manager having expired. The performances remind one of those given by Mad. Vestris in former days at the Lyceum, and are a reproduction of the operettas by Offenbach, such as Ischin-Tcshin; ou Bataclan: Bon Soir, Monsieur Pantalon; the parody of L'Orphée et Euridice, &c., but upon a very much more elaborate scale than at the Bouffes Parisiens, and of course adapted to the German stage and the taste of the Viennese public. A capital orchestra and excellent company, added to the attraction of Nestroy's last night, drew immense crowds to the theatre, which is one of the handsomest in Vienna. The splendour of the scenery and costumes makes a striking contrast with the shabby mise-en-scène at the Imperial Opera House, and is an instance of the advantage to the public of individual speculation in theatrical enterprise, compared to the management by Government officials of such matters.—The prima donna of the Carl theatre company is a Mlle. Zöllner, one of the most fascinating actresses on any stage—a new Anna Thillon revived, with a prettier face and more winning manners.—At the theatre Ander Wien comedies are performed, and the theatre prospers. In fact, all the houses are crowded every night. The dancing season has not yet commenced, and the public have no other amusement; and so much for theatrical doings in Vienna until next week.

Letters to the Editor.

WILLIAM CHAPPELL YOU'RE WANTED.

Sir,—Can any of your readers inform me the name of the following air?

It is several years since I heard it, so I am not sure of its correctness.

I believe it is an old Scotch tune, but have never seen it in print. Has it ever been published?

St. Michael's.

[Enquire of Justice Woodcock,—Ed. M. W.]

FRANK MORI, YOU'RE WANTED.

Sir,—I should feel much indebted to you if would inform me of a good work on "Singing." I do not mean a solfeggio, but one which would give instruction on the cultivation of the voice, on taking breath, &c. I reside a great deal in the country, and find it difficult to secure the assistance of a first-rate master without a great deal of expense. As I read most foreign languages as fluently as English, it would be a matter of no import its not being written in my native language. Hoping you will kindly assist me in my search,

I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

Saturday. Lyra.

ON THE RELATION AND PROGRESSION OF CHORDS.

Sir,—It was my intention to have said a few words respecting the artificial scales, chromatic and enharmonic, and other matters in connection, previous to entering upon the present, on the relation and progress of chords; but as this is a subject which may be more generally interesting, especially from the new light in which it will be exhibited, I am induced to depart a little from the path I had already sketched out, that I may call the attention of theoretical musicians, and others interested in these matters, to the simple theory which regulates and governs every progression of musical sounds and chords, and consequently every correct musical composition. Simple—for all its elements are contained in, or deduced from, the common chord—yet it traces and explains the relation and connection of all sounds and chords with the greatest facility, rendering clear what was before doubtful and obscure, occasionally reconciles the apparently anomalous interpretations of different theorists, and, as it shows the true construction of chords, shows also their true sounds, together with their correct notation and their fundamental basses, about which there has hitherto been much uncertainty. Moreover, as these are capable of mathematical demonstration, it for the first time gives to the principles of harmony the exactitude and true character of a science. Some examples of these demonstrations, treated in a short and popular manner, appear in my previous letters on the scales, &c., it being necessary to show the real sounds of any scale or key, previous to entering into any explanation of the chords connected with that key Though I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible, yet this is much too extensive a subject to be completed in a single letter. I here repeat the "Systems of Sounds," which appeared in one of my former letters, with the chords classed a little differently, for the purpose of exhibiting their progression and combination more clearly:—

Primary Bases.	Primary Chords.	Derivative Chords.		Unit Sounds.
		Secondary.	Principal.
D♭	D♭ F A♭ D♭ F♭ A♭	F A♭ C F♭ A♭ C♭	A♭ C E♭ A♭ C♭ E♭	A♭
A♭	A♭ C E♭ A♭ C♭ E♭	C E♭ G C♭ E♭ G♭	E♭ G B♭ E♭ G♭ B♭	E♭
E♭	E♭ G B♭ E♭ G♭ B♭	G B♭ D G♭ B♭ D♭	B♭ D F B♭ D♭ F	B♭
B♭	B♭ D F B♭ D♭ F	D F A D♭ F A♭	F A C F A♭ C	F
F	F A C F A♭ C	A C E A♭ C E♭	C E G C E♭ G	C
C	C E G C E♭ G	E G B E♭ G B♭	G B D G B♭ D	G
G	G B D G B♭ D	B D F♯ B♭ D F	D F♯ A D F A	D
D	D F♯ A D F	F♯ A C♯ F A C	A C♯ E A C E	A
A	A C♯ E A C E	C♯ E G♯ C E G	E G♯ B E G B	E
E	E G♯ B E G B	G♯ B D♯ G B D	B D♯ E♯ B D E♯	B
B	B D♯ F♯ B D F♯	D♯ F♯ A♯ D F♯ A	F♯ A♯ C♯ F♯ A C♯	F♯

It will be observed in this arrangement that, in every system, the secondary derivative chords are formed from the primary chords and the principal derivative chords; thus, in the system having the unit sound C, the minor chord of A C E is formed from the major chords of F A C and C E G, the extreme sounds F and G (subdominant and dominant) disappearing, the central sound C (the tonic) remaining; in like manner, the major chord of A♭ C E♭ is formed from the minor chords of F A♭ C and C E♭ G, the connection of any chord with each adjacent one throughout the whole of the systems being thus evident.

If we now take the chords of any system—say that having the unit sound C—then, as this sound is connected with all the sounds of that system, so also is the major chord C E G, which alone has the same harmonic character as the unit sound, connected with all the chords of the same system, the chord C E G may therefore either precede or follow any of the chords of that system.

Examples.

As the unit sound of the same system leads to the sounds of the primary chord F, so also are the chords connected, and may follow each other in the same order. This follows also from the two preceding laws.

Examples.

As the primary major chord of G, in combination with the primary base F, governs the intermediate system having the primary base C (see MUSICAL WORLD, May 26), so the primary chords of G major and F major, or minor, may follow each other, these chords being those of the extreme systems of the mode C, do, in such immediate succession, lead to the derivative chords of the system having the unit sound C, equally and in the same manner as do the sounds of the same chords in combination, forming the chords of the dominant 7th, &c.

Examples.

The resolution of the chord of the dominant 7th shows the relation of the chord G B D as dominant with the derivative chords of the system having the unit sound C, any of these chords may therefore follow the major chord of G.

Again, as the tonic, dominant, and subdominant are merely relative terms, the tonic of one key being the dominant or subdominant of others, then as G is dominant to C as tonic, so also is C subdominant to G as tonic; therefore the derivative chords of the system having the unit sound C may, as subdominant, be followed by the major chord of G as tonic, whence it is evident that the major chord of G may either precede or follow any of the derivative chords of the system having the unit sound C.

Examples.

In the same manner, any of the derivative chords of a system are related to the major chord having the unit sound of the system immediately below for its fundamental bass; thus all the derivative chords of the system, having the unit sound F, are related to the major chord of C.

Other progressions of chords related to C as tonic could be shown, such as the following:—

Examples.

In the preceding examples we have confined our attention to the three systems having the unit sounds F C and G, the principal derivative chords of which are the primary chords of the systems having the primary bases F C G. The unit sounds may thus take the places of, and be considered as, the primary bases, and the principal derivative chords as primary chords; this arrangement, though not absolutely necessary, will be found convenient, as it places all chords in connection with any unit sound, as primary base, in the same system, and thus simplifies and facilitates an explanation, as it limits our observations to the derivative chords only. Now, as in the derivative chords of the system C (unit sound) are contained all the chords connected with C as tonic, so also in the derivative chords of the adjacent systems F and G are contained all the chords connected with the former as subdominant and dominant. The minor chords of the system G, however, must, when they become dominants, be changed to major, as shown in my last letter. It is evident, from the preceding, that connected with the key of C major as tonic are those of C minor, A minor, and Ab major; and if, in the three systems F C G, we commence with the chord of C, and avoid taking the second derivative chords in such succession or combination as to cause a modulation to the keys of A minor or Ab major, all other progressions of the derivative chords of these three systems are in the key of C, which chords, moreover, are all the chords which can be taken without modulating from that key. I may here observe that the sounds D and Db in the system F do not belong to the key of C, but I shall have occasion to refer to these again. As in the key of C, so it is similarly in all other keys, hence the following general law:—All progressions of harmonies in any key are contained in the derivative chords of the three systems, of which the unit-sound of the central system is the root of that key, thus every progression of chords in the key of C is contained in the derivation chords of the three systems, having F C and G for their unit-sounds. In other words, every chord, and every progression of chords, which can possibly be taken in any key, is connected with the tonic, dominant, or subdominant of that key. This at first may, to those accustomed to look upon harmony as a complicated science, appear to be rather a startling conclusion, but the truth of it is evident from the preceding, and a very little consideration will show its truth; for, as the sounds of the primary bases constitute the foundation of any key, is it not clear that all the superstructure reared in that key, must be built upon this very same foundation?

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

W. W. PARKINSON.

Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Oct. 15th, 1860.

[The only question is, whether the supertonic should not be substituted for the subdominant, as a root, or primary base. We are decidedly of that opinion; although it virtually upsets the theory of our correspondent.—Ed. M. W.]

LEEDS TOWN HALL ORGAN.

SIR,—The following report of a portion of the proceedings in the Leeds Town Council, held recently, will answer the questions contained in a letter published by you last week:—

Mr. Anthony Titley said he wished to ask the chairman of the Town Hall Committee (Alderman Botterill) a question in reference to the organ. When the appointment of organist took place, it was understood that when any organist of eminence applied for the use of the Town Hall organ, it should be granted to him. An application had been made by Mr. Burton for the use of the organ, but in his application he had omitted to state that it was for the use of Dr. Monk. The omission was now supplied, and he (Mr. Titley) wished to know if the Town Hall Committee intended to grant him the use of the organ.—Alderman Botterill said that he was not present at the Town Hall Committee meeting when the application was discussed, but he understood that the name of the gentleman for whom the organ was asked was not stated in the application. The committee therefore unanimously passed a resolution, to the effect that the applicant be granted the organ and organist. The name of Dr. Monk was never mentioned.—The Mayor remarked, that if any person wished to have the subject discussed, notice must be put upon the paper for the next meeting.—Alderman Gill said he acted as chairman of the Town Hall Committee when Mr. Burton's application was made. The name of the person who was to play the organ was not named; but Mr. Burton told Mr. Collins, the hall secretary, that he intended to have his brother from Bradford at the Messiah performance. The committee did not consider that gentleman of sufficient ability to displace their own organist, and therefore they passed the resolution to which Alderman Botterill had referred. It would be another question if the organ was applied for for some organist of eminence to play.—Alderman Botterill, in reply to another question from Mr. Titley, said he had not received any letter from Mr. Burton, stating that the organ was applied for on behalf of Dr. Monk, of York. —Mr. Brooke rose to make some remarks, when Mr. Carter appealed to the Mayor whether such a discussion was in order.—The Mayor ruled that Mr. Brooke was out of order.—Mr. Price asked if Alderman Botterill would, now that Dr. Monk's name had been mentioned, call a meeting of the committee to reconsider the application?—Alderman Botterill said he did not feel himself at liberty to do so. If Mr. Burton thought himself aggrieved, he must get three members of the committee to ask for a special meeting.—Mr. Stead and Mr. Shackleton endeavoured to speak on the question, but they were ruled out of order, and the subject dropped.—Yours, &c.

FAIR PLAY.

EDWARD JAMES LODER.

3, Upper Craven Place, Kentish Town, Oct. 29th, 1860.

SIR,—It is with extreme regret and pity that I hear that poor Edward Loder is now languishing in poverty and sickness—(two bitter calamities). Cannot something be done to relieve him, both temporarily and permanently? The first, which is most important, to raise a fund by subscriptions, to be opened at all the musicsellers—the second, to establish a benefit concert, to take place annually. Where is there an artist who would not give his mite, and lend his talents to rescue a brother musician from such extreme misfortune? I am quite sure, sir, if you will only raise your voice in the matter, and a few influential professors will form themselves into a committee for the purpose mentioned, the object for which I have ventured to write would be obtained. I shall be most happy to render every assistance in my power to carry out this object.—I am, sir,

Yours obediently,
JOSEPH ALFRED BARNETT.

Advertisements.

MADAME CLARA NOVELLO'S FAREWELL,

Most positively her Only and Last Appearance in London,

AT ST. JAMES'S HALL,

ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 21,

On which occasion will be performed, for the first time in London,

MR. BENEDICT'S LYRIC LEGEND, "UNDINE,"

The principal character by Mad. CLARA NOVELLO, who will also sing several of the most celebrated solos from her extensive repertoire, concluding with "God Save the Queen."

The band and chorus will be complete, and on a large scale.

Conductor, Mr. BENEDICT.

Sofa stalls, 10s. 6d. each, to be had of Leader and Cook, 63 New Bond Street, corner of Brook Street; and of the principal music sellers.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE THIRD SEASON COMMENCES

ON MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, 1860,

On which occasion the Programme will be selected from the works of

SPOHR, DUSSEK, AND WEBER.

Pianoforte, Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Violin, Herr BECKER. Violoncello, Signor PIATTI.

Vocalists—Miss POOLE, Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON, and Mr. SIMS REEVES.

On Monday Evening, November 19, the Programme will be selected from the works of Mozart.

On Monday Evening, November 26, from the works of Beethoven.

On Monday, December 3, will be an Italian Night.

On Monday Evening, December 10, from the works of Bach, Scarlatti, and Handel.

On Monday Evening, December 17, from the works of various masters.

To commence at 8 o'clock precisely.

Sofa stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s. At Chappell & Co.'s, 50 New Bond Street; Hammond, Cramer & Co.'s, Regent Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, No. 48 Cheapside; and at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (Saturday) will be repeated Macfarren's new and highly successful Opera of ROBIN HOOD. Robin Hood, Mr. SIMS REEVES; Sir Reginald de Bracy, Mr. SANTLEY; Hugo, Mr. GEORGE HONEY; Allan-a-Dale, Mr. PARKINSON; Little John, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Much, Mr. PATEY; Alice, Mad. LEMAIRE; and Marian, Mad. SHERRINGTON. Conductor, Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Reduced scale of prices:—Pit Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; First Circle, 4s.; Second Circle, 3s.; Upper Box Circle Seats, 2s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Gallery 1s.; Gallery Side Stalls, 1s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 3s. Private Boxes: Upper Box, to hold four persons, 10s.; Private Box, second tier, to hold four persons, £1 11s. 6d.; Private Boxes, Pit, first and grand tiers, two, three, and four Guineas. The Box-office of the theatre open daily, from 10 till 5 o'clock, under the direction of Mr. Nugent. In consequence of the extraordinary demand for places at the box-office, early application is recommended, to prevent disappointment. The opera commences at 8 o'clock.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—In reply to the numerous applications, the subscribers, gentry, and the public are respectfully informed that Macfarren's new and highly successful opera of ROBIN HOOD will be repeated every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday until further notice. Early application at the Box-office to secure seats is recommended to prevent disappointment.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—Lesse, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING Her Majesty's servants will perform the new and original comedy, in two acts, entitled, A BACHELOR'S WIFE. Characters by Messrs. Charles Mathews, Robert Roxby, Dixon, Robinson; Miss Arden and Mrs. C. Mathew. After which (fifth time at this theatre), YOU'RE ANOTHER. Characters by Messrs. R. Roxby, Tilbury, and Charles Mathews; Miss Helen Howard and Mrs. Dowton. To conclude with the celebrated piece of USED UP. Characters by Messrs. Charles Mathews, Tilbury, Farrell, R. Roxby, Dixon, Spencer; Miss Arden and Miss Helen Howard. Reduced prices as usual.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY-LANE.—Mr. E. T. SMITH has much pleasure in announcing that he has arranged with Mr. Webster for Mr. J. L. TOOLE to appear in Mr. Watts Phillips' new drama, to be produced on Monday, November 12.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1860.

THE opening of the Free Public Library and Museum at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, was inaugurated the other day with a public banquet, at which presided the worshipful the Mayor, and of which partook, in common with a posse of outsiders, with unabating civic appetite and unassuagable civic thirst, the sundry councillors of whom the Corporation is made up. It was a "corporate" feast, and no mistake; but to render it psychical in likewise (par dessus le marché), the aid of music was considered indispensable.

The gift of a Free Library, &c., to the Liverpuddleyan community was chiefly the work of a prosperous and wealthy merchant—a merchant, which hight Brown. Now Brown, after the manner of prosperous and wealthy merchants, could not think of bestowing upon the town a boon without, at the same time, bestowing on himself and friends a dinner. This is the style of all commercial flesh; and Brown was, after all, no holier, nor ghostlier, than an abstract fleshy "commercial." So the dinner, or the banquet, or whatever it may be termed, caused no surprise; nor was its Trimalchian profuseness subject to any other comment than a loud "huzzah!" from the municipal abdomen, which, with expectant ventosity, yearned for the threatened "spread."

But the Mayor and councillors had reckoned—not without their host, for there was Brown, alive, prepared and eager for the dish; but without their organist, their "corporate organist."

Mr. W. T. Best, as all our readers know, has, ever since the year 1855, held the position of corporate-organist to St. George's Hall, and held it with such dignity as to extort and maintain unanimous esteem. The bi-hebdomadal organ-concerts instituted by this gentleman, and now firmly established, have materially tended to raise the standard of musical taste in Liverpool, and have put the noble instrument which enriches St. George's Hall to the worthiest uses. Mr. Best is not merely an artist of the first stamp, but a gentleman innate; and his private bearing is as much entitled to respect as his artistic merits to admiration. But see in what a light municipalities (inevitably bundles of "parvenus") may condescend to regard an artist and a gentleman!

Mr. Best was, as a matter of course, invited to the inaugurative festival; and scarcely had he entered the hall when a programme was placed in his hands, of which the subjoined was the preamble:—

PUBLIC BANQUET

IN

ST. GEORGES'S HALL, LIVERPOOL,

ON THE OCCASION OF THE OPENING OF THE

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY AND MUSEUM,

18TH OCTOBER, 1860.

The Organ will play while the Company take their seats,

And a Selection of Music will be performed during the Banquet, by the Band.

Imagine Mr. Best, already, perhaps, elated with anticipations of the promised feast — the smell whereof was, no doubt, odoriferous, and a foresmack of the taste thereof unquestionably titillating to the sensitive pallet of an organist in the prime and force of life, made hungry, too, by fat anticipation—imagine him, "we say," (as a renowned contemporary would say) within five minutes of the first spoonful of clear turtle, and the first glass of that peculiarly invigorating punch which always keeps it company, thus beckoned from his pleasant contemplations by the preamble of a scurvy handbill!

On protesting, the vigorous and healthy organist was civically, if not civilly, requested to perform "a few tunes," while the guests were taking their seats. On re-protesting, he was told, by a gentleman of the committee, that, in accordance with arrangements pre-agreed upon, he should have been actually at the instrument from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m., disporting in fugue and chorus, from the opening of the doors until the waiter had served the potage, and the steam of the viands began to exercise its savoury influence on the olfactory and other nerves of the body-corporate—until, in short, the process of deglutition having commenced, ingurgitation was in full play and nothing remained ingustable. The ingeny of our famished organist must thus cruelly be put to the test; while the Mayor and his associates were devouring all before them, eating and drinking like an oily and omnivorous host of Neros and Caligulas, he was to remain in the organ-loft, ingesting nothing but Handel and Bach, his fingers for knife and fork and spoon, his eyes for palate, and his ears for belly! (Per bacco!)

Mr. Best, however, re-re-protested; and finding it to no purpose, flatly refused to comply, pronouncing the duty required of him to be derogatory to his station, and unworthy, not only of himself personally, but of the organ in the loft—organically. A self-acting machine would have scouted such a task; how much more, then, a living organist with imagination and a soul! In vain did Mayor T. D. Anderson exhort, invoke, insist, command; it would not be. Mr. Best resembled the spirits suggested by Hotspur Percy to Owen Glendower, who might be called from the "vasty deep," but not for that were sure to answer the summons; and Mayor T. D. Anderson was at a discount for his exhortations, invocations, insistings, and commands. Mr. Best replied—manfully—that he never had accepted, and never would accept, conditions that involved the loss of self-respect. It was therefore no go; and the entry of the waiters, with the entrées, were not destined to be accompanied with an entr'acte or entr'actes by Handel. Did the turtle prove less relishing because the organist stood up for the dignity of his office?

At a recent committee-meeting (we have since learned) Mr. Best spoke warmly and at length on the subject; and, as nothing has been done in the matter, it is reasonable to suppose that his arguments had weight. We trust this may be the case. There cannot be two opinions about the propriety of Mr. Best's conduct in the whole affair. He acted at once with boldness and discretion, and has still further elevated himself in the opinion of all unprejudiced persons, while vindicating the claims of that polite profession of which he is so distinguished an ornament. It would be odd, indeed, if such an artist could be made a dog, to bark at civic order; but it has astonished nobody that, on being unhandsomely assailed, no dog though he be, he has a gentle bite for his assailants. What next will be expected of our organists?

WE called attention many weeks since, in an article which our readers have doubtless forgotten, to the absurd practice indulged in by the composers of all nations, established in London, of writing the title and dedications of their pieces in the polyglot style. Our sense of literary and linguistic propriety had been shocked by seeing on the wrapper of a new composition for the pianoforte some such inscription as the following: "Fantasia dédiée à Miss Smith by Herr von Hammer," and we explained to musicians that title-pages of works published in England, and addressed to English persons, should be written as much as possible in the English language; adding, if we remember rightly, that all technical terms in music should be given either in Italian, the one great musical tongue recognised by all the civilised world, or in the language of the country in which the piece containing them first appeared. It has since occurred to us that the fault with which we charged musical composers is also committed by musical critics. We ourselves have been guilty of it. We cry peccavimus! and were it not that we should probably find it impossible to act up to any such determination, we would resolve from this instant to sin no more. In the present day there is so much communication between the chief nations of Europe, that the principal European languages are gradually corrupting one another. Sometimes an English journalist borrows a word from the French, for which there is really no exact equivalent in our language, and in the same way our confrères on the other side of the channel (what, by the way, is the English equivalent for confrère?) occasionally fill a gap in the vocabulary by adopting an expression from us. But also our journalists (for it is in the newspapers that the practice is chiefly noticeable) employ French words, here and there, from mere indolence, or, perhaps, from want of faith in the immense resources of our rich, copious, and admirably plastic tongue, and writers on musical and other artistic subjects are guilty of this uningenious and anti-national habit more frequently than any others. Besides introducing into their articles, in raw French, such terms as chef d'orchestre, which means nothing that "conductor" does not mean, or grosse caisse, which signifies precisely the same thing as "big drum;" they first astonish and afterwards weary their readers by telling them, in half-cooked or half-translated French (the expressions we are about to object to were never invented in England, but are all of Gallic origin) as So-and-so "rendered" or "interpreted" an air in such and such a manner. Here the difficulty we know is great. In noticing a concert at which ten songs are sung, how can the critic who wishes to speak of each performance keep on repeating "sang" or "was sung by" all through his article? Nevertheless difficulties in the art of writing, as in other arts, should be overcome and not avoided; particularly when by their manner of avoiding them we find writers falling constantly into palpable absurdities. But what are we to say of writers—not only on artistic, but on political and all other topics—who go to the French themselves for a word derived from the Latin, of which neither the French nor those who borrow from them appear to know the meaning? What sense is there in perpetually using the word "ovation"—which has a very precise and limited signification—to express any kind of triumph? "The singers were called before the curtain, and received the customary ovation!" How often with rage mixed with a certain kind of pity have we read this ridiculous phrase, which might be kept ready stereotyped at the various newspaper offices, so often is it employed in the musical notices of the present day. Was not the "ovation" a minor triumph? And yet the greatest triumph that a singer or any one else can possibly obtain is honoured with no other name.

We read the other day in one of the illustrated journals that a Garibaldian had received an "ovation" in a café at Naples. At last, we thought, a British journalist, disregarding all French precedents, has used the word "ovation" in an approximately correct sense! The most essential part of the ceremony of this "ovation" consisted in the sacrifice of a sheep. A sheep, we said to ourselves, "has been sacrificed to the Italian hero—and cut up into mutton chops: such a ceremony might well take place in a café!"

But no: it was the old story. Three cheers had been given for the Liberator, and the soldier who represented his army had been carried about on people's backs and regaled with the ices of Naples, or the vermuth of Turin, or the punch of Rome, or whatever he liked to order. However, an ovation might be got up at a restaurant. At a theatre it is out of the question—unless indeed we regard the word as a derivative of ovum, and employ it to devote a throwing of eggs. A throwing of bouquets it can never mean.

—•—

SUMMER is the hybernating season of the musical society of London. It grows torpid in the dog-days, and only wakes to consciousness with the first snow-flakes, or the warning fogs of November. The Council of Ten, nevertheless, like their renowned predecessors of the sea-born city, never sleep, and keep watch and ward while the subscribers are heedless, and the voices and instruments are slumbering from inaction. The first blast from the watch-tower has just been heard giving tuneful note of preparation. Soon the welkin will ring with more varied and richer sounds, and echo grow louder and increase in reverberation. The Musical Society of London, in short, has begun to show signs of returning animation. As yet no official cry has been uttered—no official document issued. We learn, however, from the perfected report, that Professor Pole, F.U.A.S., Mus. Bac., Oxon, is to read a paper, on Wednesday next, at the Marylebone Institution, "On some points connected with the Musical Pitch." This "reading" to all intents and purposes is one of the meetings—Fellows' Meetings—of the Musical Society of London, and may be accepted as the inauguration of the season 1860-1. On Wednesday next, therefore, the Society engages to prove that not only is it not defunct, but that it is as full of vitality and energy as ever.

Meanwhile the Council of Ten are busy making arrangements for the approaching campaign, which they are determined shall be even more brilliant and successful than the two preceding. And first they have exhibited good judgment in not setting themselves up as superior to all foreign council, and have actually followed the advice tendered them by many who were not "fellows," nor "associates," nor even "subscribers," nor friends of "fellows," "associates," or "subscribers," that the band required reinforcement in some of the departments, and reformation in others, and have accordingly set about showing themselves staunch reformers. The string instruments have been increased to 32 first violins, 10 viole, 10 violoncelli and 9 contrabasses, with the usual complement of "wind." Further, we are assured, that every member of the orchestra is now a first-class executant. The reinstating of Mr. Alfred Mellon in the post of conductor is proof that the committee are not swayed by caprice or a desire for change, nor ignorant that conservatism is sometimes the best reform. These new additions made with the conditions observed, we may, we think, prognosticate, without any great dread of being convicted of false augury, that the band of the Musical Society of London will be complete in all respects, and that the prestige of the institution will rise one hundred per cent. in public favour in consequence.

That the society is in a thriving state may be concluded from the fact, that 1400 names are already on the books, and that applications are being daily made by many wishing to become new members. It is gratifying to know that even sundry faults of administration could not, in two years, undermine the solid foundation which art and perseverance together had laid. The Musical Society of London is built on a rock, and nothing but the direst mismanagement can subvert it. Let the Council of Ten, therefore, look to it; the fate of one of the most important art institutions in the country is in their hands.

Although the scheme for the approaching season has not yet found its way to the public in an official form, we are enabled to supply statistics of the new arrangements up to a certain point. Four orchestral concerts are to be given at St. James's Hall on the following Wednesdays:—February the 27th, April the 10th, May the 8th, June the 5th; and two conversazione on the 23rd of January and 3rd of July. Twenty-five choral practices will be held at the Marylebone Institution on Tuesday evenings, from the 8th of January to the 4th of June inclusive, to recommence on the 26th of November. Two trials of new chamber compositions will take place at the Marylebone Institution on the 20th March and 22nd of May. It has also been decided to hold four fellows' meetings, to read papers, and discuss musical matters.

Such are the features, as far as we have been able to ascertain, of the prescribed doings of the Musical Society of London for the coming season. If things be carried out with the proper spirit, a triumph may be anticipated the result of which will have a greater influence on the progress of art than speculators can at this time imagine. When the prospectus is issued we shall have more to say on the subject.

ROBIN HOOD AND ENGLISH MUSIC.

(From the Illustrated Times.)

CONSIDERED as an English opera—that is to say, an opera of which the music is English in style, and not merely adapted to English words—we may say at once that Robin Hood stands alone; for to say that it is the best of its class would be really nothing. Where is its class? What English operas are there of which the music (with the exception of the ballads, which have always the effect of interpolations) belong really to England, as our poetry belongs to it, and by far the greater part of our painting? These ballads all cast in the same mould—of which, in most of our operas, the soprano, the tenor and the bass sing at least two a piece, of two verses each, and the contralto one of similar dimensions—are so far English that they generally suit the English words, and that they are found only in English operas and in those of M. Flotow, who, however, cannot claim to have invented the style. They delay the action; they are tediously alike; they are, therefore, seldom in character with the piece to which they belong, or, to speak with more propriety, in which they are introduced; nor are they written for the theatre, except in so far that the theatre is the advertising-ground of the music-publishers. We do not include in this class such airs as "The Power of Love" in Satanella, or "Flow on" in Lurline, which, besides being beautiful melodies, form essential parts of the operas in which they occur; but every one knows the musical entrées to which we allude, and which are as objectionable in English operas as are the conventional and eternally-repeated side-dishes of which "G. H. M." complains in English dinners. Still our composers are in a curious dilemma. Their operas are to be English, but are not to depend on ballads. They are to be dramatic, but are not to be imitated from the models of Italy, Germany, and France, where the operas most generally admired in Europe (including England) have been produced. That the ballads to which we have referred are English we consider beyond a doubt, or there is an end to nationality in music. Indeed, we could not help mentioning, in reviewing Mr. Chappell's excellent work, Popular English Music of the Olden Time, how similar in style some of the melodies of Queen Elizabeth's, and even of the preceding reign, were to those produced by our most successful English composers in the present day. The "Bailiff's Daughter of Islington" (second tune), with a more modern accompaniment, would not be unlike some of the ballads of Mr. Macfarren; and, "Oh! the syghes that come from my heart!" (a love song of the time of Henry VIII.), similarly re-arranged, and introduced into one of Mr. Balfe's operas as a solo for the baritone, would pass for one of that composer's happiest inspirations. The music of our English operas is generally imitated more or less from foreign models in the finales, the concerted pieces (except here and there part-songs in the old English style are introduced), and the dramatic portions generally; but the ballads have quite an English character, for we find scarcely anything like them abroad, and specimens which closely resemble them in English Music of the Olden Time.

Mr. Macfarren, however, has given an English style to his work throughout. He was justified in doing this (which Mr. Wallace, for instance, would not have been justified in doing for Lurline) by the nature of his subject, so thoroughly English. But in writing Robin Hood Mr. Macfarren has not founded a national style of operatic music; for the same style applied to subjects not English might be found as inappropriate as the music of The Barber of Seville if adapted to Tom and Jerry. A great deal can be written and very little decided about this question of nationality of style in music. If Auber's style is French (instead of being his own, as we should say), what was that of Rameau? If "The Marseillaise" is such a thoroughly French air (as every one admits), how is it that it happens to be an importation from Germany? The Royalist song of "Pauvre Jacques" passed for French, but it was Dibdin's "Poor Jack." How is it that "Malbrook" sounds so French, and "We won't go home till morning" so English?—an attempt, by the way, having been made to show that the airs common to both these songs were sung originally by the Spanish Moors. We fancy the great point, after all, is to write good music; and if it be written to good English words, full of English rhythm and cadence, it will, from that fact alone, derive a certain English character. In the meanwhile, Robin Hood is as English as the same composer's May Day and Christmas, and full of beautiful music into the bargain.

BERLIN.—The sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the King of Prussia was celebrated at Berlin on the 15th. The fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the University of that city was also celebrated on the same day. In the latter ceremony all the learned associations of Germany were represented, and M. Mittermayer, a renowned jurisconsult, delivered a speech, in which he predicted that at the next fiftieth anniversary, that of 1910, Germany would be represented by her national Parliament.

MISS EMMA STANLEY'S ENTERTAINMENT.—The "Seven Ages of Woman" was produced at St. Martin's Hall in 1855, previous to Miss Stanley's departure from England on a professional tour "round the world," when it was pronounced one of the neatest, most tasteful, and amusing entertainments ever presented to the public. Since then Miss Stanley has visited the principal cities and towns of British North America, the United States, California, Australia, the Sandwich Islands, and India, and has now returned to her native country with all her health and spirits about her, as if she had merely been to the "sea side" for a month, and felt herself all the better for "change of air." The "Seven Ages of Woman" was written expressly for Miss Stanley by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, and depicts a lady in the various stages of her existence. We are first introduced to her in the arms of her nurse, then as a romantic school girl, who retains her skipping-rope though her sweetheart has "left her for another;" afterwards we meet with her as a schoolmistress, and then, with episodes of a French dancing-master, an Italian singing-master, and a drawling "man about town;" as a flirt, an unsophisticated country girl, full of the wisdom of her "Cousin George," and an old maid; and afterwards as Somersetshire, Scotch, Irish, and "Family Herald" maidservants, a strongminded woman, a hardworking washerwoman, with a large family; and, lastly, as an old grandmother of eighty-two, all perfect in their style. The rapid way in which Miss Stanley effects her numerous changes of costume is quite remarkable, and each fresh assumption brings a round of applause from the audience, who can scarcely believe that one person alone represents every character. We need not dwell upon the individual excellence of each of Miss Stanley's impersonations, but single out among the most effective that of the "flirt," as being as original in conception as it is perfect in execution, and the old grandmother, which is remarkably true to nature.

During the course of the entertainment Miss Stanley sings numerous songs, all of which are suited to the characters represented, and we have only to object to the introduction of "Willie, we have missed you," the words of which are not at all in keeping with the rest. The lyrical part of the entertainment otherwise is exceedingly appropriate, and capitally executed. The choice of tunes for adaptation, and the original pieces introduced, bear the stamp of being selected by a musician, and are quite up to the required standard, and no one can spend a couple of hours more agreeably in the Egyptian Hall than at Miss Stanley's "Seven Ages of Woman."

THE SISTERS MARCHISIO.

THE new celebrities of song, Mlles. Carlotta and Barbara Marchisio, who recently came out at the Grand Opera of Paris, in Semiramis, with such brilliant success—were born at Turin, and are derived from a family of distinguished artists, which included musicians of great ability. One brother, Antonio Marchisio, was a composer of note, and Joseph, a pianist of the first class. From their earliest years both sisters manifested an extraordinary aptitude for music, and this was encouraged by both brothers, who did all in their power to develope their talent to its fullest extent. Antonio gave them all the instruction he was enabled to do, and when he and Joseph discovered that both Carlotta and Barbara in their extreme girlhood had beautiful voices, they placed them under the most efficient singing-masters. Their progress was remarkable. In a brief space of time they became the vocal wonder of their native place, and were sought for with the utmost eagerness at the mansions of the aristocratic and wealthy. After restricting their performances for several years to the concert-room and private parties, the sisters were at last induced to try the stage, and here a new career of honour and prosperity opened for them. They visited the chief cities of Italy and Spain, and sang at all the principal theatres, including the Scala at Naples, the Fenice at Venice, the first operas at Rome, Turin, Trieste, &c. &c. Fame crowned them wherever they appeared. Their singing was the admiration of all who heard them, and their reputation spread far and wide. More especially were their ensemble performances the theme of wonder and delight. Nothing so perfect, so harmoniously blended, it was said, had been remembered in duet singing. Moreover, they were mistresses of all styles of singing—as capable in florid as in plain music—in the classical as the romantic—in Mozart and Rossini as in Donizetti, Meyerbeer and Verdi. They performed in all kinds of operas, and their reputation gained ground with every successive representation. Rumour was not slow in wafting their names to the French capital, and the manager of the Grand Opera, having had additional information of a private nature respecting the merits of the fair artists, at once engaged them to play the two principal characters in the French version of Rossini's Semiramide, then about to be produced. Indeed it is doubtful if the opera would have been brought out but for the sisters Marchisio, whose Assyrian Queen and Arsace respectively, were highly eulogised by the leading authorities of the Parisian press, and received by the public with acclamations. The above drawing represents the sisters as in the act of singing "Giorno d'orrore," in the grand duet "Ebben, a te ferisci," which was nightly the culminating point of their performance.

MEYERBEER TO THE INHABITANTS OF SPA.

(The original Letter.)

"Shwalbach, le 12 Août, 1860.

"Messieurs,

"Absent de Berlin depuis un mois et voyageant presque continuellement depuis cette époque, ce n'est que hier que m'est parvenue la lettre que vous m'avez addressée à Berlin.

"Je ne saurais vous exprimer, Messieurs, combien je suis touché de l'honneur que vous projetez de me faire, en voulant donner mon nom à la nouvelle promenade de Barisart à la Géronstère.

"Cette marque de sympathie me flatte d'autant plus, qu'elle me vient de cette ville de Spa, si chère à mon cœur ; car je dois à ses sources bienfaisantes l'affermissement de ma santé ; à ses sites pittoresques des inspirations et doux loisirs ; à ses habitants un accueil cordial et bienveillant depuis un grand nombre d'années.

"Cette nouvelle expression des sympathies que vous me portez ne saurait augmenter davantage mon attachement et ma reconnaissance pour Spa, sentiments gravés depuis longtemps dans mon cœur ; mais c'est un lien de plus qui m'attache à votre ville dont j'ose presque me regarder comme l'enfant adoptif, croyance que vous venez de fortifier, en inscrivant mon nom sur l'une de vos promenades.

"Veuillez agréer, Messieurs, l'expression des sentiments les plus distingués de votre très-dévoué et reconnaissant,

"G. MEYERBEER."

THE PLYMOUTH FESTIVAL.—The Oratorio of Elijah, writes the Plymouth Mail, of date October 31, was chosen as the opening performance on Monday evening last. It rarely happens that we have an opportunity in the provinces of hearing any of the oratorios beyond the Messiah. Mendelssohn's great work, therefore, was the more enjoyable. Some objection was raised to the selection of the theatre for an oratorio, and although we shared in the exception, not so much on a question of religion as of taste, we admit the force of the argument, that while the theatre would accommodate more persons, it would admit also of such varieties in the prices as to place the oratorio within the reach of working men. Our appreciation of this attempt to perform Elijah, and our acknowledgment that on Monday evening every one appeared to do their best, will be sufficient at present. The principal singers were Madame Weiss, Miss Huddart, Mr. Wilby Cooper, and Mr. Weiss, all of whom acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of a crowded and fashionable audience. The Messiah was performed on Wednesday.

LEEDS.—(From our own Correspondent.)—MAD. CLARA NOVELLO'S FAREWELL CONCERT.—Last Monday, Mad. Clara Novello sang for the last time before a Leeds audience, and was greeted by one of the largest and most brilliant assemblies with which our noble town hall has ever been graced. The Messiah was selected for the display of her lovely voice and rare talents; and long will it be ere the impression be erased which her delivery of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" created in the minds of her numerous auditors. It was absolutely perfect vocalism, and deep is the regret here that such a singer should depart from our midst, leaving a void which for years, perhaps, will not be filled up. Mad. Clara Novello carries with her the veneration of all who can be moved by sweet sounds.—The Committee of the Leeds Town Hall Concert Society are keeping good faith with their subscribers and the public. Last Saturday—the fourth concert for the season—the attractions were Mrs. Sunderland and the band of the West Riding Orchestral Union, led by Mr. G. Haddock, and conducted by Mr. Spark. Mrs. Sunderland was admirable in Mr. Farmer's song, "I'll follow thee." The band, although small, was excellent in all its departments, and the execution of Mendelssohn's magnificent overture, Ruy Blas, was one of the finest we have heard in the provinces. Mr. Haddock, of Liverpool, played a violoncello solo, on "Robert le diable." The other pieces worth notice were the andante from Haydn's Surprise symphony, a selection from Flotow's Martha, and the grand March from Athalie. Mr. Spark conducted.

A WELL-MERITED SUBSCRIPTION.

(From Punch.)

"HULLAH want money! Come, all folks with throats, Show that he's taught you to bring out your notes."

The Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—A few lines may suffice to record the production of The Huguenots, on Friday night (the 26th ult.), with a distribution of characters for the most part similar to that which was commented on in the summer. There was a much fuller attendance than has been observed on any previous evening devoted to Italian opera since the commencement of the winter season; and the performance, though not altogether free from the shortcomings that have been more than once condemned, was in many respects entitled to very high praise. The chorus in the grand scene of the "Benediction of the Swords" evinced an improvement which it will be agreeable to find carried out in other operas, and which we should have been glad to observe in the still more difficult music of the preceding act. As a spectacle the Huguenots stands somewhat in need of resetting, but, being always a more or less attractive work, it would, no doubt, repay the necessary labour and expense.

The Valentine of Mlle. Titiens is ripening fast into one of the most finished and admirable exhibitions of the lyric stage It was a remarkably striking, if unequal, performance, when she first essayed it, under Mr. Lumley's management, on the occasion of her début before the London public. At present, while everywhere stamped by intelligent conception and brillant mechanical display, it reaches in some places the very acme of histrionic and vocal excellence. The two most prominent situations—the duet with Marcel, in the scene of the Pré aux Clercs, and that with Raoul, after the enemies of the Huguenots have revealed their plans, and, urged on by the exhortations of the monks, who pronounce a blessing on their enterprise, made oath to exterminate the heretics—besides being the grandest in idea and the most elaborately developed which the opera contains, are precisely those in which Mlle. Titiens most thoroughly realises all that has been suggested by dramatist and composer. In both of these on Monday night she was superb, and in both raised the audience to enthusiasm. She was ably supported by the Marcel and the Raoul of the evening. Signor Giuglini entered with such earnestness into the magnificent duet at the termination of the last act but one as occasionally even to overshoot the mark. He echoed the passionate accents of his truly eloquent Valentine with unmistakeable sympathy; and gave the famous "Tu m'ami?" and other exquisite passages, with a beauty of voice and fervour of expression that left nothing to desire. Signor Vialetti fully confirmed the good opinions already elicited by his exceedingly clever impersonation of Marcel, and M. Gassier again established his claim to be regarded as the best St. Bris, with the solitary exception of Tamburini, that the Anglo-Italian stage has witnessed. The Nevers of Signor Briani was not of such a quality as to warrant any modification of the judgment passed upon his first appearance, a short time since, as the Conte di Luna in Il Trovatore. The most striking feature of his performance on the occasion under notice was his breaking the sword across his knee, when Nevers magnanimously declines to take part in the bloody scheme of the assassin. This was decidedly well done. Of Mlle. Vaneri's Queen we hope on some future occasion to be able to say a good deal. The music allotted to Margarita di Valois is, we are aware, extremely difficult, and the difficulties become less easy of accomplishment where nervousness impairs the efforts of the singer. Mad. Lemaire was Urbano (the Page); and Signor Arditi presided in the orchestra with his accustomed zeal and ability.

MR. LAZARUS' CONCERT, at Battersea, took place on Monday evening, at Lammas Hall, and was very well attended. The vocalists were Misses Stabbach, Ransford, Lazarus, Messrs. Allan, Irving, and Cunningham. The solo instrumentalists were Miss Lazarus (pianoforte), Master Drew Dean (flute), Mr. Lazarus (clarionet), assisted by the members of the late Duke of Devonshire's private band, Mr. Coote (pianoforte), Mr. Richardson (flute), Mr. Macfarlane (cornopean), and Mr. Champion (violoncello). The concert commenced with the overture to Les Diamans de la Couronne, well rendered by the band, which also played a capital instrumental selection, arranged by Mr. Charles Coote, on airs from Oberon, and an instrumental finale, entitled Recollections of Ireland. Among the instrumental performances was also a duet concertante for pianoforte and clarionet, on airs from Puritani, admirably played by Mr. Lazarus and his daughter, as well as the popular duet for flute and clarionet, "Lo, hear the gentle lark," no less efficiently given by M. Lazarus and Master Drew Dean. Among the vocal pieces that pleased the most, were Reichardt's popular lied, "Thou art so near," sung with great taste by Mr. Cunningham, who obtained more success in this than in Mr. Balfe's graceful new ballad of "I love you," his delivery of which was marred by nervousness. As usual at these concerts, the audience insisted on encoring several of the songs, Miss Ransford being obliged to repeat the spirited drinking song from Mr. Wallace's Lurline, and Miss Lazarus the quaint troubadour from the same opera (both given in perfection); Mr. Allan Irving, the "White Squall," and Miss Ransford (again), "Within a mile of Edinburgh town." Altogether Mr. Lazarus' friends appeared delighted with the programme. Mr. Coote accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte with his accustomed ability.

MR. BENEDICT'S UNDINE.—It is to be hoped that we shall soon have an opportunity of hearing Mr. Benedict's Undine in London. Its success at the late Norwich Festival was complete; and it would be absurd that the performances of a work of such importance should be confined to a provincial town. Could not arrangements be made for producing Undine at Exeter Hall, or, still better, St. James's Hall, where the production of such an interesting novelty would be most acceptable? It is somewhat remarkable that during the last twelve months three musical works have been brought out in England founded on the legend of a knight's love for a water-nymph—Mendelssohn's Lorelei (or fragments from that uncompleted opera), Mr. Wallace's Lurline, and Mr. Benedict's Undine. This subject, so eminently musical, was made the groundwork of an opera soon after the appearance of Lamotte Fouqué's charming tale, the libretto being written by Lamotte Fouqué himself, and the music composed by Hoffmann. Indeed, with Undine Hoffmann obtained his one great musical success; and it is not difficult to account for the marked favour with which that work was received. In the first place the fantastic nature of the subject was well suited to the peculiar genius of the composer; then he possessed the advantages of having an excellent libretto; and, finally, the opera was admirably executed at the Royal Theatre of Berlin. It was brought out in 1817, and, we believe, was never revived, though much of the music enjoyed for a time considerable popularity, and the composition as a whole was warmly and publicly praised by no less a personage than Carl Maria von Weber.—Illustrated Times.

[We are glad to be able to inform our contemporary that Mr. Benedict's Undine is to be produced—with the same distribution of characters as at the Norwich Festival—on the occasion of Mad. Clara Novello's farewell concert in St. James's Hall.—ED. M. W.]

AUCKLAND.—"Handel's oratorio, Israel in Egypt," writes the New Zealander of August 1st, "was performed by the Auckland Choral Society on Thursday, 5th ult.,—and this time without interruption from fire or other casualty. The instrumental portion of the orchestra was weakened by the departure of the band of the 65th for Taranaki, and had to consist entirely of stringed instruments. The chorus was very numerous and on the whole well balanced. The massive double choruses were given with great precision and vigour; and the same remark applies to the rendering of the choruses as a whole. Mrs. Corlett again rendered valuable assistance in the solos for soprano, and the Misses Hampton acquitted themselves very creditably in the solo and duet pieces in which they took part. The solos and recitatives for male voices were sung by Mr. Reid, Mr. Leech, Mr. Ely, and Mr. Strauch; and the well-known duet, 'The Lord is a Man of War,' was sung by Messrs. Strauch and Carleton. Taken as a whole the performance was a very successful one, and shows that the Society is not relaxing in its efforts at continued advancement in the practice and performance of the highest order of musical composition. Captain Balneavis led, Mr. Fleetwood presided at the piano, and Mr. J. Brown conducted. The attendance was very large, and the want of hall-stewards was much felt."

THE BISHOP OF RIPON ON CHURCH MUSIC.—A letter, recently written by the Bishop of Ripon on the subject of church music, excited much attention in his diocese. On Friday last his lordship returned to the subject at Wakefield, at a soirée of the Church Institution, at which he presided. He said that the praises of God were amongst the most hallowed and delightful exercises of religious worship in which they could engage; and whatever they did in the service of God should be done without stint, and with an earnest desire to glorify God by bringing into his service all the powers with which He had entrusted them. But what did he mean by church music? He did not mean such elaborate and artistic music as could only be practised by comparatively very few out of the congregation—music of such a kind that the exercise of it was monopolised by a very privileged few; the greater part of the congregation being turned into passive listeners or admirers of the exquisite skill of those who performed. He enjoyed music as much as any one, but there was a time and place for everything, and the house of God was not the place for fine solo performers. Church music, in its finest, noblest aspect, was such music as all could unite in, so that it became the vehicle for the praises of the whole congregation to ascend as grateful incense to heaven. Wherever they had an opposite system introduced,—such a system as he had unhappily witnessed, he would not say where; such a system as was in force at places where solo performers stood out from the rest of the choir and sung, very beautifully he admitted, but very much out of their place, whilst the congregation was listening in wrapt attention,—he said that there the church was converted into a concert room, and he regarded it as little better than a profanation of the house of God. It was very hard to speak so as to be understood, and some who heard him might take what he said to be hostile to the cultivation of music. He meant no such thing. Let them cultivate music as much as they wished. He hoped that every one would learn to sing the praise of God, and that in all the churches throughout the country there might be more attention on the part of the congregation to the cultivation of church music; but then, if it were to be truly church music, it must be such as the whole congregation could join in. The bishop was frequently applauded during the delivery of these remarks.—From our Correspondent.

BELFAST.—"The Society of the Classical Harmonists" gave the first of the two inaugural concerts of their tenth season last night (Oct. 25), in the Victoria Hall, to an extremely large audience. The room, indeed, was crowded in every part. Handel's serenata, Acis and Galatea, was reproduced—a new cantata, by the conductor, Mr. George B. Allen, performed for the first time, and a miscellaneous selection, terminated the evening. The vocalists were—Miss Theresa Jeffreys, Mr. and Mrs. Winn, and Mr. Montem Smith; special instrumentalists—Mr. T. Harper, trumpet; and Mr. R. Blagrove, concertina. Full justice was rendered by the society to the delicate and graceful orchestration which, originated by Handel and elaborated by Mozart, makes this serenata one of the most charming productions which ever emanated from musical genius. In the choruses the members distinguished themselves by a precision and clearness which do infinite credit to the talent of their conductor and to their own industry. Miss Jeffreys, of course, took the soprano part, and Mr. M. Smith the tenor; Polyphemus being represented by Mr. Winn, whose bass voice is well suited to the melodious thunder of the love-sick giant. The great interest of the evening, however, and, we may add, the great success, was Mr. Allen's cantata, England's Star of Freedom, which, more than any composition of his yet produced, will, we believe, tend to establish his name. There is about it an originality and spirit—an animation of style, combined with solidity, which entitle it to rank high among compositions of its class. The symphony is not long, but full of spirit and fine effects; and the opening recitative for the tenor is dignified and expressive. The air, "Star of Freedom!" comes in with a power and animation, and has a martial vigour about it, which quite carried away the audience, and which constitute it a splendid song for a tenor voice. Mr. Montem Smith sang it extremely well, and threw into it the fire and enthusiasm it requires. He also sang the succeeding accompanied recitative well, and then came the grand chorus—"England, ask thy mighty heart!" which proved Mr. Allen to be competent to write for masses of voices as well as for instruments. The words of the cantata are by Mr. W. Ball, and are very good. In all his writings, Mr. Allen is sure to be guided by sound principles of art, but he possesses as well the originality and beauty of idea requisite to musical composition; and to conduct, as he did last night, a composition of his own of such talent, performed with such ability by amateurs whose training has been under his direction, was a position of which any musician might be proud. In the miscellaneous selection the noticeable points were Mr. Harper's magnificent trumpet playing, a solo on the concertina by Mr. Blagrove, Miss Jeffrey's "Let the Bright Seraphim," with the trumpet obligato, by Mr. Harper, Mrs. Winn's "Border Song," and Mr. Winn's "The brave old Temeraire."

No experiment could have been more successful than that made by the Society of the Classical Harmonists of giving cheap performances of high-class music for the benefit of the respectable class of society which cannot afford high-priced entertainments, yet is as capable of enjoying them as their wealthier fellow-mortals. From the first, these "people's concerts" have been a success, and in every respect most worthily so, and not many pleasanter sights are to be seen than the crowd of upturned, attentive, rapt faces when the "Hallelujah" is swelling through the building, and teaching the most indifferent heart how grand a thing is worship. The crowds who came to these performances, their profound attention, and their quick appreciation, show us how much to the taste of the lower class is elevated music, and make us, while acknowledging the services of the society to whose exertions such rare opportunities are due, wish that those opportunities could be more frequent.

Last night (Oct 26th), The Messiah was given with great success—so far as regards the society, indeed, with greater success, perhaps, than any oratorio we have yet had in Belfast. The choruses went with steadiness and vigour, and, in the more difficult and intricate passages especially, were given with a clearness and firm precision highly creditable to the conductor and members. Miss Jeffreys, Mr. and Mrs. Winn, and Mr. M. Smith took the solos. The soprano music is a little high for Miss Jeffrey's voice, but she sang "I know that my Redeemer liveth" with considerable power and expression. Mrs. Winn gave her solos with correctness and smoothness. The tenor recitatives and airs were excellently given by Mr. M. Smith, who was in good voice, and sang with freedom and ease. In the air, "Thou shalt break them," particularly, he showed the good quality of his voice, and took his high notes without any straining. The grand bass airs in this oratorio were done justice to by Mr. Winn's steady, even voice and correct style; and "The Trumpet shall sound," with Mr. Harper's trumpet accompaniment, was among the best performances of that air which we have ever heard. Mr. Harper, of course, plays his portion as no one else can, and leaves but one regret on the minds of his hearers—that he is not ubiquitous—and spoils one for any other trumpet-playing.

The orchestra deserve especial mention for their delightful playing of the Pastoral Symphony, and for the general efficiency of their accompaniments. Mr. Edeson, as organist, and Mr. Loveday, the leader, have prominent claims on the well-deserved commendation. We are happy to congratulate the society on their successful opening concerts, and on their high state of efficiency and apparent prosperity.—Northern Whig.

RICHARD WAGNER.—The favour shown to this great musical prophet of young Germany is due specially, if not solely, to the Emperor, who has abolished self-government even at the opera, and entrusts that institution now to the direction of a state official. He is known to have received Herr Wagner more than once during that turbulent composer's recent visit to Paris; and one such reception would probably have been enough to give rise to an amusing rumour which attributes the production of Tännhauser at the French Opera to political motives, and to a wish on the part of Napoleon III. to conciliate the German republican party through a man who has very considerable influence over them. Herr Wagner is a writer as well as a composer, and most persons would prefer his poems and essays to his music. His melodies (when he condescends to introduce mere lyricism into his highly dramatic works) are by no means grateful to the ear, and his political principles are equally repugnant to the reason. But to a certain class of young Teutons, who long for a united Germany, not under a Prussian king but under a republican government, his democratic views are so palatable that they tolerate his music for the sake of his opinions. Thus Verdi, in Italy, is said to have owed a portion of his success to his well-known patriotism, but, above all, to the discovery that the letters composing his name were the initials of the great national cry, "Vittore Emmanuelle re d'Italia." The Parisians had an opportunity some months since of hearing a quantity of Herr Wagner's music, at a series of concerts given by that composer for their special benefit at the Théâtre Italien, when musicians and amateurs agreed in condemning it.

EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANY LITERARY INSTITUTION.—A concert was given by this institution on Wednesday evening, when the following vocalists assisted—Miss Eliza Hughes, Miss Walsh, Miss Jane Palmer, Mrs. H. Lee, Mr. George Tedder, and Mr. Leonard. The room was well filled, and several gentlemen of the committee were on the platform. Mr. Gregson, the member of Parliament who is chairman of the Directors, opened the proceedings, and made several very sensible observations, which were listened to with marked attention. But the request of the hon. chairman that encores be not insisted on was not complied with strictly, Miss Eliza Hughes being compelled to repeat Bishop's "Tell me my heart," and the Scotch song of "He is what they ca' a Bonnie Lad," and Mr. Levy the canzonet of Dinorah for cornet-a-pistons. The demand for repetition of "Largo al Factotum," by Mr. Leonards, was, however, successfully resisted, but not till Mr. Gregson had again addressed the audience in deprecation of the "encore system." The vocal class of the institution, which is under the direction of Mr. George Tedder, who, by-the-bye, sang Bishop's "Pilgrim of Love" with taste and expression, gave steadily and carefully the "Angelus," from Mr. Wallace's Maritana, and a part-song arranged by Mr. Macfarren, "Autumn's Golden Leaf." Miss Hughes and Mr. Leonard were very successful in their delivery of the well-known duet, "Mira di acerba la Grima" (Verdi), and in the "Suliote War Song" (Brinley Richards), the fine bass voice of the latter was heard to great advantage. Mr. Leonard also sang Wallace's "Bellringer," in place of Mr. Wallworth, who was unable to appear, and acquitted himself greatly to the satisfaction of his audience. Mr. J. G. Callcott accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte. The room was full.

Advertisements.

FERRARI'S WORK

ON

THE VOICE AND SINGING,

Price 8s.

MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,

DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,

And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL. — The Office of ORGANIST will be vacant on January, 20, 1861. Candidates are required to be not merely good executants on the Organ, but apt to teach boys, and train a Choir, with due superintendence.

Applications, stating age, and references as to character and the above qualifications, will be received by the Precentor, Rev. Dr. Rowden, Weybridge, Surrey, up to December 1, 1860.

Stipend £120 per annum.

ROBERT COCKS & CO.'S LIST of NEW PIANO MUSIC.

By W. VINCENT WALLACE.

"Good News from Home," varied for piano, 3s. "Come where my Love lies Dreaming," for piano, 3s. "La Luvisella," favourite Neapolitan melody for piano, 3s. "The Shepherd's Roundelay," pastoral sketch, 4s. "The Volunteer Rifles' March," for piano, 3s. Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," fantasia for piano, 4s. "Croyez Moi," romance for the piano, 2s. 6d. "Chorus of Dervishes," for piano, 3s. "Twilight," romance for the piano, 2s. "Rondoletto Scherzo," for piano, 2s. "Il Sostenuto," étude de salon, pour piano, 3s. "The Old Hundredth," transcribed, 4s. "Robin Adair," impromptu de concert, played by Miss A. Goddart, 4s. "Home, sweet Home," 3s. Scotch, Irish and English, &c. Melodies for piano, each 2s. 6d. and 3s.—Lists gratis, and postage free.

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W., publishers to their Majesties Queen Victoria and the Emperor Napoleon III.

NEW PIANO MUSIC. By BRINLEY RICHARDS.

"Chime Again, beautiful Bells," solo, 2s. 6d.; duet, 3s. "The Young Recruit," solo, 2s. 6d.; duet, 3s.; as a March, 3s. "The Ploughboy," 3s. "Warblings at Eve," sola, 2s. 6d.; duet, 3s. "Her bright smile haunts me still," 2s. 6d. "The Tear," by Kucken, 2s. 6d. "The Gipsey's life is a joyous life," 3s. "Why do Summer roses fade?" 3s. "Annie o' the Banks o' Dee," 3s. "The Bridge," (Miss M. Lindsay), 2s. 6d. "Fading away," 2s. 6d. "Truth in Absence," 2s. 6d. "The Cottage by the Sea," 2s. "Far on the deep blue Sea," (J. R. Thomas), 2s. 6d. "March of the Men of Harlech," solo, 3s.; duet, 3s. "The Dream of the Wanderer," (Romance), 2s. 6d. No. 6, New Burlington Street, and of all Music-sellers.

LIBRARY EDITION OF

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.—Edited by J. W. DAVISON. In one volume, music size, beautifully engraved and printed, price 8s., or superbly bound price 10s. 6d.

The MAZURKAS of CHOPIN for PIANOFORTE complete, with biographical and critical introduction, by J. W. DAVISON; and portrait of Chopin by Lynch.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

NEW AND CHEAP PARIS EDITION

OF

THE WORKS OF FREDERICK CHOPIN,

Revised and corrected by the Composer's Pupil and Friend,

T. A. D. TELLEFSEN.

FULL MUSIC SIZE, AND PRINTED FROM ENGRAVED PLATES.

Price 8s. per Book, or £4 the Complete Collection in Twelve Books.

CONTENTS:

Book 1.—NOCTURNES.
2.—MAZURKAS.
3.—MAZURKAS (continued) and WALTZES.
4.—POLONOISES.
5.—IMPROMPTUS, Scherzos, and Berceuse.
6.—BALLADES, Bolero, Barcarolle, and GRAND FANTASIA in A flat, Op. 49.
7.—RONDOS, Fantasia on Polish Airs, and TARANTELLE.
8.—SONATAS and Air Allemand varié.
9.—CONCERTOS and Allegro de Concert.
10.—TRIO (Piano, Violin, and Violoncello), POLONOISE and GRAND SONATA (Piano and Violoncello).
11.—PRELUDES, Three Studies, and Variations on La ci Darem.
12.—The TWENTY-FOUR GRAND STUDIES.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY, Successors to WESSEL & Co.,

18 HANOVER SQUARE.

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT

OF

FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,

IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY

DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,

Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,

TO BE SOLD AT

ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,

BY

MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,

28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.

MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.

VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.

VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.

FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.

CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.

HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.

VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.

Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.

THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.

Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.

Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

THE LONDON TONIC SOL-FA CHOIR will give their FIRST CONCERT at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Tuesday, 27th November, 1860. Conductor, Mr. W. S. YOUNG. Admission 1s. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. Sofa stalls, 5s. For further particulars, see small bills.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC.—LEFEBURE-WELY'S SIX OFFERTOIRES. Op. 35. Edited by WILLIAM REA. 3s. to 5s. each. HENRY SMART'S ORGAN PIECES, introductory to the characteristic difficulties of the Instrument. Nos. 1 and 2, each 3s. 6d. London: Ashdown & Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

EVANS'S
ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

The Cottage Harmonium, at Six Guineas

Has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft agreeable quality of tone, suitable for a cottage or a small sitting-room.

The Ten-Guinea Harmonium

In a handsome Oak Case, possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone which characterises all EVANS'S Instruments.

The Nineteen-Guinea, or Three-Stop Harmonium

With Unison Trebles, and Bourdon in the Bass, is a powerful instrument, and designed expressly for leading Public Worship.

The Twelve-Stop Harmonium, price 36 Guineas

Is a brilliant and powerful instrument, suitable either for a church or drawing-room.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium, at 68 Guineas

Is in a very handsome Rosewood Case, has two rows of keys, and five and a half octaves of vibrators. This is acknowledged by the profession and press to be the most perfect Harmonium, without pedals, that has yet been produced.

The Organist's or Pedal Harmonium, at Forty-Seven Guineas

Is in an American walnut case, has Ten Stops and Two Octaves, and a Third of Pedals, with independent reeds.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium,

WITH TWO ROWS OF KEYS AND PEDALS,

In Oak Case, and Eighteen Stops, price 130 Guineas, possesses the attributes of an Organ, and is the most complete Harmonium that has yet been constructed.

An Illustrated Catalogue of EVANS' English Harmoniums, with One and Two Rows of Keys, with or without the Percussion Action, and with Pedals, at prices ranging from 6 to 140 Guineas, is now ready, and may be had upon application to the Manufacturers,

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, November 3, 1860

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 45 SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Dr. TENDALL.
Vocal Classes
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

HERR ENGEL begs to announce that he has REMOVED from Bentinck Street, to No. 71 NEW BOND STREET, W.

MISS PALMER begs to announce to her friends and pupils that she has REMOVED to Sherwood Cottage, 25 Park Village East, Regent's Park, N.W., and requests that after Nov. 7th, all letters respecting engagements, &c., may be directed there.—10 Salisbury Street, Strand.

MR. ALEXANDER COOPER begs to inform his friends that he has REMOVED to 20 Brompton Crescent, S.W.

ROYAL EASTERN OPERA HOUSE.—Lessee, Mr. JOHN DOUGLAS.—MAD. FLORENCE LANCIA begs to inform her friends and the public that her BENEFIT is positively fixed for Wednesday next, November 14. On this occasion LA SONNAMBULA will, by general request, be repeated. Amina, Mad. FLORENCE LANCIA; Elvino, Mr. AUGUSTUS BRAHAM (being the first and only time of his performing it at this Theatre). For further particulars and programme see small bills.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—HANDEL'S ORATORIO, the MESSIAH, will be performed on Friday Evening, Nov. 16th, under the direction of Dr. WYLDE, with full Band and Chorus of 300 performers. Vocalists—Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, and Mad. SAINTON-DOLBY. Principal Violin, Mr. WILLY; Organist, Mr. G. LAKE; Trumpet-Solo, Mr. T. HARPER. Tickets at popular prices: Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Area, 1s. and 2s., at Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201, Regent Street; Chappell and Co., 50, Bond Street; Keith, Prowse and Co., 48 Cheapside, and at Mr. Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Evening at 8. Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 21 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. Books of the Words, 6d. each.

"The best entertainment in London."

MUSIC HALL, BIRMINGHAM.

FOR SALE, by PRIVATE CONTRACT, this elegant and well-arranged PUBLIC BUILDING, situated in the main street leading from the centre of the town to the fashionable suburb of Edgbaston, and within a few minutes' walk of the railway stations and principal hotels. It is most substantially erected upon a large plot of ground, the front part of which remains to be let off on Building Leases; and has handsome and spacious Entrances from the street.

The Hall is 111 ft. long, 76 ft. wide, and 70 ft. high, constructed to seat 1,830 persons, exclusive of the Orchestra, which accommodates 250 performers; and is fitted up with a large and powerful Organ, by Gray and Davison, built expressly for the room, at the cost of £1,500; and attached are Ticket Offices, Retiring and Refreshment Rooms, Kitchen, fitted with two Cooking Ranges, Hot and Steam Closets, &c.; and Heating Apparatus, by Haden, of Trowbridge.

The Building is in the Gothic style, suitably decorated throughout, and is furnished with appropriate Gas Fittings, Benches, &c. It is well adapted for Concerts, Lectures, Balls, and Entertainments, or for a place of worship, to all of which uses it has been constantly applied; and is easily convertible into a theatre or opera house.

For particulars, apply to Mr. James Cranston, 1 Temple Row West, Birmingham.

JULLIEN FUND.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Coutts; Messrs. Hayward, Rennard, and Co.; the London and County Bank; the Hon. Treasurers, Mr. J. Mitchell, Mr. T. Chappell, and Mr. W. H. Sams; and Shilling Subscriptions to 18th October ... £756 12 2

Amount paid to M. Jullien during his illness, and for his funeral expenses, and debts	£136	7 3
Amount voted for M. Jullien's two adopted children	134	0 0
" " " Sister and Nephew	80	0 0
" " " Mad. Jullien	336	7 3
Expenses of collecting books, advertising, printing, postages, &c., &c.	69	17 8
	£756	12 2

CHARLES LUDER'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

PIANOFORTE. s. d.

"La Tarentelle" (dedicated to Ferdinand Praeger) Op. 41 ... ... 3 0
"Le Corsaire" (dedicated to Edouard Roeckel) Op. 42 ... ... 3 0
"Six Romances Anglaises sans Paroles" (in two books each) ... 6 0
"La Danse des Sorcières," Op. 33 ... ... 3 0

VOCAL.

"L'Emigré Irlandais" (dedicated to Mad. Sainton-Dolby) 3 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL MUSIC.

Name of Song.	Sung by.	Composer.	s.	d.
"I love YOU"	... Sims Reeves	... M. W. Balfe ...	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose"	... Ditto ...	... Ditto	3	0
"If I could change as others change"	... Laura Baxter	... Ditto	2	6
"The meadow gate"	... Wilbye Cooper	... G. B. Allen ...	2	6
"Wert thou mine"	... Sims Reeves	... Frank Mori ...	2	6
"Thou art so near and yet so far" ...	... Herr Reichardt	... A. Reichardt..	3	0
"Good night" (cradle song)	... Ditto ...	... Ditto	2	6
"I never knew how dear thou wert" ...	... Miss Lascelles	... H. K. Morley.	2	6

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

			s.	d.
"I love YOU" ...	... Transcribed by	... Emile Berger ...	3	0
Ditto	.. Ditto (easy)	... J. Liebich	2	0
"Good night" ...	... Ditto (moderately difficult) ...	... W. Kuhe	3	0
Ditto	... Ditto (easy)	... J. Liebich	2	0
Ditto	... Ditto (easy)	... R. Andrews ...	2	0
"Thou art so near"	... Ditto (easy)	... Ditto	2	0
Ditto	... Ditto (very easy)	... Rudolf Nordmann.	1	0
Ditto	... Ditto, as a PIANO DUET ...	... Ditto	1	0
"Santa Lucia ...	... Ditty (easy)	... Eugène Moniot ...	1	0
"Leopold" ...	... Mazurka favourite	... Brinley Richards ..	2	0
"Oberon" ...	... Fantasia, composed expressly for Miss Arabella Goddard	G. B. Allen ...	5	0

London: Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT.

The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far."

Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

DIFFICULT. s. d.

DON PASQUALE (introducing "Com è gentil") Ricardo Linter 5 0

MODERATELY DIFFICULT.

"The last rose of Summer" (with variations) Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew 3 0

VERY EASY.

"Thou art so near" (Reichardt's popular Lied) Rudolf Nordmann 1 0

London: Duncan, Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

WEBER'S LAST WALTZ, transcribed by F. ROSENFELD.

This is one of the best arrangements for pupils yet offered to the public of the above admired waltz. It is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT.

The above popular Neapolitan melody specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

s. d.

"Cupid's Repose" (Melody) 3 0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêvérie) 3 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet,

arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the arrangements for that purpose.

EMANUEL AGUILAR'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

VOCAL. s. d.

"In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by Acton Bell) 3 0
"Sympathy" (poetry by Ellis Bell) 2 0
"Farewell" (poetry by Bishop Heber) 2 0

PIANOFORTE.

"Sunset glow" (Rêvérie) 3 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by

Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

CZERKASKI (Joseph) "The Bridesmaids' Album." s. d.

No. 1—"Bridal Quadrilles" 2 0
2—"Shorncliffe Waltzes" 2 6
3—"Beatrice Mazurka" 2 0
4—"Frederick William Waltz" 3 0
5—"Princess Victoria Quadrille" 2 0
6—"Polish Varsoviana" 2 0
7—"Exeter Polka" 2 0
8—"Apethorpe Galop" 1 6

 The "Brideamaids' Album," complete in one volume, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

REPERTOIRE DES BOUFFES PARISIENS.

No. 1—"Tromb-al-Cazar" Waltz 2 6
2—"Rêve d'une nuit d'été" Waltz 2 0
3—"Les deux Pêcheurs" Waltz 2 6
4—"Les deux Aveugles" Waltz 2 6
5—Le Violoneux Polka" 2 0
6—"Une Nuit blanche" Quadrille 2 0
7—"Vent du Soir" Quadrille 2 0
8—"Le Violoneux" Waltz 2 0

CZERKASKI (J.) ... "Sans Souci" Galop 3 0
" ... "Bella Contessa" Waltz 3 0
DAWES (Albert) ... "Hastings" Waltzes 3 0
" ... "Southdown" Polka 1 6
" ... "Hastings" Polka 1 6
" ... "Anacreontic" Quadrilles on popular Glees 3 0
MARRIOTT (C.) ... "The Woman in White" Waltz 3 0
MONIOT (Eugène) ... "Schottish d'amour" 2 0
PECH (Dr. James) ... "May-dew" Polka 2 0
RICHARDS (Brinley) ... "Leopold" Mazurka... ... ... 2 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

s. d.

"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves) 3 0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto) 3 0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter) 2 6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa) 2 6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole) 2 0

Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.; where "I love you" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianofore by Emile Berger, price 3s.

"AULD LANG SYNE," varied for the Pianoforte by ALBERT DAWES, price 5s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"This is a series of nine variations on the above popular air, and possesses a beauty seldom found in this class of music, namely, that the air is heard in all the variations. It is a good piece for practice, and not too difficult for the generality of players. We heartily recommend it to our musical friends, to many of whom Mr. Dawes is already favourably known as a composer."—Hastings and St. Leonard's News.

ALBERT DAWES'S MOST POPULAR COMPOSITIONS.

PIANOFORTE. s. d.

"Auld Lang Syne" (with variations) 5 0
"Hastings Waltzes" 3 0
"Anacreontic Quadrille" (on popular Glees) 3 0
"Hastings Polka" 1 0
"Southdown Polka" 1 0

VOCAL.

"I slept, and oh! how sweet the dream" 2 0
"Good bye, my love, good bye" 2 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d. London: published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

The day, pretty darling, draws near to its close,
Come, cease from your play, on your pillow repose,
You peep from the cradle still laughing and bright,
Kind angels for ever preserve you, good night.

With freedom from sorrow, dear child, you are blest,
To you a pure heaven is your fond mother's breast;
Wild passion some day will your happiness blight,
Kind angels preserve you, my darling, good night.

Ah! happy is he who can slumber like you,
Be ever, dear child, to your innocence true,
The righteous are watched by the spirits of light,
Who guard them while sleeping, my darling, good night.

"Few songs of modern days have achieved a more decided or better merited success than Herr Reichardt's charming lied, "Thou art so near and yet so far," which has for the last two years been the delight of all concert-goers and drawing-room vocalists of more than ordinary pretensions. Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have just published a new composition, from the same original and elegant pen, entitled "Good Night" (a cradle song). The words are exquisitely simple and unaffected, being the address of a mother to her sleeping babe; and it is but justice to Herr Reichardt to say that he has wedded an exquisite domestic poem to a most graceful, unaffected melody, which breathes the very spirit of maternal tenderness. The song, which is written for a tenor voice—the composer being, as our readers know, one of the first of living German vocalists—is in the key of F major; and to amateurs of taste we can cordially recommend "The Cradle Song" as a composition worthy of their attention."—Liverpool Mail.

"THE KNIGHTS OF THE CROSS," words by Dr.

J. F. WALLER, music by CHARLES OBERTHUR, vocal trio, with or without accompaniment of the piano, as sung by Mad. Clara Novello, Herr Reichardt, and Mr. Weiss, and performed at the Philharmonic and the Author's Concerts in Dublin. Score and parts 5s., to be had at the principal musicsellers, and of the Author, 14 Cottage Road, Westbourne Terrace, N.W.

Reviews.

The successful reproduction of Mr. Edward Loder's Night Dancers at Covent Garden is likely to create as general a demand for the music as the opera when it was first brought out at the Princess's in 1846. Few works contain the elements of popularity to a greater degree; few of recent years—at least, with which we are acquainted—present a more attractive combination of lively fancy and polished art. The opera entire has just been published in one volume (Charles Jefferys)—we mean, of course, the pianoforte adaptation. Each number can, on the other hand, be had separately.

The overture to the Night Dancers—by far the best of Mr. Loder's orchestral preludes—begins with an andantino, consisting of a graceful theme, interrupted with snatches of faëry music, in which the prominent passages are distributed à la Mendelssohn. The village life and the dream of the "Wilis"—are here poetically combined. The subjects of the allegro are both beautiful—the first passionate, the second tender and graceful; the fortissimo counter-theme, and the coda are brilliant; and the whole work is brilliant and animated. The overture is here arranged for four hands, and very well arranged, by the way. The legend for Mary, "Two sailors they came," in the induction (query, "introduction") is quaint and pretty, and is in the key of A minor. Godfrey's song, "Laugh, my girls," in B flat, is full of character, and harmonised in Auber's most sparkling manner. The lake serenade, "Pull, comrades, pull," in G, for Albert and chorus, is beautiful and highly effective. An air for Giselle, "Wild in the spirit," in the same key, is simple and melodious, with an unpretending but neatly-written accompaniment. We are again reminded of Auber in the passage preceding the resumption of the theme as well as in the entire treatment. The "induction" ends with the serenade dying away in the distance.

The chorus of vintagers, "Welcome neighbours," in F, which commences Act I., is fresh and flowing, and very effective for the voices. After an accompanied recitative in dialogue, in which Mary, Albert, and Fridolin take part, another serenade for Albert, in D flat, "Wake, my love," occurs. This is exceedingly graceful, and one of the most telling pieces in the opera. It is beautifully written for the tenor voice, and never fails of producing an effect on the stage. Giselle's scena, "I dreamt we stood before the altar," is more ambitious than anything which precedes it in the opera. The first movement, in E minor, with the tremolo accompaniment, is earnest and beautiful. The andante, in G, is equally charming, and accompanied deliciously. The cabaletta, in E major, hardly pleases us so much, the subject being rather trite. A ballad for Albert, in G, "I cannot flatter if I would," is simple and pleasing, and though written on the regular "order pattern," has nothing common in it. In the first success of the opera, fourteen years ago, this ballad took immensely with the public. Mary's song, "The cup is oak," published in G, originally in C, as sung by Miss Smithson at the Princess's Theatre, has been omitted in the Covent Garden representation. It is, nevertheless, very quaint and pleasing, and would, we fancy, have suited Miss Thirlwall. The concerted piece, "A noble train," admirably constructed, and opening with a spirit and boldness worthy of Rossini, introduces a striking air for Bertha, "Our way has been both rough and long." A chorus of huntsmen which follows, "Here's a health to the forester good," in D, offers nothing remarkable for criticism. A song, in B flat, "For one sweet hour," not assigned in the volume to any character, and omitted at the Royal English Opera, we may suppose to be sung by the Duke, as the verses imply a desire for the momentary resignation of pomp and power. The omission of this song in the representation cannot be esteemed a serious loss. A recitative and aria, "I breathe again," and "What pleasure can there be in staying?" for Giselle, in G minor and major, is also left out in the revival at Covent Garden; not unwisely, we think, as it is by no means an inspiration, and created less effect than anything in the opera when it was first produced, even with the aid of Mad. Albertazzi's singing. The recitative is poor, and the air is a mêlée of Meyerbeer's "Ah com è rapida," and Rossini's "Una voce." The finale to the first act is admirably constructed, and contains many charming things. Amongst them must be cited the pretty "Flower duet" for Giselle and Albert, consisting of an andante and allegro in A flat. This duet embodies the divination-speech of Margaret in Faust, "He loves me—loves me not," which all the world knows. A bacchanalian chorus, "Long live our vintage queen," in C, takes its subject from the overture, or, more properly, it borrows. The ballet music is beautiful. The "Peasants' Dance," à la Mazurka, is new and sparkling, and the "Silesian Waltz" particularly attractive. This last dance-piece told almost as well as anything else in the opera during its first career. The employment of snatches of the duet in Giselle's dying scene is ingenious, appropriate, and effective. The chorus of monks, "Holy waters o'er thee sprinkling," in E flat, is an exquisite strain of choral harmony. Indeed, the whole finale is not only the work of a musician but of a man of ingenious fancy.

The second act, the finest part of the opera, is full of beauties. It opens with a charming recitative for Bertha, succeeded by a duet for Bertha and Albert, "Peace to the dead," in A flat, exceedingly touching and graceful. A quintet and chorus, "Ah! sure, sweet maid," is slightly reminiscent of the introduction to Guillaume Tell, but not the less beautiful on that account. To this succeeds an air with chorus for Fridolin, "He who lingers here," describing the characteristics of the Wilis, which is full of dramatic effect, and possesses many beauties well worth the musician's notice. Albert's air in E flat, "Wake from thy tomb, Giselle," is for the most part pathetic and beautiful, but somewhat marred by the Italian crescendo in the middle, which is neither very new nor very striking. To the chorusses and dances of the "Wilis" which now succeed we have nothing but praise to offer. The opening chorus, "Pace, pace around her bed," in F, is very charming, with a characteristic tripping measure, and full of etherial grace. The trio, "The Wilis of the night are we," is not less fanciful and fairylike, and perhaps more captivating from the marked character of its rhythm. The air, "What delightful being's this?" in G, which Giselle sings on riing from the tomb, expresses the sentiment of the situation with great dramatic propriety; and the brief chorus of "Wilis" in answer, "No, sister, no," has an admirable and striking effect. The "Waltz of the Wilis" follows—a graceful and elegant danc leading to a recitative and short chorus, "Hence, hence let us fly," which brings us to Fridolin's air, "Pretty sprites, where are you hiding?" in A, a very sparkling and Auberish composition. The scene between the "Wilis" and Fridolin, in which the beadle is made to dance himself to death, is capitally illustrated by the music. The tarantella, especially, is delicious, as if indeed it were drawn from the very fount of inspiration of Rossini and Auber. The duet for Giselle and Albert, "Thou hast called," is a charming melody. Giselle's air in F, "Ah, no! you'll forget," is pretty, but not remarkable. Her hymn, "Ave Maria," however, after she wakes from her dream, redeems it. This is a perfect gem, equally remarkable for the beauty of its melody and its masterly treatment. The final rondo for Giselle, "On me crowd such joyous fancies," has nothing particular to recommend it but its brilliant passages—more brilliant, however, than effective. But bravura writing is not one of Mr. Loder's excellencies, no more than of some other English writers. The little that is exceptional, nevertheless, may be well overlooked on account of the numerous beauties contained in the Night Dancers, the music of which cannot fail to afford delight in the closet as well as in the theatre.

"Break, break, break"—composed by E. BURNETT. Mus. Bac. Cantab. (Leader and Cock). The well-known and beautiful stanzas of the poet-laureate, which will at once be suggested by the thrice reiterated "Break," have frequently been set, with more or less felicity, but not often with such real and unaffected expression as by Mr. Burnett, who, in the present instance, shows himself worthy to be a bachelor of the same university where Sterndale Bennett holds the rank of professor.

"What the bee is to the flowret"—Polka chorus, by Dr. A. DENNING (J. Brader—Swansea). Pretty, lively, without pretension, and in the most unmistakeable polka rhythm.

"Crocusses and Snowdrops"—Song, composed for Mad. Sainton-Dolby, by RACHEL EVANS, R.A.M. (J. Brader—Swansea). The unlaboured simplicity of this little song would be alone attractive; but happily this is accompanied by genuine melody and a most careful and appropriate reading of the words.

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Nov. 4, 1860.

IN the lobbies of the two Imperial theatres, the Burg and Karntnerthor, a code of regulations to be observed by the public is posted in conspicuous positions. Bearing date Feb. 1800, these regulations are still in force. The first article refers to the approaches and entrances to the theatres, mode of securing places, and other local arrangements. Articles XIV. to XX. directing the conduct of the audience during the performances, are more remarkable and worth reciting. They are set forth in the following very questionable French:—

XIV.—"Dans le nombre des Bienséances à observer une des premières c'est d'ôter son chapeau à l'entrée du parterre noble que leurs Majestés se trouvent au Spectacle ou non, et celui, qui averti par le Commissaire Inspecteur s'obstineroit à rester couvert, sera non-seulement obligé de quitter la salle incontinent, mais il pourra encore, suivant le cas, être sujet à une animadversion.

XV.—"Si leurs Majestés sont presentes au spectacle les hommes se tiendront pareillement au second parterre et dans le Loges la tête découverte.

XVI.—"Il s'entend de soi-même, qu'ainsi que le sentiment des convenances doit le dicter, personne ne fera difficulté d'ôter son chapeau lorsque celui-ci masquerait la vue ou generoit d'autres spectateurs.

XVII.—"Les applaudissements que meriteroient la Piéce ou les acteurs ne doivent jamais se manifester d'une manière bruïante contraire aux règles de la bienséance, et les réprises aïant le double inconveniant de trop prolonger la representation, et de fatiguer les chanteurs, il est defendu de faire répéter un morçeau de chant ou de danse.

XVIII.—"Il n'est de même point permis de redemander un morçeau de danse dans les Ballets."

These two last articles make a despotic government, as far as theatrical matters are concerned, almost desirable.

XIX.—"Les applaudissements à trois réprises étant regardés comme un hommage dû aux Souverains seuls, il n'est point permis de les accorder aux acteurs et actrices de quelque genre de spectacle que ce soit. Il est defendu en outre de demander à force de battemens de mains, de cris et autre tapage, que quelque individu que ce soit reparoisse apres la fin du spectacle; ainsi qu'il est sevérement défendu à toutes les personnes attachées au service des Theatres de la Cour de se rendre à ces sortes de provocations, de reparoitre apres la fin du spectacle sous quelque pretexte que ce soit, et surtout d'adresser la parole au Public. Ce réglement ne souffre aucune autre exception que le cas du Debut d'un personnage.

XX.—"Le paiement de l'Entrée ne pourra donner à personne le Droit de commettre une action messéante, ceux qui à la salle du spectacle tenteroient de siffler, huer, faire tapage avec les pieds ou les cannes, seront d'abord arrêtés et ensuite punis pour avoir commis une incongruité, d'autant plus répréhensible, qu'un silence general est une signe bien plus dècisif du mécontentement d'un public que ce tapage, qui presque toujours n'est que le resultat du caprice ou de la cabale."

And to these regulations the Viennese public still submit. It sometimes happens that an unhappy baritone will excite a frequenter of the gallery "to commit an incongruity," in the way of hissing, or that a revolutionary prima donna defies the Imperial commands, and appears before the curtain oftener than is allowed, having raised the enthusiasm of the audience to an unwonted pitch by her extraordinary skill; but as a rule both the public and the artists have a wholesome dread of the tyrannical impresario, and his regulations are obeyed accordingly.

To continue my last letter, on Sunday, Oct. 28, Les Huguenots was given at the Karntnerthor as follows:—

Marguerite, Mlle. Liebhart.	St. Bris, Herr Hrabaneck.
Nevers, Herr Liebich.	Raoul, Herr Walter (instead of Herr Ander, who was prevented singing by a sudden hoarseness.)
Marcel, Herr Drachsler.	Urban, Mlle. Ferrari.

Valentine, Mad. Csillag.

Mlle. Liebhart is hardly equal to the part she undertook, the music of which is not adapted to her voice. To those who remember Anna Zerr on this stage as Marguerite, the inefficiency of her successor was painfully apparent. Herr Watter acquitted himself creditably as Raoul, and his brother artists exerted themselves successfully in their respective rôles. The chief feature of the evening was most unquestionably the Valentine of Mad. Csillag, an effort reflecting its lustre upon the whole performance. If in La Juive and Trovatore, Mad. Csillag exhibited vocal and histrionic powers which would surprise those who never heard her but at Covent Garden, as Valentine she completely established her claim to be ranked among the greatest dramatic singers of the present day. The band and chorus were careless during the first and second acts, but regained their wonted energy and precision for the rest of the opera. The Benediction Chorus was well rendered. It is somewhat remarkable that the light and shade, such characteristic features of this composition, are overlooked by Herr Proch, the grand "crescendo" to which we are so accustomed in London, being neglected by the Viennese conductor; with this exception the execution was perfect, and the ensemble complete.

On Monday, Oct. 29th, a ballet, and Tuesday, 30th, La Dame Blanche, with Herr Wachtel, Mad. Wildauer, &c. I must not forget to record the opening of a new theatre in the Leopoldstadt quarter. The building is situate on the city bank of the Danube, and forms a handsome contrast to the dilapidated houses which formerly occupied the same site. It is built upon the French model, and most elegantly decorated in white and gold. The gas is almost too profuse, the illumination of the audience portion of the theatre being so brilliant as to mar the stage effects. The entertainments are similar to those given at the Carl Theatre, consisting of adaptations from the French, including all the repertoire of the Bouffes Parisiens. The fascinating Zöllner is one of the company, of which Carl Treumann is the director, the theatre in fact being his speculation, and named after him.

Nestroy's career as manager was brought to a close on Wednesday, Oct. 31st. There was more excitement to secure places for the occasion than on any Jenny Lind night of former times. As much as 80 guilders was paid for a stall, which was sold by auction at Daum's Café. The public favourite appeared in a mélange of five of his most celebrated characters, and made a farewell speech, put together for him by Anton Lauger, in which were cleverly introduced the titles of the different pieces he had written or adapted to the German stage, Nestroy being a most successful playwright as well as a popular actor. The adieu was most impressive. When the curtain rose for the "last few words," Nestroy was discovered surrounded by the members of his company, the ladies being most elegantly attired in white silk dresses. Of course every point of the speech elicited applause, but the excitement of the audience is altogether indescribable when their favourite appealed directly to their feelings in the following lines:—

"Was ich als Darsteller gewirkt, gestrebt,
Sie wissen's ja, Sie haben es mitgelebt.
So hab' ich es erreicht nach manchem Jahr,
Dass ich—darf ich es sagen?—Ihr Liebling war?"

Bouquets, wreaths, showers of flowers were hurled at the speaker, who was quite overcome, and for some time unable to master the strong emotion which impeded his powers of speech. After the audience had dispersed, a handsome silver crown, inscribed with the names of all the company, from the call-boy to the first tragedian, was presented by the artists to their manager, as a souvenir of October 31. Nestroy was born in Vienna in 1802, and made his first appearance on any stage as a vocalist at the Karntnerthor Theatre in 1824. Although he retires from the position of director he will not abandon his theatrical career, having engaged himself to Carl Treumann to appear at the new theatre in January next. Till then he will remain at a chateau he has recently purchased in the neighbourhood of his native city. On Thursday, November 1, La Favorita was performed at the Opera House, under the title of Leonora. Why the name of the work is changed none can tell but those in the confidence of the Imperial impresario. The cast was as follows:—

Fernando, Herr Wachtel.	Cardinal, Herr Drachsler.
Il Ré, Herr Hrabaneck.	Leonora, Mad. Csillag.

The representation was in great peril owing to Herr Hrabaneck's total ignorance of the part he had undertaken to perform. In the duet with Leonora he was almost unable to join, not knowing anything of the music. By any other audience Herr Hrabaneck would have been hooted off the stage, and the manager called upon to substitute another artist; but, thanks to the "regulations" before quoted, the incompetent baritone was treated with that silence which is said to be "un signe bien plus décisif que le tapage." Mad. Csillag did her utmost to assist her camarade in his dilemma, but in vain. The duet was sung by the soprano alone. Herr Wachtel did not distinguish himself remarkably as Fernando, which is a part requiring more refinement and control of voice than he has yet acquired. Mad. Csillag revenged herself for the break-down in the duet by her admirable singing throughout the opera. Another instance of a different, and certainly less effective, reading of a morceau at the Karnthnerthor to that at other theatres, occurs in the well-known duet in the last act of this opera. The "tempo" adopted by the German singers and conductor is so very much slower, and the nuances so very much exaggerated, that the melody and situation seem to be travestied and hardly recognisable as the same which create such a furore upon the Italian stage.—Wagner's Fliegender Holländer was produced on Friday, November 2, after many weeks' preparation, with complete success. The different parts were thus filled:—

Daland, Herr Meyerhofer.	Der Holländer, Herr Beck.
Erik, Herr Walter.	Ein Steurmann, Herr Erl.
Senta, Fräulein Kraus.

The libretto is founded upon the old legend of the sea, known as "The Flying Dutchman;" a story, the hero of which is condemned, as penance for his sins, to encounter the perils of storm and shipwreck, until he can meet with a young girl who is willing to sacrifice her life to secure his absolution. In the first act the ship of Daland is discovered at anchor. A storm arises, during which the phantom ship of the Fliegender Holländer appears. Daland and the Holländer disembark and speak together on the strand. The former offers the condemned wanderer a hospitable reception at his house, which is accepted, and a bargain concluded between them for the hand of Daland's daughter in exchange for certain jewels to be given by the Holländer. The storm subsides, and the two ships sail for the neighbouring port. In the second act Senta, Daland's daughter, is surrounded by her maidens, who spin and sing, upbraiding her the while for her melancholy state. They persuade her to tell a dream she has had of the Flying Dutchman, in which she believes her destiny to be foreshadowed. During the recital Erik, her lover, enters, and endeavours to induce Senta to disregard the presentiment she feels. Erik leaves her. Daland returns, bringing with him the Holländer, whose presence and appearance realise the presage of Senta's dream. She hears the promise her father has made, and accepts the Holländer. In the third and last act, Senta is about to depart with her spectre bridegroom, when he learns her former attachment to Erik. The Holländer discloses his history, and refuses to sacrifice the life of Senta. His vessel sets sail. Senta, true to the promise of her father and her destiny, plunges into the sea, constant to the Holländer to the death, the conditions of the absolution are thereby fulfilled, and the Holländer's years of wandering at an end. At the concluding tableau, Senta and the Fliegender Holländer are seen hand in hand in the realms of happiness. The music is more intelligible at a first hearing than that of either of Wagner's other operas, there being a flow of melody throughout the whole work of such a nature as to justify its being called "popular," if such a term may be applied to any composition of the new German school. Of this, however, in a future letter, the present having already exceeded the usual limits of your "foreign correspondence."

THE OPERA COMIQUE.

Its Rise and Progress.

DALAYRAC.

(Continued from page 721.)

In 1785 he set to music a comedy by Desfontaines, L'Amant Statue, for the continuation of the début of Mlle. Rénault, a singer who had recently shone at the Opéra Comique.

L'Amant Statue appeared for the first time on the 1st of August. Three months after, on the 21st of November, he produced La Dot, which supplied Mad. Dugazon with one of her best parts, that of Colette. These two scores possessed the same characteristics as their elder sisters, grace and facility of melody. The composer was on the eve of his first great success, Nina; ou, la Folle par Amour, an opera in one act, written by Marsollier. The subject of this piece was the true story of a young Swiss girl, and the authors feared that the attempt to introduce a mad person on the stage might be regarded as too old. They tried their work first at the house of the celebrated Guimard, before an audience of friends, who warmly applauded it. Nina was produced at the Comédie Italienne on the 15th of May, 1786, and received with so much favour that it ran for more than one hundred nights consecutively. No such enthusiasm had been created since Le Déserteur and Richard. Mad. Dugazon interpreted the principal part with so much feeling that a critic of the time declared that "M. Desvivetières (Marsollier, then an amateur writer) had supplied the words, M. Dalayrac the music, but that Mad. Dugazon had made the piece." The accompaniments in Nina were more carefully written than in those of any preceding work of the composers. Moreover, there are several remarkable pieces in this score; the chorus, for example, "Pendant le sommeil," and the romanza,—

"Quand le bien-aimé reviendra."

Though this score may not be equal to the Nina of Paisiello, the colouring is more true, and this is a quality which, I repeat it, ranks first with the French public.

In the following year (1787) Dalayrac with his collaborator Lachabeaussière produced a piece which was performed, in the first place, at Fontainebleau, under the title of Le Nouveau Robinson, but met with no success, on account of the feebleness of the libretto. It was remodelled, and reappeared with better fortune at Paris, under the title of Azemia; ou, les Sauvages. Among the meritorious pieces in this opera is a chorus of sailors,

"Aussitôt que je t'aperçois."

The same year Dalayrac wrote Rénaud d'Ast, the romanza in which—

"Vous qui d'amoureuse aventure," has become the national air.

"Veillons au salut de l'Empire."

On the fourteenth day of May, 1788, Dalayrac brought out Sargines; ou, l'Education de l'Amour, a drama in four acts, the words of which were by Monvel.* The work succeeded; the duet between Iselle and Isidore, the "reading lesson," and Sophie's air, were particularly remarked in it.

The following year (1789) two operas apppeared of very different characters. The first, Les Deux petits Savoyards, played the 4th of January, was distinguished by the usual characteristics of Dalayrac, grace and natural simplicity. The two principal parts were played with great archness by Mad. St. Aubin and Mlle. Rénault. The author of the words was Marsollier. The second opera, Raoul de Créqui, in three acts, by Monvel, played for the first time October 31st, is more dramatic, and treated in a broader style. Several concerted pieces in it deserve mention, and especially a trio which evidences the efforts Dalayrac was making, to rise above the original simplicity of this style of composition. As I before said, he had a remarkable aptitude for following the progress which musical composition was making from day to day in France. He sought to give more body to his harmony without however at any time neglecting the melodic portion, which he knew was the brightest jewel in his crown. The public constantly rewarded his efforts; for Dalayrac's productions were almost all successful throughout his career. The year 1790 was not however, a fortunate one for him.

Fanchette had appeared before the close of 1789, a little piece which did not greatly add to his glory. However, 1790 witnessed the birth of La Soirée orageuse, a charming one-act, but which was followed by, first, Le Chêne patriotique, a pièce de circonstance, played on 10th of July, of which Monvel had concocted the words, and which, like all works of this class, had but a short existence; next Vert Vert, a one-act by Desfontaines, which lived the brief span allotted to the most decided of failures—one single evening. The first and last performance of Vert Vert took place October the 11th. Dalayrac had in his overture wedded the phrases of the canticle "O filii et filiæ," with the song

"Quand je bois du vin clairet,
Tout tourne au cabaret."

It was the occasion of the following quatrain—

"Dans la révolution,
Tout tourne;
Le gout tourne tout de bon;
Le dos à la raison."

In this same year, 1790, Dalayrac lost his father. He set out for Muret to console himself by consoling his mother. When he discovered that he was left sole heir to his father's fortune, his noble heart refused to accept the bequest, and he cancelled the will. As he could live by his profession, Dalayrac resigned the fortune which had come to him to his younger brother, less fortunate than himself. Such actions speak for themselves.

He returned to Paris by Marseilles and Lyons, and received triumphant greetings in all the provincial towns which he stopped at, and whose theatres were supported by his works

In 1791 he had two great successes, Philippe, et Georgette, and Camille ou le Souterrain, which seems to me to be his masterpiece. Every piece in this score might be mentioned, beginning with the overture, which I consider as the first interesting and well-written overture ever played at the Opéra Comique since the creation of this particular style. After the air sung by Marcelin, "Joli minois," comes the charming trio, "Une grosse cloche," the best piece in the opera. I may also mention Alberti's energetic and impassioned air, "Amour, vengeance;" the rondo, which has become a popular air,

"Notre meunier chargé d'argent;"

the finale of the first act, the duet between Camille and Alberti, "Non, non, jamais!" and the air by Camille, "Heureux moment."

At the close of 1791 Dalayrac produced Agnès et Hortense. This year, 1791, however, had not been favourable to him in other respects, for it was signalised by two losses greatly differing in character. The most cruel was that occasioned by the death of his beloved mother, who in childhood and in his youth had soothed his grief, when his father so harshly opposed his devotion to his cherished art. The second was the loss of his savings, 40,000 francs, constituting his entire fortune, which he had placed in th hands of a banker who failed. Fortunately his dramatic toils, and the success which attended them, diverted him from his sorrows, and in some measure consoled him.

It may now be brought to the reader's notice, that, although Dalayrac's former title of Garde du Corps exposed him to the constant danger of arrest, he would never consent to leave the country. If the year 1792 did not increase his fame by the production of the two operas, Elise et Hortense and L'Actrice chez Elle, on the other hand he married a lady who made him happy for life.

Dalayrac wrote with incredible facility, and allowed no year to pass without producing one or more works, and hence the catalogue of his works comprises fifty-four operas. In 1793 he produced Ambroise; ou, voilà ma Journée, a sentimental piece; Romeo et Juliette, a score in which many happy inspirations may be found; Urgande et Merlin, and la Prise de Toulon, a pièce de circonstance. In 1794 he brought out Adèle et Dorsan, an opera in which the duet, "Que sa voix a pour moi de charmes" must be mentioned. In 1795 Arnill, Marianne, and La pauvre Femme appeared, three pieces distinguished by no especial merit; in 1796 La Famille Américaine; in 1797 Gulnare, one of Dalayrac's best, and La Maison isolée. In 1798 Primerose, Alexis; ou, l'Erreur d'un bon Père; Le Château de Montenero and Les Deux Mots appeared.

Le Château de Montenero is one of Dalayrac's finest scores. The following pieces deserve especial mention: the air, "Il faut me dévouer;" the duet, "Que je quitte ces lieux;" and the trio, "Doux moment."

In 1799, our composer produced Adolphe et Clara, which still keeps the stage with its pretty overture; then Laure and La Leçon. In 1800, Catinat, Le Rocher de Leucade and Maison à vendre appeared. Al. Duval was the author of the libretto in one act last mentioned. Of all Dalayrac's works it is that most frequently played in the present day. The origin of this piece is somewhat curious. Duval had gone to spend some time in the country at the house of Mad. Gay. He had introduced there Della Maria, a composer, whom I shall presently speak of, and, as he was walking with him in the village, he saw written upon a board—Maison à vendre. This simple title suggested to him the subject of a comic opera, which he wrote, intending it for Della Maria, but as he was proceeding with the work the individual for whom it was destined died. Dalayrac called upon Duval in order to agree with him as to an obituary notice on Della Maria. This proceding touched Duval's heart, and he spoke to Dalayrac about the subject of the piece, which he eventually promised him. Duval, however, could not bring himself to finish for another man a libretto which he had commenced for a friend whose death he mourned.

The means employed by Dalayrac to force in some sort Duval to finish Maison à vendre, were as follows:—He invited him to his country house, and after having pointed out to him the room he was to inhabit, he literally shut him up there. Mad. Dalayrac brought him his breakfast the next morning, and announced that she had received orders not to let him go out until the libretto was finished. Duval at first exhibited some ill-humour, and attempted to jump out of the window; but, reflecting after a few moments that this

* Boulet de Monvel, born at Lunéville in 1745, died in Paris in 1811. He commenced his career as an actor, at the Comédie Française, in 1770, and was afterwards, to quote the words of Grimm, "reader to his Majesty the King of Sweden, then gloriously interred in the mortuary notices of the newspapers, then married, then a traveller." After wandering from theatre to theatre in the provinces, he reappeared, to the great astonishment of the capital, on the stage of the Variétés Amusantes, where, in spite of his physical deficiencies, he never played without the greatest success.

joke, which might be tolerated as between men of wit, could only end to the profit of both poet and musician, he set to work, and in the evening, when they came to fetch him to dinner, it was with difficulty he could be brought away from his work, so swimmingly was it proceeding. When completed, he considered it so good that he regretted he had not destined it for the Théâtre Français. "However," he says in his preface, "Dalayrac was a man of much intelligence; he felt that the plot was sufficiently strong to dispense with music, and he placed his pieces in those situations, where they could not retard the action."

Such were the relations between poet and musician at the close of the eighteenth century. It is, perhaps, to be regretted, for the sake of musical art, that our contemporary librettists but too often give composers comedies, the plots of which have nothing in them strongly interesting, libretti, in a word, which could not dispense with the assistance of music. Among the pieces worthy of mention in Maison à vendre, I will call to mind the duet—

"Depuis longtemps j'ai le désir."

The following is a list of Dalayrac's last works:—In 1801, La Boucle de Cheveux, La Tour de Wenstadt. In 1803, Picaros et Diégo, in which is the pretty duet, "Elle était donc bien séduisante," and the still more celebrated one, "Ecoute-moi, je t'en supplie." In 1804, Une Heure de Mariage, a charming score, in which must be mentioned another duet, "Mes chers amis n'oublions rien," and the quintet, "Quel trouble." The same year he also produced La jeune Prude. In 1805, Gulistan, a score, in which occurs the well-known air, "Cent esclaves ornaient ce superbe festin." In 1807, Koulouf; ou, les Chinois. In 1808, Lina; ou, le Mystère. In 1809, Le Poëte et le Musicien, his last opera, not produced till 1811, after his death, and preferred by him to all his other works. Authors, especially those who have run a long career, always show a marked predilection for their latest works. This judgment is, however, rarely confirmed by the public.

Dalayrac had been decorated with the Order of the Legion of Honour shortly after the creation of this order, and it was in order to justify this distinction, with which he was much flattered, that he had set himself to work. The poem of this work was by Duputrey. The first performance was to have taken place in the presence of Napoleon I., but the illness of Martin (a renowned singer, of whom I shall shortly speak in detail, as also of his comrade Elleviou) retarded the rehearsals.

Napoleon was at this time making preparations for a journey to Spain. Dalayrac, finding that Martin was indeed seriously ill, and that the departure of Napoleon would undoubtedly take place before his recovery, was so cruelly disappointed, that on his return home he was seized with a nervous fever, which settled upon the brain. He sang constantly during his delirium, breathing out, like the fabled swan, his last sigh in a strain of plaintive music on the 27th of November, 1809. His ashes were deposited in his garden at Fontenay-sous-Bois. Marsollier, his usual collaborator and faithful friend, pronounced a touching oration over his tomb.

Dalayrac had written for the opera a one-act, Le Pavillon du Calife (1804), which was subsequently arranged as an opéra comique, and produced under that form in 1822. I shall conclude this biography with these few lines from M. Adolphe Adams' book, Derniers Souvenirs d'un Musicien, which aptly describes the relation existing between the works of Grétry and those of Dalayrac:—

"Grétry was a great musician, who had learned his art badly, but had guessed at a great deal. He was born a harmonist; his modulations, though badly contrived, are unexpected, and often piquant; his accompaniments are thin and awkward, but are full of intention, and some of the effects aimed at are realised. One feels that he owed all to his genius, and that it is only because he was deficient in science that he was unable to execute all that was present in his mind. Dalayrac is little of a musician; he knows about as much as he requires to know to execute his conception. He never sought to do more than he actually did, and had he possessed all the musical science which a sound course of study can impart, he would only have produced works written with more purity, but his thought would not have taken a wider range nor a higher flight. The instinct of combination and of interesting detail was entirely wanting in him, whereas Grétry possessed it to a very great degree."

I will add to these reflections of the composer of Le Chalet a few words as to the immense difference between the characters of these two men. Grétry, as I said in a preceding passage, cared not to hear any other than his own music; he was painfully affected even by the success of young writers. Dalayrac, on the contrary, was pleased to see the pieces of his fellow-composers succeed. He was not content to congratulate them, but published their praises in the journals of the day. Always holding his purse at the service of those who were more in want than himself, he was seen to work with ardour in order to repair the breaches which his infinite charity made in his means.

A close observer will sometimes discover the man in his works. We find in Mozart phrases of soft melody in which the heart of that great genius was reflected. We discover in Beethoven, especially in his later works, where he laid bare his soul, the expression of a disgust for life, of bitterness at immense efforts slighted, and we detect, besides, the trace of the unhappy love which poisoned the life of this great man. In the melodies of Dalayrac I fancy I recognise that ingenuity, that gentleness, that goodness, which caused him to be cherished by all who knew him, and which inspired the artists of the Opéra Comique with the idea of erecting in the foyer of their theatre a bust of him due to the chisel of Cartellier, and to engrave on its pedestal—à notre bon ami DALAYRAC.

BERLIN.—The Italian Opera Company of the Victoria Theatre commenced their season on Thursday last with the Barbiere di Seviglia. The audience, composed of the most distinguished persons in Berlin (the Court included) appeared glad of an opportunity of giving a warm welcome to their favourite artistes of last winter, and when Mlle. Désirée Artôt made her appearance (the most celebrated Rosina that Berlin has ever seen—and our adopted child of last season) the enthusiasm was immense, and she was greeted with a perfect shower of bouquets. The representation was perfect in every respect, for all engaged sang and played as if they were sure of the utter impossibility of the least mistake. It was a brilliant firework of musical art and fascinating comedy from beginning to end. A still greater triumph awaited Mlle. Artôt on Saturday evening in the part of Adalgisa in Norma. A new singer, Mlle. de Vries, made her début in the part of Norma, but she neither distinguished herself by her singing nor acting. Never would we have believed that the modest and retiring Adalgisa, whom we have always looked upon as a secondary part, could, by true genius, have been made the centre of attraction of the whole opera. The noble simplicity of her costume, without the least ornament, was most striking upon her first entrance upon the stage; each sound of her voice was blended with the deepest feeling; all was soul and expression!—the anguish of heart of the loving Adalgisa, her bursts of joy, all was so true, so impassioned, that every musical phrase received a profound signification. The spirit of poetry seemed to have inspired Adalgisa, a refined and pure glow of love animated her. We cannot speak separately of her singing and acting, all was inspiration, and therefore perfection. Only natures gifted with the highest genius can succeed in imparting so entirely new an aspect and charm to a part one has so often seen with indifference; and the consequence was that Norma was annihilated by her. The young artiste has proved that she is as sublime in tragedy as she is fascinating in comedy. Since Viardot and Jenny Lind, we have never heard a voice so plaintive—("weep so.") Why does not Mlle. Artôt appear without delay in the part of Desdemona in Otello? No instrument is so noble as the human voice, when each sound of it is a manifestation of a soul that soars up with angel's wings above all earthly incumbrance.

[The foregoing is a more or less literal translation of an article from the pen of one "Kossak," who writes in the Berlin Montags-Post, and evidently regards Mlle. Artôt in the light of an avis rarer than the famous "black swan" itself—rare even as the non-existent phœnix. Ab effectibus causas indagavit ratio—as Shirley Brooks would say.—TYPE.]

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

SECOND CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON,

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 19, 1860,

INSTRUMENTAL PIECES BY MOZART.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

QUINTET, in A major, for Clarinet, Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (By desire) .. .. Mozart.

Mr. LAZARUS, M. SAINTON, Herr RIES, Herr SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

SONG, "The Bell-ringer" (By desire) ... ... W. V. Wallace.

Mr. SANTLEY.

SONG, "Thy pardon, dearest treasure" ... ... Dussek.

Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON.

SONATA, for Pianoforte alone (in C minor) ... ... Mozart.

Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

PART II.

SONATA, for Violin and Pianoforte (in E minor) ... ... Mozart.

Mr. CHARLES HALLE and M. SAINTON.

SONG, "Rough wind that moanest loud" .. .. J. W. Davison.

Mr. SANTLEY.

SONG, "Ah, why do we love" (By desire) .. .. Macfarren.

Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON.

TRIO, in E flat, for Pianoforte, Tenor, and Clarinet ... ... Mozart.

Mr. CHARLES HALLE, M. SCHREURS, and Mr. LAZARUS.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT.

Stalls, 8s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s. Tickets to be had of CHAPPELL & Co., 50 New Bond Street; and the principal music publishers.

PROGRAMME of MAD. CLARA NOVELLO'S FAREWELL CONCERT, at St. St. James's Hall, Wednesday, Nov. 21. Commence at 8. Part I. Overture, Anacreon, Cherubini; part song, "The Nightingale," Mendelssohn; aria, "Madamina il Catalogo" (Don Giovanni), Mozart, Mr. WEISS; grand scena, "Ocean, thou mighty Monster" (Oberon), Weber, Mad. CLARA NOVELLO; part song (for male voices), "Now the sun has mounted high" (Robin Hood), Macfarren. Part II. Undine, a Lyrical Legend, words by John Oxenford, composed by Jules Benedict—Undine, Mad. CLARA NOVELLO; Bertalda, Miss PALMER; Hildebrand, Mr. WILBYE COOPER; Kuhleborn, Mr. WEISS. Overture: Chorus and bass solo, "Undine, Undine, sad without thee have we been," Mr. WEISS; recit. and song (with chorus of female voices), "Mark the waves that rippling play," Mad. CLARA NOVELLO: Tersetto, "Daughter of a wondrous race," Mad. CLARA NOVELLO, Messrs. WILBYE COOPER and WEISS; scena and aria, "From worldly cares," Mr. WILBYE COOPER; march, wedding chorus, "Hail to the noble pair;" air, "The baron's old castle," Miss PALMER; duettino, "Happy Day," Miss PALMER and Mr. WILBYE COOPER; quartett, "I love thee," Mad. CLARA NOVELLO, Miss PALMER, Messrs. WILBYE COOPER and WEISS; finale, scena and chorus, "Attend ye kindred spirits," Mr. WEISS; solo and chorus, "Leap on the bank," Mr. WEISS; solo, "Bright green earth, farewell," Mad. CLARA NOVELLO. Part III. Overture (Zanetta), Auber; song, Miss PALMER, "Swifter far than summer's flight," (J. W. Davison), recit. and cavatina—"Giunse alfin il momento," "Deh vieni non tardar" (Nozze di Figaro), Mozart, Mad. CLARA NOVELLO; part song (for female voices), "Sweet repose," Benedict, by 12 ladies of the Vocal Association; "Ave Maria," from the posthumous opera of Lorely, Mendelssohn, Mad. CLARA NOVELLO and Chorus of female voices; song, "The winds that waft my sighs to thee," Wallace, Mr. WILBYE COOPER; "God save the Queen; the solos by Mad. CLARA NOVELLO, Messrs. WILBYE COOPER and WEISS. The band and chorus will be complete and on a large scale, numbering upwards of 250 performers, including the choir of the Vocal Association. Conductor, M. BENEDICT. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony stalls, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; reserved seats, 6s.; balcony, 3s.; area and gallery, 2s.; book of words, 1s. each, to be had of Leader and Cock, 63 New Bond Street, corner of Brook Street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—THIS EVENING (Saturday) will be repeated (17th time), Macfarren's highly successful English Opera of ROBIN HOOD. SIMS REEVES, SANTLEY, GEORGE HONEY, LEMAIRE, and LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Reduced scale of prices:—Pit Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Balcony, 5s.; First Circle, 4s.; Second Circle, 3s.; Upper Box Circle Seats, 2s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Gallery 1s.; Gallery Side Stalls, 1s. 6d.; Gallery Stalls, 3s. Private Boxes: Upper Box, to hold four persons, 10s.; Private Box, third tier, to hold four persons, £1 1s.; second tier, to hold four persons, £1 11s. 6d.; Private Boxes, Pit, first and grand tiers, two, three, and four Guineas. The Box-office of the theatre open daily, from 10 till 5 o'clock, under the direction of Mr. Nugent. Acting Manager, Mr. Mapleson. Stage Manager, Mr. R. Roxby.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—In reply to the numerous applications, the subscribers, gentry, and the public are respectfully informed that Macfarren's new and highly successful opera of ROBIN HOOD will be repeated every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday until further notice. Early application at the Box-office to secure seats is recommended to prevent disappointment.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Immense success of the new drama, "45," which has been received with the most enthusiastic approbation and rapturous applause by crowded and fashionable audiences.—Sixth Appearance of Messrs. BENJAMIN WEBSTER, J. L. TOOLE, PAUL BEDFORD, and Miss HENRIETTA SIMMS, in the new drama, by WATTS PHILLIPS, Esq., author of the "Dead Heart," &c.—THIS EVENING the new and successful drama by WATTS PHILLIPS, Esq., entitled A STORY OF THE "45," with scenery and effects by Mr. William Beverley. Principal characters by Mr. BENJAMIN WEBSTER (and company from the Adelphi Theatre), Messrs. J. L. TOOLE, PAUL BEDFORD, SPENCER, M'LEIN, BELFORD, DIXON, BARSBY, MATTHEWS, CORMACK, GLINDON, &c.; Miss HENRIETTA SIMMS, Miss H. HOWARD, Miss THIRLWALL, Miss CLYDE, Miss PALMER, Miss ROSE ELLERTON, &c. To conclude with the farce of YOU'RE ANOTHER. Messrs. C. MATTHEWS, ROXBURY, TILBURY, Miss HOWARD, and Mrs. DOWTON. Doors open at half-past 6; commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5 o'clock daily, where tickets and places may be obtained. Stage Manager, Mr. Robert Roxby. Notice:—A new Piece in rehearsal, and will be immediately produced, in which Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES MATTHEWS will appear.

To Correspondents.

MR. HENRY SMART.—Next week.

J. C. (Ipswich).—Volontiers.

J. D. (Norwich).—C. E. Stephen.

J. E. (Highgate).—"Bis dat," &c.

PINGIT OVIDIUS (Caserta).—

"Proxima cognati dixere Charistia cari;
Et venit ad socios turba propinqua deos."

SCAZON.—"Apollinarem conveni meum Scazon," &c. (Martialis Epigrammata. "AD SCAZONTA.")

MENECRATES JUPITER.—"Le Philosophe est un animal de gloire. Le Philosophe est le plus fier et le plus superbe des animaux."

WEDGE.—The admirable article on Mr. Benedict's Undine was from the Morning Post.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1860.

"EXCELLENCE in music is incompatible with high ability in political performance, and the whole arrangements of human business." How grand! Dr. Johnson—who was indifferent to music—might have thundered out such a sentence, between two dishes of tea, in the ears of the astonied "Bozzy," who would have hailed it as uncommon profound, and scratched it out on foolscap for posterity. On the other hand, Dr. Johnson, though he flopped about the Hebrides, was not quite a Scotchman,* and therefore unlikely to utter anything so dismally Caledonian and Scotchmistily oracular. Only a Scotchman could be guilty of such a dry and miserable piece of sophistry—only a Lowlander—a gaunt, unwieldy, cadaverous, snuff-taking, (Christopher)-north-bitten, brain-toddy'd Scotchman. Galt might have ventured, it, after his nineteenth tumbler; the author of the (preface to) our English Dictionary, and The Lives of the Poets, never.

And a Scotchman said it; a pure "Sandy" of that ilk, if we may believe our correspondent "Culvertail," who, in another page, throws down the glove, with knightly audacity—like a hardy "crupellarius," armed to the teeth in the invulnerable harness of truth—against all pedants and crumpfooted croakers, to whose elongated ears the voice of harmony is distasteful, and who, with laborious dulness, construct

* Somebody (we don't remember who) complaining to Dr. Johnson that there was no good map of Scotland,—"No, Sir," retorted the ponderous pedagogue, "nor there never will be."—Vide "Boswell."

theories, which, by a tug here and a strain there, inevitably bring about the conclusion, that a mere musician is also of necessity a mere imbecile. "Culvertail" has valiantly protested; but he should have instanced further arguments to the point. Has the tuneless whisky-cask of "Auld Reekie" never heard mention of one Leonardo da Vinci? Has the Reid-ridden phlebotomist—to accommodate more easily the narrow limits of his probable acquirement—lost all memory of Henry VIII., who (cleverer than Themistocles) could play a tune, defy the Pope, and govern a realm, with equal aptitude and courage? Although unaddicted to cunctation, we must refrain just now from multiplying precedents—which we could do, readily, however stale and odible the theme; but surely it will not be maintained, even by one to whose ears the Scotch-fiddle is a symphony, to whose appetite Scotch-collops is a feast, and to whose taste for recreation Scotch-hoppers is a game of play; even by such an one, we iterate, it will surely not be maintained that Da Vinci was deficient in "high ability," or our oft-spliced Harry in "political performance and the arrangements of human business." Such infuscation as could possibly induce an inconcoction so triply inconcludent, we would not willingly lay to the charge even of a besotted adherent of Christopher North, or a bibulous worshipper at the shrine of the Ettrick Shepherd. The great Italian painter was also one of the greatest of Italian composers, and Henry VIII., like his daughter Elizabeth, a musician of eminent skill and attainments.

"Cum traheret Friscus, traheret certamina Verus."

But enough. This Scotchman must be a nyctalop; and the more daylight you throw on an argument, the dimmer will be his sense of vision. Nevertheless, were the whole tribe of Scotch metaphysicians, Scotch reviewers, and Scotch cultellators (the universal instrument of measurement being, of course, the Scotch intelligence) stone-blind, a musician—say a fiddler—would not, for all that, be, quand même, an ignoramus.

PETIPACE OF WINCHELSEA.

THE difficulty of obtaining a good libretto for music is acknowledged by all operatic writers in England. Why is this? Have we no poets, no dramatic writers who can versify, no concoctors of tales who can furnish subjects? Whatever the answer, there is no concealing the fact—we have no good librettists. No first-rate original book for an opera has ever been written by an Englishman. Why should the Italians and French be able to discover stories of the most thrilling interest — Rigolettos, Huguenots, Masaniellos, Sonnambulas, &c.—and we have no plots at all? Is it that we possess less invention or less daring?—cannot fabricate or cannot steal so well? Signor Verdi has taken most of his subjects from French literature. How fortunate he has been, or how discriminating, we need not point out. But Mr. Balfe, Mr. Wallace, and Mr. Macfarren have had the same opportunities as Signor Verdi. Why, then, should the Englishmen be behind Italians in judgment and ingenuity? Why should our composers be invariably foiled in their endeavour to hit upon some fitting legend or story, and foreigners almost always be blest with an interesting subject? Even when our librettists condescend to borrow from foreigners, and attempt anything beyond a literal translation, how poor and valueless the concoction seems compared with the original!! Many recent essays of this kind will occur directly to the reader. Indeed, we incline to the belief that "invention" is not one of the qualities bestowed by Providence on modern English genius. Our constructive powers are certainly inferior to those of our neighbours across Channel, and this, in reality, is our only excuse for constantly despoiling them of their dramas. Even when a happy subject for a libretto is presented, an English writer has not always the tact for working it out dramatically, and rendering it conformable to the requirements of music. No one would deny that Mr. George Soane, author of the book of the Night Dancers, was a clever and experienced writer, and yet how tamely and impotently he has adapted the very beautiful legend of the "Wilis," we need not insist. Anybody who has perused the book with the least care will agree with us. A brief description of the fable upon which the Night Dancers is founded, and the manner in which it is treated, will serve forcibly to illustrate our remarks: —

The "Wilis," according to an old German legend, are young girls betrothed, who die before the nuptial day. An irresistible passion for dancing afflicts them in the grave, to such an extent that at midnight they rise, clad in the semblance of their bridal trappings, jewels on their fingers, and wreaths of flowers on their heads, and perform a succession of mystic dances on the highway, until the approach of morning drives them back into their graves. Their beauty is so fascinating, that any one who comes within the influence of their attraction is forced involuntarily to join in their dance, and continue dancing until death ensues from exhaustion. Mr. Soane has ingeniously availed himself of the superstition, without resorting to supernatural machinery. But in avoiding Scylla he has fallen into Charybdis. To get rid of the "Wilis" in reality, thereby ignoring the legend (and the ballet), he refers their existence to a vision, but shows the vision without in the least accounting for it. A dream has a cause, and the cause of her dreaming was everything in the case of Giselle. Her dream has absolutely no reason, no origin, and consequently the plot loses all verisimilitude. It was natural for Giselle, the night before her wedding, to conjure up the image of her lover in her sleep; but that her imagination should have taken such an out-of-the-way step, and call up before her spectral forms with which she had never been made acquainted, exhibits an obliquity in dramatic construction amounting, to say the least, to extreme carelessness. Had Giselle, in the scene with her father and cousin simply been informed of the legend of the "Wilis," and had the story exerted a certain amount of interest in her mind, expressed in the fewest words, previously to her falling asleep, sufficient insight into coming events would have been conveyed to the minds of the spectators, and all that followed have been brought within the bounds of dramatic credibility. As it is, when Bertha and the Duke come on the scene, with Albert dressed as the Prince, those who are not familiar with the book are sorely puzzled with all that is going forward, and never imagine that it is Giselle's somnolent fancies they are witnessing. It is to be lamented, in the case of the Night Dancers — the libretto of which has really something to commend it — that the author should have overlooked so important a point in the construction of his plot. As it stands now, the book is well nigh incomprehensible, and adds another to the long catalogue of incomplete English poems written for music, of which Robin Hood, and one or two other librettos of worth, constitute the sole exceptions.

RUY BLAS.—Mr. Howard Glover is writing an opera to a book founded on the subject of this celebrated drama, and supplied by a well-known hand. The story is admirably suited to the purposes of the operatic stage; and few would be likely to treat it more congenially than Mr. Glover.

Letter to the Editor.

MERE MUSICIANS.

SIR,—I think it must have been through inadvertence that you inserted, some time ago, a paragraph from the Scotsman, under the above head. It is not surprising that in a country which never produced a real musician,—a composer—or even a great performer, and in which the only instrumental music known is a reel, strathspey, or some other contemptible dance tune, and in which the only sacred music recognised is a dreary psalm tune, drawled out in the puritanical nasal twang of a vulgar precentor, that low notions should prevail as to those whom Scotchmen designate as "mere musicians."

The animus of the paragraph is sufficiently evident, but it is very clumsily worded. Take the last member of the sentence by itself literally, and of course its truth is self-evident: "A mere musician" (meaning by this a mere fiddler or bagpiper, I suppose), "was never known to excel in aught but the gamut." But we may make the same assertion with respect to the other artistic pursuits named: a "mere" painter excels in nothing but his palette and brush, and so forth. When, however, the writer states by implication that excellence in music is incompatible "with high ability in political performance and the whole arrangement of human business," he makes an assertion which is grossly false, and which proves that he is totally ignorant of the matter on which he rashly ventures an opinion. I might begin with King David, King Henry VIII., Queen Elizabeth, and the Emperor Charles V., who were all excellent musicians. These were not "mere musicians" it will be said: but the following were, and for the benefit of the paragraph-monger I will place after each name in what direction besides music each one distinguished himself: — W. Jackson, organist of Exeter Cathedral, author of several literary works, and a good landscape painter; Marcello, a member of the council of Forty, Provveditore of Pola, and treasurer of Brescia; Merbecke, author of the first concordance of the Bible; Steffani, chapel-master to the Elector of Hanover, maintained a high position as a scholar and statesman—the science of music, philosophy and polite letters, politics and public business were equally familiar to his practice and expanded abilities; Mattheson, organist and chapel-master of the Cathedral at Hamburgh, was a composer of operas and church-music, author of treatises on longitude, and "resident" in charge of English affairs in Lower Saxony; Philidor, eminent as a composer of music and as a chess player; Herschel, organist, and subsequently a celebrated astronomer. This list might be extended indefinitely, but I think I have, by these few examples taken at random, shown that musical excellence is not only not incompatible with high ability in other respects, but that it is frequently associated with large attainments in politics, literature, art, and science.

I would have this Scotchman know that music is a science as well as an art, though practised as neither in his country; and I would tell him in the words of a gentleman well qualified to speak on the subject, that—

"The labours of the poet, the sculptor, the painter, the architect, the musician, are but exemplifications of like talent, and demonstrations of similar intellectual power. Yet this is a truth to which many will give only a partial assent. They assign a subordinate rank not only to the labours of a single artist, but to an entire region of art which they have never happened to study, and to which they are therefore unable to apply the test of criticism. It was said by a competent judge, that Purcell is as much the pride of England as Shakspeare, Milton, or Newton. This assertion such persons would doubt, if not disbelieve; they would wonder to see a musician thus associated; but their wonder would cease if they were able to read and understand what he wrote. They would then discern the same self-sustained power, the same creative fancy, the same bright and original thought, the same intellectual vigour in his productions as in those of poet or philosopher."

Hoping to see no more sneers about "mere musicians," I remain, sir, yours truly,

CULVERTAIL.

Mutton Island, Channel Chops, Nov. 5th.

The Operas.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—One line may chronicle the doings of the English Opera during the two weeks past. The success of Robin Hood continues unabated. It will take three lines, however, to chronicle the doings of the Italian Opera in the same space of time, although nothing absolutely new has been adventured. The week before last Il Trovatore, Don Giovanni, and the Huguenots were given on alternate nights with Robin Hood; but the success of Verdi, Mozart, and Meyerbeer has in no way lessened the attraction of Mr. Macfarren. English dramatic music is at present decidedly in the ascendant. The prospects of "National Opera" never looked so flourishing. The success of Robin Hood is a warrant for that. There is just now no hint about what is to succeed Mr. Macfarren's opera. Mr. Wallace's Amber Witch, we hear, is not yet ready, and should a new work be required at this side of Christmas, Mr. Frank Mori's Bride of Florence has, we believe, the best chance. The first operatic essay of the composer of Fridolin, and some of the most popular songs of the day, will be looked forward to with interest.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—The revival of Mr. Loder's Night Dancers was a good idea, and deserved even more pains than the management has thought proper to bestow upon it. Its first performance on Saturday night drew together an audience, among whom were remarked a more than ordinary number of professors and amateurs. Mr. Loder, however, stands high in the estimation of the musical world, and the Night Dancers has always been considered his best work for the theatre. That it can stand the test of time was satisfactorily established on the present occasion, when its reception was quite as warm as on that of its first representation at the Princess's Theatre (Oct. 28, 1846), under the direction of Mr. Maddox, whose spirit and discrimination in producing some of the best English operas—instance, besides the one under notice, Mr. Balfe's Castle of Aymon, and Mr. Macfarren's Charles II.—have, perhaps, hardly been requited by a fair meed of acknowledgment. Not only were the more directly popular pieces—such as the light and brilliant overture (cymbals and side-drum, notwithstanding); the graceful serenade of Albert, "Wake, my love, all life is stirring;" the duet for Giselle and Albert, "He loves me—loves me not" (subject from the overture), so charmingly felt and exquisitely dialogued, which makes part of the first finale and illustrates the most poetical incident of Goethe's Faust, that of Margaret testing her lover's sincerity by the leaves of the divining flower; the duet for Albert and Bertha at the tomb of Giselle, "Peace to the dead," no less expressive and melodious in another style; the trio, "The Wilis of the night," one of the most fairylike passages in that scene of the second act which describes the moonlight revels of the night-dancers, &c.,—not only were these welcomed with enthusiasm, but unfeigned approval was elicited for the more serious portions of the opera, to which Mr. Loder owes his reputation as a dramatic composer, and which, in a great measure, combined with similar exhibitions of fancy and ingenious workmanship, have helped to win for him a title as difficult to support as it is honourable to possess—viz. that of "the English Auber." The legend of Mary, "Two suitors came," and the first song of Godfrey, "Laugh, my girls" (despite the triangle), were admired as before for their piquancy; but the serenade on the lake (sung behind the scenes), "Pull, brothers, pull," where the tenor solo is so pleasingly contrasted with the chorus of the boatmen—a piece which Auber might have signed—created a still more genuine musical sensation. Giselle's lively solo, "Wild is the spirit that fills me now" (again despite the triangle), a well-devised episode in the foregoing, and the symphony accompanying her half-whispered accents, as echoing in broken rhythm the last words of the serenade, the future Wili gradually sinks to sleep, the curtain falling as the music dies away revived some truly agreeable impressions. This is the end of what Mr

Soane, author of the book, has termed "Induction," and which he might more significantly, perhaps, if less pedantically, have styled Introduction. The chorus of vintagers, "Welcome, neighbours," has lost none of its freshly Auberish sparkle; the scene of Giselle's dream, one of the most extended and best imagined of the solo pieces, as little of its romantic character and felicitous orchestral colouring. The prettiness of Albert's song, "I cannot flatter if I would," an unaffected, and therefore not maudlin drawing-room ballad (rara avis), has in no wise faded. Better still, the admirable concerted piece, in which the disturbed elements of Giselle's vision—that spectral "Duke of Silesia," his spectral daughter Bertha, and his imaginary head-ranger Wilfrid are first presented—including, among other excellent things, Bertha's solo, "Our way has been both rough and long," and the capitally written sestet, "Will't please you stay?" preserves it musical and dramatic interest unimpaired. The huntsmen's chorus, too, "Here's a health to the forester good," if not by any means so stirring as that of Weber in Der Freischutz, must still be extolled for its vigour. Lastly, the finale to Act I.—a concerted piece of large proportions and ambitious texture, which opens with a solo for Fridolin, the beadle, conceived in the very spirit of Auber, and accomplished with all the finished neatness of that consummate French musician (who even might not have disdained the reminiscence from Bertha's little song in the Barbiere); which contains the duet already praised ("He loves me—loves me not"); a bacchanalian chorus, "Hail to our vintage Queen," fully bearing out its title; a "Silesian peasant's dance," and a "Silesian waltz," in the way of ballet music, which, if here and there rather emulating the manner of Auber than strictly fashioned on the Silesian type (touching the precise nature of which authorities may differ, without meeting a tribunal competent to decide), are as lively and rhythmically accentuated as the most energetic dancer could wish; a grave and impressive chorus of monks, "Holy waters o'er thee sprinkling;" a variety of ingenious incidental music, choral, concerted, solo, or instrumental, as the situation may require, and a short "coda" (tail-piece?), full of life, in which these cular personages join in the monkish strain, doubling, as it were, the force of the ecclesiastical four-part harmony, the whole constituting a scene of varied and strong excitement, though of unequal power, a scene in which, while the skilful arrangement of materials is at times more noticeable than the intrinsic worth of the materials themselves, the scenic "movement" is sustained so well, that the attention rarely flags—this finale proved quite as attractive as formerly, and was listened to from end to end with interest, the curtain descending a second time amid unanimous and well-merited applause. The last act, as when the opera first came out, was unanimously voted the most perfect. Nor can there, we think, be a question about its superiority. The opening scene at the tomb of Giselle contains the duet for Albert and Bertha, already lauded; a quintet, with chorus, "Ah, sure sweet maid," which, as a clever example of vocal part-writing, may rank with the sestet in the preceding act; a characteristic air, with chorus, "He who lingers here when the phantoms rise," the instrumentation of which recalls the Witch's song in Auber's Gustave; and a song for Albert, "Wake from thy grave, Giselle," another example of sentiment not overstrained and consequently sympathetic. All these were heard with renewed pleasure by those who remembered them, and with not less satisfaction by those who did not; although—well as it was given—the song of Albert hardly revived the strong impression it used invariably to create when sung by Mr. Allen at the Princess's Theatre. The "tableau" which immediately follows—that where Giselle becomes a Wili, and joins in the gambols of the night-dancers, where Fridolin, enticed by the charms of these seductive spirits, is lured to his destruction; and where, just as Albert is equally on the point of being sacrificed, the day dawns, the Wilis vanish. Giselle awakes from her dream, and the scene slowly changing to that of her own chamber, where, scarcely quit of the simulacra that took so powerful a hold of her dormant senses, she kneels before the image of the Virgin, and utters her morning prayer (an "Ave Maria," as fresh as anything that precedes it)—is one of those lucky inspirations, marshalled into shape by unerring art, to which criticism has nothing to say, or which, at most, it must dismiss with an unqualified "Well done!" The chorusses and dances of the Wilis, the air of Giselle, "What new delightful being," after her metamorphosis, "Pretty Spirits" (theme from the overture), Fridolin's exhortation to his supernatural tormentors, and Giselle's apostrophe to Albert at the end, are all so good, so thoroughly to the purpose, and knit together into so effective a whole, that to select passages for preference would be a task alike difficult and thankless. From the moment the night dancers are first beheld, to the moment when they vanish at the approach of the morning, the music is in an artistic sense irreproachable as it is genial, picturesque, and charming. This was the general verdict long ago, and it received a triumphant confirmation on Saturday night. It were to be desired that the opera finished with the "Ave Maria," or, at any rate, with something more worthy of the rest than the tame "bravura" (with chorus), in which the now happy Giselle gives vent to her emotions.

That Mr. Loder is a disciple of Auber, it would be absurd to deny; but "tel maître tel écolier" aptly applies in this instance. Such disciples are unfortunately rare. In every particular Mr. Loder worthily emulates the admirable model of his predilection. In his handling of the orchestra, indeed, he can scarcely be pronounced Auber's inferior. Few living composers excel our countryman in this especial department. He knows the character and resources of every instrument, and his combinations are as rich and varied as they are ingenious; with him there is no experiment, being as certain of the effect he intends as though the orchestra was but a single instrument in his hands, and on which he had acquired the art of performing with invariable facility. His skill is declared unmistakeably in the Night Dancers, and especially in the scene of the Wilis, the music of which would do credit to any composer. Not to pursue this subject, however, it is pleasant to find the eulogies lavished, no more recently than 1846, thoroughly borne out by the result of fourteen years later, when, the popular taste for what is healthy and good in art having made such marked progress, a musician of earnest purpose as well as natural aptitude must address an audience at once more competent to judge and difficult to please. The Night Dancers was accepted now as it was accepted a long time since, with the favour rarely bestowed except on works of unquestionable merit. This in the case of Mr. Loder becomes a still greater source of satisfaction, as there is reason to believe that fortune has not dealt kindly by him; that for a very considerable period severe sickness has weighed him down, and wholly debarred him from the exercise of his calling; and that he never at any moment stood more absolutely in need of public indulgence and of the kind sympathy of his professional brethren. This may be stated without indiscretion as without reserve, inasmuch as it has already gone forth to the world, and been the theme of comment in musical circles. The composer of Nourjahad, the work which probably first set English musicians thinking about attempting something more and better than, with rare exceptions, they had hitherto done for the theatre; the composer of the "Sacred songs, dedicated to Sterndale Bennett;" of those genuine British effusions, "The Brave Old Oak" and "The Old House at Home;" and last, not least, of the opera of the Night Dancers, the merits of which have been so warmly and unanimously admitted, has claims to consideration not to be denied by those who take delight in music, and acknowledge the beneficial influence of its general diffusion among the various classes of society.

The book of the Night Dancers has more than once been described, and it is not a very grateful task to describe it. Moreover, those who are uninitiated, if frequenters of the opera, are surely acquainted with the story of Giselle, which has been exhibited in so many forms since Carlotta Grisi first enchanted the admirers of the ballet in that most graceful and poetical (Esmeralda hardly excepted) of her assumptions, and the main incidents of which, so far as they are connected with the original legend, are also those of the Night Dancers. Enough that the "Wilis" are supposed to be young affianced girls, who die on the eve of their appointed wedding. In the tomb they are seized with an irresistible passion for dancing, and at midnight, dressed as for the bridal, with jewels on their fingers and wreaths of flowers round their heads, perform a series of mystic saltatory evolutions until the approach of morning drives them back again to their graves. Although their features are rigid—they are endowed with a supernatural beauty, so fascinating that any one who comes under the influence of its attraction involuntarily joins them in the dance, and continues dancing until killed by sheer exhaustion. The author of the book of the Night Dancers, discarding the unearthly machinery, treats the incident of the Wilis as a dream. Giselle, about to be married to Albert, her fancy excited by these wild and romantic stories, imagines in her sleep a succession of events that in the sequel bring herself to the condition of a Will, and her lover to that of one of her victims. She awakes, however, and "there's an end." The incidents of the dream are obscurely shadowed forth, and the "pourquoi" of one or two of the situations hard to explain; but they have inspired music which will in all probability preserve them from oblivion, and on that account may lay claim to a certain amount of respect. The "comic" business, however might advantageously be curtailed even now—especially the humours of the beadle Fridolin, with his "Pontificalibus," his "coram populo," his "proofs logistic and syllogistic"—which, logically (logistically?) or syllogistically, can be shown to be by no means as racy as that of Mr. Bumble.

> "And white with the whiteness of what is dead"—

A few words about the performance and we have done. The instrumental and choral music of Mr. Loder is well calculated to exhibit the universally recognised talent of the Covent Garden performers; nevertheless, the execution left something to desire, which no one knows better than Mr. Alfred Mellon, while no one is better able to ensure the requisite efficiency. Indeed, at intervals the effect was rather that of a "dress rehearsal" than of a public representation. Mad. Palmieri, to whom was allotted the trying part of Giselle, was evidently indisposed, and this prevented her from doing either herself or the composer justice. Occasionally—as in the duet with Albert, "He loves me—loves me not," and in one or two other places—she sang extremely well, charmingly in short. She must endeavour, nevertheless, to make the living Giselle a little more sprightly than the phantom "Wili," or she may as well be a ghost from the first scene to the last. The little part of Mary was prettily looked, prettily acted, and very prettily sung by the clever and always progressing Miss Thirlwall, who should become the "very pearl" of vocal soubrettes. Miss Leffler, too, was all that could be wished as Bertha; while the three principal Wilis found careful representatives in Misses Albertazzi, Leng, and Mary Huddart, the first-named demanding a word of praise apart. The trio in the last act was one of the best executed of the concerted pieces, and created a lively impression on the audience; but the reception was by no means as satisfactory as the first attempt. The men's characters were thus distributed:—Albert, Mr. Haigh; Godfrey, Mr. T. Distin; Duke, Mr. G. Kelly; Fridolin, Mr. Corri; Wilfrid, Mr. Lyall. Mr. Corri is clever, painstaking, and ambitious of applause (of which, by the way, he obtained a volley, in the scene where the Wilis compel the beadle to dance); but, his humour not being spontaneous, he should be careful not to overact his part. With such an ungrateful voice as he possesses he gets wonderfully well through the music, which, nevertheless, he is not obliged to sing eternally "staccato." Mr. Haigh has advanced another step. About the agreeable quality of this gentleman's voice it is unnecessary to repeat what was said a short time since; but we have much pleasure in recording that he is acquiring a command over it which he never boasted, or at least never evinced till recently. The music of Albert lies somewhat high (it was written for Mr. Allen); and this, if we remember rightly, necessitated the transposition of one of the songs. It is melodious, however, in almost every instance; and Mr. Haigh gave frequent evidence of an expression at once graceful and subdued, of a feeling for well-balanced phrasing, which is indispensable to perfect vocalisation, and of other good qualities that warrant us in hoping that, adopting "Excelsior" for his motto, he may continue to progress. That he stands well in the graces of the public was shown by the warm manifestations of approval he continually elicited.

In repeating that the opera was favourably received from first to last, we may add that among the incidents subsequent to the fall of the curtain was the appearance before the footlights of Mr. Loder, who, in obedience to a loud and unanimous summons, was led forward by Mr. Harrison, the manager. The Night Dancers has been given every evening during the week. The houses have been generally good; but the best was on Thursday, when the performance was for the benefit of Mr. Loder.

The Theatres.

DRURY LANE.—On Monday, a new drama by Mr. Watts Phillips, entitled A Story of the '45, was brought out under circumstances more than ordinarily advantageous, Mr. Benjamin Webster, the lessee of the Adelphi, intrusting the fortunes of his own house to the still potent attraction of the Colleen Bawn, in which he does not play, had come over to "Old Drury" to sustain the principal character, and had brought Mr. J. L. Toole, Mr. Paul Bedford, and Miss Henrietta Sims in his train, so that there was the remarkable phenomenon of a Drury-lane piece acted almost by an Adelphi company. The heartiness with which the new comers were welcomed easily expanded into a disposition to hear the drama with marked favour, and the author was still further assisted by some of those scenic effects which are especially adapted to a large stage. A view of the Thames by moonlight, with a remarkably clever imitation of swiftly flying clouds, caused a well-merited cry for "Beverley," to which the inimitable scene-painter replied by a prompt appearance in front of his work. Hogarth's two pictures, the "March to Finchley," and "England," reproduced in living tableaux, had, moreover, a lively and exhilarating effect. The hero of the piece is Sir Andrew Silverton (Mr. Webster), a gentleman who during the period of his youth has been engaged in some of the earlier Jacobite plots, but who in the '45 has sufficiently reformed his politics to become a secret agent in the employ of the Government. Against Sir William Ashford (Mr. Spencer), a Jacobite gentleman, he harbours a deep resentment on account of certain wrongs committed long before the commencement of the drama, but he smothers his hatred, under a show of sincere friendship, wearing the mask of a laughing philosopher, while he is searching for proofs that may bring Sir William to the scaffold, his accomplice in the dishonourable work being Enoch Flicker (Mr. Toole), Sir William's steward, an agent like himself in the service of Walpole. One night, however, Isabel Ashford (Miss H. Sims), observing the entrance of an intruder into her father's garden, ascends the pedestal once occupied by a statue, and sees a man in a mask enter the house. Cyril Silverton (Mr. M'Lein), to whom she is secretly married, she despatches to stop the stranger's progress, and the young gentleman is greatly shocked to discover his own father in the capacity of a spy. On the following day an explanation takes place between Sir Andrew Silverton and his son, the former justifying at great length his hatred against Ashford, the latter confessing the secret of his marriage, and imploring his father to abandon his vindictive intentions. Touched by the situation of his son, Sir Andrew resolves not only to refrain from the persecution of Ashford, but also to rescue him from the clutches of Flicker, who has pilfered from his bureau a most compromising document. To effect this deliverance another personage is required, one Evan M'Ian (Mr. Belford), a Highlander, who resides in London, partly because he is enamoured of Jessie M'Leod (Miss Clyde), daughter of a wealthy cutler, partly because he desires to be revenged on an unknown individual who brought his father to the Grassmarket at Edinburgh. Evan in a jealous fit has contrived apparently to kill a gallant captain, who is his rival with Jessie, and though the seeming death was the result of a fair combat, there is no one to prove that it was anything but an assassination, except Sir Andrew, who witnessed the encounter, and has concealed Evan in his own house. Flicker, who also hopes to marry Jessie, and consequently to hang Evan, trusts that his friend Sir Andrew will not raise any inconvenient obstacle, and as it is he, moreover, who caused the death of Evan's father, the wild Highlander has a double reason for exterminating him, and listens with pleasure to Sir Andrew's proposal to place him where he can without difficulty send a bullet through his enemy's head. By a little mistake Sir Andrew is shot himself instead of Flicker, but does not die till he has burnt the document that imperils Sir William Ashford, and has heard a second report from Evan's musket, which assures him that Flicker is no more. As for the murdered captain, he is revivified in time to marry Jessie.

Considered as a drama, without the accessories incident to its production at Drury Lane, this is by no means one of Mr. Phillips's best works. There are two scenes which become powerful through the fine acting of Mr. Webster, and Mr. Toole was, perhaps, never seen to such advantage as when he depicts the frantic rage of Flicker on perceiving the failure of his plans. But there is no character on which the interest of an audience can be concentrated, the striking situations are few and far between, and the action is constantly retarded by dialogue, which, evidently written with care, does not tell much with the general public. We are not sure that the pleasantest part of the work is not that in which the principal figure is a melodious recruiting sergeant, played by Mr. Paul Bedford, and the stage is enlivened by the squabbles between a Jacobite and a Hanoverian ballad-singer, respectively sustained by Miss Thirlwall and Miss Howard. In connection with these personages, who are wholly independent of the plot, occur the Hogarthian pictures, and the old-fashioned tunes judiciously selected by Mr. Tully; and it is more as the illustration of a period than as an interesting drama that the piece appeals to the public. The applause at the conclusion was unanimous.

LYCEUM.—An original drama was produced at this theatre on Monday evening with remarkable success. It is entitled, Adrienne; or, The Secret of a Life. The plot may be thus cursorily described. A rich French heiress (Adrienne) is staying at Rome, and is the object of the attentions of a young artist (Savignié), who is painting her portrait, and of a nondescript villain (De Grassac), who peremptorily demands her hand on the strength of a secret which he threatens to disclose, should she refuse him. A duel takes place between Savignié and De Grassac, in consequence of the free use made of the heroine's name by the latter person, his motive for speaking slightingly of the lady he expects to marry being, however, unexplained. At the conclusion of the duel, when the villain is seriously wounded, Adrienne appears on the scene, invited thither by her heartless admirer to decide her matrimonial fate. Observing her indecision, he is about to divulge the terrible secret to the ears of the heroic Savignié, whom Adrienne loves, when he is arrested in the fatal words by the unhappy heroine declaring herself his affianced wife. Thus the first act ends with the preservation of Adrienne's secret at the sacrifice of her heart.

In the next act the wounded man is being unwillingly but dutifully nursed by his betrothed in a "lonely chateau in France." Six months have elapsed since the duel, but De Grassac becomes worse every day. Aggravated by his prolonged sufferings, he suspects foul play, and despatches a bottle of his lotion for the examination of an eminent physician at a distance. A letter from this doctor, informing the patient that his lotion is an irritant poison, arrives just in time for the invalid to announce the startling fact to his servants, and to accuse Adrienne of his murder, before his death takes place, at the end of the second act.

In the third act the scene is in the mountains. The heroic artist Savignié, who, embittered at the loss of Adrienne, had enlisted as a soldier, now appears as a rapidly-advanced colonel at the head of his troops. Among his most painful duties is the order he receives to arrest the beautiful Adrienne, who had fled to the hills from the charge of poisoning De Grassac. The heroic officer, however, declines to perform his duty, and bids the lady fly. This she refuses to do, and is about to throw herself from a precipice, rather than involve the devoted colonel in a breach of duty, when there appears on the heights a faithful mulatto servant, belonging to Adrienne. He declares himself the murderer of De Grassac, and immediately afterwards springs into the chasm beneath. Adrienne is now free from the suspicion of murder, and is likewise relieved of the secret which had embittered her life, it having been just opportunely cleared up by a captive brigand. Always believing herself to be the natural daughter of her mother through a false marriage, she now learns that her mother had been accidentally married in a legitimate manner, and her honour was thereby saved. Every objection to the marriage of Adrienne and Savignié being now removed, the curtain descends, as the colonel observes in behalf of the poor mulatto, who had sacrificed himself for his mistress, that "according to the amount of the temptation, so is the measure of the punishment which Heaven awards the guilty." Several minor characters are introduced in the piece with excellent effect. The great merit of the drama is that the interest never fails, but increases with every scene. It is excellently written, being throughout pointed, amusing, and epigrammatic. The leading parts were admirably played by Mad. Celeste, Mrs. Keeley, Mr. Neville, and Mr. George Vining. At the end of every act the performers were recalled, and at the conclusion of the piece, the author, Mr. Leslie, was received with great enthusiasm, the manager having previously announced Adrienne as his first production.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE third season was inaugurated on Monday night most propitiously. The programme was agreeable and interesting from end to end, the performers, all of the first class, playing and singing their very best, and the audience that crowded St. James's Hall as able to appreciate as eager to applaud. Three great composers, who, though they have fulfilled very different missions in art, have each in a remarkable degree contributed to its progress, and, moreover, possess a something (almost, it may be, undefinable) in common — Spohr, Dussek, and Weber — were drawn upon for the selection, vocal and instrumental; and certainly, belonging as they all do, more or less, to the "romantic" (in the deep-felt, earnest signification of the term) and, at intervals, quasi-"melancholy" school, their united efforts resulted in as cheerful and brilliant a musical entertainment as, perhaps, was ever provided. Here and there a bit of "sentiment," it is true, peeped out; but it came like a stray sunbeam on a bracing winter-day, and the contrast only helped to endow the predominating vigour of the rest with the additional life and charm. We subjoin the programme: —

PART I.

Quartet, in G minor (strings)	Spohr.
Song, "Rose softly blooming" (Azore e Zemira) .	Spohr.
Canzonet, "Name the glad day"	Dussek.
Sonata, in C major, Op. 24, Pianoforte solus .	Weber.

PART II.

Sonata, in B flat, Op. 69 (pianoforte and violin) .	Dussek.
Song, "Restore those visions bright." . . .	Spohr.
Song, "Glöcklein im Thale" (Euryanthe) . .	Weber.
Quartet, in B flat (pianoforte and strings) . .	Weber.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

Spohr's quartet is one of the most immaculate productions of his early period, when, not yet absolutely "Spohr," but an ardent disciple of Mozart, he wrote with scarcely less consummate mastery and all but the inspired simplicity of that truly greatest of "absolute musicians"—to employ one of the happiest expressions of Herr Wagner, in a sense diametrically opposed to that which, in all probability (arguing from the context), Herr Wagner intended. The quartet in G minor is a work of genius beyond contradiction; and its spontaneous character, accompanied throughout by refined and exquisite beauty of ideas, is apt to cause regret that its composer should ever have branched out into the more individual but less amiable and engaging train of thought that led to those elaborate works with which his name has been almost exclusively associated. Spohr was not a commanding "self-luminous" intellect like Beethoven and Mendelssohn. He could doubtless think differently from other men, his predecessors and contemporaries; but it is a question whether, if, as he was well able to do, he had continued developing the idea of Mozart—as certain painters develope the idea of greater inventors, not greater artists, than themselves, instead of, like Beethoven, addressing the world in a language exclusively his own, he would not have produced more lasting works and entitled himself to more universal sympathy. Why, in order to win consideration, every musician, any more than every painter, should be expected to be "original," it would be difficult to explain. The air from Azor e Zemira, an opera produced not very many years after the quartet, again breathes the spirit of Mozart. It is evidently (and closely) modelled on "Voi che sapete;" and yet (higher praise could not be accorded) it may be placed side by side with that incomparable piece, and lose but little in comparison. The chamber-song in Part II. is one of the commonplaces of which Spohr was more frequently guilty than other decidedly great masters. "Homerus dormitat" sometimes; Spohr very often; Weber never. But, though Weber never sleeps, his wakefulness is not seldom the result of an over-feverish temperament. Witness, for instance, many passages—lengthened drawn-out passages—in the at times magnificent sonata, Op. 24, which, if all were as good as the last movement, would be a masterpiece. Nevertheless, the most unsatisfactory parts of this unequal composition possess a certain degree of interest. The leading thoughts are invariably fresh and vigorous, although the working out is occasionally diffuse and rambling. There is strength if not direction, as with a giant stumbling in the dark; and every false step leaves the impression of misapplied power, rather than of laborious incapacity. The vocal specimen of Weber conveys a sufficiently vivid notion of that cherished work upon which Robert Schumann affirmed he had "wasted his heart's blood," and of which Beethoven said, when Weber, stung by the cold reception it had met with, entreated the great "tone-poet" to retouch it—"The thing is good, leave it alone"—the opera of Euryanthe. Strange to say (why strange?), the honours of this excellent concert fell to the least known master of the three — at any rate least known to the majority of modern amateurs. Dussek, both in the vocal and instrumental contest, carried off the palm. The thoroughly enchanting sonata for pianoforte and violin—enchanting from its grace, its spontaneity, and its genuine unaffected individuality — created nothing short of a "furore;" and the audience, setting at defiance a rule, the habitual infringement of which cannot prove otherwise than detrimental to such performances as these, insisted upon a repetition of the final rondo. The extraordinary success achieved by this sonata (in B flat), which has been several times played, should encourage the directors of the Monday Popular Concerts—who, by the way, at the eleventh hour, has publicly announced his name (Mr. S. Arthur Chappell)—to introduce its equally charming companion in G major, belonging to the same collection (Op. 69). The vocal "hit" of Dussek was achieved by a canzonet of exquisite loveliness—"Name the glad day, dear"—one of a set of six, which, though unknown to the present generation, are as worthy of being known as the most beautiful of Haydn. The revival of the compositions of so genial a master has been one of the distinguishing features of the concerts at St. James's Hall, where Dussek has created almost as much enthusiasm as Beethoven himself. Monday night brought such a triumph for the Bohemian musician, as would have delighted the ill-fated Prince Ferdinand of Prussia himself, who loved Dussek, his pianoforte playing, and his music almost as much as he hated the French nation, its government and its politics.

The vocal performers were Miss Augusta Thomson, who gave Spohr's songs, especially the one from Azor and Zemira, very sweetly, and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, whose singing in the canzonet of Dussek, was worthy of the music, which is as much as to say absolute perfection. She was unanimously recalled; but, faithful to the good example she has lately followed at Her Majesty's Theatre, and which Mr. Sims Reeves,—who has been compelled to sing three pieces out of four twice over (occasionally thrice) for the last ten years, has courageously and discreetly (as much to the advantage of the audience as of himself) initiated—declined to accept the "encore." The executants in the quartet were Herr Becker, one of the great favourites of last season, who now showed himself as much at home with Spohr, Dussek, and Weber, as he had already done with Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn; Herr Ries, who has ably sustained the second violin since the institution of the Monday Popular Concerts; M. Schreurs, the most expert player on the viola whom the Continent has sent us; and Signor Piatti, the violoncellist without a rival, who has succeeded to the throne of Lindley, and occupies it with even greater distinction than his renowned predecessor. The pianist was M. Charles Hallé, one of the most expert, erudite, and accomplished of classical performers. This gentleman never played more admirably than in the scherzo and finale of Weber's sonata, at the end of which, as at the conclusion of Dussek's sonata (with Herr Becker), he was unanimously recalled to the platform. Mr. Benedict, the prince of accompanists, occupied his accustomed post, alike to the satisfaction of the singers and the audience.

At the next performance (Nov. 19) the instrumental pieces, including a quartet and pianoforte sonata never yet given at these concerts, will be selected from the works of Mozart.

Provincial.

WORCESTER.—Mr. and Mrs. Howard Paul gave one of their entertainments at the Music Hall, on Wednesday evening. As mimics, Mr. and Mrs. Paul are certainly clever, and their impersonations of the varied characters named in the programme secured the applause of a more than usually crowded house. The entertainment embodied, besides illustrations of character, English, Scotch, and Irish ballads, operatic selections, whims and oddities, and some well-selected music, so that there was a succession of novelties of a choice and amusing character. Mrs. Paul's portraiture of our great tenor, Sims Reeves, was to the letter, and her "make" up excellent. For this, she was rewarded with a hearty encore. Several of the songs were redemanded, and altogether the entertainment was very successful.—Benowe's Journal.

DUBLIN.—Mad. Clara Novello has taken her last farewell of the Dublin public. On Wednesday, the 7th inst., she sang at the Philharmonic Society, and on Thursday at the Ancient Concerts. Mad. Novello, in her farewell tour, continues to adhere to the same programme nearly, wisely, perhaps, since it comprises all her best pieces in various styles. The selections from the Messiah and Creation display her talents in the sacred school; the aria "Com, è bello," and air 'Robert, toi que j'aime!" exhibit her powers in the Italian and French school; while the English ballad, "The beating of my own heart," and the Scotch Jacobite song, "Bonnie Prince Charlie," are specimens of her simple and expressive manner. How finely she sings all we are invariably reminded whenever we read of the lady's doings. Of Mad. Novello's last two appearances, and of the concerts at which she bade her final adieus, the Evening Mail thus speaks:—

"The concerts of the above societies, which took place on Wednesday and Thursday evenings last, were of more than ordinary interest, as they formed a portion of Mad. Clara Novello's farewell performances—by far the most important portion, as the three concerts subsequently given in the Rotunda, being without an orchestra, did not approach them in magnitude. It was lucky for the musical public in Dublin that Mad. Novello came just at the opening of the seasons of the two societies we have mentioned, as it gave an opportunity of hearing the gifted lady both in secular and sacred song, with an assurance that the best and most effective selections would be made for the occasion. The programme of the Philharmonic contained some pieces which, independent of all extraneous aid, should have been sufficient to attract and delight an audience; while that of the Antient's comprised a selection of—can we say the best, where all are so exquisite—of the most attractive and best known solos and chorusses from the Messiah and Creation. Here was a selection of which Mad. Novello might herself feel proud. The two concerts were musical entertainments so excellent and so well contrasted that they were not only calculated to gratify but convey instruction. From the instrumental music given at the Philharmonic, we may mention Haydn's symphony, No. 7, a work of great beauty, full of melody, abounding with delicate and elegant figures of instrumentation, and rising to climax by the most legitimate artistic expedients. In fact the work of a man who was born a musician, and who could no more help giving forth music, beautiful and harmonious, than the flowers could refrain from putting forth their blossoms to the returning spring. This symphony was so well and intelligibly played as to make us hope more of Hadyn's works will be revived during this season, as no other compositions are so well fitted to generate a love for instrumental music. Beethoven's fine and vigorous overture, Corialan, was likewise boldly rendered, and Weber's Abon Hassan played the company out, as organists say. We must mention, in terms of no common praise, some charming part-singing by the members of the "English Glee and Madrigal Union." Horsley's "When the wind blows in the sweet rose tree," was sung with special charm, and unanimously redemanded. Spofforth's "Marked you her eye"—though the duet commencing is tedious—was likewise sung with much elegance; and Bishop's lovely quintett, "Blow gentle gales," went with rare felicity. We could not help thinking how far superior these vocal part-pieces by our English worthies are to the German quartetts which have been so much the vogue amongst our Dublin amateurs of late years. But then the English glees require good voices, and the cultivation of the vocal art to express them, while the German part-songs, mostly written for students, demand little voice and less art to vociferate them, coarse loudness being one of their essentials. Genuine singers the English glee possessed, in Messrs. Baxter, Lawler, Cummings and Land. Mad. Novello's singing on Wednesday evening was distinguished by all that purity of tone and grace of utterance which have characterised this gifted artist for many years back. She sang, "Robert, toi que j'aime!" "Com è bello," and "The beating of my own heart," and to an encore of the latter, "Bonnie Prince Charlie." We lament she was not accompanied in the two first arias by the orchestra, as much of the effect was lost by a mere pianoforte accompaniment. We understand this was in accordance with Mad. Novello's desire; nevertheless, the committee should not have complied, more particularly as there were present an efficient band and competent conductor. Herr Molique played a romance, by Lafont, on the violin; Mlle. Anna Molique two pi .. forte solos.

The selection at the Ancient Concerts was made from the Messiah and Creation. "The Pastoral Symphony" opened the performance, followed by "There were Shepherds," beautifully declaimed by Mad. Novello. This lady also sang "Come unto Him, all ye that labour," and "I know that my Redeemer liveth," in the portions from the Messiah; and in those from the Creation—"the Marvellous Work" and "With verdure clad." These pieces were rendered with a felicity precious with devotional feeling, and adorned with artistic expression of the highest order, while the voice, the gift of nature, for pure deliciousness of tone and sympathy with the phrases uttered, has never been equalled. Indeed, we do not hope to hear such an exponent of sacred song again, and the retirement of Mad. Novello in the prime of her powers will cause a blank not easily to be filled up at all the future great musical gatherings in England. Miss Eyles sang "He was despised" expressively. "Thy rebuke" and "Behold and see," as rendered by Mr. Cummings, were not happy vocal displays, evincing a want of both cultivation of voice and manner. He gave "Now vanish before the holy beams" with rather more fervour; yet it would be advisable for him to keep solely to part-singing, in which he is very efficient, at least for the present. Mr. Lawler sang "Why do the nations," and "Rolling in foaming billows," skilfully, and with a tone and power that will ultimately make him a valuable addition to our oratorio singers. The chorusses were throughout admirable, well balanced, brightly in tune, and sonorous, and the band was careful, clear, and without weakness. It is a matter of congratulation to both societies that the English artists who gave their services at the two concerts, will carry away favourable impressions of our Dublin chorus and orchestra, and it is really a matter of surprise to us how they could be brought together with so much efficiency at the commencement of the Dublin season. This gives us hope, nay assurance, of progress during the remainder of the season. On the whole, the two performances were most creditable. The "Philharmonic" was under the direction of Mr. Bussell, and "The Ancients" conducted by Mr. Joseph Robinson.

CORK.—At the farewell performance of Mad. Rudersdorff's Opera Company, the selection consisted of the last act of Sonnambula, the fourth act of Trovatore, and the Singing Lesson in the Daughter of the Regiment, concluding with a farce. The portion of Trovatore which was performed presented a feature which was looked for with much interest, as it had been generally rumoured that our talented fellow-citizen Mr. Topham was to sing behind the scenes in the celebrated Miserere scene. Nothing could exceed the rapturous applause with which both Mad. Rudersdorff and Mr. Topham were received, both being called before the curtain, when they were greeted with loud plaudits from boxes, pit, and gallery—all of which were densely crowded. The singing of Mad. Rudersdorff, especially in the scene from the Daughter of the Regiment, was such as to create rather imperative demands for an encore, with which she obligingly complied by singing three songs additional to those in the opera. At the conclusion of the performance she was called before the curtain, when she came forward to the front of the stage, and warmly thanking the public of Cork for their kind reception of her, stated that the Company intended again visiting the city on the approach of Christmas, when she hoped she would receive a Cead Mille Failthe. The announcement was received with loud and continued cheering.—Cork Advertiser.

AN ENGLISH COMPOSER ON THE CONTINENT.—Mr. Ferdinand Quentin Duliken (son of the late Mad. Duliken), at present residing in Warsaw, is writing two operas which he intends bringing out upon the London stage. They will be entitled Waverley and A Game of Chess; the latter being a comic opera in one act.—Communicated.]

FERRARI'S WORK
ON
THE VOICE AND SINGING,
Price 8s.
MAY BE HAD AT HIS RESIDENCE,
DEVONSHIRE LODGE, PORTLAND ROAD, PORTLAND PLACE,
And at all the Principal Music Sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.
"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.
"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK FOR 1861 will be issued early in December, Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Advertisements, Lists of Music, Names and Addresses of Professors and the Trade must be sent in before the 12th November, to Rudall, Rose, Carte & Co., 20 Charing Cross.

TO ORGANISTS.—GEORGE LAKE'S Christmas Hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing," a simple setting, published in short score, may be had of the composer (Shirley House), Sydenham, by enclosing 6 postage stamps.

TO AMATEUR VOCALISTS.—Wanted some FIRST TREBLE and FIRST TENOR VOICES in a SELECT MADRIGAL now forming. Perfect sight-reading not so much an object as the possession of a good voice. No fee or subscription required, but each applicant will have to undergo a vocal examination. The Rehearsals of the Choir will take place on Monday Evenings from 8 to 10, in the vicinity of Regent Street. Ladies and gentlemen unconnected with any similar societies will have the preference.—Apply by letter, addressed to O. O., Addison, Hollier & Lucas, 210 Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANO MUSIC,
PUBLISHED BY
ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

			s.	d.
		PIANO SOLO.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	"The harp that once thro' Tara's Halls ... ..."	3	0
ERGMANN, A.	...	"Rondo appassionato" (dedicated to Mad. Davison)	4	0
,,	...	"Réminiscences d'Obéron"	3	0
FIELD, JOHN	...	Six Nocturnes (edited by F. Liszt) ... ... each	2	0
GANZ, WILHELM	...	"Santa Lucia" (a brilliant transcription)	3	0
KONTSKI, A. DE	...	"Aux armes!" caprice heroique	5	0
LIDEL, BLANCHE	...	"Valse de Salon"	2	6
LISZT, FRANZ	...	March from Wagner's Tannhäuser	4	0
MAUSS, THEODOR	...	"Prometheus." Galop brillant	4	0
MOZART, W. A.	...	Romance in A flat	2	0
ROUBIER, HENRI	...	"La vallée des roses." Mazurka de Salon	3	6
,,	...	"Josephine" ... ... do. do.	3	0
RUBINSTEIN, A.	...	Barcarolle in F minor	2	6
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Vedrai carino" (Don Juan)	3	0
,,	...	"Batti, batti" (ditto)	3	0
,,	...	"The mermaid's song" (Haydn)	3	0
SCHUBERT, F.	...	Impromptu in E flat, Op. 90, No. 2	4	0
,,	...	Impromptu in B flat, Op. 142, No. 3 (played by Mr. Charles Hallé)	3	6
SELLE, W. C.	...	"Marche Triomphale"	3	0
SILAS, E.	...	Romance, Op. 48	2	6
,,	...	Impromptu à la Mazurka, Op. 50	3	0
,,	...	Tarentelle, Op. 51	4	0
		PIANO DUET.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	Rigoletto (transcription of the Quartett)	4	0
LEFEBURE-WELY	...	"Hommage à sa Majesté Napoléon III." caprice militaire	6	0
,,	...	"Le retour de l'armée." Marche triomphale ...	6	0
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Don Juan." Grand Duo sur l'opéra de Mozart...	6	0
WAGNER, R.	...	March from Tannhäuser, arranged by T. Mauss ...	5	0

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT
OF
FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,
IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY
DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,
Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,
TO BE SOLD AT
ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,
BY
MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,
28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.
MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.
VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.
VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.
FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.
CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.
HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.
PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.
VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.
Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.
THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.
Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.
Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

NOTICE.
BOOSEY & SONS' New and complete edition of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS, in 2 vols. 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait of Beethoven, will be ready for delivery early next week.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

LIBRARY EDITION OF
CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.—Edited by J. W. DAVISON.
In one volume, music size, beautifully engraved and printed, price 8s., or superbly bound price 10s. 6d.
The MAZURKAS of CHOPIN for PIANOFORTE complete, with biographical and critical introduction, by J. W. DAVISON; and portrait of Chopin by Lynch.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

EVANS'S
ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

The Cottage Harmonium, at Six Guineas

Has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft agreeable quality of tone, suitable for a cottage or a small sitting-room.

The Ten-Guinea Harmonium

In a handsome Oak Case, possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone which characterises all EVANS'S Instruments.

The Nineteen-Guinea, or Three-Stop Harmonium

With Unison Trebles, and Bourdon in the Bass, is a powerful instrument, and designed expressly for leading Public Worship.

The Twelve-Stop Harmonium, price 36 Guineas

Is a brilliant and powerful instrument, suitable either for a church or drawing-room.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium, at 68 Guineas

Is in a very handsome Rosewood Case, has two rows of keys, and five and a half octaves of vibrators. This is acknowledged by the profession and press to be the most perfect Harmonium, without pedals, that has yet been produced.

The Organist's or Pedal Harmonium, at Forty-Seven Guineas

Is in an American walnut case, has Ten Stops and Two Octaves, and a Third of Pedals, with independent reeds.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium,

WITH TWO ROWS OF KEYS AND PEDALS,

In Oak Case, and Eighteen Stops, price 130 Guineas, possesses the attributes of an Organ, and is the most complete Harmonium that has yet been constructed.

An Illustrated Catalogue of EVANS' English Harmoniums, with One and Two Rows of Keys, with or without the Percussion Action, and with Pedals, at prices ranging from 6 to 140 Guineas, is now ready, and may be had upon application to the Manufacturers,

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, November 17, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 47 SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. / Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) / Vocal Classes	Dr. TENDALL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

47

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 67 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

MR. WILLIAM GRAEFF NICHOLLS begs to inform his friends and pupils that he WILL RETURN to town to 33 Argyle Street, towards the end of the present month.—Penzance, Cornwall, Nov. 20.

MISS PALMER begs to announce to her friends and pupils that she has REMOVED to Sherwood Cottage, 25 Park Village East, Regent's Park, N.W.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

Established April 30, 1858.

COUNCIL.

HENRY G. BLAGROVE, Esq.
WM. CHAPPELL, Esq., F.S.A.
Rev. Sir WM. HENRY COPE, Bart.
JAMES WILLIAM DAVISON, Esq.
JOSEPH DUGGAN, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD HORSLEY, Esq., Hon. Librarian.
WM. VINCENT WALLACE, Esq.
EDWARD JAMES, Esq., Q.C.
JOSEPH LIDEL, Esq.
G. A. MACFARREN, Esq.
FRANK MORI, Esq.
GEO. ALEX. OSBORNE, Esq.
JOHN D. PAWLE, Esq.
ED. F. RIMBAULT, Esq., LL.D., F.S.A.
CHARLES SALAMAN, Esq., Hon. Secretary.
AUGUSTINE SARGOOD, Esq., Treasurer.
JOHN SIMON, Esq.
HENRY SMART, Esq.

The following is the proposed Scheme for the proceedings of the Society.

Third Season, 1861.

January 8, 15, 22, 29	Choral Practice.
" 23	Conversazione.
February 6	Ordinary General Meeting of Fellows.
" "	" " " of Society.
" 5, 12, 19, 26	Choral Practice.
" 27	Orchestral Concert.
March 5, 12, 19, 26	Choral Practice.
" 6	Fellows' Meeting for Discussion, &c.
" 20	Trial of New Chamber Compositions.
April 10	Orchestral Concert.
" 16, 23, 30	Choral Practice.
" 17	Fellows' Meeting for Discussion, &c.
May 7, 14, 21, 28	Choral Practice.
" 8	Orchestral Concert.
" 22	Trial of New Chamber Compositions.
June 4	Choral Practice.
" 5	Orchestral Concert.
July 3	Conversazione.
November 6	Fellows' Meeting for Discussion, &c.
" 19, 26	Choral Practice.
December 3, 10, 17	Choral Practice.

The Concerts and Conversazioni on Wednesdays, at half-past 8 o'clock, at St. James's Hall. Choral Practices on Tuesdays, at 8 o'clock, at Marylebone Institution.

Conductor of the Orchestra ... Mr. ALFRED MELLON.
Director of the Choral Practice ... Mr. HENRY SMART.

N.B.—On and after the 1st December, 1860, Messrs. Cramer and ., 201 Regent Street, will be prepared to receive the subscriptions of £1 1s., for th ar 1861, from Fellows, Associates, Lady Associates, and Nominated Annual Subscri s, and on and after the 1st January, 1861, from subscribers to the Series of Concer ; and at the same time such persons will be entitled to select a Reserved Numbe Seat for the Series of Concerts; and will be furnished with a voucher for the same on payment of an extra sum of 10s. 6d.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.,
36 Baker Street, Portman Square, W.

St. James's Hall,
28 Piccadilly, London.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Evening at 8. Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 21 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme.

"The best entertainment in London."

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSP.

CHARLES LUDER'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

	s.	d.
PIANOFORTE.
"La Tarentelle" (dedicated to Ferdinand Praeger) Op. 41	3	0
"Le Corsaire" (dedicated to Edouard Roeckel) Op. 42	3	0
"Six Romances Anglaises sans Paroles" (in two books each)	6	0
"La Danse des Sorcières," Op. 33	3	0
VOCAL.
"L'Emigré Irlandais" (dedicated to Mad. Sainton-Dolby)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL MUSIC.

Name of Song.	Sung by.	Composer.	s.	d.
"I love YOU"	Sims Reeves	M. W. Balfe	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose"	Ditto	Ditto	3	0
"If I could change as others change"	Laura Baxter	Ditto	2	6
"The meadow gate"	Wilbye Cooper	G. B. Allen	2	6
"Wert thou mine"	Sims Reeves	Frank Mori	2	6
"Thou art so near and yet so far"	Herr Reichardt	A. Reichardt	3	0
"Good night" (cradle song)	Ditto	Ditto	2	6
"I never knew how dear thou wert"	Miss Lascelles	H. K. Morley	2	6

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

"I love YOU"	Transcribed by	Emile Berger	3	0
Ditto	Ditto (easy)	J. Liebich	2	0
"Good night"	Ditto (moderately difficult)	W. Kube	3	0
Ditto	Ditto (easy)	J. Liebich	2	0
Ditto	Ditto (easy)	R. Andrews	2	0
"Thou art so near"	Ditto (easy)	Ditto	2	0
Ditto	Ditto (very easy)	Rudolf Nordmann	1	0
Ditto	Ditto, as a PIANO DUET	Ditto	1	0
"Santa Lucia"	Ditty (easy)	Eugène Moniot	1	0
"Leopold"	Mazurka favourite	Brinley Richards	2	0
"Oberon"	Fantasia, composed expressly for Miss Arabella Goddard	G. B. Allen	5	0

London: Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

	s.	d.
DIFFICULT.
DON PASQUALE (introducing "Com è gentil") Ricardo Linter	5	0
MODERATELY DIFFICULT.
"The last rose of Summer" (with variations) Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew	3	0
VERY EASY.
"Thou art so near" (Reichardt's popular Lied) Rudolf Nordmann	1	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

WEBER'S LAST WALTZ, transcribed by F. ROSENFELD. This is one of the best arrangements for pupils, yet offered to the public, of the above admired waltz. It is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above popular Neapolitan melody specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêvérie)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the above arrangement for that purpose.

EMANUEL AGUILAR'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

	s.	d.
VOCAL.
"In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by Acton Bell)	3	0
"Sympathy" (poetry by Ellis Bell)	2	0
"Farewell" (poetry by Bishop Heber)	2	0
PIANOFORTE.
"Sunset glow" (Rêvérie) (Dedicated to Mrs. Robert Cartwright.)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	s.	d.
CZERKASKI (Joseph) "The Bridesmaids' Album."
No. 1—"Bridal Quadrilles"	2	0
2—"Shorncliffe Waltzes"	2	6
3—"Beatrice Mazurka"	2	0
4—"Frederick William Waltz"	3	0
5—"Princess Victoria Quadrille"	2	0
6—"Polish Varsoviana"	2	0
7—"Exeter Polka"	2	0
8—"Apethorpe Galop"	1	6

 The "Bridesmaids' Album," complete in one volume, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

REPERTOIRE DES BOUFFES PARISIENS.

No. 1—"Tromb-al-Cazar" Waltz	2	6
2—"Rêve d'une nuit d'été" Waltz	2	0
3—"Les deux Pêcheurs" Waltz	2	6
4—"Les deux Aveugles" Waltz	2	6
5—"Le Violoneux Polka"	2	0
6—"Une Nuit blanche" Quadrille	2	0
7—"Vent du Soir" Quadrille	2	0
8—"Le Violoneux" Waltz	2	0
COURVILLON (J.) Deux Valses à deux temps.
No. 1—"La Reine des Sylphes"	4	0
2—"The Maiden's Dream"	4	0
CZERKASKI (J.) "Sans Souci" Galop	3	0
" "Bella Contessa" Waltz	3	0
MARRIOTT (C.) "The Woman in White" Waltz	3	0
MONIOT (Eugène) "Schottish d'amour"	2	0
PECH (Dr. James) "May-dew" Polka	2	0
RICHARDS (Brinley) "Leopold" Mazurka	2	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.; where "I love you" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

"AULD LANG SYNE," varied for the Pianoforte by ALBERT DAWES, price 5s., is published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"This is a series of nine variations on the above popular air, and possesses a beauty seldom found in this class of music, namely, that the air is heard in all the variations. It is a good piece for practice, and not too difficult for the generality of players. We heartily recommend it to our musical friends, to many of whom Mr. Dawes is already favourably known as a composer."—Hastings and St. Leonard's News.

ALBERT DAWES'S MOST POPULAR COMPOSITIONS.

	s.	d.
PIANOFORTE.
"Auld Lang Syne" (with variations)	5	0
"Hastings Waltz-s"	3	0
"Anacreontic Quadrille" (on popular Glees)	3	0
"Hastings Polka"	1	0
"Southdown Polka"	1	0
VOCAL.
"I slept, and oh! how sweet the dream"	2	0
"Good bye, my love, good bye"	2	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d. London: published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

The day, pretty darling, draws near to its close,
Come, cease from your play, on your pillow repose,
You peep from the cradle still laughing and bright,
Kind angels for ever preserve you, good night.

With freedom from sorrow, dear child, you are blest,
To you a pure heaven is your fond mother's breast;
Wild passion some day will your happiness blight,
Kind angels preserve you, my darling, good night.

Ah! happy is he who can slumber like you,
Be ever, dear child, to your innocence true,
The righteous are watched by the spirits of light,
Who guard them while sleeping, my darling, good night.

"Few songs of modern days have achieved a more decided or better merited success than Herr Reichardt's charming lied, "Thou art so near and yet so far," which has for the last two years been the delight of all concert-goers and drawing-room vocalists of more than ordinary pretensions. Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have just published a new composition, from the same original and elegant pen, entitled "Good Night" (a cradle song). The words are exquisitely simple and unaffected, being the address of a mother to her sleeping babe; and it is but justice to Herr Reichardt to say that he has wedded an exquisite domestic poem to a most graceful, unaffected melody, which breathes the very spirit of maternal tenderness. The song, which is written for a tenor voice—the composer being, as our readers know, one of the first of living German vocalists—is in the key of F major; and to amateurs of taste we can cordially recommend "The Cradle Song" as a composition worthy of their attention."—Liverpool Mail.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq., is just published price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

November 10.

THE month of November is not propitious to the operatic or dramatic world. A skirmishing party of colds, catarrhs, and influenzas prelude the advance of winter, and many a distinguished artist, disabled, has to retire to the rear. Among others, M. Gueymard has been incapacitated by a severe lumbar affection, or, as we should say, a lumbago, and the revival of Halevy's Juive would have had to be postponed had not a M. Rénard been in readiness to supply the gap. Mlle. Marie Sax made her first appearance in the part of Rachel, and thoroughly succeeded in the attempt. Mad. Vandenheuvel-Duprez, as the Princess Eudoxia, was no less successful; while M. Rénard looked the character of Eleazar to perfection, and acquitted himself of the music to the entire satisfaction of the audience. All three artists were called before the curtain. This revival, it is presumed, will carry the opera on to the production of the new ballet which, it is expected, will do great things. There has been considerable debate as to the title under which it is to appear. One of the authors was anxious to confer on it the Italian name Farfalla, which, being interpreted, signifieth butterfly. This was objected, however, with some show of reason, on the ground that the scene of the ballet is in Circassia; whereupon the Circassian term for that coleopterous insect was suggested, namely, Kelebek, but the sound was deemed too harsh for Parisian ears. The Persian synoyme, Pervaneh, was rejected for the like cause. Why all this overhauling of oriental dictionaries should be thought necessary it is difficult to conceive, when the French word Papillon would be at once euphonious and intelligible, without the aid of any moonshee or dragoman whatever; or again, the name of the principal personage, Leila, would be an unexceptionable title. It is curious how important a title is considered to be in theatrical circles, and how really little depends on it beyond the first few nights. Success will make the obscurest and most baroque title clear and euphonious as the jingling of louis-d'ors.

The Italian Opera has been in a perfect torrent of prosperity. The reappearance of Mario, and the return of Ronconi to Paris after an absence of ten years, have been the very intelligible cause of this flood of good fortune. Mario, Ronconi, and Alboni are the only Almaviva, Figaro, and Rosina of the day, and we doubt whether either has been surpassed of yore. The good Parisians, for once, are sensible of this artistic verity, and applaud them ad nubes.

The new opéra comique by Scribe and Auber is in full preparation. The principal artists to whom it is to be intrusted are Mlle. Monrose, Mlle. Prevost, MM. Montaubry, Couderc, Barrielle and Ambroise. There is also immediately forthcoming a new opera in one act by MM. Sauvage and Ambroise Thomas. It is generally reported that an important change is about to take place in the artistic staff of the Opéra Comique. Mad. Ugalde is to retire and Mad. Saint-Urbain is to exchange the boards of the Italian stage for those of the Salle Favart.

At the Théâtre Lyrique Orphée has been taken up again with Mad. Viardot, who has thus anticipated the period announced for her reappearance, namely the beginning of January. A Mlle. Oruil made her début in Gluck's Opera with some success. Her voice is fresh and flexible, though somewhat weak in the middle notes.

The Français has had a successful new comedy by M. Camille Doucet, entitled La Considération. Regnier, Geffroy, Monrose, Bressant, and Mesdames Guyon, Favart, and Figiac play in it, all of whom are said to have good parts.

The minor theatres have not been doing much. At the Palais Royal there has been a parody of Octave Feuillet's new drama Rédemption, and at the Variétés a new vaudeville called Guide de l'Etranger dans Paris, in which Le Clerc and Mlle. Alphonsine play. Both novelties are by the same authors.

Nov. 20.

M. Gueymard having recovered the painless flexibility of his lumbar regions, the run of the Prophète has been resumed. It is fixed that the new ballet is to be called Le Papillon. A grand rehearsal has just taken place, at which Mad. Taglioni (the inventor of the ballet) was present, and we may expect the first night without delay.

Mad. Penco has made her first appearance this season in La Traviata. She was recalled at the end of the first act, after the grand air "Follie, follie," and was warmly applauded in the brindisi, the duets with Gardoni and Graziani, and the whole of the third act.

The Opéra Comique is up to the roof in preparatives. Another new opera, entitled André, in two acts, has been accepted. The words are by M. de Leuven, and the music by M. Porse. At the same time the new opera by Scribe and Auber is being zealously pushed forward. Meanwhile Mad. Cabel has been re-engaged, and has played in La Part du Diable and l'Etoile du Nord. Mlle. Saint-Urbain, of whose intended début at this house I said something in my last, is to play the principal part in M. Offenbach's new opera, instead of Mad. Ugalde.

The Odéon has just put forth an amusing "proverb," entitled Une Epreuve après la Lettre, and the Palais Royal presents its frequenters with a parody on Orphée, called J'ai perdu mon Eurydice. At the Variétés we are promised a "Revue," with the title Oh là, là, que c'est bête tout ça. The gods avert the omen! KAY.

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Nov. 6, 1860.

A SECOND hearing of Der Fliegender Holländer confirms the impression that it is the most satisfactory and the least eccentric of all Wagner's operas. Written apparently before the ambitious intention of forming a new school of music for the future had seized and fettered the mind of the composer, it is a work containing some of the freshest and most vigorous efforts of his genius. Instances certainly occur where novel effects are attempted, in which the style subsequently adopted by Wagner is foreshadowed; but they are rare and almost forgotten in the many points of excellence to be admired. The overture—a composition of neither the form nor importance to justify that title—opens with a subject which most frequently recurs throughout the work. This theme pervades the opera, and is that with which the Holländer, in thought and presence, is identified. It is very effectively introduced, as the commencement of Senta's ballad in the second act, when she relates the story of the Flying Dutchman, and foretells her own destiny. Whether dramatically or musically considered, the treatment of this subject is most successful, and increases the interest of the whole work by the skilful manner in which it is made subservient to the progress of the plot. The notion may not be original, but its development evinces a knowledge of the resources of his act, which none but a thorough musician can attain.

To the first act the storm and the chorus of sailors on board Daland's ship form a spirited introduction. As the tempest temporarily subsides, the tenor solo, a mariner's love song, contrasts well with the preceding and subsequent description of the elemental strife. The storm rises again (most graphically portrayed in the orchestra), as the vessel of the Flying Dutchman appears. The grand scena of the Holländer, "Die Frist ist um," and his following duet with the bass (Daland), are both in Weber's style, and would not be unworthy of that master's signature. The act terminates with a chorus of sailors as the ships set sail. After a short instrumental prelude the second act begins with a melodious chorus for female voices, sung by Senta's companions, while they spin. In this a striking effect is made by the women laughing in chorus, jeering Senta for her melancholy. Then follows Senta's ballad already mentioned, a composition full of character and dramatic feeling; after this there is a duet between the soprano and tenor, Senta and Erik, her betrothed, when the lover urges his suit in a most plaintive melody, not altogether new, but so harmonised and instrumented as in a great measure to disguise its Italian origin. At the conclusion of the duet Erik departs, and Daland (Senta's father) returns accompanied by the Holländer, in whom Senta recognises the object of her ideal love and destiny. It is in the treatment of this situation, the most important moment of the libretto, that the composer fails. The Holländer and his victim are made to stand and look at each other for some time, while their emotions, supposed to be under various influences, are very inadequately depicted by music in the orchestra. The result is such as might be expected—the situation is lost. A solo for Daland, "Mögst du, mein Kind," the duet between Senta and the Holländer, "Wie aus der Ferne," and a terzetto for the three just named, are the other morceaux in this act. The third and last act opens with a chorus of sailors about to leave the port; they are joined by women bringing provisions. The ship of the Holländer, lying at anchor, is hailed by the women and sailors, but no reply is given by the mysterious crew. Suddenly the wind rises, and the spectral mariners man their ship, singing the refrain with which the Holländer has been identified. A double chorus between the two ships' crews follows, and is the noisiest and least effective piece of music in the opera. Senta subsequently appears, followed by Erik, who endeavours to dissuade her, in a duet allegro agitato, "Was musst ich hören," from following the Holländer. The last finale, in which Senta, Daland, the Holländer, the choruses of the sailors, and the women take part, is admirably contrived, and forms a fitting termination to the work. It is somewhat singular that Wagner should consider the Fliegender Holländer as the least important of his operas, another instance that composers are not by any means the best judges of their own productions.

At the Kärntnerthor Theatre the repertoire is almost similar to that of last week. Some changes will, I believe, be made in the performances announced, for even an opera house, under the management of an Emperor's representative, is not exempt from such casualties. "I have sent word that I shall not sing this evening," exclaimed one of the artistes whom I met yesterday. "Not sing," I replied; "but you are announced, and will not surely disappoint us." "No, no! I won't disappoint you," was the reply. "But let the Director think so. A few hours' Bauchzwicken will do him no harm."

THE ORGAN.*

Eleventh Study.—The Second Principal Cause of Quality of Tone, viz., Form.—The Form of the Body of the Pipes.

The form of the pipe may vary without any corresponding variation taking place in the quality of the tones. If in the column of air in the pipe the nodes of the vibrations are at exactly equal distances one from the other, it matters little whether the pipe is cylindrical or prismatic in its form; but if the vibrating portions are not equal to one another, then, in the open flue pipes as well as in the reeds, the form of the body of the pipe, of the vibrating apparatus, and of the foot of the pipe boxes, will vary the quality of the tone into an infinite variety of shades. Nevertheless, these variations in quality of tone are not always produced in the same way in the two kinds of pipes, for in the flue pipes, closed or open, the real sounding body is the column of air enclosed within the tube; in the reed pipes it is the reed itself.

It has been already clearly shown that the communication between the column of air in the pipe and the air outside is in proportion to the diameter of the pipe, consequently, the narrower the pipe is, the less will be the communication between the air inside of it and the air outside, the wider the pipe the greater the communication, and the quality of the sound will follow the same proportions. Now in the flue pipes not only does fineness of scale so lessen the column of air in the pipe as to put in communication with the air outside nothing but the merest thread of a voice, but this communication itself, as regards the head of the pipe, may be completely intercepted, as in the bourdon. And in this last case the pipe will no longer sing as an open flue pipe with a full chest voice, so to say, but will make use of a sort of ventriloquism, or low murmuring sound (bourdonnement); in other words, it will emit that sound from which it gets both its name and its peculiar quality of tone. This bourdon quality, too, has an existence of its own quite independently of that thinness of tone that fineness of scale would also give to a pipe.

The influence that form has in giving a special character to the communication caused by the vibrations between the air in the pipe and the air outside is such, that in proportion as it makes the communication to be fuller and more direct, it will be the cause in the open flue pipes as well as in the reeds, not only of a stronger sound, but of a brighter quality of tone, though in reed pipes variations in the scale produce different degrees of power rather than different qualities of tone, properly so called. This is true of all form, but the special sort of form, of which we have to consider the influence here, according to our promise at the end of the last chapter, is that which consists in the various combinations of different scales in one and the same pipe, for these combinations really are the cause, not only of different degrees of power, but also of different qualities of tone.

Let us take, then, as an example of this sort of form, a pipe made up of several scales, laid one over the other, without having their transitions very distinctly marked, as would be the case in a pyramid-shaped pipe. The column of air will be divided throughout this pipe, as it is in a cylindrical one, into separate vibrating portions, each of which portions will be exactly like every other as regards the particular note it will emit, but unlike them with regard to length. For where the diameter is narrower the vibrating portion of the air will be much longer than where the diameter is wider. So that in that part of the pipe where the diameter is wider, at the base of the pyramid that is, the sound produced will tend towards power and fulness; but that produced by the upper part at the apex of the pyramid, where the diameter is narrower, will tend towards the reverse of this. The nearer we get to the head of this sort of pipe, which ends almost in a point, the weaker does the sound become, until, passing on from layer to layer, we arrive at last at its very top, and there we shall find that it has attained its greatest degree of thinness. The diameter, in becoming thus narrowed at its end, according to the ordinary laws, would give the sound of the very fine scale; but then we must remember that this sort of quality would be tempered by the gradual variations taking place in the column of air, beginning at the very head of the pipe, where it would be of the quality of the very fine scale, down to the base of the pyramid, where it would be of the quality partly of the mean, and partly of the full scale.

Let us take another example from amongst the pipes in which one scale may be said to be laid over the other. It shall be a pipe which is partially stopped at its head—a quasi-bourdon, or flue-pipe à cheminée, as it is called. The tube, from its base to about three-quarters of its height, is a regular cylinder. It is then stopped like a bourdon, except that a small space is left open at the centre of the lid, a small cap, into which another pipe is inserted. This second pipe is no larger in diameter than the space left open in the cap, and is only a few inches high. It is called the chimney (cheminée), because the sound may be said to make its escape by it, as the smoke does by the chimney; and it is from this that this kind of compound pipe gets its name, flue-pipe à cheminée. Now, let us put together the different kinds of sounds, or qualities resulting from the two scales, here placed one over the other. First, we shall have the quality of tone, which is proper to the pipe that extends from the mouth to the base of the little chimney, and that will be the quality of tone of an open flue-pipe. Next, as this open pipe is partly closed by the cap at its head, for so much of it as is thus closed we shall also have the quality which is peculiar to the bourdon pipe; and lastly, from the little pipe or chimney fastened into the cap, which, as compared to the larger pipe, is a pipe of very fine scale, we shall also have the quality of this scale. Here then in one pipe we have three distinct qualities of tone, and from the combination of these three we get a musical quality of tone which is both soft and loud at the same time, and in which the special characteristics of this threefold combination are very distinctly marked; so much so, indeed, that an experienced builder or tuner would have no difficulty in recognising at once in the flue-pipe à cheminée, 1st, the quality of tone of a bourdon; 2nd, the quality of tone of a bourdon of such and such a scale; and 3rd, the quality of tone of a bourdon combined with that of an open flue-pipe of very fine scale and of a lively quality.

As the sound naturally follows the sides of the pipe in the direction of their width, the conic or hyperbolic form is with good reason employed for widening out the sound or increasing its volume. This is the rationale, so to say, of the speaking-trumpet. If this instrument is made too long it will produce a low murmuring sound (bourdonnement), which will hinder the words pronounced in it from being distinctly heard, and with regard to it too great length of tube would of course be simply fatal. But with regard to reed pipes, the result would be just the reverse; for all writers on these matters recommend organ-builders not to cut reed pipes too short, for fear they should be wanting in brightness and this very bourdon effect, an effect, which, in their case, is by no means a cause of confusion. Lately, too, an eminent natural philosopher (M. Poisson), has shown how this recommendation of practical men is good, not only in practice, but theory. For he shows that the separate vibrating portions of air, urged by the impetus given to the column of air in the direction of its width in an extended cone, acquire a force and fulness of play which they would never acquire by merely following the straight sides of a pipe, which is simply cylindrical. And hence we may conclude that the sound which is produced by cone-shaped pipes in an organ, is the most open, the most grand and magnificent quality of tone that can possibly be got from any sounding body. But since the cone-shaped pipe, owing to the great width of its head, takes up a great deal of space on the sound-board—since, again, the open flue-pipes made of this shape do not speak their proper note, unless each of them is cut with the greatest accuracy to the exact length required for each particular note; and since, without going to considerable expense in making experiments, there is consequently great danger of cutting them false, builders never make use of the cone-shaped pipe for more than one series of stops, namely the reeds.

* From L'Orgue, sa Connaissance, son Administration, et son Jeu, by Joseph Regnier.

The cone-shaped pipe, then, has a quality of tone which is peculiar to itself. This might be still further varied by taking a pipe of the speaking-trumpet shape and covering it with another as a lid. The two pipes thus treated would give us a pipe made up of two cones, more or less alike at the ends, but exactly so at their bases, placed inversely one against the other, and fastened together so as to leave no opening but a very small one at the end. In this pipe we should have at the centre a quality of tone full and ample, so to say, as the pipe itself is, but becoming less and less so as it approaches more nearly the narrower ends of the pipe. Examples of a pipe of an exactly opposite form may be met with in ancient German organs*, of a pipe that is made up first of two cones joined one to the other in the way described above, and then of a third cone fastened by its end to the end of the second of the two first cones. But every day the art of organ-building tends towards its perfection by becoming more simple, and by ridding itself of useless fancies. Moreover, it is not part of our plan to give an exact list of all the various kinds of combinations, scales, and forms, and consequently of qualities of tone which there either are or might be, otherwise we should never have done, still less to inquire into all the possible causes of all the different qualities of tone; on the contrary, it is strictly limited to giving a sufficient account of the principal causes of quality of tone in general, without attempting to carry our researches any further into the more hidden mysteries of the same. We will do no more than cite one other example of form as affecting quality of tone, and we do so because it has at least the merit of being a praiseworthy attempt towards the reduction of the immense bulk of the organ.

The learned savant, who speaks of this form while he is considering our subject strictly from the scientific point of view, shows that by diminishing the length of the speaking part of the pipes, and by enlarging their scale in proportion, a column of air can be got, the vibrations of which will be the same as those of the column of air set in motion within a pipe of the ordinary form. It may be taken for granted that open pipes and bourdons thus cubic in form would not be wanting in purity of tone, and as to its quality, it would have certainly all the conditions of the greatest fulness of tone, but this fulness would be softened down as well because of the want of thickness in the longitudinal layers of sound in the pipe, as because of the ease with which these same layers would be crossed and divided by the air outside, in the passage of the sound from the pipe to the ear. Perhaps a very fair idea of the kind of quality of such pipes may be got from that of the ophicleide, which is large in its scale but limited as regards its length; and though this kind of quality would be far from being perfect, still, we repeat, all attempts made with a view to being useful to an art are not unworthy of respect, although not attended with complete success. Unfortunately for such attempts, practical men who have made trial of them assert that cubic-shaped pipes cannot be made so as to produce any but the most dull and hard quality of tones, nor without giving rise to the most perplexing difficulties upon the sound-board from want of room. This may be true; but then it must be borne in mind that it is the conclusion of men who, perfect though they may be as regards the practice of their art, limit their ideas wholly to that, and would not for their lives venture one step out of the region of practice into that of theory.

* See Seydel, Orgel, und ihr Bau. Verbo Barpfeife.

STAGE AND PULPIT.

BOX v. PEW.

(From the Leeds and West Riding Express.)

It is said that men resemble their grandfathers far more than they suspect,—the habits of their bodies rather than their souls making the chief difference. It strikes us, however, that large numbers of them resemble rather their grandmothers. Certainly it is undeniable that gentlemen daily thrust themselves before the public with such striking old-womanly qualities and habits of thought, that it is difficult to account for their escape from the petticoats and pattens suitable for such dear, good, silly souls. We do not wish to say anything offensive of Mr. Jowitt, the hon. secretary of the Leeds Ragged School. We take it for granted, that in writing his letter to Mr. Thorne he acted for others as much as for himself; and therefore we shall not say anything of a harsh nature to Mr. Jowitt personally. But the supposition which we give him the benefit of, forces upon us the unpleasant conclusion that we must have in Leeds—and we say this notwithstanding the good work these men are engaged in—some of the silliest, most stupid, and impertinent specimens of piety to be found in connection with any system of religion on the face of the earth. It is intolerable that these people, by the puerility and disgusting offensiveness of their acts, should bring a sublime religion into contempt,—a religion which, through being bewildered by pious conceit, they can neither feel nor understand.

Mr. Thorne, the manager of our theatre, in a generous spirit, creditable to him as a man, offered one night's receipts of his theatre to help the friends of the Ragged School. We honour him for the act; and if the managers of that charity either understood the religion they profess to believe in, or the literature of their country, they would have accepted the offer with gratitude and thanks, instead of thrusting back ungraciously the kindly hand held out to them. We do not reprove these people by saying that Lord Palmerston, whom they trotted out the other day to help their friends, is not only a patron of the theatre, but of the tur also; nor do we inform them that the highest lady in the land —whose visit a short time since to our town was looked upon as the most important event that ever happened in connection with it—patronises the drama; although we dare say that such considerations would influence them more than any other. Nor shall we tell them that the actors on the stage are not the worst performers in the world; some of the very worst and most dishonest perform in the pulpit, and are sometimes applauded, too, by those who turn their backs with scorn on the honest men of the sock and buskin. If these modern Pharisees were not drunk with spiritual pride, as partially educated Englishmen, they would know that the greatest human intellect the world holds knowledge of was exercised in creating the best specimens of the finest dramatic literature the world possesses. Who can stand up and say that the faculty given by God to Shakspeare had not its tendencies from the same divine source! Or who with loving heart can read the beautiful and sublime lessons of the great bard, and not acknowledge the beneficence of his genius. Intellectually, there is as much difference between Shakspeare and the pious insects of Leeds, as between Micromegas, the giant of Sirius, and the little men who, when he came to this earth, crawled upon his thumb nail.

We are thankful to these little pious people for the good they do, for everything in the economy of nature has its use, and if they were disposed to perform their work with the humbleness and modesty which usually accompany sincerity and good sense, they would be entitled to the respect and support of their fellow-citizens. But they must not forget that, next to those divine injunctions promulgated in regard to the destitute and the needy, the highest and the best are those which Shakspeare and the other great dramatists of England have left us as an inheritance by which to nourish a spirit of charity and manliness. What better text could those have who superintend Ragged Schools, or look after and relieve the necessities of the houseless poor, than the words put into the mouth of King Lear, when, bare-headed and storm-beaten, he cries out:—

"Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and windowed raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp—
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just."

And these are amongst the teachings of the poor players who strut and fret their hour upon the stage;—but still, we hope, like all their fellow-creatures, doing their common duties, as Milton says, in "The great taskmaster's eye," and responsible to Him, notwithstanding their utter unworthiness in the eyes of the committee who manage the Leeds Ragged School. If Mr. Jowitt and his friends participated more largely in the great humanities of the stage, and a little less in the narrow bigotry and dirty pride of the pew, they would have known that mercy shown by man to man, by the strong to the weak, by the rich to the poor, dropped

"as the gentle rain from heaven,
Upon the place beneath; is twice bless'd,—
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes."

But the mercy of Mr. Thorne, expressed practically by a night's receipts of his theatre, so far as the Leeds Ragged School is concerned, lost its virtue in both ways, as the gifts, through being refused, robbed both parties of the benefit to be derived from it.

We should like our pious friends to reflect, if they can, on the loss which our land would have suffered, if Shakspeare and the mighty men who laboured in his craft,—or in his double craft, for he was both play writer, and play actor,—had never lived, never written, or never represented to us on the stage those vices and virtues, those strengths and weaknesses, those joys and sorrows, which make up so much of the sum of human life. We cannot consent to place the actor in the category of the leper, that he may be shunned for fear of contagion; we know that at this moment Macready is spending a portion of the money earned by him on the stage, for the education of the young in the neighbourhood where he proposes to end a life, which in its usefulness has been far greater, we are satisfied, than that of any Ragged School patron in Leeds, and which has given more real pleasure to the world than the lives of the whole lot would, if put together and stretched out to patriarchal lengths. The next thing we shall hear of will be the refusal of burial in consecrated ground to those who write or act plays. An impudence like this, once permitted to assert itself, will not know where to stop. Mr. Jowitt may think, that according to his views, he is doing the actors justice, and will say, as Polonius said to Hamlet, "My Lord, I will use them according to their desert," to which, however, we would reply as Hamlet did, "Odd's bodikin, man, much better; Use every man after his desert and who shall 'scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity. The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty." Hamlet, however, was a philosopher; what Mr. Jowitt and his brother committeemen are, the public of Leeds, we should imagine, by this time understand pretty correctly.

Mrs. Thomas Perry, formerly organist of the parish church, Edmonton, who was chosen teacher of music to the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, for her high class testimonials, as an organist, in September, 1859, has recently been appointed organist to the new chapel of that institution. The organ is from the factory of Gray and Davison, and well sustains the reputation of its builders.

MADAME NOVELLO'S FAREWELL CONCERT.

Our English Jenny Lind sang her last notes on Wednesday night in St. James's Hall. The audience was worthy of the occasion—so numerous that locomotion was scarcely possible, and so discriminating that only the most exquisite manifestations of artistic skill succeeded in raising any enthusiastic demonstrations of approval. Mad. Novello's "Farewell" was in keeping with her past and honourable career. Not a single "trap" was laid to entice applause from the unreflecting. It was a manifestation of pure unadulterated art from beginning to end; and at the termination of the concert the vast assembly dispersed with the most intimate conviction that music had lost one of its most gifted and justly distinguished representatives. About a quarter of a century has elapsed since Clara Novello first came before the public, with a voice that at once elicited unanimous admiration, as one of the most perfect sopranos—allowing even for Billington, Paton, and Stephens—England had produced within the memory of the oldest amateurs, and a talent of such marked promise as warranted unrestricted belief in the future eminence of its young possessor. All that was predicted then—not merely by those who, like Charles Lamb, regarded the late Vincent Novello, Clara's father, as a phœnix among musicians (see "Chapter on Ears," in the Essays of "Elia"), but by impartial observers, who had never listened to the ineffable harmony flowing from the fingers of that most sublime and "inexplicable" of organists—was more than realised. Miss Novello went to Italy, and as "the Clara," made the "délices" of the Scala at Milan, and other first-class theatres. Her return to London led to a series of professional triumphs almost without example, only arrested by her marriage with an Italian nobleman, and her consequent (temporary) retirement from the arena of public exhibition.

What were the reasons that induced Madame Novello (the Contessa ——) to resume her professional career is no business of ours. Enough that she was welcomed back with rapture by all genuine lovers of the musical art, and that she who had figured conspicuously on the stage, as a representative of the most arduous characters in the lyric drama, now devoted her admirable talents exclusively to the concert-room, and most especially to oratorios and sacred music. It is not too much to say that the performances at Exeter Hall, and at our great provincial festivals, have, for the last ten years or thereabout, owed a very large part of their attractions to the singing of this accomplished lady, who, in conjunction with Mr. Sims Reeves, to whom devolved the mantle of the elder Braham, have maintained the English school at such a height as, by the consent of well-judging foreigners themselves, to defy all foreign competition. It is almost superfluous to cite the well-remembered compliment paid to Mad. Novello by the most illustrious composer of his time, who, when applied to by the Philharmonic Society to recommend for the Philharmonic Concerts "the two best singers in Germany," named Clara Novello and another, then performing at the Leipsic Gewandhaus; but the opinion of Mendelssohn was merely an echo of the universal verdict throughout musical Europe; and he who, before all other gifts, admired a classical purity of style, in all probability throughout his short and brilliant career had never met with a more signal example of what was most thoroughly to his taste than in the lady whose name his pen first traced in answer to the application of the Philharmonic directors.

Of these and other matters relating to Mad. Novello's career, we have, however, so recently spoken that it is quite unnecessary to dwell upon them now. The irreparable loss about to be sustained by the musical world was duly felt on Wednesday night, when, although labouring evidently under the effects of indisposition, Mad. Novello sang the majority of the pieces set down for her in such a manner as to extort unqualified admiration of her artistic refinement, together with an avowal, from all sides, that her voice—at this the moment of her abdicating the throne she has so long gloriously filled—was as clear and penetrating, as vigorous and flexible, as bell-like ("silver-toned?") in quality, and, from gradation to gradation, as unerringly modulated as ever. The tacit acknowledgment of such unfaded powers was naturally accompanied by a proportionate degree of regret that the term of their exercise, for the advantage and delight of those who rejoice in the accents of "the human voice divine," was so near approaching its conclusion; and the last piece allotted to her in the programme, the "Ave Maria," from Mendelssohn's unfinished Loreley, seemed the more appropriate, inasmuch as its quiet, sober, and half-melancholy cast was in keeping with the feeling with which its impressive and delicious strains were now associated. It was only just that Clara Novello's "adieu" should be sung to Mendelssohn's music. Nor could anything better fitted to the occasion have been selected than this "Ave Maria"—the "swan's song" of a genius in another sphere. The grand scene from Oberon (her first performance) was chiefly interesting as one of those pieces which Mad. Novello has been, of recent years, most frequently in the habit of introducing, although it was never well suited to her style. Far different and far more deep and genuine was the impression she produced in Susanna's love-song, "Deh! vieni non tardar," in which Mozart—by what many may term an oversight, though really none at all—makes Figaro's mistress very nearly as sentimental as the Countess Almaviva herself. Jenny Lind alone excepted, no one has sung this beautiful air to such absolute perfection as the heroine of yesterday evening, who never gave it with more consummate grace, simplicity, and unaffected expression. The notes of the final cadence seemed to linger as if the songstress, who had uttered them so often, was loth to part with them for ever; and most assuredly they will dwell long and tenderly in the memory of those who now heard them for the last time from the same lips. If any song could be mentioned out of the domain of sacred music with which the name of Mad. Novello has been closely and deservedly associated, it is this exquisite inspiration of the most melodious and natural of composers. Of Mr. Benedict's Undine, which occupied the second part of the programme, we can only say, at present, that the general execution was remarkably good, that Miss Palmer (Bertalda), Mr. Wilbye Cooper (Hildebrand), and Mr. Weiss (Kühleborn), were all that could be wished in their respective parts; and that the highly favourable opinion pronounced on the cantata in the reports of the Norwich Festival were more than justified by a second hearing. Undine will, of course, be given again not long hence; our London concert-givers are not likely to overlook so true and genial a master-piece, especially after the enthusiastic reception it experienced last night, and the honours lavished by the whole audience on its accomplished composer, who directed the performance with his accustomed talent. The Undine was the same Undine who enchanted the amateurs of East Anglia, and by her siren tones fully accounted for the infatuation of the enamoured mortal, Hildebrand. Nothing could be purer, nothing more artistically finished, nothing more musically effective than Mad. Novello's execution of this music, every phrase of which lies so readily within her means, and is so nicely fitted to the peculiar excellencies of her delivery that it is reasonable to presume Mr. Benedict must have been thinking of her during the whole progress of his labour in producing it. The "sensation" (a cantata like an opera, must have its "sensation") was created by the charmingly tuneful air—with chorus of women's voices—"Mark the waves that rippling play," a legitimate triumph alike for singer and composer.

Mad. Novello's final effort was a solo verse in the National Anthem, which brought out once more, and for the last time, that unparagoned "B flat" which has so often enraptured multitudes at the Crystal Palace, and was one of the memorable incidents of the inauguration of that monument. The "B flat" has been talked over ever since, and will in all probability be a theme among amateurs for years to come. A fresher note was never uttered—a lovelier nor a more emphatically musical; and, now that it can be heard no more, except in the mind's ear, we may congratulate its fair possessor on this emphatic display of its undiminished force and purity. Mad. Novello quits the arena of public exhibition in the plenitude of her powers. It cannot be said of her that she retires because she no longer boasts the means of pleasing as before; on the contrary (as in the instance of her Swedish contemporary, already twice alluded to), the unanimous opinion is that the musical art, in losing her, has been deprived of one of its most brilliant ornaments, and that without any adequate reason.

FRENCH PLAYS.

An entirely new character is given to M. Talexy's enterprise by the engagement of Mad. Doche. The performances with which he commenced his season were so merely respectable, there was so utter an absence of any name striking enough to catch the public eye, that the French play seemed in danger of being forgotten altogether. With Mad. Doche, however, a new era begins, the melancholy sight of half a dozen loungers scattered about the stalls having been succeeded by that of a numerous audience, amply filling every part of the Bijou Theatre, which, by the way, is as well suited to its purpose as any house in London. All that it wants is an independent entrance to attract the attention of the passing stranger, who will scarcely surmise that by ascending the staircase of Her Majesty's Theatre, and turning to the left, he will reach a separate establishment entirely devoted to the representation of French plays.

Mad. Doche was in London last summer, and was to have appeared at the St. James's, as one of M. Talexy's leading "stars." But her repertory, at the head of which stood the Dame aux Camélias, was of such a nature that it did not pass muster at the licenser's, the curious wondering not a little that a piece which had been played with impunity as an opera was prohibited as a drama. Consequently Mad. Doche remained unseen during her summer visit, and she will now appear in a series of parts not identified with her Parisian reputation.

Perhaps even that very circumstance may increase the attraction of the accomplished actress, for many of the patrons of the French plays are accustomed to Paris, and will be anxious to see Mad. Doche under a novel aspect. Nor has she shown any timidity in the choice of a new path. Adrienne Lécouvreur is the character she selected for her first night, and we need not say that of all the parts in the repertory of the late Mlle. Rachel, this was one of the most attractive in the eyes of the London public. The bold attempt has succeeded, and an artist need not desire heartier plaudits than those that followed the mimic death of Mad. Doche at the end of the drama.

That the Adrienne of Mad. Doche is based on Mlle. Rachel's conception there is no doubt; the resemblance even extends to the position of the emphasis and the intonation of the voice. Nor must it be imagined that the lady's known talent as an artist of comedy has tempted her to give a tone of levity to the part. Adrienne is still the earnest, impassioned woman to whom we have been always accustomed, and every point incident to her development has been carefully studied by Mad. Doche. The tenderness with which she repeats the fable of La Fontaine, delicately indicating her love for Maurice, while describing the farewell of the pigeon to its departing mate is serious to the last degree. Her entrance into the salon of the Prince de Bouillon, in the fourth act, where she is received by the assembly of titled beauties, is distinguished by a dignity of manner admirably qualified by a modest acknowledgment of inferior rank, and the effect of the situation is greatly heightened by the taste and splendour of her dress. The recitation of the passage from Phèdre, in which she denounces the Princess, is given with true eloquence and overwhelming spirit, bringing down the curtain amid universal applause. On the various emotions of the last scene where to the delineation of other emotions is added the appearance of delirium, Mad. Doche has bestowed a profound study, and is nowhere more felicitous than when she indicates the gradual departure of consciousness, as the poisoned bouquet first begins to take effect. In a word this great part is completely rendered throughout, and we may consider that "French plays" are once more established in London, for M. Talexy's general company, though not strong enough to stand alone, can efficiently support a distinguished leader.

Court Theatricals.—The first theatrical representation this season at Windsor Castle, before her Majesty and Court, is commanded for the 29th inst. when the Adelphi company (assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Wigan) will perform Ici on parle Français and Masks and Faces. The whole arrangements are under the control of Mr. Donne. The Adelphi and St. James's Theatres will be closed on the 29th instant.

Death of Mr. F. G. Tinney.—(From an occasional Contributor.)—With regret we have to record the death of the above talented and clever pianist and composer. He died on the 13th inst., deeply lamented by numerous friends, both in and out of the musical profession, at the early age of 45, and was interred at the Brompton Cemetery on Friday, his remains followed to the grave by his family, Mr. Charles Coote, his late partner, and several members of the musical profession, &c. Mr. Tinney, in his sphere as a composer of dance music, and compared with surrounding luminaries in that line, was a star of the first magnitude, and his works will not soon be forgotten amongst the salons of the aristocracy and gentry, where, during the season, a new waltz or quadrille was hailed with enthusiasm from his pen, and not considered one of the ephemeral effusions of the terpsichorean world, but an artistic triumph accompanied by the highest musical intelligence. He was partner with Mr. C. Coote up to the year 1857, and co-director of the famous "Coote and Tinney's band." His friends, who were aware of his integrity and kindheartedness, feel deeply his loss, and deplore that from a cruel and deplorable disease, which embittered with many pangs his latter days, and preyed on a frame already weak by nature, compelled him to abstain from any vigorous action in his professional career for the last three years. He has left a widow and seven children totally unprovided for. Surely those who have joined in the gay and festive scenes amid "marble halls," to the enlivening strains of poor Tinney's waltzes will minister comfort to his bereaved widow and children, and while his remembrance must long endure in the sphere which his talents most adorned, and his name respected, for no man owned him a grudge, or could he count an enemy, it is to be hoped an appeal will not be made in vain to the public, to whose amusement he administered in the shape of some of the most popular dance music of the day. Contributions received by the principal music-sellers.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

PROGRAMME OF THE
THIRD CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26, 1860,
The Instrumental Pieces selected from the Works of

BEETHOVEN.

PART I.—Quartet, in C minor, Op. 18, No. 4 (Beethoven), Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (by desire), M. SAINTON, Herr RIES, Herr SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song, "Nozze di Figaro" (Mozart), Mr. SANTLEY. Song, "Canst thou deem my heart is changing," (Macfarren) Charles II., Miss GERARD. Sonata, in E flat, Op. 7, Pianoforte solus (Beethoven), First time, Mr. CHARLES HALLE.
PART II.—Sonata, in F major, for Violoncello and Pianoforte (Beethoven), Signor PIATTI and Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Song, "Gipsy's Warning" (Benedict), Mr. SANTLEY. Song, "Knowest thou the Land" (Beethoven) Miss GERARD. Trio, in G major, Op. 1, Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello (Beethoven), Mr. CHARLES HALLE, M. SAINTON, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s. Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; and the principal music publishers.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERT LIBRARY.—INSTRUMENTAL DEPARTMENT. (Edited by S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.—No. I.—DUSSEK'S SONATA IN B FLAT (Performed, for the Fourth time, at the Monday Popular Concerts, November 12, 1860—First Concert, Third Season.) No. 2.—MOZART'S SONATA IN B FLAT (No. 14), for Pianoforte and Violin. (Frequently performed at the Monday Popular Concerts.) VOCAL DEPARTMENT. (Edited by S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL). "NAME THE GLAD DAY," Canzonet, written by JOHN OXENFORD, Esq., composed by J. L. DUSSEK (Sung by Madame LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, at the Monday Popular Concerts, Nov. 12, 1860)—"Ah, why do we love?" (Macfarren). "Soft and bright the Gems of Night" (H. Smart); and "Thy pardon, dearest Treasure" duet (Dussek).
London: CHAPPELL & Co., 49 and 50, New Bond Street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. Smith.—Mr. Nugent, the box bookkeeper, begs to inform the friends and patrons of the theatre that ROBIN HOOD can only be performed a few more times this season, viz., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturday. Persons desirous of booking places, to prevent disappointment at night, are requested to make early application at the box-office of the theatre.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Farewell performances of Titiens and Giuglini, previous to their departure.—This Evening (Saturday) Nov. 24, ROBIN HOOD: Sims Reeves, Santley, Honey, Parkinson, Patey, Bartleman, Lemaire, and Lemmens-Sherrington. Commencing at 8 o'clock each evening. Reduced prices as usual.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—Notice.—The Lessee begs to inform the public that the drama of "45" can only be played THIS EVENING (Saturday). Mr. Webster, although suffering from severe indisposition, has continued to perform nightly rather than disappoint the public. The following letter has been received from Mr. Webster, which compels the lessee to withdraw the play after to-morrow night:—

"New Theatre Royal, Adelphi, Nov. 21, 1860.
"My dear Mr. Smith,—I have struggled on through a bronchial affection in order not to stop the run of the new drama, A Story of the "45;" but the effect is too serious to proceed further than this week at present. I regret this interference with your interest, but cannot help it.
"Dr. Billing will inform you what I have suffered.
"Yours truly,
"E. T. Smith, Esq." "B. WEBSTER."

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. Smith.—Extraordinary Attraction.—Two Companies.—Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, Messrs. B WEBSTER, J. T. TOOLE, PAUL BEDFORD, R. ROXBY, TILBURY, BELFORD, LAMBERT, M'LEAN, TEMPLETON, FARRELL, Mrs. FRANK MATHEWS, Mrs. DOWTON, Misses ARDEN, H. HOWARD, HENRIETTA SIMMS, &c.—Two New Pieces, with the most extraordinary and triumphant success ever achieved within the walls of a theatre.—THIS EVENING (Saturday), Nov. 24, Her Majesty's Servants will perform (for the last time but one this season) Watts Phillips's great historical drama, A TALE OF THE "45," with Beverley's magnificent scenery and effects, together with the accurate Tableau of Hogarth. Principal characters by Messrs. B. WEBSTER, J. T. TOOLE, PAUL BEDFORD, SPENCER, M'LEAN, DIXON, BARSBY; Mesdames H. SIMMS, H. HOWARD, THIRLWALL, &c. To conclude with the new comedy of the BILLET DOUX. Characters by Mr. and Mrs. C. MATHEWS, Messrs. M'LEAN, FARRELL, SPENCER; Mrs. FRANK MATTHEWS, Mrs. DOWTON, Miss ARDEN, and Miss HOWARD. The box-office open daily, from 10 till 5 o'clock Doors open at half-past 6; commence at 7. Reduced prices. Stage Manager—Mr. Robert Roxby.

To Correspondents.

MR. JOSEPH GODDARD.—Next week.
PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.—Every piece that came to hand has been reviewed. We shall be happy to receive the others.
OVATION.—Mr. Sutherland Edwards.
INTERPRET.—Mr. Shirley Brooks.
AENDER.—Mr. Augustus Mayhew of course.
J. R. M.—The suggestion shall be attended to.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.
ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... 0d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1860.

THE composer of the immediate future (at least in London) is, after all, not Herr Wagner, whose unofficially promised Tannhäuser we should have liked to hear at the Royal English Opera, though we can quite understand our wishes on that subject not being shared by Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison. The coming maestro, who is to attack us at once at both our opera-houses, is a gentleman of Parisian fame, or at least of Opéra Comique and Théâtre Lyrique notoriety. His name is Victor Massé, his nation France; Paris is his dwelling-place, and Les Noces de Jeannette and La Reine Topaze are to be his salvation with the English.

If any one had asked us to mention some composer of reputation and of decided merit, whose music, gracefully and cleverly written as it might be, would not be likely to succeed in England, we should have hesitated for half a minute, and should then have named M. Victor Massé. If our questioner, however, had reminded us that this composer had written several attractive "light soprano" parts, such as could not fail to exhibit to advantage the brilliant vocalisation of Miss Louisa Pyne, we should have admitted that we had perhaps replied somewhat hastily, but of course should not have eaten our words. Probably, however, by way of conciliating our interlocutor, we should have added that Mad. Miolan-Carvalho's part of La Reine Topaze, in the opera so entitled, would also suit Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington to a D. To this our imaginary well-informed personage would have rejoined (with more or less politeness), that whatever we might think about the part of "La Reine Topaze" being suited to Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, she was not going to sing it, inasmuch as it had been already allotted to Mlle. Parepa.

"Mlle. Parepa!" we should have exclaimed; "you mean the Mlle. Parepa who made her first appearance in England at the Royal Italian Opera, as Elvira in the Puritani, who used to sing the air from Ernani with so much success at the Crystal Palace Concerts, and who, at the Royal English Opera, played the part of Leonora in the Trovatore so much better than any other singer who ever attempted it at an English theatre?"

"The same."

"And when is Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington to appear as Norma,' as Lucrezia Borgia, as Semiramide?

A smile or a stare would have been the answer, according to whether our green-room gossiper approved or disapproved of the sarcastic nature of this past inquiry.

* * * * * *

From the above dialogue the ingenious reader will have discovered that M. Victor Massé's Noces de Jeannette is to be produced at the Royal Italian Opera (where it will, in fact, be given on Monday for the first time, under the title of The Marriage of Georgette), with Miss Louisa Pyne in the principal part; and that when La Reine Topaze is brought out at Her Majesty's Theatre (where it may be expected at the same time as the pantomime) the character of the Topaz Queen will be assigned to Mlle. Parepa.

What shall we tell our readers about these two operas, of which as we have said so much, and yet so little, we feel really bound to give some further account? To begin with why is "Jeannette" changed into "Georgette." What a name is Georgette for music! Spell it phonetically, or after the fashion in which we should spell such a word if we heard it from the lips of a Russian, a Turk, or of any foreigner whose alphabet does not correspond with our own; write it, that is to say, "Djordjet," and the mind's ear (through the bodily eye) starts at the harshness of the sound. "Jeannette," on the other hand, is as soft and musical as the Scotch "Janet" (or "Djanet") derived from it is the contrary.

Who translated Les Noces? We remember some eight or ten years ago a librettist and stage-manager (now a theatre-manager also) who used to walk about the Paris boulevards reciting an English version of M. Victor Massé's pretty opera to his friends, and here and there singing the airs, to the astonishment, if not delight, of the waiters at the Café Cardinal. His friends should have told him, whatever he did, not to alter "Jeannette" into "Georgette."

If we had listened more attentively to the verses recited and the airs sung at the place and in the manner already mentioned, some eight or ten years ago, we should perhaps now be in a position to tell our readers more than we are actually able to communicate to them about the story and music of Les Noces de Jeannette. But repentance, with us at least, always comes too late.

We have heard La Reine Topaze, however, not monologically (so to speak), but in its original dramatic form—not in the open air and without the support of instruments, but in a regular theatre with all the advantages of orchestral accompaniments. "La Reine Topaze" is a distinguished and royal member of that race, tribe or people whom the mediæval Latinists called Egyptiani, whom the germans have named Zigeuner, who are known in Spain as Zingari, or Zincali (l'un et l'autre se disent, as the dying grammarian observed), who in Russia are so much despised, in the masculine as Tsigari, and much adored, in the feminine, as Tsigankie, and who in England are familiarly known as gipsies. Topaz the queen sees and knows everything, and turns out at last the last of the Salviatis, a distinguished Venetian family. But, in the meanwhile, what does she not sing? airs that are difficult, ingenious, and sometimes even beautiful. Above all the air of the bee—which is not a series of hideous perversions of a beautiful melody under the pretext of variations, like the Carnaval de Venise sung by the exquisitely singing but misguided Mad. Carvalho, but a really artistic specimen of its kind; a kind, however, which we cannot but say that we admire, which, with a little pressing, we would admit that we despised.

May both M. Victor Massé's operas be successful! But then if they are both successful we shall have some more of them (for he has written Galathée, La Chanteuse, Voilée, La Fiancée du Diable, Les Saisons, &c.), and, to speak candidly, we think two will be quite enough, especially when administered so rapidly one after the other. We wish well to every one, and certainly to Miss Louisa Pyne and Miss Euphrosyne Parepa, but M. Victor Massé is not every one. We do not mean to suggest by this that we have any dislike to M. Victor Massé, for as a man we have no acquaintance with him and as a composer of ability, taste and refinement, we look upon him with respect; but with Les Noces de Jeannette at Covent Garden, and La Reine Topaze, at Her Majesty's Theatre, we are sadly afraid that we shall have too much of him.

DINADAM.

WHEN an artist, who has long been received by the public with the highest favour, is about to take his leave for ever, he invariably selects for his final effort that performance which has won for him the most genuine applause, and with which his name has been most intimately associated. John Kemble took his farewell of the stage in Coriolanus, certainly one of his grandest, if not his very grandest, impersonations. Miss O'Neill bade adieu in Juliet, Charles Young in Hamlet, Macready in Macbeth—not to instance lesser stars, who, wishing to leave the best possible impression, naturally chose the parts in which their talents were best displayed. Indeed, to pursue any other course would, a priori, seem an act of fatuity. And yet, within the past week, we have had an example of a great artist appearing for the last time before the public, who, not weighing the causes which led to her immense reputation, did not deem it necessary to introduce any one of those performances which had been universally accepted as most complete and most admirable. Mad. Clara Novello's "Farewell Concert" will, doubtless, occur at once to every reader, and many will exclaim with ourselves, "What could have induced Mad. Novello to ignore sacred music in her final appeal to the sympathies of the public?" Now that Mad. Novello has quitted the scene for ever, and that her admirers will have to look back to her past triumphs and substitute recollections for realities, with what performances will her name be most immediately linked? Will thoughts of the artist inevitably recall the scena from Oberon, the cavatina from Luorezia Borgia, the rondo finale from La Sonnambula, or the Jacobite song about "Charlie?" Will not memory the rather conjure up echoes of "I know that my Redeemer liveth," "Rejoice greatly," "Let the bright seraphim," "With verdure clad," "O mighty pens," "Come unto Him," "Hear ye, Israel," &c., &c.—all sacred songs, in short, in which the great singer left an indelible impression, and which none who heard can ever forget. To say that Mad. Clara Novello is one of the most accomplished interpreters of holy song in our own times is to utter a truism; but to state that her sacred singing far transcends her efforts in other branches of the art, may not necessarily be a platitude, since it does not appear to have been generally known to managers, or how account for the extraordinary fact, that not one single piece of sacred music was given at the farewell concert on Wednesday? Surely he who contrived the programme never gave it a moment's thought, and, fortunately, the public were too anxious to "assist" at the farewell performance of the renowned songstress to trouble themselves much about the appositeness of the selection. Clara Novello, nevertheless, should have sung her last in the Messiah or the Creation, those sacred works of the great masters in which she had exhibited her talents and capabilities to the utmost perfection, and in which she had achieved her brightest and most enduring laurels. This is the more to be lamented, since she appeared on Wednesday night positively for the last time, and there is no chance of hearing her again, as she was heard at the Crystal Palace, the directors of which on the occasion of her farewell performance had evidently studied the talent of the singer and the feeling of the public far more cunningly and wisely than the person or persons under whose management the "Farewell Concert" at St. James's Hall was organised.

All minor considerations, however, were absorbed in the regretful thought that Mad. Novello appeared in the concert room for the last time, and that that enchanting voice, of which for purity and beauty of tone no one present could remember the parallel, would never more be heard breathing its silver murmurs in exultant ears, and that the old familiar face had looked and smiled its last upon the assembled thousands. The scene on Wednesday might indeed have been more demonstrative but the uppermost feeling in the minds of many was doubtless sadness, and people are never in the mood to applaud lustily when their sensibilities are deeply moved. Moreover, the audience was almost entirely composed of those in the better ranks of life, and the majority were ladies. Hence the enthusiasm on the entrance and departure of the heroine of the evening was not so uproarious as if a large division of the visitors had belonged to that vociferant class which frequents the pit and galleries of the theatres. The regret, however, was not the less intense because voices were mute and palms were at rest. That every heart was stirred and its sympathy awakened we do not doubt. The immense mass of spectators seemed to hang breathlessly upon every note that escaped the lips of the singer, and the sudden exclamations of delight and the ill-suppressed plaudits betokened unmistakeably the influence she exercised over her hearers.

Year by year the lights of song are being removed from our artistic hemisphere, and no stars appear to fill up their places. What loss Malibran was to the lyric stage Mad. Clara Novello will be to the sacred concert-room. Even should her real successor arrive, people will be slow in acknowledging her. It takes a long time to make a first-rate reputation in England. A second Clara Novello must not only possess the extraordinary accomplishments and qualities of her predecessor, but she must be many years before the public, and have done numberless things, independent of singing, to win their favour, before she can be accepted as her substitute. When all these circumstances cohere, then, and then only, will the public be pleased to elevate the new candidate for prima donna honours to the throne of Clara Novello.

ANGUISH.

Letters to the Editor.

MR. EDWARD LODER.

SIR,—Some weeks since Mr. J. A. Barnett addressed a few lines to you respecting Mr. Edward Loder's pecuniary difficulties, aring from long suffering, medical expenses, and, I apprehend, a cessation of professional income.

Mr. Barnett's lines were read by me, and I have acted on his suggestions in part, by subscribing for five copies of Edward Loder's twelve songs, published as a bound volume at a guinea, for his especial benefit, by Messrs. Boosey and Duncan Davison. These songs constitute a charming selection, and cannot fail in being most acceptable to vocal amateurs. I shall bring them under the notice of my pupils, and entertain no doubt of being enabled to sell several books of them. I have also given in my name as a weekly subscriber to a fund Mr. Allan Irving is raising on Mr. Loder's behalf. Permit me, Sir, therefore, to suggest to Mr. Barnett and other professors of singing, that they might greatly benefit Mr. Loder by subscribing for a few copies of the work I have alluded to, and their pupils will thank them for bringing such acceptable compositions under their notice.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

A PROFESSOR OF SINGING.

CUNCTATION PERFUNCTORY?

DEAR PETIPACE,—I strongly object to "cunctation" as a more or less (!) word. Define it and I will pay your burial (!!) expenses.—Yours,

20 MILES AWAY (!!!)

N.B.—I refer you to our mutual friend, the Bank of England (!!!!) British brandy (!!!!!) at 5.

FLOLL
(of the Out Isles).

NB.B.—Hay (!!!!!!) still in the ascendant. Bad news for MAPLE (!!!!!!!)

Haven't tasted (!!!!!!!!) a theatre for 8 months.

[Is "Floll" another Scotch cultellator? and from the Out Isles, too? If so, let him read Culvertail on Grouse, or consult the divine Aurelius Prudentius, who writes at the end of a diatribe against nyctalops (theological nyctalops) :—

"Nodos tenaces, recta RUMPIT REGULA
Infesta dissertantibus.
Idcirco Mundi STULTA delegit Deus,
Ut concidant Sophistica."

After this what becomes of the mythos of Hay and Maple?—PETIPACE.]

A "SUCCESSFUL COMPOSER," YOU'RE WANTED.

DEAR SIR,—I send for your inspection an anonymous letter addressed to me the other day. It may perhaps, be comforting and instructive to your readers as an evidence of the progress of art, and of all the host of little amenities supposed to march in its train.

It is to be regretted that the writer has been unkind enough to withhold his name. Otherwise, not only might I have had the chance of repaying personally some of the obligations with which he seems disposed to overwhelm me (the fine of a double postage among the number), but the musical public would have had some satisfactory mode of judging whether or no the town of Scarborough be really, at this moment, blessed by the residence of a "successful composer." At all events, none who read his letter can doubt the high probability that his merit is at least equal to his modesty.

However "successful" my correspondent may be as a composer of music, he is certainly most unfortunate as an inventor of facts. All who know me are pretty well aware that I had ceased to contribute a single line to the Atlas quite ten years before the date of that critical visitation which you here find so mildly deprecated. Thus much as to the matter of the writer;—his manner (manners?) requires, I think, no comment whatever.

Hoping you will accord to this gentleman—whoever he may be—that publicity for his sentiments which I fear he himself would have been too diffident to ask, I am, dear Sir, faithfully yours,

HENRY SMART.

Nov. 15, 1860.

(Copy of Letter.)

"SIR,—Some time ago (in 1854 or 1855) you spoke disrespectfully and very erroneously of a song of mine in the Atlas. Other critics praised it; but you are a crabbed fellow, full of your own conceits, and deserve a cudgel. You are no longer critic of the Atlas, thank Heaven, or of any other paper; and I would advise you to beware how you speak wrongly of any composer's works. You are a vile fellow, and nothing but a croque-note, a mechanical music-wright, yourself.—Your obedient servant,

"A SUCCESSFUL COMPOSER."

"Scarborough, 2nd Oct., 1860."

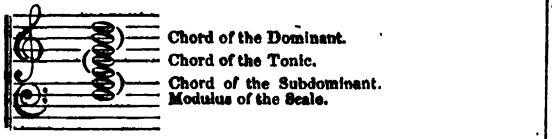
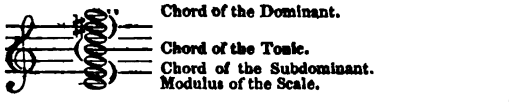
[Our pages will be reopened to Mr. Henry Smart next week.—ED. M.W.]

ON THE SUPERTONIC AS A PRIMARY BASE.

SIR,—It is anticipating the subject of my future letters to reply fully to your remark appended to my last letter. Nevertheless, that the supertonic is not the primary base of any chord having an immediate relation to the tonic, is evident from the nature and construction of the scale, which contains the sounds of the primary chords of the tonic, dominant, and subdominant only, which may be exhibited thus :—



The above contains all the sounds of the scale of C major, F is the modulus of the scale, and the nearest positive harmonic base of all those sounds. F C G and D are all the primary sounds in the scale of C, as primary, but D, the supertonic, being the upper sound, cannot be the base of any of the sounds which are below it. The chord formed from the sounds D F A in this scale is imperfect, F and A being too flat in the ratio 80 : 81 to form consonant sounds with D. If we add the primary chord of D to the preceding diagram, we should have the sounds of two distinct scales, which would be an inconsistency as the subject under consideration is one scale only. It is certain that D leads to the primary base G, but in the key of C what is required is, not what leads to G but what leads to C, and that is the primary sound G. Neither could the chord of the supertonic be substituted for the subdominant, for then we should have the following sounds which are the scale of G not of C —



Again, the chord of the dominant in combination with the modulus of the scale decides the key, as shown in one of my previous letters, then if in the first diagram we take away the sounds B D F (G belonging equally to the chords of the tonic and dominant) the remaining sounds which complete the scale are consequently those indicated; these are A C E G, which are resolvable into the two chords A C E and C E G, the chords of the resolution in the major key. In the same manner in the minor scale we have the chords A♭ C E♭ and C E♭ G, the whole of these four chords are connected with the tonic, all the sounds being consonant with C, and they are the derivative chords of the system having the unit sound C. In like manner with the chords of the dominant and subdominant, so that in the derivative chords of the three systems having the unit sounds F C and G are contained all the chords in connection with those sounds as subdominant, tonic, and dominant. In some of my future letters I purpose showing that every chord in the key of C is undoubtedly, in its simple form, one, or a combination of two, of these chords. However, I may as well point out now the relation of the chord D F♯ A with the key of C; this key, as shown in my last, is connected with the key of A minor; now if we refer to the system having the primary base A, we have the key of A minor and also its relative key C major, the primary sounds now become derivative sounds, and the derivatives primaries, thus —

Primary Bases.	Primary Chords.	Secondary Derivative Chords.
D	D F♯ A D F A	F♯ A C♯ F A C
A	A C♯ E A C E	C♯ E G♯ C E G
E	E G♯ B E G B	G♯ B D♯ G B D

A comparison of the above with the derivative chords of the three systems having the unit sounds F C and G, will show that the chord D F♯ A is the major chord of D F A in the secondary derivative chords of the system having the unit sound F (the subdominant of C). Now this D, as stated in my last, does not belong to the key of C (see also MUSICAL WORLD, Jan. 28), it is not the supertonic of that key, but is the 6th of the scale of the subdominant F, the combined chords D F A and F A C form the chord of the added 6th on the subdominant, of which chord there are two varieties in the major key and two in the minor, as will be explained hereafter. That this chord is connected with the subdominant may also be seen in the following example :—

The three primary chords decide the key without the introduction of the dominant 7th on G. Although the sounds in the 2nd bar are nominally the same as the chord of the dominant 7th on D, yet the real sounds in both varieties of this chord (the added 6th on the subdominant) as represented by the ratios of the true intervals, are very different from those of the chord of the dominant 7th. If the sound C be omitted in the first two bars the chord remains the same, though it might be called a chord of substitution, D F A being substituted for the adjacent chord F A C, the true subdominant; any two adjacent chords being so nearly connected (having two sounds the same in each chord) that one may be used instead of the other, this, of course, does not alter their fundamental basses, thus the subdominant chords D F A and F A C in the key of C major have both F, the subdominant, for their fundamental bass, D in the chord D F A being the sound added, and C the one omitted; the same chords in the key of A minor have D, the subdominant, for their bass, C in the chord F A C being now the added sound, and D the one omitted; this chord, in the key of A minor, would be more correctly called the added 7th on the subdominant.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,
W. W. PARKINSON.

Cheetham Hill, Manchester, Nov. 16, 1860.

A NEW NATIONAL ANTHEM.

November 14th.

SIR,—A new national anthem was sent to you by post a fortnight ago, to be published in the MUSICAL WORLD if suitable. As it has not appeared, the author suspects you have not received it. To satisfy him on that head, you will oblige by informing him in your answers to correspondents, addressed to NATIONALITY.

["Nationality" should style himself "Newnationality." The new "national anthem" has not come to hand.—ED.]

DOUBTS.

SIR,—Truly, fiend of the abyss, I follow thy lead in most things musical, in all things epicurean. As thou may'st see in the last paragraph of the leader in the Camelot Chronicle of last Saturday, I did thy behest touching "Best," the Liverpuddlean, wiping the noses of the magnates, misprinted by the d——d printer, magistrates. (Ha! Ha!) Nevertheless, in regard to Hector Berlioz, I follow thee not, from sheer inability to obfustícate thy polysyllabicality into Anglo-Saxonicanonicals. Likewise, I would know why thou defacest a meritorious print, given to awful but ARTISTIC puffing, with those hideous effigies of Guy's? To this thou wilt respond, "Business." To which I will affably rejoinderate, "Business be blowed!" Enough. This is but to shake thine hand—to say that I am again at Camelot, and hard at work.

Whereby, I pray thee, ora pro nobis. Ever thine, SAGRAMORE LE DESIROUS.

[Par mon chef, damp Chevalier, vous estes donques bien loing de ce que vous pensez: car par ceste seule raison que vous aleguez ferois encores que je fusse mort.—PETIPAGE.]

The Opera.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—Martha was produced on Monday, the cast being the same as that on the opening night of last season, when Mr. E. T. Smith inaugurated his management of Her Majesty's Theatre. Why M. Flotow's opera should have been given once only it is impossible to say. Perhaps there is no part in which Signor Giuglini is heard to more advantage than Lionello, the music of which he sings to perfection. Mlle. Titien's piercingly brilliant upper notes are wonderfully telling in the soprano music, which is unusually high throughout. Although the character is beneath her great powers, her performance is most admirable. The Plumkett of Signor Vialetti has much to recommend it, and if the singer could refrain from taking certain liberties with the "beer song," would have more. Mad. Lemaire is one of the most useful of comprimarie, although she writes herself of the soprani-contralto assoluto, which she is not. She sings well, and acts very becomingly, the part of Nancy. We shall not attempt to show cause why, of the Italian performances, Martha has proved more successful than Don Giovanni, the Huguenots, Lucrezia Borgia, or the Trovatore. But so it is; the Italian nights continue to improve with Martha. Meanwhile, Robin Hood has lost little or none of its attraction, even though the indisposition of Mr. Sims Reeves necessitated the substitution of Mr. Swift on Tuesday and Thursday. It would not be fair to speak of Mr. Swift's performance under the circumstances. By and by the new tenor will be enabled to appeal for favour without any fear of comparison. The French opera, La Reine Topaze, translated into the vernacular, is in rehearsal, and Mr. Swift will give the public a taste of his qualities. Mlle. Parepa will sustain the character of the Queen. We may be excused from questioning the policy of making English Opera dependant on foreign composers. That Mr. E. T. Smith's second novelty in English Opera should be French, is neither consolatory nor complimentary to our own musicians; nor does it say much for the manager's expressed determination to uphold native talent.

Royal English Opera.—Native talent must certainly be at a discount. Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison, like Mr. E. T. Smith, are compelled to rush to the French répertoire for new works. On Monday night a new operetta, The Marriage of Georgette (a version of Les Noces de Jeannette), will be performed, and Miss Louisa Pyne make her first appearance since her recent indisposition. The Night Dancers has been given every night since the first performance.

The Theatres.

Haymarket.—The notion of an inoffensive gentleman arriving at a country town and being mistaken for some celebrity of the day, with whose peculiarities he has scarcely anything in common, has formed the basis of several farces supposed to refer with more than usual pungency to the occurrences of actual life. Many months have not elapsed since the Olympic audience laughed at Mr. Robson's assumption of a timid gentleman, who was wrongly supposed to be the "Benicia Boy," and some time previously another gentleman of weak nerves was placed on the St. James's stage, tormented by the general but incorrect belief that he was "Garibaldi's Englishman." Readers with long memories will easily recall a number of similar cases, and last night we had a fresh application of the old notion to a new topic, in a farce called the Lion-slayer. Mr. Gulliver Cumming, a harmless furrier, who has come to a provincial town to purchase lion-skins, is supposed to be the famous Gordon Cumming, arrived to capture a live lion, ecently escaped from a menagerie. His supposed courage at first gains for him a great deal of respect, for which he cannot account, but when the unexpected proximity of the lion causes him to run away much faster than the timidest inhabitant of the town the illusion is dissipated. The character of the "lion-slayer" is by no means worthy of Mr. Compton, but the extravagant jokes of the piece caused a great deal of laughter, which at last was mingled with no small quantity of hissing. Mr. Tom Taylor's comedy, the Babes in the Wood, has been liberally curtailed, and now plays within the compass of three hours. The gratification of the spectators is thereby much increased, and last night the piece elicited the noisiest approbation of a crowded audience, assembled to patronise the benefit of Mr. Wyld, the treasurer.

St. James's.—The programme of this house has been entirely changed, Mr. and Mrs. Wigan having revived the older pieces with which their names are associated. Still Waters run Deep was not only one of the most successful works produced during their management of the Olympic Theatre, but it has become almost a classic of the modern stage, and even amateurs regard it with avidity. Mr. A. Wigan, of course, retains his original character of Mildmay, and Mrs. Wigan the part of Mrs. Sternhold, her assumption of which so materially increased the strength of the cast during the first run of the piece. Mr. Emery, being one of the St. James's company, is restored to his original part, Mr. Potter, which is one of the best in his repertory. The revival of M. Jacques also enables Mr. A. Wigan fully to display his well-known talent for portraying French character.

Strand.—A new farce, based on a very extravagant notion, was produced last night, with the title Did I dream it? Mr. Poppy, a sleepy-headed gentleman, is supposed to dream with such intensity that he cannot rightly distinguish between the facts of his waking life and the fantastic occurrences with which his visions are replete. His dreams, moreover, are of such a nature that they never show the character of his friends in a favourable light, but have all the unflattering quality of the photograph without any of its correctness. Of course a gentleman endowed with such an idiosyncrasy is sure to run into all manner of scrapes. He will charge persons with delinquencies of which they are wholly guiltless, and a confession that he has mistaken a dream for a reality will with difficulty be admitted as a sufficient apology for gross calumny. The scrapes into which Poppy runs are of the most complicated kind, seriously compromising his own happiness and that of every person who unfortunately belongs to the circle of his acquaintance, but as Poppy himself is played in a very amusing manner by Mr. J. Clarke his oddities keep his audience in a constant roar.

Princess's.—The evolutions of a female rifle corps constituted one of the chief attractions in the pantomime produced last year at the Princess's, and a similar success is now aimed at by a "corps de ballet," equipped in the fashion associated with Garibaldi. The dance is introduced in the course of a broad farce called the Garibaldian Excursionists, which brings the evening to a close after the conclusion of Ruy Blas. The applause bestowed on M. Fechter when he first appeared was no transient sign of favour. The more he has acted the more he has increased in favour, and it is a long time since a fresh actor has become the object of so much curiosity and admiration.

Olympic Theatre.—It is worthy of observation that every piece brought out at the Olympic, however trifling, is put on the stage with all the earnestness proper to a grave undertaking. No theatre appears less frequently on the record, because at no theatre are more permanent successes attained. That constant change of performance which is to be found at some other establishments, and necessarily results in an incomplete style of production and a slovenly manner of execution, is altogether foreign to the Olympic, were change for the mere sake of change never takes place. Here the minutest niceties of character and costume are observed in the smallest "lever du rideau;" here the personages on the stage, however few in number, are sure to be effectively grouped, instead of standing in the time-honoured straight line; here the first night of performance is not a dress rehearsal.

The last novelty at the Olympic, a clever version by Mr. W. Gordon of a charming little French piece, called Le Feu au Couvent, is an illustration of the general principle of management. The subject, like that of La Joie de la Maison, is the conversion of a roué father by an innocent little daughter, and consequently the interest of the piece depends on the actress, whose department is by the French termed "ingénuité." Representations of this department are not common on the English stage, for mature talent is not often found in connection with an appearance of thorough juvenility, but the Olympic managers are fortunate enough to have in their company Miss Louisa Keeley, who is exactly suited to these youthful heroines, and who, since her début, at the Princess's last year, has never undertaken a character which she has not rendered effective. Amabel, as she is called, may be added to the list of her great successes, and as there is an eccentric part for Mr. H. Wigan, and the roué father is exceedingly well played by the rising actor Mr. Robinson, the piece is efficiently sustained in all the leading parts. We should not forget to state that the English title is Home for a Holiday, and that the scene of action is placed in the London of the 18th century, with every regard to appropriate costume.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—Had any seer no further back than three years since predicted that on a cold raw foggy November night St. James's Hall would be crowded by an audience attracted solely by a programme of classical chamber music, that seer would have incurred the risk of being considered as labouring under a mild form of lunacy—a far-seer (farceur?), too-far-seer indeed. The prediction of the seer in question, who saw through the fog in question, of the distant year and month in question, would have been called in question, as the prediction of a simple fanatic—a 'fanatico per la musica' who should be promptly taken care of by his friends. But had the self-same seer foretold that by the year 1860 a series of concerts, devoted exclusively to a class of music at one time almost entirely unknown, save to amateurs and the wealthy, who could afford high prices at Willis's Rooms, should be not only inaugurated but so firmly established as to be looked upon by the musical public as much in the light of an institution as the Philharmonic, the Sacred Harmonic, or the Opera, that self-same seer would, indeed, have had "no honour in his own country"—nay, worse, might have formed the subject for a commission 'De lunatico inquirendo' and been ultimately consigned to the tender mercies of a private asylum. The success, nevertheless, artistic and pecuniary, of the Monday Popular Concerts has long been placed beyond a doubt, and their recommencement is hailed by lovers of good music as a welcome boon now that the long winter evenings have fairly, or rather darkly, set in. On Monday last the post of honour was occupied by Mozart, the instrumental pieces being selected entirely from his works and comprising the quintett in A major for clarionet, two violins, viola, and violoncello, respectively held by Messrs Lazarus, Sainton, Ries, Schreurs, and Piatti; the sonata in C minor, for pianoforte alone, played by Mr. Charles Hallé (first time at these concerts); one of two sonatas in E minor, for pianoforte and violin, publicly introduced for the first time in this country, (Mr. Charles Hallé and M. Sainton); and the trio in E flat, for pianoforte, clarionet, and viola. Here, so far as criticism is concerned, "Othello's occupation's gone;" for when the music is of such a character as invariably marks the selection at the Monday Popular Concerts, and the executants are worthy of the music assigned them, but one descriptive word suggests itself, even to the critical mind, and that word is "perfection." We may, notice a remarkable feature as distinguishing these from the ordinary run of musical entertainments, where we find the first piece in the programme serves much the same purpose as the "airy nothing" at a French theatre—the lever de rideau," which prepares us for the solid attraction of the evening. Even at the Opera many seem to regard the overture and opening chorus as so much preliminary noise. The reverse is the case at St. James's Hall, where, as a Rule (with some few "stalled," or unin-"stalled" exceptions) people are in their places, and eager to devote as much attention to the first as to any succeeding piece. The quintett (given for the fourth time) with which the concert opened, was listened to with intense delight, and the outburst of enthusiastic applause at the end of each movement, showed how thoroughly its manifold beauties were appreciated. The second movement—Larghetto (con sordini)—created a furore. The exquisite clarionet playing of M. Lazarus contributed in no small degree to this result, and frequently as we have had occasion to praise this gentleman's performance, we never heard him to greater advantage, faultless tone and mechanism being combined with taste and feeling beyond reproach. In the pianoforte solo Mr. Charles Hallé displayed his well-known capabilities as a performer of the first rank, deservedly gaining the heartiest plaudits. The duet, in which M. Sainton divided the honours with Mr. Hallé, is peculiar as well as charming; peculiar, as being in two movements only, both in the minor key, and charming from its plaintive and unaffected beauty. We hope this first time of hearing it may not be also the last. The vocal music must be dismissed in a few words—Mad. Lemmens Sherrington repeating Dussek's beautiful canzonet, "Name the glad day" (which was introduced at the previous concert), and also her favourite, "Ah, why do we love" (Macfarren); Mr. Santley, "The Bellringer" (Wallace), and "Rough wind that moanest loud" (J. W. Davison), both of which he has frequently sung. The singing in either instance was irreproachable. The pianoforte accompaniments of Mr. Benedict were, as usual, all that could be wished. At the concert of next Monday the instrumental pieces will be selected from Beethoven, and include the fine sonata in E flat Op. 7 for pianoforte, solus (first time)—pianist Mr. Hallé.

DODINAS.

THE LONDON TONIC SOL-FA CHOIR.—(Communicated).—We are glad to be able to inform our musical friends, that a performance of concerted vocal music will be given at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday evening next, November 27, by a new choir bearing the above name, consisting of about 150 voices, trained under the direction of Mr. W. S. Young. The fact that none will sing who have not passed an examination as to ability to read music readily, as well as to execute it skilfully, together with the well-known ability of the conductor, guarantees a first-rate performance. The programme includes music by Handel, Mendelssohn, Becker, Palestrina, Meyerbeer, Auber, &c., &c., and is of so highly popular a character, that we prophecy from our former experience of Tonic Sol-fa Concerts, that this will excel anything that has yet been attempted. The choir intends to assume a permanent character, so as, at any time, to be prepared to demonstrate that the Tonic Sol-fa method is the one by which the art of singing is most readily to be attained. We trust this choir will meet with much success, and have no doubt it will take a high rank among the Metropolitan Choral Associations.

MUSIC HALL, STORE STREET.—On Monday evening last, the Rev. Robert Maguire, incumbent of Clerkenwell and hon. chaplain of the 39th Middlesex Volunteers, delivered a lecture in the above Hall on the "Volunteer movement." The hall was densely crowded and the platform was occupied by the volunteers. Lord Radstock, lieutenant-colonel of the West Middlesex, occupied the chair. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Mr. Albert Lowe, who presided at the great organ and pianoforte with his usual ability. At the close of the meeting a poem, written by the Rev. Robert Maguire, called The British Volunteers, was sung to the air of "The British Grenadiers," a select choir of ladies taking the solo verse. The meeting separated after the usual compliments to the chairman.

Provincial.

MADAME CLARA NOVELLO'S FINAL PERFORMANCES at present constitute the special features of the musical doings in the various towns and cities of the provinces. The "farewell," or "farewells," at Brighton took place on the occasion of the annual concerts of Herr Kühe, the well-known pianist and professor, on Friday evening last and Saturday afternoon, on both of which occasions, we are informed, "the audiences which filled the large room of the town-hall were such as could not fail to transform Mad. Novello's farewell visit into a most profitable speculation."

A correspondent is more diffuse about what took place at Herr Kühe's concert. "As usual," he writes, "Herr Kühe's concerts have proved most attractive. Herr Kühe is proverbial for giving some of the best concerts of the season, and on the present occasion he has in the fullest sense of the term, excelled himself. He always takes care to produce the leading feature of the day for the enjoyment of the habitués of the concert-room, and he could have offered no more powerful attraction than Mad. Clara Novello, whose retirement from professional life is so near. Besides the 'English Jenny Lind,' Herr Kühe had the assistance of Messrs. Baxter, Cumming, Lawler, Land, and Miss Eyles (Glee and Madrigal Union), and Herr Molique, with whom Herr Kühe played Dussek's sonata in B flat, so much admired when played at the London Monday Popular Concerts. Herr Kühe played also his own fantasia on the 'Shadow Song' from Dinorah, and some variations on 'Kathleen Mavourneen,' which the audience wished to hear again. The concert, which took place the following morning (Saturday), comprisod, among other morceaux, a selection from Spohr's oratorio of the Last Judgment, by the Glee and Madrigal Union; Beethoven's sonato in G, for piano and violin, by Herr Kühe and Herr Molique 'Angels ever bright and fair,' and 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' (Mad. Novello), and Handel's 'Harmonious Blacksmith,' brilliantly played by Herr Kühe."

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Paul are reaping an abundant harvest at the Pavilion by means of their new entertainment, of which the imitation of Mr. Sims Reeves by the lady is still the principal attraction.

At Manchester the Choral Society have been performing at the Free Trade Hall Handel's oratorio, Samson, which had not been heard there for years. The solo vocalists were Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mad. Dolby, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Santley. Mr. Charles Hallé was the conductor. The performance appears to have afforded unqualified delight. At the "Saturday Concert," the week before the last, Mad. Lancia, who has been recently "creating a public" at the Eastern Opera House, Whitechapel, appeared for the first time before a Manchester audience, and made quite a sensation. "On this occasion," writes the Manchester Weekly Times—

"Mad. Florence Lancia made her first appearance before a Manchester audience, and this lady has shown we possess an English vocalist of rare gifts, though as yet unheralded by the leviathans of the press. With a suprano voice of silvery quality, truthful as to intonation, and flexible as the notes of a flute, she is also favoured with other natural gifts of person and manner that are always valuable to an artist, whilst everything she attempts, whether of a light or serious character, whether partaking of sunshine or tears, is delivered with that charm of expression indicative of feeling and intelligence. The variety of her accomplishments was well exhibited in the music chosen. Mad. Lancia is of English extraction, with an Italian musical education; she is interesting in appearance, unassuming and graceful. On Saturday she made what is generally termed a "decided hit," before an audience well acquainted with the highest talent; (or excited a call for repetition), and we feel quite assured that neither ellquery nor neglect can prevent this young and gifted lady from taking rank among the highest."

LEEDS.—(From a Correspondent.)—The Town Hall Concert Society are continuing their popular Saturday concerts with great success. They recently gave a Mendelssohn Night, when Miss Helena Walker, Miss Hodgson, and Mr. Paul Standish were the vocalists. The principal attraction was Mendelssohn's finale to Loreley. Miss Walker sang the solos; the chorusses were given by the Leeds Concert Choir; and the accompaniments on the organ and piano by Mr. Spark and by Master Tilney (his pupil). Last Saturday Miss Augusta Thomson, of London, gained a brilliant success at the Town Hall, and the Concert Choir was for the second time encored in a new spirited chorus, entitled, "Italy's Address to her Children," the music by Mr. Spark, Town Hall organist.

[Loreley on the organ and pianoforte! What next?—PETIPACE OF WINCHELSEA.]

LEEDS.—The seventh concert of the Town Hall Concert Society was given on Saturday evening last, before a large audience. Miss Augusta Thomson, from Paris and London, was the only solo vocalist; but pianoforte solos and duets by Miss Arabella Longley and Master Walter Tinley, and choral pieces by the Concert Choir made up a programme both good and varied. Miss Thomson created a favourable impression in Rossini's "Bel raggio," from Semiramide, and at once exhibited a clear, high soprano voice, cultivated in the best schools. Her other songs were "Come with the Gipsy Bride" (with chorus), from the Bohemian Girl, "Take this cup of sparkling wine," from Lurline, the Scotch song "Of a' the airts," and a ballad from Macfarren's Robin Hood. Miss Longley and Master Tilney (pupils of Mr. Spark) played on two pianofortes a grand duet on airs from the Huguenots, arranged by Mr. G. A. Osborne. It was played in a manner highly creditable to both the pianists, Miss Longly also gave Wallace's "Cracovienne," in which she displayed brilliant and rapid execution, and a firm touch. Master Tilney exhibited real talent in his *own variations on "The Harmonious Blacksmith," although he was somewhat too boisterous in his play. He was much more successful in the William Tell duet with Mr. Spark. The chorus singing was equal to anything we have heard in the town-hall since the festival. Mr. Spark's "Garibaldi Chorus" created quite an enthusiasm. Bishop's "Sleep, Gentle Lady," was sweetly rendered; and the concert which had been throughout most successful, concluded with Hatton's "Now let us make the welkin ring." Our newly-elected mayor (J. Kitson, Esq.), who is also president of the society, was loudly applauded on entering the hall during the concert. The performances on the grand organ of the town hall have been resumed by Mr. Spark, who played the following selection on Tuesday:—Grand Prelude, in D minor—Mendelssohn; Overture to Zanetta—Auber; Romance, "Ecoutez-moi"—Funke; Selections from the Etoile du Nord—Meyerbeer; New Grand March from Undine—Benedict.—Leeds Express, Nov. 17.

IPSWICH.—(From a Correspondent.)—The first monthly series of bi-weekly concerts by the Ipswich Musical Union was brought to a close on last Saturday evening with such success, that it is intended to continue them during the season. Mr. Alfred Bowles, a devoted votary of "high art" has been assisted in the revival of the Musical Union (Mr. Bowles being the original projector, and conductor), by Mr. J. Lawrance. The difficulty they have had to encounter has been to rescue the musical entertainments of "the people" out of the hands of unprofessional persons, whose highest notions of musical excellence seems to be the ribald buffoonery of the imitation "nigger," or the clangour of brass instruments in the hands of unskilful manipulators, out of which their sole aim appears to be to make money. Thanks to the spirit of the above-named gentlemen that object is being achieved. Mr. Bowles can, and no doubt will, do very much to foster and bring out the talent of the young aspirants for musical fame in the town by giving them judicious opportunities for display, to be had only under his direction; of which he is conscious there is much existing, although till the present well grounded determination the obstacles to improving the musical taste have been deplored, and have appeared almost insurmountable, in consequence of the assumption by persons of a position they were unworthy and incompetent to occupy. "The people," however, have shown that they can distinguish and appreciate good music. The concerts have comprised both vocal and instrumental music. The first have consisted of part songs—"From Valley to Mountain" (Mendelssohn), "All among the Barley," &c., madrigals, choruses, ballads, &c Amongst the latter have been the overtures to Zampa, L'Italiana in Algeri, Figaro, La Gazza Ladra (operatic selections), which have given manifest pleasure andsatisfaction; dance music, partly vocalised; and last, though not least, violin solos by the energetic conductor in his usual masterly and pleasing style, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. W. Norman. The question of a large and commodious music hall for the town has been mooted, its necessity has been very apparent, and will now be more so, so that we may hope shortly to see active steps taken for the erection of a place fit to give a large concert in, which we do not at present possess.

HANOVER.—Mad. Anaide Castellan, well known in London at Her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal Italian Opera, sung at the first concert of the season, with great success. At the same concert Herr Joseph Joachim played Mendelssohn's Concerto; one of Beethoven's symphonies was played by the band under the conductorship of Herr Joachim. After the symphony the king and queen sent for the celebrated violinist and expressed their satisfaction of its performance in the most flattering terms. Mad. C. Szarvady (Wilhelmina Clauss) plays at the next concert which is announced for the 1st Dec. Herr Joachim is going to Dresden to play at some soirées musicale in that city.

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION.—It is now settled that the London public can no more subsist without a stock conjuror than without a regularly organised band of coloured minstrels. Moreover, the leading professor of legerdemain must no longer rely on the splendour of his mechanical apparatus, for gold vases and silver boxes open rather than dazzle the eyes of modern judges, and lead them to suspect that a lack of manual dexterity is masked by the brilliancy of the show. Herr Wiljalba Frikell, the Finnish necromancer, was the first to teach the Londoners that legerdemain, not the possession of gaudy utensils, is the conjuror's chief qualification, and his school is now worthily represented by Signor Antonio Polettl, who occupies the stage in the Gallery of Illustration and attracts spectators sufficient to fill the hall. Rejoicing in the severe simplicity of a small table, and such slight gear as an occasional box or pistol, he goes on finding something out of nothing, and much out of a very little, with a facility that stamps him a master of his art. Moreover, he is an agreeable, loquacious gentleman, with that foreign urbanity which goes so far in winning the hearts of a British public, and with a pleasant semblance of astonishment at his own marvels, that provokes laughter, as an accessory to admiration.

* We are extremely sorry for Master Tilney and equally so for The Leeds Express, which criticises his rendering of an exhibition so pretentious, repulsive, and disgusting. We recommend Master Tilney to abstain from improving Handel, at least for the present, and The Leeds Express may do well to discountenance such efforts.

Advertisements.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter Hall.—Conductor, Mr. COSTA.—The TWENTY-NINTH SEASON will commence on FRIDAY next, November 30, with a performance of Handel's Oratorio, SOLOMON. Principal Vocalists—Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Banks, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Tickets, 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each, at the Society's Office, No. 6, in Exeter Hall. The usual Winter Performances of the "Messiah" take place on Fridays, 7th and 21st December. A Great Rehearsal of the Handel Festival Choir will be held on Friday, December 14, to witness which subscribers to the Society only can be admitted.

Just published in 1 vol. 4to., price One Guinea, dedicated by permission to Sir JOHN HERSCHEL, Bart., K.H., F.R.S., &c. &c.

ELEMENTS OF MUSICAL SCIENCE. By ROBERT BROWN.

The design of this work is to establish the Theory of Harmony on its true basis, and so to simplify the study of practical harmony as to prove a useful key to the writings as well as the compositions of experienced harmonists. The copious examples in full score are so arranged as to be easily read by all who are accustomed to the bass clef.

London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., Paternoster Row; Addison, Hollier and Lucas, Regent Street.

NEW MUSICAL WORK.

ANNALS OF THE KINGS AND QUEENS OF ENGLAND from the CONQUEST to the REIGN of VICTORIA. The words written and the music arranged and composed by GEORGE LINLEY, embellished with an illustrative title by JULIAN PORTCH, and elegantly bound in cloth price 10s. 6d.

London: Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Simpkin, Marshall and Co., Stationers' Hall Court; and Hamilton, Adams and Co., Paternoster Row.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK for 1861, will be issued early in December, price 1s. 6d.; per post 1s. 8d. Advertisements and Lists of Music to be sent in by the 1st December, to Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20 Charing Cross.

GARIBALDI'S NATIONAL CHORUS, enthusiastically encored after each performance at the Leeds Town Hall Concerts, &c. Price 2s. Separate parts 3d. per page.

"Spirited and melodious."—Leeds Mercury.

London: Jewell, 104 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

NEW PIANO MUSIC. By W. VINCENT WALLACE. Come where my Love lies Dreaming, melody transcribed, price 3s.: Good News from Home, 3s.; La Luvisella, favourite Neapolitan melody, 2s. 6d.; Beethoven's Ruins of Athens, fantasia, 4s.; Chorus of Dervishes, from Beethoven's Ruins of Athens, 3s. This splendid and original composition of Beethoven is, by means of Mr. Wallace's fine arrangement, brought within the reach of drawing-room performers.

MUSICAL PRESENTS.—THE HOLY FAMILY, Sacred Airs for Piano; by W. H. CALLCOTT; and THE ADORATION, by W. H. CALLCOTT, each work complete in 1 vol., handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, 12s. Also, THE BEAUTIES of BEETHOVEN, by W. H. CALLCOTT, 10s. 6d. Each work is beautifully illustrated.

THE YOUNG RECRUIT; Celebrated March by F. KUCKEN. Arranged for piano by Brinley Richards. Decorated title, 2s. 6d. The favourite tune of the day in the march line. The song of the "Young Recruit," 2s., ditto four voices, 2s. 6d. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

THE MARRIAGE OF GEORGETTE. (Les Noces de Jeannette.) Boosey and Sons beg to give notice that the Copyright of the above Opera belongs to them, and proceedings will be taken against any person infringing the same.

TO ORGANISTS.—GEORGE LAKE'S Christmas Hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing," a simple setting, published in short score, may be had of the composer (Shirley House), Sydenham, by enclosing 6 postage stamps.

ORGANIST WANTED.—The Office of Organist at New College, Oxford, is vacant Salary £150. Applications and Testimonials must reach the Warden by the 29th November instant.

New College, Nov. 19, 1860.

WANTED, after Christmas, a CHOIR-MASTER for the Parish Church of Bury, Lancashire. He must have a good Tenor or Alto Voice, and be able to sing any cathedral music, and to instruct the choir in the theory and practice of singing. Salary £60, with a very moderate claim on his time. No one need apply who is not a decided Churchman, and whose references are not of the highest character. Unanswered applications must be considered as rejected.—Apply, Rev. E. J. Hornby, Bury, Lancashire.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—contains 35 pages of music. With a true method for acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214 Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81 Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where pupils are also received.

NEW PIANO MUSIC,

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

			£.	s.	d.
		PIANO SOLO.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	"The harp that once thro' Tara's Halls	3	0
ERGMANN, A.	...	"Rondo appassionato" (dedicated to Mad. Davison)	4	0
"	...	"Réminiscences d'Obéron"	3	0
FIELD, JOHN	...	Six Nocturnes (edited by F. Liszt) ... ... each	2	0
GANZ, WILHELM	...	"Santa Lucia" (a brilliant transcription)	3	0
KONTSKI, A. DE	...	"Aux armes!" caprice heroique	5	0
LIDEL, BLANCHE	...	"Valse de Salon"	2	6
LISZT, FRANZ	...	March from Wagner's Tannhäuser	4	0
MAUSS, THEODOR	...	"Prometheus." Galop brilliant	4	0
MOZART, W. A.	...	Romance in A flat	2	0
ROUBIER, HENRI	...	"La vallée des roses." Mazurka de Salon	3	6
"	...	"Josephine" ... ... do. do.	3	0
RUBINSTEIN, A.	...	Barcarolle in F minor	2	6
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Vedrai carino" (Don Juan)	3	0
"	...	"Batti, batti" (ditto)	3	0
"	...	"The mermaid's song" (Haydn)	3	0
SCHUBERT, F.	...	Impromptu in E flat, Op. 90, No. 2	4	0
"	...	Impromptu in B flat, Op. 142, No. 3 (played by Mr. Charles Hallé)	3	6
SELLE, W. C.	...	"Marche Triomphale"	3	0
SILAS, E.	...	Romance, Op. 48	3	0
"	...	Impromptu à la Mazurka, Op. 50	3	0
"	...	Tarentelle, Op. 51	4	0
		PIANO DUET.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	Rigoletto (transcription of the Quartett)	4	0
LEFEBURE-WELY	...	"Hommage à sa Majesté Napoléon III." caprice militaire	6	0
"	...	"Le retour de l'armée." Marche triomphale ...	4	0
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Don Juan." Grand Duo sur l'opéra de Mozart...	6	0
WAGNER, R.	...	March from Tannhäuser, arranged by T. Mauss ...	3	0

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT

OF

FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,

IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY

DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,

Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,

TO BE SOLD AT

ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,

BY

MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,

28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.

MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.

VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.

VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.

FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.

CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.

HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.

VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.

Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.

THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.

Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.

Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

NOTICE.

BOOSEY & SONS' New and complete edition of BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS, in 2 vols. 10s. 6d. each, with Life and Portrait of Beethoven, will be ready for delivery early next week.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

LIBRARY EDITION OF

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.—Edited by J. W. DAVISON.

In one volume, music size, beautifully engraved and printed, price 8s., or superbly bound price 10s. 6d.

The MAZURKAS of CHOPIN for PIANOFORTE complete, with biographical and critical introduction, by J. W. DAVISON; and portrait of Chopin by Lynch.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

EVANS'S
ENGLISH HARMONIUMS

The Cottage Harmonium, at Six Guineas

Has the full compass, Five Octaves, and a soft agreeable quality of tone, suitable for a cottage or a small sitting-room.

The Ten-Guinea Harmonium

In a handsome Oak Case, possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone which characterises all EVANS'S Instruments.

The Nineteen-Guinea, or Three-Stop Harmonium

With Unison Trebles, and Bourdon in the Bass, is a powerful instrument, and designed expressly for leading Public Worship.

The Twelve-Stop Harmonium, price 36 Guineas

Is a brilliant and powerful instrument, suitable either for a church or drawing-room.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium, at 68 Guineas

Is in a very handsome Rosewood Case, has two rows of keys, and five and a half octaves of vibrators. This is acknowledged by the profession and press to be the most perfect Harmonium, without pedals, that has yet been produced.

The Organist's or Pedal Harmonium, at Forty-SevenGui neas

Is in an American walnut case, has Ten Stops and Two Octaves, and a Third of Pedals, with independent reeds.

The New Patent English Model Harmonium,

WITH TWO ROWS OF KEYS AND PEDALS,

In Oak Case, and Eighteen Stops, price 130 Guineas, possesses the attributes of an Organ, and is the most complete Harmonium that has yet been constructed.

An Illustrated Catalogue of EVANS' English Harmoniums, with One and Two Rows of Keys, with or without the Percussion Action, and with Pedals, at prices ranging from 6 to 140 Guineas, is now ready, and may be had upon application to the Manufacturers,

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, November 24, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 48 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CRAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	MONS. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	MONS. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Dr. TENDALL.
Vocal Classes	Dr. TENDALL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 20 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

48

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 67 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON, being engaged to sing the MESSIAH, at Aberdeen, on the 28th December, begs to say that she has a few days disengaged before and after that date, and would be happy to accept engagements, en route to or from Scotland.—24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

SIGNOR and MAD. FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

FLUTE, GUITAR, and CONCERTINA.—LESSONS by Mr. and Mad. R. SIDNEY PRATTEN, at 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W., where may be had the whole of their publications for the above instruments, consisting of nearly 300 Pieces, vocal and instrumental.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the public are respectfully informed that there will be EIGHT CONCERTS during the ensuing season, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the following Monday Evenings:—March 4 and 18; April 15 and 29; May 13 and 27; June 10 and 24. The terms of subscription and prices of admission will be duly announced.

LONDON QUINTET UNION.—Messrs. Westlake, H. Webb, Pettit, Reynolds, and Maycock beg to announce that they have appointed Mr. DANDO as Director for the ensuing season. The party may be engaged for public or private concerts in or out of town.—Apply to Mr. J. Reynolds, 3 Oakley Square, N.W.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.
Established April 30, 1838.

COUNCIL.

HENRY G. BLAGROVE, Esq.
WM. CHAPPELL, Esq., F.S.A.
Rev. Sir WM. HENRY COPE, Bart.
JAMES WILLIAM DAVISON, Esq.
JOSEPH DUGGAN, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD HORSLEY, Esq., Hon. Librarian.
WM. VINCENT WALLACE, Esq.
EDWARD JAMES, Esq., Q.C.
JOSEPH LIDEL, Esq.
G. A. MACFARREN, Esq.
FRANK MORI, Esq.
GEO. ALEX. OSBORNE, Esq.
JOHN D. PAWLE, Esq.
ED. F. RIMBAULT, Esq., LL.D., F.S.A.
CHARLES SALAMAN, Esq., Hon. Secretary.
AUGUSTINE SARGOOD, Esq., Treasurer.
JOHN SIMON, Esq.
HENRY SMART, Esq.

The following is the proposed Scheme for the proceedings of the Society.
Third Season, 1861.

January 8, 15, 22, 29	Choral Practice.
" 23	Conversazione.
February 6	Ordinary General Meeting of Fellows.
"	" " " of Society.
" 5, 12, 19, 26	Choral Practice.
" 27	Orchestral Concert.
March 5, 12, 19, 26	Choral Practice.
" 6	Fellows' Meeting for Discussion, &c.
" 20	Trial of New Chamber Compositions.
April 10	Orchestral Concert.
" 16, 23, 30	Choral Practice.
" 17	Fellows' Meeting for Discussion, &c.
May 7, 14, 21, 28	Choral Practice.
" 8	Orchestral Concert.
" 22	Trial of New Chamber Compositions.
June 4	Choral Practice.
" 5	Orchestral Concert.
July 3	Conversazione.
November 6	Fellows' Meeting for Discussion, &c.
" 19, 26	Choral Practice.
December 3, 10, 17	Choral Practice.

The Concerts and Conversazioni on Wednesdays, at half-past 8 o'clock, at St. James's Hall. Choral Practices on Tuesdays, at 8 o'clock, at Marylebone Institution.

Conductor of the Orchestra ... Mr. ALFRED MELLON.
Director of the Choral Practice ... Mr. HENRY SMART.

N.B.—On and after the 1st December, 1860, Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201 Regent Street, will be prepared to receive the subscriptions of £1 1s., for the year 1861, from Fellows, Associates, Lady Associates, and Nominated Annual Subscribers, and on and after the 1st January, 1861, from subscribers to the Series of Concerts; and at the same time such persons will be entitled to select a Reserved Numbered Seat for the Series of Concerts; and will be furnished with a voucher for the same on payment of an extra sum of 10s. 6d.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.
36 Baker Street, Portman Square, W.

28 St. James's Hall,
Piccadilly, London.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER PENNY

CHARLES LUDER'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"La Tarentelle" (dedicated to Ferdinand Praeger) Op. 41	3	0
"Le Corsaire" (dedicated to Edouard Roeckel) Op. 42	3	0
"Six Romances Anglaises sans Paroles" (in two books each) ...	6	0
"La Danse des Sorcières," Op. 33	3	0

VOCAL.

"L'Emigré Irlandais" (dedicated to Mad. Sainton-Dolby)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL MUSIC.

Name of Song.	Sung by.	Composer.	s.	d.
"I love YOU"	... Sims Reeves	... M. W. Balfe ...	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose"	... Ditto ...	... Ditto	3	0
"If I could change as others change"	... Laura Baxter	... Ditto	2	6
"The meadow gate"	... Wilbye Cooper	... G. B. Allen ...	2	6
"Wert thou mine"	... Sims Reeves	... Frank Mori ...	2	6
"Thou art so near and yet so far" ...	... Herr Reichardt	... A. Reichardt..	3	0
"Good night" (cradle song)	... Ditto ...	... Ditto	2	6
"I never knew how dear thou wert" ...	... Miss Lascelles	... H. K. Morley.	3	6

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

"I love YOU" ...	... Transcribed by	... Emile Berger	... 3	0
Ditto	.. Ditto (easy)	... J. Liebich ...	... 2	0
"Good night" ...	... Ditto (moderately difficult) ...	... W. Kuhe ...	... 3	0
Ditto	... Ditto (easy)	... J. Liebich ...	... 2	0
Ditto	... Ditto (easy)	... R. Andrews ...	2	0
"Thou art so near"	... Ditto (easy)	... Ditto	2	0
Ditto	... Ditto (very easy)	... Rudolf Nordmann.	1	0
Ditto	... Ditto, as a PIANO DUET ...	... Ditto	1	0
"Santa Lucia ...	... Ditty (easy)	... Eugène Moniot ...	1	0
"Leopold" ...	... Mazurka favourite	... Brinley Richards ..	3	0
"Oberon"	Fantasia, composed expressly for Miss Arabella Goddard	G. B. Allen ...	5	0

London: Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT.

The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far."

Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

DIFFICULT.

	s.	d.
DON PASQUALE (introducing "Com è gentil") Ricardo Linter	5	0

MODERATELY DIFFICULT.

"The last rose of Summer" (with variations) Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew	3	0

VERY EASY.

"Thou art so near" (Reichardt's popular Lied) Rudolf Nordmann	1	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

WEBER'S LAST WALTZ, transcribed by F. ROSENFELD.

This is one of the best arrangements for pupils, yet offered to the public, of the above admired waltz. It is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT.

The above popular Neapolitan melody specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêvérie)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet,

arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the above arrangement for that purpose.

EMANUEL AGUILAR'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

VOCAL.

	s.	d.
"In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by Acton Bell)	3	0
"Sympathy" (poetry by Ellis Bell)	2	0
"Farewell" (poetry by Bishop Heber)	2	0

PIANOFORTE.

"Sunset glow" (Rêvérie) (Dedicated to Mrs. Robert Cartwright.)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by

Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

CZERKASKI (Joseph) "The Bridesmaids' Album."

	s.	d.
No. 1—"Bridal Quadrilles"	2	0
2—"Shorncliffe Waltzes"	2	6
3—"Beatrice Mazurka"	2	0
4—"Frederick William Waltz"	3	0
5—"Princess Victoria Quadrille"	2	0
6—"Polish Varsoviana"	2	0
7—"Exeter Polka"	2	0
8—"Apethorpe Galop"	1	6

 The "Bridesmaids' Album," complete in one volume, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

REPERTOIRE DES BOUFFES PARISIENS.

No. 1—"Tromb-al-Cazar" Waltz			2	6
2—"Rêve d'une nuit d'été" Waltz			2	0
3—"Les deux Pêcheurs'" Waltz			2	6
4—"Les deux Aveugles" Waltz			2	6
5—"Le Violoneux Polka"			2	0
6—"Une Nuit blanche" Quadrille			2	0
7—"Vent du Soir" Quadrille			2	0
8—"Le Violoneux" Waltz			2	0
COURVILLON (J.) Deux Valses à deux temps.
No. 1—"La Reine des Sylphes"			4	0
2—"The Maiden's Dream"			4	0
CZERKASKI (J.) ... "Sans Souci" Galop			3	0
,, ... "Bella Contessa" Waltz			3	0
MARRIOTT (C.) ... "The Woman in White" Waltz			3	0
MONIOT (Eugène) ... "Schottish d'amour"			2	0
PECH (Dr. James) ... "May-dew" Polka			2	0
RICHARDS (Brinley) ... "Leopold" Mazurka...			2	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.; where "I love you" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianofore by Emile Berger, price 3s.

"AULD LANG SYNE," varied for the Pianoforte by ALBERT DAWES, price 5s., is published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"This is a series of nine variations on the above popular air, and possesses a beauty seldom found in this class of music, namely, that the air is heard in all the variations. It is a good piece for practice, and not too difficult for the generality of players. We heartily recommend it to our musical friends, to many of whom Mr. Dawes is already favourably known as a composer."—Hastings and St. Leonard's News.

ALBERT DAWES'S MOST POPULAR COMPOSITIONS.

PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Auld Lang Syne" (with variations)	5	0
"Hastings Waltzes"	3	0
"Anacreontic Quadrille" (on popular Glees)	3	0
"Hastings Polka"	1	0
"Southdown Polka"	1	0

VOCAL.

"I slept, and oh! how sweet the dream"	2	0
"Good bye, my love, good bye"	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d. London: published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

The day, pretty darling, draws near to its close,
Come, cease from your play, on your pillow repose,
You peep from the cradle still laughing and bright,
Kind angels for ever preserve you, good night.

With freedom from sorrow, dear child, you are blest,
To you a pure heaven is your fond mother's breast;
Wild passion some day will your happiness blight,
Kind angels preserve you, my darling, good night.

Ah! happy is he who can slumber like you,
Be ever, dear child, to your innocence true,
The righteous are watched by the spirits of light,
Who guard them while sleeping, my darling, good night.

"Few songs of modern days have achieved a more decided or better merited success than Herr Reichardt's charming lied, "Thou art so near and yet so far," which has for the last two years been the delight of all concert-goers and drawing-room vocalists of more than ordinary pretensions. Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have just published a new composition, from the same original and elegant pen, entitled "Good Night" (a cradle song). The words are exquisitely simple and unaffected, being the address of a mother to her sleeping babe; and it is but justice to Herr Reichardt to say that he has wedded an exquisite domestic poem to a most graceful, unaffected melody, which breathes the very spirit of maternal tenderness. The song, which is written for a tenor voice—the composer being, as our readers know, one of the first of living German vocalists—is in the key of F major; and to amateurs of taste we can cordially recommend "The Cradle Song" as a composition worthy of their attention."—Liverpool Mail.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq., is just published price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Nov. 28, 1860.

The most remarkable event of the week—to borrow the phraseology of our Foreign Minister—is conspicuous by its non-occurrence. The ballet which has been so long talked of, and built upon as the invention of Mad. Taglioni, to be illustrated by the music of M. Offenbach and the choregraphic art of Mlle. Emma Livry, is postponed, owing to the alleged indisposition of the last-named artist. Whether or not the malady of the principal danseuse is bonâ fide, or is of that convenient class of afflictions which come and go as the caprices of a public favourite fluctuate, I have not heard. The hitch is highly disagreeable, however, as it keeps manager, composer, inventress, and hundreds of artists and employés of all sorts on the tenter hooks of a permanent state of full rehearsal.

Procrastination is also the order of the day at the Opéra Comique. The new opera which M. Offenbach has been writing in conjunction with M. Scribe, is still only in the state of promise. The performance has, however, been positively announced for this week. Mlle. Saint Urbain, who is to play the part originally intended for Mad. Ugalde, is said to be thoroughly "up" in her part, and panting for action. The opera which M. Aimé Maillard, the composer of Les Dragons de Villars, has written for the Théâtre Lyrique, is also in the limbo of suspense, owing to the unabated attractions of Orphée and the Val d'Andorre.

At the Bouffes Parisiens the egregiously protracted run of the parody on Gluck's opera, Orphée aux Enfers—over three hundred nights—is about at last to be arrested, and Fortunio will reign in its stead.

Mad. Penco is shortly to make her appearance in Norma at the Italian Opera, and a new tenor from Sicily is to play the character of Pollio. There is also to be another début on the same occasion—a comprimaria recently engaged by M. Calzado, whose vocal powers are highly spoken of, will canvass the suffrages of the public as Adalgisa. There is a rumour, of which I am unable to test the truth, that Signor Ronconi is shortly about to perform a histrionic tour de force, by playing Don Basilio and Figaro the same night. That this accomplished and versatile artist is fully capable of executing this feat, and keeping the individuality of the two characters in question as distinct as though there were two Ronconis equally gifted with the dramatic faculty, there can be little doubt. But, whether the proceeding is not somewhat undignified, and savouring of a vanity unbecoming so great an artist, is another question. From this point of view, knowing the strong good sense of Signor Ronconi, it seems more than probable he entertains no such intention; at any rate, the feat is only possible in the first act.

One of the remarkable features in the present state of the play-going world is the reaction that is taking place in favour of the Théâtre Français and the legitimate drama. Something of this is no doubt due to the spirited and judicious management of the present director, but the chief cause is certainly that the public taste is sickened with the mawkish and immoral trash — the romance of the stews — with which such writers as M. Dumas, the younger, &c., have entertained them, outraging at the same time decency, good sense, and the purity of the French language. Within the last few days the Cinna of Corneille has been revived with some features which are the reverse of new, but have created considerable interest. The part of Livia is restored for the first time since the original production of this tragedy, and the sacred law of unity of place has been violated by playing the scene alternately in the palace of Augustus and in that of Emilia — a violation which, however, expressly obtained the sanction of the illustrious author, who, in his Examen de Cinna, declares that common sense requires such an arrangement.

At the minor theatres there have been but two novelties. A comedy, or rather vaudeville, in three acts, at the Palais Royal, entitled Le Passage Radtziwill, which was not brilliantly successful, and a drama in five acts and ten scenes, mounted on the most elaborate scale, entitled La Dame de Mont Soreau. The authors are the experienced and illustrious collaborators, MM. Dumas and Auguste Maquet, and the success of the work is such as might have been anticipated from such a conjunction.

At this moment is proceeding a sale of autographs of considerable interest, being the collection of M. Lajarriette. A few of the letters may be referred to here, as specially connected with "music and theatres." First, there is a little note from Boieldieu to Choron, in which he fixes 2,400 francs as the price of a "Te Deum" for the Church of Notre Dame. Paer, who was not so well off, addresses a petition to a minister of state, containing the very modest request that "his superannuated pension may be continued." Favart, in a charming letter to his wife, while he admits that the Flemish women are amiable, protests that he will never have eyes but for her. Gavaudau, who, in 1793, was dismissed his post of officer in the milice Parisienne, supplicates the members of the Comité Révolutionnaire to reinstate him, not for his own sake, "which is of little matter, but for the sake of the honour and esteem of his comrades in arms, the highest pleasure and foremost need of a true Republican." Rouget de L'Isle writes for the directorship of the Opera. He promises "to rescue that magnificent manufactory, that immense centre of French industry, and to make it a truly national stage, the most splendid and the least burthensome which has ever existed in France or elsewhere."

There is a letter from Rachel. She is to make her re-appearance on the 1st of June. "But is it permitted," she asks, "in a theatre, that a tragic actress should sometimes suffer human affliction (her sister Rebecca was ill)? It requires (viz. the theatre), like a despotic tyrant, that our souls should not extend beyond the foot-lights. Allons, since I have a salary, I must turn somersaults like the clown (Paillasse) when the bills announce me."

There is also a letter from Mad. Raucourt to André Dumont, a member of the Committee of Safety, urging him to obtain the liberty of a woman who had been arrested. She says, "Put my note in your pocket, that you may be reminded of my entreaties. Adieu, André, adieu. Thine!"

KAY.

OPERA COMIQUE.

ITS ORIGIN AND PROGRESS.

(Continued from page 731.)

DELLA MARIA.

ALTHOUGH less prolific than Dalayrac, Della Maria presents a certain resemblance to him in the nature of his talent; grace and softness were qualities common to both these musicians.

There is some difference of opinion as to the date of this master's birth. Some have it he was born at Marseilles, in 1764, of Italian parents, others in 1768. Duval, his intimate friend, makes him out to have died, at 27 years of age, in 1800, which would advance the date of his birth to 1773. M. de Borigelon states that his family was French, and his real name Lamaire. It would appear that Della Maria had Italianised his name during his stay at Naples, or in order to facilitate the establishment of his reputation in France, foreign musicians having at all times had better chances of success than native artists. He early devoted himself to the study of his art, and succeeded, while yet very young, in getting a grand opera played at Marseilles. It was well received by his fellow-townsmen, and flushed with his success, and full of confidence in the future, he repaired to Italy to complete his musical education, which was quite of an elementary character. He remained in Italy ten years, and studied there under several masters. The last was Paesiello. In the different towns through which Della Maria passed, he had several operas performed, some of which were successful, among others il Maestro di Capella. At Naples he had made the acquaintance of Amaury Duval, who recommended him to his brother Alexander in Paris. As soon as he arrived in that city, Della Maria sought out the author of Maison à Vendre, and the latter being made aware, through his brother, that Della Maria was a distinguished pupil of Paesiello, confided to him the libretto of Le Vieux Château.

Thanks to the fame and influence of his collaborator, the young composer had to endure none of the usual annoyances and disappointments which await the first attempts of a beginner. The doors of the Comédie Italienne opened to him spontaneously. Le Vieux Château was not the first of his works in the order of their appearance. Here is what Alexander Duval relates on this point:

"The sole recommendation of my brother would have sufficed to gain my interest in his favour (Della Maria's); but after a few days of acquaintance I was quite surprised to find in young Della Maria a man as amiable as he was well instructed. Although an Italian and a composer, there was nothing like charlatanism about him, and he joined to simplicity of manners an originality which was quite piquant."

After recounting to what a degree Della Maria was timorous, and how he used to get frightened in the evening in the woods of Romainville, where Duval had a country house, the latter continues thus:—

"As he had too much wit to say that he believed in ghosts, he bethought him of other motives to account for his terrors. He admitted that he was easily scared, and that night and solitude caused him actual distress. It was after this singular conversation that I told him he had inspired me with the wish to give him a pack of cowards to write music for. Having no subject at hand, and being absolutely bent on gratifying his desire for an opera, contrary to my habit, I did not wait for the moment of inspiration, but at once composed for him Le Vieux Château; but scarcely had he finished the music for this when the idea of Le Prisonnier occurred to me. A month after the reading, and only a few months before the performance, of Le Vieux Château, Le Prisonnier was played with the greatest success."

Some of the young musicians in the orchestra, however, finding this music too simple, put on periwigs, in order to throw ridicule upon the young composer's work. Their endeavours were fruitless. "It was a day for triumph to young Della Maria," continues Duval, "his music produced such a sensation that the whole orchestra rose crying, bravo! and applauding by striking on their instruments."

The first performance took place on the 2nd of February, 1798. There are in this score several very remarkable pieces. After the overture, the commencement of which is original (two points d'orgue), I will mention the duet—

"O ciel, dois-je en croire mes yeux?"

in which the pupil of Paesiello is recognisable. The trio which follows—

"Dans les détours du bois prochain," the stanzas sung by Mad. Belmont, which have become hackneyed.

"Il faut des époux assortis;"

Blinval's air—

"Oui, c'en est fait, je me marie."

The duo—

"Aimerez-vous votre beau-père?"

Della Maria had found some difficulty in composing music to the words last quoted. They were not sufficiently musical, and he went to his collaborator to ask him to alter them. Duval merely set about making him understand by singing them to an air which he extemporised, that, on the contrary, a great deal might be made of them. The light dawned on the young composer's mind, and he returned an hour after with the piece finished. Finally, I will mention the pretty trio—

"Faut-il pour une bagatelle?"

and the well known romance—

"Lorsque dans une tour obscure."

The great portion of these airs have become singularly antiquated, but this arises from the immense popularity they enjoyed, and popularity is, in my eyes, a great merit in a work, the style of which is inconsistent with too elevated a tone. The piece was remarkably well played by Elleviou, the friend and fellow-townsman of Duval, by Mad. St. Aubain, and Dugazon.

The other operas of Della Maria were far from obtaining the success of Le Prisonnier. Le Vieux Château, however (March 16, 1798) was performed some thirty times. "It had the misfortune of coming after Le Prisonnier," Duval used to say.

On the 9th of December, 1798, our two collaborators produced L'Oncle Valet, which met with still less success than Le Vieux Château. The verve of Della Maria was beginning to fail. L'Oncle Valet was played at Vienna, where it was heard by Weber, who, in one of his letters, says in reference to it:—

"Here now are some particulars of the victory which the Theatre an der Wieden has just gained over that of the city. Both were rehearsing unknowingly the same French opera; at last the Court Theatre got wind of the affair, and made haste to steal a march on the rival stage. The piece failed wofully. The next day it had the most brilliant success at the Theatre an der Wieden, since when it has had already seven or eight consecutive performances. The work is weak enough, the plot commonplace, the music light. It is by Dalayrac.* The opera is called L'Oncle Valet."

L'Opéra Comique, by Segur and Dupaty, was played between Le Vieux Château and L'Oncle Valet. Next to this last piece came Jacquot, ou l'Ecole des Mères (1799), La Maison du Marais, three acts, by Duval (January, 1800), and La Fausse Duègne.

La Maison du Marais was played shortly before the death of Della Maria†—a death in the saddest of manners. On leaving a friend's house where he had been dining he fell down insensible in the middle of the Rue St. Honoré. He was carried into a neighbouring house, where he expired without having been able to utter a single word, and as no one present knew him, he had to be taken to the Morgue. Duval, his universal legatee, had him buried on his property in the country. The architect Lecomte, Isabez, his brother-in-law, and Lemot, erected a monument to his memory.

Dalayrac pronounced a funeral eulogium over his tomb. "I shall not undertake to analyse his works. It will suffice to say that they abound in agreeable and flowing melody; that their style is pure and elegant; that the accompaniments are light and brilliant; lastly, that they are full of charming thoughts, and that these qualities, combined with the genuine expression of the words, which is extraordinary in a disciple of a foreign school, have placed Della Maria side by side with the best composers."

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

THE reputation of the Kärtnerthor Opera House, although, for reasons which shall hereafter be considered, now somewhat on the wane, will give an interest to the following list of the managers and singers at present employed in the undertaking:—

GENERAL DIRECTORS—MM. Esser and Schober.
FINANCE DEPARTMENT—Herr Steinhäuser.
COMPTROLLERS.—Comte Lanzcoransky and Hofrath Raymond.

PRIME DONNE—Mad. Csillag, Mad. Dustman Meyer, Mad. Wildauer, Mlle. Kraus, Mad. Hoffman, Mlle. Liebhart.
CONTRALTO—Mlle. Sulzer.
SECONDE DONNE—Mlle. Ferrari, Mlle. Weiss, Mlle. Kudelka, and Mlle. Koschok.
PRIMI TENORI—MM. Ander, Wachtel, and Walter.
SECONDI TENORI—MM. Gunz, Campe, and Barach.
BARITONI—MM. Beck, Hrabaneck, Libisch, and Rudolph.
BASSI—Drachler, Schmied, Meyerhofer, Koch, Grauer and Hölzel.
1ST VIOLIN—Herr Helmesberger.
CONDUCTORS—MM. Esser, Proch, and Dessof.

The onus of management falls, as may be supposed, upon the general Directors. They are responsible for the orders of the comptrollers being carried out, the production of the operas, &c., &c., not by any means an enviable responsibility. Without the excitement of speculation, which is supposed to be the great charm of a theatrical manager's vocation, these gentlemen have all the trouble and petty annoyances incidental to their position, its chief attractions being the while denied them. Patronage, the privilege of office, is moreover monopolised by the superior authorities, so that what inducement MM. Esser and Schober can have (except it be of a pecuniary nature, which I very much doubt) to undergo so much drudgery, for it is nothing else, I am at a loss to understand. The artists are well paid, perhaps better than at any other continental theatre, Paris excepted. They are subject to certain arbitrary rules and regulations, in nature somewhat similar to those I quoted in my last letter for the guidance of the public. One condition of their engagements is, that they pay a certain sum, besides forfeiting a proportionate amount of the salary, for every performance they may miss. This reminds me of an incident in Paris some years ago, where the same stipulation is made with the artists of the Grand Opera. Dining with a celebrated prima donna (who has since retired from the stage) she informed me of her intention not to sing the following evening, saying she would pay the forfeit rather than do so. Notice to this effect had been sent to the theatre. During dinner the director of the theatre arrived, and was admitted. "Comment, Mademoiselle, vous ne chantez pas demain?" "Non, Monsieur, je veux me reposer, et je payerai le dédit. Après tout, ce n'est que mille francs." "Mille francs, Mademoiselle, vous vous trompez; c'est dix mille francs. Lisez votre engagement." The lady was completely taken aback. "Dix mille francs! Cela, par exemple, est trop fort,—je chanterai." However, to return to Vienna. Of the talents and vocal powers of the different artistes mentioned I have already spoken in the various operas that have been given lately. The band and chorus, formerly of such remarkable excellence, have suffered considerably from the fact of three conductors being appointed to a post which one alone should fill.

* The author of Der Freischütz was not the only one who confounded Dalayrac with Della Maria. How often has Le Prisonnier been attributed to Dalayrac?

† Some biographers assert that La Maison du Marais was played after the death of Della Maria. Duval states expressly that he died shortly after.

The retirement of Eckert from this position cannot be sufficiently regretted. Since he left the precision and vigour of both the orchestra and chorus have but too evidently diminished, and it is hardly a matter of surprise, when it is considered that three conductors, Esser, Proch, and Dessof, supply his place alternately, and thereby prevent the possibility of that unity of feeling so absolutely necessary between a band and its conductor, which can only be attained by long and constant practice with each other. It is to this system of divided management that the decline of the Kärntnerthor Opera House is to be attributed. Its effect is observable in every branch of the establishment. Most evident in the band and chorus, it is also apparent on the stage in the slovenly costumes and careless mise en scène. Let us hope the system will be changed, and before it is too late. Comte Lanzcoransky regain your vigour, and don't let the Opera House, which formerly was an honour to you, lose its reputation through your indifference and neglect.

MADAME CSILLAG.—A life-size bust of this eminent prima donna, by Mr. Morton Edwards, is being exhibited. Of great merit as a work of art, it is also interesting as a likeness of the gifted artist, the sculptor having imparted to the "soulless marble" the characteristic expression and dignity of his subject. In this respect Mr. Edwards has followed the true principles of portraiture whether in painting or sculpture. With the authority of Sir Joshua Reynolds in favour of the opinion, we believe character, that is to say, individuality, to be of greater importance in this branch of the imitative art than a servile copy of the features. When sculpture was in its infancy the power of merely producing the likeness of any object was considered as one of its greatest efforts. Those ignorant of the principles of the art talk the same language even to the present day. But when it was found that every man could do this, and a great deal more, by the observance of certain precepts, the name of genius then shifted its application and was given only to him who added the peculiar character of the object he represented; to him who had expression and grace, in short, those qualities or excellencies, the power of producing which is not the result of mere imitation; imitation being, in fact, only the means by which the sculptor presents his ideas to the spectator, while expression and grace are the manifestations of his genius. The sculptor's art is limited in comparison to others. Its essence is anatomical correctness, and when to perfect form is added (so to speak) the intellectual qualities of grace, dignity of character, and appropriate expression, its purpose may be said to have been accomplished. A bust, correctly modelled, and presenting the characteristic expression of the original, will be recognised by all (although each feature may not individually be exactly copied) and excite the admiration of the connoisseur by the means by which the resemblance is produced. It is not, however, our intention any more than our vocation, to discourse upon the art of sculpture. We have been led to make the foregoing remarks by the apparent excellence of Mr. Morton Edward's bust of Mad. Csillag, which we strongly advise our readers to see and criticise for themselves.

Letters to the Editor.

A NEW DODGE.

SIR,—On Saturday evening last a cart with three men drove up to my door, and said they came for a Collard's piano, for which they were sent by that firm. There was only one servant in the house at the time, but she fortunately had some experience of the deeds of London thieves, and very properly declined to deliver up my piano, which happens to be one by the makers in question. Had she allowed them to enter they would doubtless have gagged her, and not only carried off the instrument, but everything else they could lay their hands on, for I have since ascertained from Messrs. Collard that they had not sent any cart in my direction for several days, and that consequently the men must form part of a gang organised for the commission of such robberies. As it was, they went away grumbling that they should be obliged to depart empty-handed after coming such a distance.

I must remark, in addition, that the men could not give the name of the person to whom they were to apply for the piano, and that they doubtless selected Saturday as a safe day for the attempt, as for many weeks past I have left town on that day, which they must have observed.

You may possibly deem it worth while to insert this as a warning to unsuspicious housekeepers; and, trusting that it may be the means of frustrating similar plots,

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

CAVEAT LATRO.

No. 11—NOT No. 2.

DEAR SIR,—I observe that in the MUSICAL WORLD of the 10th inst., "Your own Correspondent" at Belfast has been inaccurate in stating that "Haydn's Symphony No. 2," was performed at the recent concert given by the Anacreontic Society, on the 6th inst. It was No. 11 of the Symphonies composed by Haydn for the Salaman concerts which was produced, and which was admirably executed by the amateurs of the Society, and by the professional gentlemen engaged for the occasion.

The symphony was highly applauded by the audience.

I am, dear Sir, Yours most truly,

JOHN C. BOYD,

Vice Pres. of the Belfast Anacreontic Society.

LEEDS DOINGS.

SIR,—You delivered a very strong anathema last week upon certain performances at the Leeds Town Hall concerts; more especially did you marvel at the "Organ and Pianoforte" accompaniment to Mendelssohn's Loreley, and strike terror into the heart of poor Master Tilney for having dared to compose and perform new variations on "The Harmonious Blacksmith."

Allow me to explain, in reference to the Loreley accompaniment, that as the society can only occasionally afford to have a band, works of this class can rarely be heard with more than a pianoforte accompaniment, or else they must be sealed to the multitude.

The organ was only added in this instance to give effect to certain passages for the wind instruments, which would otherwise have been lost with the piano solus. By persons well able to judge, the result was considered excellent, and by no means to be despised, in the unavoidable absence of a band.

Whole operas were given last season by Mrs. Wood, Mr. Burton, &c., with piano accompaniment only: surely, then, the addition of such an orchestral instrument as our grand organ, if judiciously managed, is not to be condemned.

Touching Master Tilney's sin, will you allow me to ask (as you attack the principle only), in what respect his wickedness differeth from that of Dr. Chipp and others, who have done "The Harmonious Blacksmith" with their own variations, and left Handel to look after himself?

If I remember rightly, too, you lauded the Chipp composition after its performance on the organ at one of the Birmingham Festivals!

Now, seeing that you cannot know whether the Tilney variations (undoubtedly clever) are not equal to the Chipp ones, why do you blame the one and praise the other for the same act of commission?

I beg to send you by this post a copy of Chipp's "Harmonious Blacksmith," for your inspection and digestion.

Respectfully yours,
LEEDSER.

Leeds, Nov. 29, 1860.

[In a certain reign, which need not be specified, several of the clans of Scotland seemed to expect with impatience the arrival of the Chevalier, who was known to have been at Bar-le-Duc. These several of the clans of Scotland were in hopes, when the Chevalier should have arrived in their part of the kingdom, of ravaging the estates of gentlemen, remarkable for their zeal to the House of Hanover. The members for that part of Britain did not dissemble their fears on this occasion. Cold air in the extreme is almost as bad as hot. Mundus alter et idem. W. Spark, you're wanted.—PETIPACE.]

CHURCH PSALMODY IN THE 19TH CENTURY.

SIR,—The tune before the sermon here on Sunday last was "Rousseau's Dream" to a funeral psalm!! What next?

Mr. Charles Horsley in the admirable preface to his Eighty-four Church Tunes (an excellent work), says:—

"Whatever talent the author of this composition possessed, one of the last of accusations that can be brought against him was any belief in, or respect for, the doctrines of Christianity; and, though I have no proof of my assertion, I have not the slightest doubt that this tune, bad in melody and worse in harmony, has already been put to the profanest use that can disgrace any community; and yet it is found introduced into the service of the Church!"

"Rousseau's Dream" to a funeral psalm at the church of a fashionable watering-place in the nineteenth century!!! What next? I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

THOMAS LLOYD FOWLE, Mus. Doc. M.A.

8, Steyne, Bognor, Nov. 26, 1860.

["Rousseau's Dream" was not Rousseau's dream, but a waking thought of another musicaster. Agent, patient; speculative, practick; habit, act; simple, compound: these are the common divisions of the understanding. Synteresis —dictamen rationis—CONSCIENCE, is another matter, as both Horsley and Fowle should know. "Apostatare facit cor" —said a wise man. But he was alluding to another matter. —PETIPACE.]

HERR MOLIQUE AND THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.—The 50 guineas presented to Herr Molique by the committee of the Norwich Festival, as remuneration for his successful oratorio of Abraham, has been returned by the composer, with a request that that sum should be appropriated to charities.

MR. WALTER LACY.—"This gentleman's Don Salluste, in the play of Ruy Blas," says the London Review, "is as perfect a piece of stage representation of the cold-blooded, self-possessed demon of the scene, as the imagination of the spectator, wrought up to the highest pitch by the vivid portraiture of Victor Hugo, can conceive. The rigid muscle, the fixed eye, the calm hollow voice, the imperturbable stony face, and the withering sneer, embodied all the salient points of the fiend, who plots a scheme of vengeance, distinguished amongst dramatic scenes for its heartless atrocity. Mr. Lacy never for a moment loses sight of his object, his soul is in it, you see it in the turn of his eye—the curl of his lip—the movement of his hands, and in that pitiless voice which runs to the heart like a bolt of ice."

LONDON TONIC SOL-FA.

THE London Tonic Sol-Fa Choir gave a concert at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday night, which attracted a large audience, chiefly made up, it is reasonable to believe, of the friends and relations of the pupils. The principles upon which the Tonic Sol-Fa system of instruction is based, and the aim and hopes of its abettors, must be tolerably familiar to our musical readers. What it comprises of tangible and possible, has been dwelt upon; in what respect it must be looked upon as restricted, and in a certain sense utopian, has been pointed out. A new musical language for general application is neither necessary nor practicable. We cannot begin reprinting in strange characters all that has been produced which is worth preserving, and even the disciples of the Tonic Sol-Fa, if they are desirous of becoming acquainted with the existing treasures of art, must make themselves proficients in the established system of notation, which to judge from their announcements, is tacitly admitted by themselves. If, however, it be true, as is stated, that no less than 150,000 pupils, under the guidance of some 700 teachers, in various parts of Great Britain, are receiving instructions in singing on the Tonic Sol-Fa system, the fact that a vast number of persons are usefully employed, whose leisure time might be devoted to much less worthy purposes, is beyond dispute. All such associations deserve encouragement, their moral influence being as highly beneficial as their practical tendency is healthy and civilising.

The London choir, under the direction of Mr. W. S. Young, forms only a small contingent of the general body of Tonic Sol-Fa-ists, and is probably not the most striking example of its average degree of cultivation. Several of the compositions introduced in Tuesday night's programme were by no means well given, the intonation being unsatisfactory, the delivery of the voices abrupt and inharmonious, and nothing distinguishing the performance from ordinary exhibitions but a sort of dry mechanical precision seldom obtained, moreover, until after the first start, which was invariably more or less unsteady. In other pieces these deficiencies were less apparent, in some scarcely at all; and this goes far to prove that they might, with proper care, be speedily and altogether amended. The selection was as follows:—

PART I.

"The National Anthem"	Arranged by Mr. Henry Leslie.
"I will give thanks"	Palestrina.
"We hail thee, glad spring time"	Arranged from Auber. (1)
"Moonlight song of the fairies"	W. B. Bradbury.
"Skylark's song"	Mendelssohn.
"The little church"	V. E. Becker.
"See our oars"	Sir John Stevenson.
"Beautiful star"	Sayles.
"Blow, blow, thou winter wind"	Stevens.
"When the earth is hush'd"	De Call.
"Envy, eldest-born of hell"	Handel.
"Hail, smiling morn"	Spofforth.

PART II.

"Call John"
"Greeting"	Meyerbeer.
"Return of spring"	Kalliwoda.
"O hills, O vales of pleasure"	Mendelssohn.
"See the chariot at hand"	Horsley.
"The blue bells of Scotland"	Arranged by A. Neithardt.
"Life's pleasant sail"	From the German Music Hall.
"Good news from home"	P. S. Gilmore.
"From Oberon in Fairyland"	Stevens.
"Now pray we for our country"	Eliza Flower.

Several things included in the above were radically unsuited to the object in view. To cite one remarkable instance, the chorus entitled "Greeting" involved a display of questionable taste on the part of the concoctors no less than of questionable execution on that of the singers. The name of Meyerbeer is attached to this piece, which is nothing better than a mutilated abridgment of the opening chorus in Robert le Diable, presented, too, in such a manner as virtually to strip it of its harmonious beauty. Such practices are, to say the least, reprehensible; and it is to be hoped that "Greeting" is not to be looked upon as a fair specimen of the contents of the Tonic Sol-Fa Reporter, to the fourth volume of which, as the book of the words informs us, it belongs. The effusion which bears the name of "Call John" (Part II.), extracted from the same compilation, was perhaps intended as a satire on that portion of the musical community which has hitherto failed to discover the peculiar merits of the Tonic Sol-Fa method of vocal instruction. "Chorus" may stand for the majority of amateurs; "John" for their would-be enlighteners:—

(Chorus) Call John! John! John!
Louder, louder, louder,
John! John! John!
(John) Well! well! what d'ye want of John?
(Chorus) Oh John! oh John! can you tell us?
(John) Tell you what?
(Chorus) Oh John! Oh John! Oh John!
John! John! John! Can you tell us?
(John) Tell you what?
(Chorus) Tell us how? (John) How to what?
(Chorus) How to sing? (John) Sing what?
(Chorus) This song
(John) How to sing this song? Yes, yes.
Fah, me, ray, do, me, ray, do—
(Chorus) No, no, no. (John) Soh, me, do, ray;
(Chorus) No, no, no. (John) Soh, fah, me, ray, do, me, ray, do.
(Chorus) No, no, no. (John) Soh, me, do, ray, me, ray, do.
(Chorus) No, no, no, Johnny! Johnny! Can you tell us,
Tell us how to sing this song?
(John) No, no, no, never will I teach you how to sing.
(Chorus) Ha! ha! ha! ha! John! John! we've learn'd this song.
(John) No, no, such a set of blunderheads
Will never learn to sing.

Nevertheless, if teachers of the new system were not more explicit than "John," the world might for ever remain in darkness on this particular subject. Happily, to all accounts they are, and "Fah, me, ray, do," &c., shuffled up no matter how many times, does not represent the whole of their professional stock in trade. "Call John," though in no respect a composition distinguished for beauty, in a strictly musical sense, was declaimed (sung would be hardly the word) with remarkable vigour, and welcomed with clamorous enthusiasm. The audience seemed as though they could never tire of it. Whether this hearty reception of a piece so entirely unmeritorious, and (with deference) so vulgar, is an incident upon which the promoters of the "Tonic Sol-Fa" may be felicitated may, we think, be open to doubt. Far more gratifying to all who regard their very praiseworthy efforts from a serious point of view, and for legitimate reasons wish them success, must have been the smooth and correct delivery of Mendelssohn's part-song, "O hills, O vales of pleasure." Music such as this cannot fail to work good to whatever cause may invoke its co-operation, its simplicity being not more inviting than its feeling is poetical and genuine. Each successive rehearsal of so chaste and beautiful a piece is calculated to improve the taste and elevate the ideas of beginners, under whatever system their studies may be pursued; and they who have the direction of the Tonic Sol-Fa movement throughout the country—a movement which, according to the manner in which it is controlled, may be one of real importance, or, to say no worse, of comparative insignificance—should be anxious to include as much of the pure element in their course of instruction as expediency will allow, and as little of what is spurious, trivial or corrupt. Tuesday night's programme contained much that was good, but left as much to desire; conveying, moreover, in its general outline, no evidence of a clear and definite aim. How to sing should not be the whole and sole object in contemplation, what to sing involving, under the circumstances, a question of at least equal significance.—Times.

Burns' Cottage.—We understand that Mr. James Allan, butler to Sir Edward Hunter Blair of Blairquhan, is to become tenant of Burns' cottage, having been selected from a number of offerers by the Incorporation of Shoemakers, to whom the property belongs.—Ayrshire Express.

Monday Popular Concerts.—The third concert was in no way less attractive than its predecessors, and again, in spite of a drenching and incessant rain, was the cheerful large hall filled by an audience bent upon enjoying another of those excellent programmes which the directors know so well how to provide. Of the four instrumental pieces by Beethoven (to whose compositions the instrumental part of the programme was confined), three were heard here for the first time, showing that the management fully intends carrying out the promise made in the inaugurative address of "varying the entertainments as much as practicable, and frequently presenting new selections." The exception to the novelties was the quartet in C minor (No. 4, Op. 18), first introduced by M. Wieniawski, Herr Ries, M. Schreurs, and Signor Piatti, on March the 21st, 1859, and now repeated by desire. In parts suggestive of Mozart, yet stamped throughout with the individuality of Beethoven, it would be difficult to find in the whole range of its author's works a more charming composition, or one more likely to grow upon the hearer at each repetition. That it was rendered to admiration by MM. Sainton, Ries, Schreurs, and Piatti, we need hardly say, nor that it commanded breathless attention and the heartiest applause. The grand sonata in E flat (Op. 7) for pianoforte solus (dedicated to the Countess Keglevics) created the liveliest sensation. Mr. Charles Hallé's reading and execution of this fine work were alike masterly, and it is worth noting that he played the whole from memory. Herr Von Lenz, the rhapsodical panegyrist of Beethoven, finds no praise too lavish, no simile too extravagant, in speaking of this sonata; but listening attentively from beginning to end we failed to realise either the "gerbes de feu" in the allegro, the "tear dropped from the eye of a Magdalen in the vale of sorrow" in the largo, or the "joyous company on the greensward," &c., in the scherzo; far less the "child tormenting the may-bug, and not desisting until he has torn off its last leg," in the minor episode of the rondo finale. Fortunately the position of Beethoven is too surely established to be shaken; but had he been an ordinary composer we should have trembled for his reputation. The analyses of Herr Lenz are too frothy to inflict much injury. In the sonata in F major (No. 1, Op. 5) for pianoforte and violoncello, Mr. Charles Hallé enjoyed the co-operation of Signor Piatti, and with two such artists the performance, as may be imagined, was irreproachable. The sonata (in two movements, only—like that of Mozart for violin and piano, introduced last week) will doubtless be repeated. The grand trio (G major, No 2, Op. 1), in which the last-named gentlemen were joined by M. Sainton, although coming at the end of the programme, gave as much delight as any of the pieces that preceded it. Miss Gerard's nervousness interfered with her success in a very charming song from Mr. Macfarren's King Charles II., "Can'st thou deem my heart is changing?" and Beethoven's lovely air, "Know'st thou the land?" Mr. Santley sang Benedict's "Portrait-song" from The Gipsy's Warning, and the song of Figaro in the last act of Le Nozze, "Aprite un po quegli occhi," both with admirable effect. The selection from Spohr, Dussek, and Weber, which afforded so much satisfaction on the opening night, will be repeated by general desire on Monday, with the same artists. Mr. Benedict was the accompanist.—Dodinas.

The Festivals of the Three Choirs.—A final winding up of the accounts of our late Festival has now taken place, the Rev. R. Sarjeant, Hon. Sec., having this week received from the Earl of Coventry, who, it will be remembered, was prevented attending the Festival owing to absence from the county, the munificent donation of 100*l.* to be added to the liberal sum already subscribed for the charity. The total amount thus received, therefore, is 1,314*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.*, which exceeds the amount realised for the charity at the Worcester Festival of 1857 by no less than 281*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*, besides the surplus of profit (65*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*), which will be invested as already explained in the columns of the Journal. The largest collection ever made at these festivals, prior to 1860, was made at Gloucester last year, when 1,143*l.* 3*s.* 0*d.* was received, but the Worcester collection this year exceeds that amount by no less than 171*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.* We are glad to notice that already, before the last sounds of the Worcester Festival have well died out, the indefatigable conductor at Hereford—Mr. G. Townshend Smith—is exerting himself to make the next gathering of the Three Choirs, which will take place in that city in the autumn of 1861, at least as successful as those which have preceded it there. We announced at the close of our late festival that he had already obtained a good list of stewards for the next meeting, and the following are the names of noblemen and gentlemen who have expressed their willingness to act in that capacity :—Lord William Graham, M.P.; Hon. J. F. T. W. Fiennes; Hon. C. S. B. Hanbury, M.P.; Sir Wm. Curtis, Bart. (2nd time); J. King, King, Esq., M.P.; H. Mildmay, Esq., M.P.; Col. Clifford, M.P.; B. Botfield, Esq., M.P.; S. Allaway, Esq., (2nd time); J. H. Arkwright, Esq. (3rd time); Rev. G. Arkwright; Rev. J. Bullock (2nd time); Rev. T. H. Bird; T. Dew, Esq.; W. Brewster, Evans, Esq.; Rev. E. Hampden; Rev. E. B. Hawkshaw; T. Hill, Esq.; Rev. H. C. Key; A. R. B. Knight, Esq. (2nd time); Rev. Prebendary Lee; Rev. W. B. Mynors; Rev. Prebendary Poole; R. Webb, Esq.; Rev. H. O. Wilson. These gentlemen stipulate that their individual pecuniary responsibility shall not exceed 25*l.*; but there is no reason why they should be mulcted so heavily, if the inhabitants of the county will only come forward in a commendable spirit and support the proposition which has been started for providing a guarantee fund, as has been done at Worcester on former occasions, when the Worcester Festivals were less prosperous than they have been of late years. A beginning in this way has been made, and at a meeting held at Hereford, on Wednesday, a 250*l.* was put down as subscriptions to the fund. —Worcester Journal.

SCARBOROUGH.—Now that the season is drawing to a close, we are but fulfilling a duty to Mr. W. Williams, conductor of the Spa band, in congratulating him on the able and satisfactory manner in which he has discharged his duties, and the manner in which music of the higher order (together with the lighter music of the day), has been rendered Praise is no less due to Mr. Smith, the general manager, for the energy and taste he has displayed in catering for the amusement of the public during this (his first) season. A further prolongation of the musical engagements at the Spa, we have no doubt, would form an important aid in bringing about the much-needed extension of the season at Scarborough.—Scarborough Gazette.

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY. POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE FOURTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

Will take place

On MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, 1860,

When the Selection exclusively selected from the Works of

SPOHR, DUSSEK, AND WEBER.

Which was received with so much favour at the First Concert (November 12th) will be repeated, by general desire.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in G minor, two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (Spohr), Herr BECKER, Herr RIES, Herr SCHREURS and Signor PIATTI. Song, "Rose softly blooming" (Spohr), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Canzonet, "Name the glad day" (Dussek), Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON.] Sonata, in C major, Op. 24, Pianoforte solus (Weber), Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

PART II.—Sonata, in B flat, Op. 69, Pianoforte and Violin (Dussek), Herr BECKER and Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Song, "If a youth should meet a maiden," Der Freischütz (Weber), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Romance, "The clouds by tempests may be driven," Der Freischütz (Weber), Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Duet, "Come be gay," Der Freischütz (Weber), Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON and Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Quartet, in B flat, Pianoforte, Violin, Viola, and Violoncello (Weber), Mr. CHARLES HALLE, Herr BECKER, Herr SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s. Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; and the principal music publishers.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Last Six Nights of Titiens and Giuglini. This Evening (Saturday) December 1, for the last night but three, ROBIN HOOD. Positive re-appearance of SIMS REEVES, supported by SANTLEY, PATEY PARKINSON, BARTLEMAN, LEMAIRE, and LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. In active preparation, a new opera, entitled QUEEN TOPAZE, in which Mlle. PAREPA, Mlle. ALLESANDRI, Mr. SANTLEY, Mr. PATEY, and Mr. SWIFT will appear. Commence at 8 o'clock each evening. Reduced prices.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Last Two Performances before Christmas.—THIS EVENING (Saturday), Dec. 1, Her Majesty's Servants will perform FORTY AND FIFTY. After which the new comedy, THE ADVENTURES OF A BILLET DOUX, in which Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES MATTHEWS will appear. To conclude with Sheridan's CRITIC; or, A Tragedy Rehearsed. Sir Fretful Plagiary and Puff, Mr. CHARLES MATHEWS; Don Whiskerandos, Mr. R. ROXBY; Tilburina, Miss E. ARDEN. Doors open at half-past 6; commence at 7. Box-office open from 10 till 5 o'clock daily.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1860.

THE general meeting of the Philharmonic Society (annually held in November) has taken place, and resolutions have been adopted which are calculated to satisfy every true friend of the institution. If the Philharmonic is not exactly in the position of Ajax defying the lightning, it at least disdains to emulate the self-denying reticence of Bede the younger. Brother Gye must look up a Dinah on his own account; at Hanover Square he will search in vain for a mildly relinquishing Seth. That accommodating "methody" finds no parallel in Pope Anderson, who seems to share the obstinacy, without the faint-heartedness, of Pius IX. His army shall be neither a French army, nor an army of mechanics, but an army of genuine Philharmonic troops, led on to victory by Generalissimo Sterndale Bennett.

We have reason to believe that no general meeting ever took place at which more unanimity was expressed than at the general meeting of the Philharmonic Society, on Monday week. The wave that threatened to annihilate the institution has not quite overwhelmed it. That is clear from the result. Not foolhardy enough to endeavour to breast it, and thus be carried away, the members prudently "ducked," and allowed it to pass over their heads. They have got soaked a little, it is true, but nothing worse.

If report lies not, the Covent Garden people are beginning to hesitate. The Philharmonic Concerts will not do in Floral Hall. Mr. Alfred Mellon is aware of that. Nevertheless, the Philharmonic Concerts must go on; and the mere notion of their being swamped by a conspiracy has enlisted a world of sympathy in their behalf. The members know it well; strong faith within has encouraged them to pass strong measures; and they are likely rather to be gainers than losers by the crisis that, a month since, astonied them to a member.

One of the resolutions, carried nem. con., is extremely significative. Instead of six concerts, there are, in the forthcoming season, to be eight. The return to the old system will be hailed with delight by every amateur. Sixteen symphonies, as many overtures, and at least eight concertos (for pianoforte or violin) will form something more like a substantial Philharmonic budget than the restricted supply of recent years. Moreover, in reducing the number of their performances from eight to six, the Philharmonic Society had cried "Peccavi," when there was really no reason for any such confession. Another important and straightforward decision was adopted, which will probably confer an equal amount of gratification on the musical world. It was resolved unanimously that no change should be made in the nights of performance; that the time-honoured Mondays should be again consecrated to the classic muse of harmony; and that no proposition to the contrary, from whatever source, or on whatever pretext, should be entertained for one instant.

As Agrippa's dog (Cornelius, not Menenius) had a devil tied to his collar, some think that Paracelsus (Theophrastus Bombastes, &c.) had one confined to his sword pummel (or else that Erastus belied him. Others, it was once generally believed, wore devils in their rings. But this is neither here nor there, unless it be beside the question. Nihil intellectu quod non prius fuit in sensu. Notions are twofold—actions or habits. "On ne se soucie pas" (says Pascal), d'être estimé dans les villes où on ne fait que passer; mais quand on y doit demeurer un peu de tems, on s'en soucie." "How long a time is necessary?"—asks of himself the French philosopher. "Just so long"—answers to himself the French philosopher—"as is proportioned to our durée vaine et chétive" (our vain and feeble sojourn). The same proposition holds with salles de concerts as with "villes." The directors of the Philharmonic Society have been reading Pascal at the eleventh hour. "No one,"—says John Stuart Mill—"can be a great thinker who does not recognise that, as a thinker, it is his first duty to follow his intellect to whatever conclusions it may lead." The same holds with Philharmonic directors, who may or may not be great thinkers, but who have followed the conclusion to which their intellect led in the contemplation of an anticipated crisis. They have looked it boldly in the face, and outlived it!

Of the eight concerts, two will take place before Easter. Bravo! Professor Sterndale Bennett is re-appointed conductor. Bravissimo! There is even a talk of two rehearsals, instead of one only, for each concert. Better and better, if this should turn out sooth. One rehearsal is no rehearsal; and thus the first rehearsal and the performance become too often synonyme.

What follows involves grave matter for consideration. "Any members of the orchestra," (we quote from memory of hearsay) "who may find themselves," ("find themselves"—good) "precluded by engagements made elsewhere," ("made elsewhere"—not bad) "from accepting the engagement offered by the Philharmonic Society for the Monday evenings pre-specified, will, as a matter of, however disagreeable ("however disagreeable"—capital!), necessity, be replaced by substitutes, appointed, not necessarily by themselves, but (necessarily) by the Philharmonic Directors."

Finis coronat opus. Cæsar, Brutus, Metellus Cimber, and even Antony must ruminate before proceeding further in this venture, adventure, or (to cite Sancho) "misadventure."

PETIPACE.

ADDISON'S satirical articles on the Italian Opera, in the Spectator, would probably be liked, though not truly relished, by the editor of the Scotsman; for he would be quite unable to appreciate their admirable humour. By musicians, however, they are often spoken of as ill-natured and unjust, and are ascribed—somewhat unfairly, as it seems to us—to the annoyance, it is supposed, Addison must have felt at the failure of his opera of Rosamond, which had been set to music by the most ignorant and malicious impostor of his day.* This, however, is politely to assume what Addison's life, as a whole, will not allow us to believe, that he never blamed except in revenge for some personal loss, or praised except in the hope of some personal gain. And, after all, what has Addison said against the Opera—an entertainment which he certainly enjoyed, or he would not have attended it so often, or have devoted so many excellent papers to it? The Spectator was written from day to day, and was certainly not intended for our entertainment; yet who can fail to be amused at the description of the stage king "who spoke in Italian, and his slaves answered him in English;" and of the lover who "frequently made his court and gained the heart of his princess in a language which she did not understand?" What, too, in this style of humour, can be better than the notion of the audience "getting tired of understanding half the opera, and to ease themselves of the trouble of thinking so ordering it that the whole opera is performed in an unknown tongue;" or of the performers who, for all the audience knew to the contrary, might be "calling them names and abusing them among themselves;" or of the probable reflection of the future historian, that "in the beginning of the eighteenth century the Italian tongue was so well understood in England that operas were acted on the public stage in that language?" On the other hand, we have not, it is true, heard yet of any historian publishing the remark suggested by Addison, probably because those historians who go the opera—and who does not?—are quite aware that to understand an Italian opera it is not at all necessary to have a knowledge of the Italian language. The Italian singers might abuse us at their ease, especially in concerted pieces and in grand finales; but they might, in the same way, and equally without fear of detection, abuse their own countrymen. However, it is a great mistake to inquire too closely into the foundation on which a joke stands when the joke itself is good; and we are almost ashamed, as it is, of having said so much on the subject of Addison's pleasantries, when the pleasantries spoke so well for themselves.

The only portion of Addison's longest paper on the opera that can be treated in perfect seriousness is that which begins, "If the Italians have a genius for music above the English, the English have a genius for performances of a much higher nature, &c." Now we fancy the recent political condition of Italy sufficiently proves that music could not save a country from national degradation; but neither had painting nor an admirable poetic literature done so. It is also better, no doubt, that a man should learn his duty to God and to his neighbour than that he should cultivate harmony; but why not do both, and above all, why compare like with unlike? Allow that the "performances of a much higher nature," than music exist; at least they do not answer the same end? If it could be shown that the more general science on which that of astronomy rests was a nobler study than music, it at the same time could not be maintained (except perhaps by the editor of the Scotsman) that there was anything consoling, or per se, elevating in mathematics? Poetry, again, would by many persons be classed higher than music, though the effect of half poetry, of imaginative literature generally, is to place the reader in a state of reverie, such as music induces more immediately and more perfectly. The enjoyment of art—by which we do not mean its production, or its critical examination, but the pure enjoyment of the artistic result—has nothing strictly intellectual in it. No man could grow wise by looking at Raphael, or listening to Mozart. Neither does he derive any intellectual ideas from some of our most beautiful poems, but simply delight of an elevated kind, such as is given by fine music. Music is evidently not didactic, and painting can only teach in the ordinary sense of the word what every one already knows; though of course a painter can depict certain aspects of nature and of the human face, previously unobserved and unimagined, just as the composer in giving a musical expression to certain sentiments and passions can rouse in us emotions previously dormant, or at all events, never experienced before with so much intensity. But the fine arts cannot communicate abstract truths—from which it chiefly follows, that no right-minded artist ever uses them with such an aim; though there is no saying that some wild enthusiast will not endeavour to express, and other enthusiasts equally wild pretend to see, in symphonies, whether of the past, the present, or the future, and in big symbolical pictures, such as the admirably-painted fresco by Kaulbach, on the walls of the Neue Museum at Berlin, which explains to every one (after he has read the long printed description of the work) that the fall of Babel and the destruction of Babylon meant and were precisely the fame thing.

* Clayton, who, afterwards supported by two other musicians named Haym and Dieupart, proposed, under the auspices of Steele, to rescue their art from the "barbarism, under an affectation of knowledge," into which it had fallen since the arrival of Handel in England!

But why, it will be said, should we argue about music with the editor of the Scotsman? Heaven preserve us from any such folly! We are merely publishing a few remarks for the perusal of our intelligent readers who may have been shocked by the barbarism of this Pict, and may wish to see him put to shame. It is a strange thing, nevertheless, that the editor of the Scotsman should not like music. Shakspeare had somewhat of a taste for it, and we all know what he says of the man who has "no music in his soul," and of the dark conspiracies and other *political performances for which he is fitted. Milton was passionately fond of music; and let the editor of the Scotsman ask Mr. David Masson whether the author of "Paradise Lost" did not address three Latin poems to Leonora Baroni singing at Rome—ad Leonoram Romæ canentem? Molière's plays are full of allusions to music of such a nature, that they prove him to have had a practical acquaintance with the art. (Let the editor of the Scotsman consult on this subject "Molière musicien," par C. Blaze,—price [we regret to say] 15 francs). Finally, Rabelais was not only a musician by taste, but was actually a fiddler and a singing-master. At all events, when violin playing was in its infancy in France, he understood what was in his time considered the wonderful art of shifting or démancher-ing the instrument.

"Panurge," he says, "ces mots achevez, jecta au milieu du parquet une grosse bourse de cuir pleine d'escus au soleil. Au son de la bourse commencearent tous les chats fourrez jouer des gryphes, comme si feussent violons desmanchez." PANTAGRUEL, LIVRE IV. CHAPITRE 13. Rabelais is known moreover to have opened a singing-school at Meudon, which he himself directed.

The two greatest poets of England, the two greatest comic writers of France, loved music (it being tolerably certain that at least three out of the four practised it), and yet the editor of the Scotsman undervalues it and hates it! The thing passes belief.

We fancy what the editor of the Scotsman really objects to in music is, that he cannot get any solid, material advantage out of it." "You can't eat it, and you can't drink it, and you can't put it on your back," as a Caledonian manufacturer is said to have observed, when asked to set a value upon a certain picture. But the editor of the Scotsman can obtain real bodily profit out of sweet sounds, as out of medicinal waters, if he only knows how to set about it. Let him study and derive what good he can from the following account of the wonderful curative powers of music, as given by that great musician, Rabelais:—

"COMMENT LA QUINTE ESSENCE GUARISSOIT LES MALADES PAR CHANSONS.

* * * * * Vous, en vostres royaulmes, avez quelques roys les quelz fantasticquement guarissent d'aulcunes maladies, comme scrophule, malsacré, fièvres quartes, par seule apposition des mains, ceste nostre royne de toutes maladies guarit sans y toucher, seullement leur sonnant une chanson selon la compétence du mal. Puys nous monstra les orgues, desquelles sonnant, faisoit ses admirables guarisons. Scelles estoyent de façon bien estrange. Car les tuyaulx estoyent de casse en canon, le sommier de gaiac, les marchettes de rheubarbe, le suppèed de turbith, le clavier de scammonie."

Lors que considérions ceste admirable et nouvelle structure d'orgues, par ses abstracteurs.... et aultres siens officiers, feurent les lepreux introduictz: elle leur sonna une chanson, je ne scay quelle, feurent soubdain et parfaictement guariz. Puys feurent introduictz les empoissonnez et les Escossois et gens debout. Puys les aveugles, les sourds, les muetz, les resdacteurs apoplectiques, leur appliquant de mesme."

If the editor of the Scotsman can make nothing out of the above Rabelaisian anecdote, we recommend to his attention the following extract from the "Memoirs of Mademoiselle de Montpensier," which seems to show that the Scotchmen of the present day are a great deal too much like the Scotchmen of two hundred years since:—"Le Roi d'Angleterre (Charles II.) vint me conduire jusqu'à mon logis par la galérie qui va du Louvre aux Tuileries; et le long du chemin il ne me parla que de la misérable vie qu'il avait menée en Ecosse; qu'il n'y avait pas une femme; que les gens étaient si rustres, qu'ils croyaient que c'était un péché d'entendre des violons." DINADAM.

IT is at length decided that the customary Festival of the Three Choirs will take place at Hereford next year, although at one time great fears were entertained that this important musical event would fall to the ground for want of sufficient funds. Thanks, however, to the energy and determination of the present chairman, J. H. Arkwright, Esq., of Hampton Court (chairman of the festival, by the way, for the third time), aided by the stewards—at the head of whom figure Lord William Graham, M.P., the Hon. J. F. T. W. Fiennes, Hon. C. S. B. Hanbury, M.P., and Sir William Curtis, Bart.—the triennial meeting is not merely determined upon, but is likely to prove an entire success. Twenty-six gentlemen have accepted office as stewards, on condition that they are not to be responsible for a deficiency beyond 650*l*. The Mayor of Hereford, B. Botfield, Esq., M.P., in compliance with a general wish, has added his name to the list of stewards; so that already a powerful prestige attaches to the forthcoming meeting, and nothing more is required than a Guarantee Fund, in case the loss should be greater than the sums for which the stewards have made themselves answerable, to make the prospects of the Festival in the highest degree promising. Through the exertions and untiring energies of Mr. Townshend Smith, Honorary Secretary, the subscriptions to the Guarantee Fund have already realised nearly 350*l*.; so that at this moment, even should no more additions be made to the list of subscribers, the stewards have only rendered themselves liable to 12*l.* or 13*l.* each to make up the deficit. At the head of the subscribers to the Guarantee Fund stands the Venerable the Archdeacon of Hereford, who, although continuing to entertain objections to musical performances in the cathedral, has put down his name for 25*l.*; while Messrs. Bulmer and Whitfield give the next largest sum, 10*l.*, and Mr. Townshend Smith's name is conspicuous among the 5*l.* donors. Further, it may be worthy of mention that the Dean and Chapter of Hereford have granted the use of the nave of the cathedral for the performance of oratorios and other sacred compositions, and another portion of the building for the daily celebration of choral service.

* Talking of "political performances" (of which the editor of the Scotsman declares musicians to be incapable) we are reminded that Farinelli, the organist, was minister at the Court of Spain—not as ambassador, but as minister of state. A sopranist in the cabinet! To what political position, then, might not a manly tenor or baritone of the present day aspire?

The cessation of the Hereford Festival would have involved a serious loss to the cause of charity. The collection in 1857, amounting to 1064*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, was greater than on any former occasion, which was equally the case at the last meetings both of Worcester and Gloucester. It would have been a disgrace to the town corporate and shire of Hereford to have suffered the discontinuance of the Triennial Meeting, which for so many years had benefited the inhabitants of the old cathedral town by the influx of visitors, conferred new life and enjoyment on a remote and listless locality, and rescued hundreds from the grasp of want and misery. The people of Hereford are indebted more than they are aware of to Mr. Townshend Smith, to the stewards, and to the subscribers to the Guarantee Fund, for upholding the honour of their fair city.

ANGUISH.

IN again placing the oratorio of Solomon before their subscribers and the public, the Committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society have done wisely. The works of Handel must necessarily be their chief stock in trade, and to fairly represent his colossal genius, Solomon must be entered on the list among his better known achievements, the Messiah, Israel, Samson, the Dettingen Te Deum. It is our invariable custom to attend performances of Handel's oratorios, and if we rank Solomon as a work in which the interest to musicians is not of the same stamp as in the others we have mentioned, we do not by any means think it should be neglected. It was, during the season before last, twice performed, and listened to with unqualified satisfaction. While we think the scene of the two mothers before Solomon is too prolonged, and that the libretto is one of the worst that ever troubled Handel, we are not forgetful that "From the censer," and the series of choruses (with contralto solo) commencing, "Music, spread thy voice around," are amongst his most gigantic inspirations; that "May no rash intruder" is not only of marvellous beauty, but that being the only specimen of its style, it has no rival. Solomon, too, has an overture of great value as an orchestral study, which fitly inaugurates an oratorio wherein instrumental excellence is preserved unimpaired throughout. The work, as performed at Exeter Hall, is much curtailed from its original proportions, and even now is too long for particular descriptions of each piece. The antiphonal form is used in many of the choruses, and in particular instances—such as the first, "Your harps and cymbals sound," "With pious heart," and the before mentioned "From the censer"—with a dignity and magnificence only inferior to some of the numbers of Israel in Egypt. In the airs, too, we find very many of the happiest ideas of the composer, such as "What tho' I trace" (contralto), "Can I see my infant gored?" (soprano), and "Will the sun forget to streak? (soprano), with its graceful flauto obbligato. These are but few of the many pieces in Solomon which are always welcome. The recitatives are very numerous, and serve to exhibit Handel's fertility of invention. Indeed, in this branch of vocal art he has never been surpassed.

It is the custom for the press to take a great deal for granted with respect to the performances of well known associations. We have never failed to express our opinion on the Sacred Harmonic Concerts; but, while admitting their excellence in many points, which, if considered altogether, leave them without equal, we have had occasionally to urge that better things might be done by a body of such great resources. On the present occasion we can safely say that a better representation will never have been given by the Society. If we are not mistaken, this may be attributed to the work of reform and purgation to which the Committee have lately directed their zealous labours. Those gentlemen, however, know best; but if we are right in our surmise, it cannot fail to be an encouragement to them to prosecute a reform, which indeed was rapidly becoming indispensable.

Of the performance of Solomon, which took place last night, and inaugurated the present season, we shall speak next week, in the proper place.

SHOULDER.

WESTMINSTER PLAY.—The Trinummus of Plautus will be performed by the Queen Scholars of Westminster on the following nights:—Friday, December 14; Tuesday, December 18; Thursday, December 20, with the addition of a Prologue and Epilogue on the last two nights.

MUSIC.—It requires no extraordinary skill in execution to render music subservient to the purposes of social and domestic enjoyment; but it does require a willing spirit and a feeling mind to make it tell upon the sympathies and affections of our nature. There is a painful spectacle occasionally exhibited in private life, when a daughter refuses to play for the gratification of her own family, or casts aside with contempt the music they prefer; yet when a stranger joins the circle, and especially when many guests are met, she will sit down to the piano with the most obliging air imaginable, and play with perfect good-will whatever air the company may choose. What must the parents of such a daughter feel, if they recollect the fact that it was at their expense their child acquired this pleasing art, by which she appears anxious to charm any one but them? And how does the law of love operate with her? Yet music is the very art which, by its mastery over the feelings and affections, calls forth more tenderness than any other. Surely, then, the principle of love ought to regulate the exercise of this gift in proportion to its influence upon the human heart. Surely it ought not to be cultivated as the medium of display, so much as the means of home enjoyment; not so much as a spell to charm the stranger, or one who has no other link of sympathy with us, as a solace to those we love, and a tribute of gratitude and affection to those who love us.—Brighton Guardian.

THE BASS VIOL versus THE PIANO.—Since the harp has fallen into disuse, nothing has supplied its place as a drawing-room instrument. The piano, that friend of mediocrity, reigns everywhere; but ladies are not aware of all the harm that it occasions. In the first place, except in the hands of an adept, the piano has no expression at all, and only wearies the ear. Besides, it accords in no respect with feminine beauty, and it especially cuts the bust or the head with a horizontal line, causing the most unpleasing effect. It is really strange that our drawing-room musicians have not thought long ago of substituting for these massive, angular chests, some instrument graceful in form and melodious in tone. The painters were the people to consult. There is to be seen at the Louvre a beautiful picture by Netscher—a lady playing on the bass viol. Paul Veronese has represented himself with this instrument in his magnificent picture of the "Marriage at Cana." St. Cecilia also displays her exquisite hand on the strings of a bass viol. The outline, the shape, the shades of colour, all unite to place in advantageous relief the white arm which lithely directs the bow, the slender fingers which delicately traverse the finger-board, the bust gracefully bending forward over the soul of the instrument, which seems to reply by its vibrations to the throbbing of the lovely performer's heart. Should not an instinct of coquetry, in default of musical sentiment, have caused the adoption by ladies of the instrument of the patron saint of musicians?—Brighton Guardian.

The Opera.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—On Monday night an operetta in one act, entitled the Marriage of Georgette, was produced with unequivocal success. Les Noces de Jeannette, the French original, from the joint pens of MM. Barbier and Carré (authors of Dinorah), was brought out some years ago at the Opéra Comique. The music, by M. Victor Massé, gained the first laurels for a young composer who has since taken rank among the most popular disciples of the late Adolphe Adam, and whose latest notable performance, La Reine Topaze, was, like Les Noces de Jeannette, composed expressly for the now celebrated Mad. Miolan Carvalho. A more agreeable little piece to serve as what our neighbours term "lever de rideau" could hardly be desired; and the music is so light and sparkling, that, the brevity of the opera taken into consideration, it is a pity any portion of it should be rejected. Although we are not aware that Les Noces de Jeannette has been introduced at any of our metropolitan theatres, an English version, by Messrs. Leicester Buckingham and A. Harris, so conveniently adapted that it may be played with or without music, has been given in most of the provincial towns, and—thanks to the brilliant vocalisation of Miss Louisa Pyne—was for a long time a favourite in the United States of America, where she sustained one of the two principal characters. The French piece itself, together with the music, transplanted literatim et notatim from the boards of the pleasant opera house in the Rue Favart, was presented, last summer, at the little theatre in Camden House, Kensington, and experienced a highly-flattering reception at the hands of a genuine assembly of connoisseurs. As the general public, however, has no access to that sanctum sanctorum of aristocracy and fashion, a brief digest of the plot may not be supererogatory.

Georgette (Jeannette) is in love with an artisan named Jacques (Jean), who pretends to reciprocate her attachment, until the day appointed for signing the wedding contract, when, repenting of his engagement, he suddenly withdraws. Pursuing the fickle swain to his abode, nevertheless, the forsaken Chloe reproaches him with having made her the laughingstock of the village. Jacques, thus confronted, vows that his admiration remains unchanged, but that his abstract dread of marriage, being even greater than his affection, has led him to this seeming inconsistency. Not satisfied with such a poor excuse, Georgette threatens vengeance from so uncompromising a quarter—that of a stern military father—that Jacques is induced to affix his name to a paper, which he subsequently learns to be a second contract. His indignation at finding himself to be thus irretrievably bound, is only appeased by Georgette's promise that she will not herself sign the deed, and, satisfied that he is still a free man, he leaves the house on an errand with which she has intrusted him. Meanwhile, however, having altered her mind, Georgette completes the contract by the addition of her signature, and on his return Jacques discovers his now legally affianced bride in quiet possession of his domicile. The only expedient he can hit on is to disgust the intruder alike with her partner and her home; and to this end, in an excess of exasperation, half assumed, half real, he turns the apartment topsy-turvy, deranges the bed-furniture, overthrows chairs and tables, and smashes the glass and crockery; after which magnanimous achievement he seeks a temporary repose in the hayloft. While thus invoking the aid of Somnus to calm his excited nerves, Georgette has the broken furniture removed, and substitutes her own, the recent gifts of her friends, in its place. Jacques, on awakening, is astonished to see his apartment freshly and neatly furnished, a substantial supper laid out for him, after his own peculiar taste, while the self-elected wife of his bosom, like the heroine of Lebrun's Rossignol, is emulating the nightingale in fluent and mellifluous strains. Touched with this proof of united forbearance and solicitude, enchanted by the song, and still more (as Mr. Corri makes it appear) by the supper, the heart of Jacques relents; a reconciliation follows in due course, and the enamoured Georgette is rewarded for her perseverance by the hand of a youth who, unmoved by her intrinsic charms, was by no means proof against new furniture, new crockery, and a bacon-omelette. Mr. W. Harrison (we are approaching the period when every manager will be his own author), in his adaptation of the French piece, has followed the original with tolerable fidelity, but somewhat spoiled the denoûment, by omitting the incident of Georgette's tearing up the contract at the very moment of her triumph, which left her still more completely mistress of the field, while, at the same time, paying a slight tribute to "poetical justice."

The music of M. Massé (it must be understood that of all his operas—which, besides those we have mentioned, include Galathée, La Chanteuse Voilée, La Financée du Diable, Les Saisons, &c.—the Noces de Jeannette is the least pretending) does not admit of detailed criticism or analysis, there being very little to criticise and nothing at all to explain. It is throughout of the slightest possible texture, and depends exclusively on its light and fluent tune, combined with a certain well-sustained theatrical propriety. The soliloquy of Jacques, "At last, I am alone," is spirited, if nothing more; the duet, "Hold, stay there, if you please," in which Georgette induces Jacques to sign the contract, though too long for its abstract musical interest, is by no means too long for the dramatic situation; the comic song, "Oh! you can little know, my dear," in which Jacques tries to disgust Georgette by a formal catalogue of the conjugal duties she will have to fulfil under his roof, is lively, well written, and to the purpose; and the final duet, where Jacques, repenting, endeavours to make peace, contains a phrase for Georgette—"My fond heart will sure its joy reveal"—not merely pretty, but which, without exaggeration, may be termed beautiful. Best of all, however, are the three songs of Georgette—"Amongst the village swains," "Fly nimbly with your work, my fingers," and "At my cottage door"—the first of which is remarkably graceful and expressive, while the others (the "Knitting-song" and the "Nightingale-song," by which names they are likely to be familiarly known) are characteristic as well as melodious. All three were given to perfection by Miss Louisa Pyne (Georgette), whose first appearance after her indisposition was hailed with several distinct rounds of applause. In the "Nightingale's song" the accomplished vocalist was accompanied in masterly style on the flute by Mr. Pratten. This gentleman shared with her an elaborate "cadenza" for flute and voice, cut out on much the same pattern as those time-honoured specimens of Lebrun and Bishop that were wont to enliven the amateurs of two or three generations since, and which one might have thought had been virtually driven out of fashion by the genius and originality of Meyerbeer, who by the extraordinary trio for voice and two flutes in the last scene of L'Etoile du Nord made all preceding attempts look faded and forlorn. Perhaps, however, M. Victor Massé did wisely in taking Lebrun rather than Meyerbeer for a model, the first being as easy as the last was difficult to emulate. Nevertheless, Lebrun allowed for, it was a real musical treat to listen to such a performance as that of Miss Lousia Pyne and Mr. Pratten. We have said nothing of the overture and final chorus, inasmuch as they are wholly insignificant. The part of Jacques was supported with vigour and painstaking ability by Mr. Corri, who, though his humour cannot (as we have had already occasion to observe) be cited as spontaneous or natural, managed to divert the audience considerably in more than one scene. The applause at the fall of the curtain was unanimous and cordial.

The Marriage of Georgette was preceded by the ballet of The Ambuscade and followed by Mr. Loder's admirable Night Dancers. Mr. Balfe's new opera—Bianco, the Bravo's Bride—is in active rehearsal.

The Theatres.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On Monday night Mlle. Albina di Rhona, a French dancer, said to be of Servian origin, made her first appearance, in a trifling piece entitled Smack for Smack. The young lady, who is an actress as well as a dancer, speaks the French language, and, as the piece originally stood, the only other character, a Prussian soldier, was played by a German, who spoke in his own vernacular. The bickering which takes place between these two personages, and which ultimately leads to a declaration of mutual attachment, mainly serves to introduce a number of those characteristic dances in which Mlle. Albina di Rhona is a proficient. Nevertheles, it was felt that the German would be unintelligible to a large portion of the audience, and hence he is converted into an Englishman, and played by Mr. Belmore, the lady still retaining her original French. Mlle. Albina is a dancer of immense strength and vivacity, capable of surprising tours de force, and is withal endowed with that histronic spirit that is especially required to give effect to dances of the national kind. She is, moreover, a lively actress, in the ordinary sense of the word, and speaks her dialogue with all the point of a French soubrette. She was greeted with universal applause.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.—Mr. Charles Mathews is again the prevailing genius at this house, the temporary withdrawal of the Story of the '45 allowing light comedy to take the place of romantic melodrama. A very clever version of Les Pattes de Mouche, which is called The Adventures of a Billet-doux, gains considerably by this revolution, for when it was first brought out it was played after the very lengthy tale of serious interest, and was therefore scarcely noticed. Now it occupies the post of honour, which it well deserves, for, as we need not say, it turns on a most amusing intrigue, and, as we may justly add, the two leading personages in whose hands the game entirely lies are excellently played by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mathews. The Critic, in which Mr. Charles Matthews plays both Sir Fretful and Puff, has been too long identified with his name to require comment.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Mr. S. Lover's comical novel of Handy Andy has been converted into a dramatic shape, that Mr. John Drew, an actor celebrated in Ireland, may maintain the part of the blundering serving-man—the Jocrisse of Irish fiction. Mr. Drew is an artist of the quietest and least obtrusive kind, never violently thrusting forward his drollery, but allowing it to insinuate itself into the minds of the audience, as if perfectly relying on its natural force. The finish with which he executes the minute details of the part is very remarkable, and when his share in the dialogue is but small, he still makes himself conspicuous, and remains the attractive figure of the scene through the excellence of his by-play. His skill in "making up," so necessary a qualification for parts of characteristic humour, is very great, his resemblance to the picture of Handy Andy extending apparently even to the conformation of the face. How far nature has assisted art in this respect we cannot determine.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The weather has not been very favourable for the winter concerts, four of which have been now given; nevertheless, the attendance on each occasion has been larger than might have been expected. The programmes continue to preserve their distinctive instrumental features, which Mr. Augustus Manns finds he has been wise in adopting. A symphony and one or two overtures invariably constitute items in the selection, for the most part executed with efficiency and vigour. The new vocal favourite has been Mad. Palmieri, who made her début last Saturday, and sang airs from the Bohemian Girl, and the Italian repertory with marked effect. Also the lady's caro sposo, Signor Palmieri, presented himself as a tenor singer, with no remarkable results. M. Joseph Heine, a violinist, made his first appearance, and executed Ernst's Pirata fantasia with much applause. The symphony was Mendelssohn's, A major, alias The Italian.

CAPTAIN MORTON PRICE AND MISS CATHARINE LUCETTE have commenced an entertainment at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street (formerly the Cosmorama), under the name of a Theatrical Tour through the United States and Canada. It is somewhat difficult to reconcile the title with the entertainment itself, which consists of two amusing petites comedies, written by Captain Price, interspersed with songs and duets of a popular character. These, we suppose, constituted the répertoire of the gallant captain and his fair companion during their tour through the new continent. Captain Price states that he first undertook his theatrical trip for a wager, and that in America he gained 500*l*. We hope he will be as successful in England. Miss Catharine Lucette appeared, a year or two since, at Drury Lane Theatre, as Susan, in Mr. Tully's Black-eyed Susan, and met with a very favourable reception. She has a fresh and agreeable voice, sings well, and acts like one accustomed to the stage. Captain Morton Price is evidently a practised amateur of the first stamp. Among Miss Lucette's best vocal efforts was the ballad of "Kate Kearney," given with taste and expression, and a new song by Herr Emile Berger, entitled "That handsome volunteer," which, being quite in "the spirit of the times," created an unmistakeable impression. M. Berger's song is one of the best we have heard on a "Volunteer" subject, and was given by Miss Catharine Lucette with an archness and vivacity that were irresistible. The distress of the enamoured fair one when she says,

> "I ne'er, I'm sure,
> Shall see him more,
> That gallant volunteer,"

was capitally conveyed, and brought down roars of laughter. The "Handsome Volunteer" indeed made a decided impression. A duet between Captain Price and Miss Lucette, given with infinite spirit by both of them ("Sally, Sally"), was another "hit." The songs we have named were only but a small portion of the entertainment, but they were the most effective. With regard to the pieces in which they were introduced, one is entitled The Double Courtship, the other, A Manager's Perplexities. Simplicity of plot and neatness of dialogue are their principal recommendations. A visit to the Prince of Wales's Hall may be undertaken with a certainty of a couple of pleasantly spent hours.

HERR MOLIQUE AND THE NORWICH CHARITIES.—One of our contemporaries announce that Herr Molique, the composer of the oratorio of Abraham, performed with so much success at the last Norwich Festival, has returned the fifty guineas sent him as remuneration by the committee, requesting at the same time that the sum may be distributed to the charities of the town. The statement is correct, but it is scarcely complete as it stands. We have reason to know that the gifted musician alluded to returned the miserably inadequate recompense proffered him for the express purpose of marking his appreciation of the niggardly spirit in which he had been treated by the Festival committee. It indeed seems something very like a blunder or an insult to offer such a pitiful sum to a man of genius for a work that must have been the labour of months, or perhaps of years, and we are not surprised that Herr Molique should have resented it in this high-minded manner. Of Norwich we can quite believe he has now had sufficient experience, and we can fully understand the determination he is said to have arrived at never again to enter that city. We should, indeed, think it probable that other composers will be warned by his example, and will in like manner shun a place where their merits are likely to be so ill appreciated and so poorly recompensed.—Daily Telegraph.

MUSIC AT PENRHYN.—A correspondent informs us of the great pleasure he received, a few weeks past, from hearing a choral performance in the Penrhyn Slate Quarries, so romantically situated at the commencement of the Nant Francon Pass, on the road from Bangor to Capel Curig. The performers were the quarrymen, their wives, sisters, and daughters; and the programme consisted of most of the choruses from the Messiah. The day was very fine, and the interest created by the performance was proved by the crowds who came from the neighbouring towns and villages to enjoy the music. There must have been present nearly ten thousand persons, who were seated in the various galleries of the quarry, which formed, as it were, a large amphitheatre; the chorus, in number about two hundred, standing in the centre of the quarry, facing the audience. The accompaniments were played on two harmoniums, which, wonderful to relate, were heard by every one present. The weak point of the affair was the number of conductors, there being no less than four; but this could hardly be avoided, as there were four choirs present—Church of England, Wesleyan, Independent, and Methodist—and policy necessitated that the conductor of each sect should have his turn in directing the movements of the whole. The execution was most creditable to all concerned; so creditable, indeed, that we cannot but express an earnest hope that no effort will be spared to carry out a movement so auspiciously commenced. The Hon. Colonel Pennant, the owner of the Penrhyn Slate Quarry, is only too anxious to promote everything that can tend to improve the moral as well as the physical condition of those in his employment; and too much praise cannot be accorded him for his assistance in putting within the reach of his quarrymen a resource so elevating as the performance of the Messiah. Previous to the choral demonstration, the Volunteers (all quarrymen) marched in, with their band, and were put through their drill. The band performed at each change of conductor.

Provincial.

Our provincial column will be somewhat scant of news this week. The autumn tournées are fast drawing to a close, and entrepreneurs in the country become timid in their speculations as Christmas draws near. Nevertheless, we find some important musical doings going forward in sundry localities, where the spirit of fashion or the desire of recruiting health still detains crowds from the metropolis. The season at Brighton is not yet exhausted, and impresarii and concert-givers are, at the last moment, bent on providing some luxury of entertainment for the seaside visitors about to fly off, at any given moment, to prepare for the festivities of the coming holy time. At Mr. Waite Vernon's concert, held in the music-room of the Pavilion, on Monday evening, Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington appeared for the first time since the great "hit" she made in Robin Hood at Her Majesty's Theatre. She sang, among other things, the ballad "True love," from Mr. Macfarren's opera, and the scena "Ombre légère," from Dinorah, creating quite a furore in the latter. Herr Derffel gave his last "pianoforte recital" at the same place on Thursday afternoon.—The Edinburgh journals furnish lengthy accounts of the first subscription concert of the Edinburgh Musical Association, which took place on Saturday evening in the Music Hall, and at which several of our London artists assisted. Mad. (?) Louisa Vinning, Mad. (?) Laura Baxter (why two English ladies married to two English gentlemen should style themselves "Madame" has puzzled more than ourselves!), Mr. Tennant and Mr. Allan Irving were the singers; Herr Becker, the violinist, and Herr Lechmeyer, the pianist, instrumentalists; Herr Becker made a decided hit. The Saturday evening concerts increase in popularity. At the last the crowd was very great. Mr. Howard Glover's cantata, Tam o' Shanter, according to the reliable information of the Evening Courant will be performed this evening, and we have no doubt will cause an unusual sensation, as the music is not only admirably characteristic but beautiful in an abstract sense. The production of this work speaks well for the energy and enterprise of the directors of the Saturday evening concerts.

We learn from a Manchester paper that the organ in St. Ignatius's church (Roman Catholic), was re-opened on Sunday last by Mr. W. T. Best, organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool. The organ has been entirely rebuilt and much enlarged by the eminent organ builders, Messrs. Kirtland and Jardine, of Manchester. A correspondent sends us a list of the stops which are as follows:—

Great Organ, C C to F.

1.	Grand Open Diapason	8 feet.
2.	Open Diapason	8 „
3.	Stopped Diapason	8 „
4.	Principal	4 „
5.	Twelfth	2⅔ „
6.	Fifteenth	2 „
7.	Sesquialtera	3 ranks.
8.	Trumpet	8 feet.

Choir Organ, C C to F.

9.	Stopped Diapason Bass	8 feet.
10.	Stopped Diapason, Treble	8 „
11.	Dulciana	8 „
†12.	Keraulophon, Tenor, C.	8 „
13.	Principal	4 „
14.	Flute, Tenor C.	4 „
15.	Cremona, Tenor C.	8 „

Swell Organ, Tenor C to F.

16.	Double Stopped Diapason	16 feet.
17.	Open Diapason	8 „
18.	Stopped Diapason	8 „
19.	Principal	4 „
†20.	Mixture. 2 ranks	2 „
†21.	Cornopean	8 „
†22.	Oboe	8 „

Pedal Organ, C C C to F.—30 Notes.

†23.	Grand Open Diapason	16 feet.
†24.	Bourdon	16 „
†25.	Principal	8 „
†26.	Mixture. 2 ranks.	„
†27.	Trombone	16 „

Couplers.

28. Swell to Great.	30. Great to Pedals.
29. Choir to Great.	31. Choir to Pedals.

There are three combination pedals to the great organ, and two to the pedal organ. Those stops marked with a dagger (†) are new, and all the others have been carefully revoiced. The sound-boards, bellows, actions, &c., of the pedal organ, are also new. The movements generally throughout the organ have been reconstructed. The organ has a round and full tone, of great power, and may be fairly considered a very fine instrument.—At the last Glasgow Saturday evening concert the same party was engaged who assisted at the performance of the Edinburgh musical association in the morning. "The programme," writes the Glasgow Daily Herald, "contained a staff of artists which has neither been so strong nor so good since the commencement of the season. The singers were Mad. Laura Baxter, Mad. L. Vinning, Mr. Tennant, and Mr. Allan Irving; the instrumentalists, Herr Lechmeyer, pianist and composer, and Herr Becker, violinist. Mad. Laura Baxter displayed a fine alto voice; and Mad. Vinning is an excellent soprano singer. Mr. Irving's baritone voice was highly esteemed, and his singing was repeatedly encored. Mr. Tennant's musical abilities are of a very high order; "Annie, dear, good bye," was sung by him in a manner well worthy of his talents. The performances on the piano by Herr Lechmeyer were executed in a masterly manner. Herr Becker is decidedly a first-class violinist, and his ingenious playing on that instrument deserves the greatest praise. The band of the West York Rifles, under their able conductor, Mr. J. Deacon, also contributed much to the enjoyment of the evening. In consequence of the great attraction, the hall was crowded in every corner."—At Bradford we find the Festival Choral Society giving Mr. Macfarren's cantata Christmas with great success at St. George's Hall, the solo parts being taken by Miss Illingworth and Miss Carrodus, with Mr. Burton at the pianoforte, and Mr. Jackson, conductor.

"Christmas," writes the Bradford Observer, "is a cantata descriptive of the rustic festivities of an English Christmas in the olden time,—the song, the chorus, the carol, the dance, the merry tale, and other pastimes, are each brought out in succession with true English feeling and with a genial warmth suitable to the hospitable season pourtrayed, Mr. Oxenford's poetry finding an able exponent in the talented composer of the favourite new opera of Robin Hood. The music, to use the language of a metropolitan critic, 'is full of pure English melody, rich in choral effects, and glowing from beginning to end with fire and animation.' This beautiful work was interpreted on Monday evening in a manner highly creditable to the society, considering that it was the first time of its performance. The production of the cantata was evidently a 'labour of love' with Mr. Jackson, the conductor, who was ably seconded in the beautiful pianoforte accompaniments by Mr. Burton."

Mad. Sainville's evening concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Wednesday evening week, went off well. The vocalists were the fair beneficiare, Miles. Pacini and Stella, "rising young vocalists," Miss Lizzie Gilbert, Mr. Williams and Mr. Lee. Mr. Cunningham, who was announced to sing "Come into the garden Maud," and "Thou art so near," was unfortunately unable to appear owing to "urgent private affairs," as we understood. Mr. P. Van Noorden was the pianist. He played an "Octave study" and an "Etude à la Valse" capitally. Mad. Sainville's best performance was the "brindisi" from Lucrezia Borgia.

Advertisements.

Just published in 1 vol. 4to., price One Guinea, dedicated by permission to Sir John Herschel, Bart., K.H., F.R.S., &c. &c.

ELEMENTS OF MUSICAL SCIENCE. By Robert Brown.

The design of this work is to establish the Theory of Harmony on its true basis, and so to simplify the study of practical harmony as to prove a useful key to the writings as well as the compositions of experienced harmonists. The copious examples in full score are so arranged as to be easily read by all who are accustomed to the bass clef.

London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., Paternoster Row; Addison, Hollier and Lucas, Regent Street.

A MUSICAL PRACTICE in the South of England TO BE DISPOSED OF immediately on advantageous terms—well worth the notice of a professor of the pianoforte and singing, &c.—For particulars apply to Messrs. Gray and Davison, 370 Euston Road, N.W.

NEW PIANO MUSIC,

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

			s.	d.
		PIANO SOLO.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	"The harp that once thro' Tara's Halls	3	0
ERGMANN, A.	...	"Rondo appassionato" (dedicated to Mad. Davison)	4	0
,,	...	"Réminiscences d'Obéron"	3	0
FIELD, JOHN	...	Six Nocturnes (edited by F. Liszt) ... ... each	2	0
GANZ, WILHELM	...	"Santa Lucia" (a brilliant transcription)	3	0
KONTSKI, A. DE	...	"Aux armes!" caprice heroique	5	0
LIDEL, BLANCHE	...	"Valse de Salon"	2	6
LISZT, FRANZ	...	March from Wagner's Tannhäuser	4	0
MAUSS, THEODOR	...	"Prometheus." Galop brillant	4	0
MOZART, W. A.	...	Romance in A flat	2	0
ROUBIER, HENRI	...	"La vallée des roses." Mazurka de Salon	3	6
,,	...	"Josephine" ... ... do. do.	3	0
RUBINSTEIN, A.	...	Barcarolle in F minor	2	6
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Vedrai carino" (Don Juan)	3	0
,,	...	"Batti, batti" (ditto)	3	0
,,	...	"The mermaid's song" (Haydn)	3	0
SCHUBERT, F.	...	Impromptu in E flat, Op. 90, No. 2	4	0
,,	...	Impromptu in B flat, Op. 142, No. 3 (played by Mr. Charles Hallé)	3	6
SELLE, W. C.	...	"Marche Triomphale"	3	0
SILAS, E.	...	Romance, Op. 48	2	6
,,	...	Impromptu à la Mazurka, Op. 50	3	0
,,	...	Tarentelle, Op. 51	4	0
		PIANO DUET.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	Rigoletto (transcription of the Quartett)	4	0
LEFEBURE-WELY	...	"Hommage à sa Majesté Napoléon III." caprice militaire	6	0
,,	...	"Le retour de l'armée." Marche triomphale ...	6	0
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Don Juan." Grand Duo sur l'opéra de Mozart...	6	0
WAGNER, R.	...	March from Tannhäuser, arranged by T. Mauss ...	5	0

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT

OF

FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,

IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY

DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,

Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,

TO BE SOLD AT

ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,

BY

MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,

28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.
MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.
VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.
VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.
FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.
CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.
HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.
PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.
VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.
Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.
THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.

Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.
Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

THE MARRIAGE OF GEORGETTE. (Les Noces de Jeannette.) Boosey and Sons beg to give notice that the Copyright of the above Opera belongs to them, and proceedings will be taken against any person infringing the same.

"TEN THOUSAND STARS WERE BURNING BRIGHT,"—New Hymn for Christmas. Harmonised Vocal Score and Organ. Sent post free for Four stamps. R. Andrews' Cheap Pianoforte, Harmonium, and Music Saloon, 84 Oxford Street, Manchester, where may be had the "Original Easter Hymn," Four stamps.

TO ORGANISTS.—GEORGE LAKE'S Christmas Hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing," a simple setting, published in short score, may be had of the composer (Shirley House), Sydenham, by enclosing 6 postage stamps.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Evening at 8. Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

PECKHAM AMATEUR MUSICAL UNION.—The Subscribers are hereby informed that the next Concert will be given on Saturday, December 1st, at the Peckham Assembly Rooms, with the assistance of the following artistes:—Mad. Vaneri (Her Majesty's Theatre, by permission of E. T. Smith, Esq.), Miss Lazarus, Signor Mercuriali (Her Majesty's Theatre, by permission of E. T. Smith, Esq.), Mr. John Morgan, and Mr. Lazarus (Clarionet). Conductor, Mr. F. OSBORNE WILLIAMS. Subscribers' Friends 2s. 6d. each. To commence at 7.

HENRY HERSEE, Jun., President.
HORACE QUARE, } Hon. Secs.
WALTER CHEESEMAN, }

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERT LIBRARY.—INSTRUMENTAL DEPARTMENT. (Edited by S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.)—No. 1.—DUSSEK'S SONATA IN B FLAT (Performed, for the Fourth time, at the Monday Popular Concerts, November 12, 1860—First Concert, Third Season.) No. 2.—MOZART'S SONATA IN B FLAT (No. 14), for Pianoforte and Violin. (Frequently performed at the Monday Popular Concerts.) VOCAL DEPARTMENT. (Edited by S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL). "NAME THE GLAD DAY," Canzonet, written by JOHN OXENFORD, Esq., composed by J. L. DUSSEK (Sung by Madame LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, at the Monday Popular Concerts, Nov. 12, 1860)—"Ah, why do we love?" (Macfarren). "Soft and bright the Gems of Night" (H. Smart); and "Thy pardon, dearest Treasure" duet (Dussek).

London: CHAPPELL & Co., 49 and 50, New Bond Street.

PROFESSORS of MUSIC who use Prizes in their classes and schools, are recommended to consult ROBERT COCKS and CO.'s extensive List of Musical Novelties, Classical and Popular, for Christmas Presents and New Year's Gifts. Forwarded gratis and postage free.—Address Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

MILITARY PART SONGS.—The "YOUNG RECRUIT," for three equal voices. Music by Kücken; new words by G. Linley; arranged by J. Warren; on a card, 2d. Expressly adapted for the vocal unions of the volunteer rifles, as well as for singing classes, glee clubs, &c.

London: Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK for 1861, will be issued early in December, price 1s. 6d.; per post 1s. 8d. Advertisements and Lists of Music to be sent in by the 1st December, to Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20 Charing Cross.

NEW MUSICAL WORK.

ANNALS OF THE KINGS AND QUEENS OF ENGLAND from the CONQUEST to the REIGN of VICTORIA. The words written and the music arranged and composed by GEORGE LINLEY, embellished with an illustrative title by JULIAN PORTER, and elegantly bound in cloth price 10s. 6d.

London: Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Simpkin, Marshall and Co., Stationers' Hall Court; and Hamilton, Adams and Co., Paternoster Row.

Price Sixpence. Free by post for Seven Stamps.

TO THE MUSICAL WORLD.—This day is Published, in the form of a neatly embossed Tablet, an ingenious, and, to any child, comprehensible contrivance, for facilitating the learning of the MUSICAL SIGNATURES (Sharps and Flats). May be had of Mr. JOHN TOWERS, Professor of Dr. Adolph B. Marx's (Berlin) new system of Musical Instruction. 16, Grand Parade, Brighton.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC, by Dr. FOWLE.

ANTHEM.—"Arise, shine, for thy light is come." Second Edition. 1s.
CAROL.—"Hark to the merry bells." Third Edition. 1s.
GLEE.—"Hail, Father Christmas!" Third Edition. 2s. 6d. (Sung with great success at Canterbury, Lichfield, and other towns).
HYMN.—"Hark, the herald angels sing!" 1s.
NEW YEAR'S HYMN. 1s. Choirs supplied at a low price, by applying to Dr. FOWLE, 8, Steyne, Bognor.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147.—May now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

THE NEW OPERETTA,

THE MARRIAGE OF GEORGETTE,

As performed with the greatest success at

THE ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THE MUSIC BY VICTOR MASSE.

NOW READY,

The "NIGHTINGALE SONG," The "NEEDLE SONG," "AMONG THE VILLAGE SWAINS,"

AS SUNG BY MISS LOUISA PYNE.

. ALL THE SONGS ARE IN THE PRESS.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

THE FAVOURITE AIRS, IN ONE BOOK	5s. 0d.
BRINLEY RICHARD'S "NIGHTINGALE"	3s. 0d.
ASCHER'S "CLOCHER DU VILLAGE"	3s. 0d.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

(From the Times.)

Last night an operetta in one act, entitled the Marriage of Georgette, was produced with unequivocal success. A more agreeable little piece could hardly be desired; and the music is so light and sparkling that, the brevity of the opera taken into consideration, it is a pity any portion of it should be rejected. Best of all are the three songs of Georgette—"Amongst the village swains," "Fly nimbly with your work, my fingers," and "At my cottage door"—the first of which is remarkably graceful and expressive, while the others (the "Knitting-song" and the "Nightingale-song," by which names they are likely to be familiarly known) are characteristic as well as melodious. All three were given to perfection by Miss Louisa Pyne (Georgette).

(From the Morning Post.)

The music of this little operetta is gay, sparkling, elegant, and spirituelle. The great feature of the evening was the reappearance of Miss Louisa Pyne as Georgette. The music of the part is, throughout, admirably suited to her voice and style, and she executed it all to perfection. In one air, nevertheless, she shone with extraordinary brilliancy, and this was the trying bravura, with flute obbligato, "Ah! my cottage door." Here Miss Pyne achieved a success in every respect equal to that which she gained in Meyerbeer's famous "Shadow-song," and, with her aid, M. Massé's air can scarcely fail to become generally popular.

From the Daily Telegraph.

The music is throughout graceful and pleasing. The overture opens effectively with the ringing of the marriage bells, and is appropriately rustic in character. The most noticeable of the solos are those for Georgette, known in France as the Romance de l'Aiguille—a most charming and graceful melody, sung with exquisite taste by Miss Louisa Pyne—the "Air des Meubles" so well given as to make the hearer regret that a note of it should be omitted; and the "Air du Rossignol," a florid bravura with flute obligato, in which Mr. Pratten's admirable playing was almost as remarkable as the magnificent execution of the accomplished vocalist.

From the Standard.

The music to which this simple story is wedded is by M. Victor Massé, and is of that agreeable class which is a characteristic of some modern French composers. There is a regular overture very pleasing, and commencing with a charming movement expressed by means of bells, and a clever imitation of the corne-muse of a rustic wedding. The vocal music is, of course, confined to songs and duets; of these by far the best are given to Georgette, who has three airs of a graceful and simple character, one of these, sung while she is at work ("Even at her work the village maiden sings"), begins, "Fly nimbly with your work, my fingers," and narrowly escaped with an encore; and another, "At my cottage door," (the nightingale-song) certainly received one, although it was not accepted by Miss Pyne. This latter, which is the gem of the opera, is a charming melody, piquantly expressive, and a good theme for brilliant execution. It has a delicious flute accompaniment, and in the passages especially in which the voice took up the phrases of the instrument, Miss Pyne's execution was marvellous. This air itself is enough to secure the success of the operetta, and excited the utmost enthusiasm of the audience. Without any aim apparently on the part of the composer at the highest class of music, the whole of this little piece is light and agreeable, and the instrumentation even more than the voice parts full of variety and expression. It is altogether a charming entertainment. The applause at the close of the operetta was enthusiastic, and the curtain was raised for Miss Pyne and Mr. Corri to bow their acknowledgments.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, December 1, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 49 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) Vocal Classes	Dr. TENDALL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON, being engaged to sing the MESSIAH, at Aberdeen, on the 28th December, begs to say that she has a few days disengaged before and after that date, and would be happy to accept engagements, en route to or from Scotland.—34 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W.

SIGNOR and MAD. FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

FLUTE, GUITAR, and CONCERTINA.—LESSONS by Mr. and Mad. R. SIDNEY PRATTEN, at 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W., where may be had the whole of their publications for the above instruments, consisting of nearly 300 Pieces, vocal and instrumental.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and a Day Performance on Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

WANTED A BANDMASTER for a VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS in the Country, Salary £75 per annum; must be a good Violinist and performer on one wind instrument. One with a thorough knowledge of the violin could greatly increase his income. Address, enclosing testimonials, to Ewer and Co., 87 Regent Street, W.

TO ORGANISTS. — GEORGE LAKE'S Christmas Hymn, "Hark! the herald angels sing," a simple setting, published in short score, may be had of the composer (Shirley House), Sydenham, by enclosing 6 postage stamps.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Editon, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method for acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214, Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81, Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where pupils are also received.

WANTED a Young MAN to attend to the Sheet Music Department in the north. One who can play preferred.—Application to be made at Messrs. Knoll and Co.'s Pianoforte Factory, 187 Tottenham Court Road, between 2 and 4 o'clock.

TO HARMONIUM TUNERS.—Wanted a good HARMONIUM TUNER.—Apply to Boosey and Sons, 24 Holles Street.

BEAUMONT INSTITUTION, Mile End.—The Series of CONCERTS will commence on Monday, January 7, 1861. Principal Vocalist, Mr. SIMS REEVES. Conductor, Mr. FRANK MORI. Director, Mr. D. FRANCIS, to whom all communications are requested to be addressed, at 24 Mile End Road, E.

NOTICE.
TO LECTURERS, STUDENTS, PHYSICIANS, TEACHERS OF MUSIC, DANCING, DRAWING, &c.

LETTS' PROFESSIONAL APPOINTMENT DIARY, with hourly divisions for the entering of engagements by Lecturers, Students, and Teachers. French Morocco Tuck, pockets, pencil, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.; Morocco or Russia Pocket Books from 4s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., will bear from four to eight years' hard wear.

Sold by all Booksellers. Fully descriptive catalogues, gratis.
Letts, Son & Co., Stationers, 8 Royal Exchange, London, E.C.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Traviata," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen Performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Melodies, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

MUSICAL WORLD ONE PENNY NEWSPAPER

CHARLES LUDER'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

PIANOFORTE. s. d.

"La Tarentelle" (dedicated to Ferdinand Praeger) Op. 41 ... ... 3 0
"Le Corsaire" (dedicated to Edouard Roeckel) Op. 42 ... ... 3 0
"Six Romances Anglaises sans Paroles" (in two books each) ... 6 0
"La Danse des Sorcières," Op. 33 ... ... 3 0

VOCAL.

"L'Emigré Irlandais" (dedicated to Mad. Sainton-Dolby) 3 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL MUSIC.

Name of Song.	Sung by.	Composer.	s.	d.
"I love YOU"	... Sims Reeves	... M. W. Balfe ...	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose"	... Ditto ...	... Ditto	3	0
"If I could change as others change"	... Laura Baxter	... Ditto	2	6
"The meadow gate"	... Wilbye Cooper	... G. B. Allen ...	2	6
"Wert thou mine"	... Sims Reeves	... Frank Mori ...	2	6
"Thou art so near and yet so far" ...	... Herr Reichardt	... A. Reichardt..	3	0
"Good night" (cradle song)	... Ditto ...	... Ditto	2	6
"I never knew how dear thou wert" ...	... Miss Lascelles	... H. K. Morley.	2	6

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

			s.	d.
"I love YOU" ...	... Transcribed by	... Emile Berger ...	3	0
Ditto	.. Ditto (easy)	... J. Liebich	2	0
"Good night" ...	... Ditto (moderately difficult) ...	... W. Kuhe	3	0
Ditto	... Ditto (easy)	... J. Liebich	2	0
Ditto	... Ditto (easy)	... R. Andrews ...	2	0
"Thou art so near"	... Ditto (easy)	... Ditto	2	0
Ditto	... Ditto (very easy)	... Rudolf Nordmann.	1	0
Ditto	... Ditto, as a PIANO DUET ...	... Ditto	1	0
"Santa Lucia ...	... Ditty (easy)	... Eugène Moniot ...	1	0
"Leopold" ...	... Mazurka favourite	... Brinley Richards ..	2	0
"Oberon"	... {Fantasia, composed expressly for Miss Arabella Goddard ... ...}	G. B. Allen ...	5	0

London: Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT.

The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far."

Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

DIFFICULT. s. d.

DON PASQUALE (introducing "Com è gentil") Ricardo Linter 5 0

MODERATELY DIFFICULT.

"The last rose of Summer" (with variations) Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew 3 0

VERY EASY.

"Thou art so near" (Reichardt's popular Lied) Rudolf Nordmann 1 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

WEBER'S LAST WALTZ, transcribed by F. ROSENFELD.

This is one of the best arrangements for pupils, yet offered to the public, of the above admired waltz. It is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT.

The above popular Neapolitan melody specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

s. d.

"Cupid's Repose" (Melody) 3 0
"Pensez à moi" (Révérie) 3 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet,

arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the above arrangement for that purpose.

EMANUEL AGUILAR'S LATEST COMPOSITIONS.

VOCAL. s. d.

"In a wood on a windy day" (poetry by Acton Bell) 3 0
"Sympathy" (poetry by Ellis Bell) 2 0
"Farewell" (poetry by Bishop Heber) 2 0

PIANOFORTE.

"Sunset glow" (Révérie) (Dedicated to Mrs. Robert Cartwright.) 3 0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by

Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW DANCE MUSIC.

	s.	d.
CZERKASKI (Joseph) "The Bridesmaids' Album."
No. 1—"Bridal Quadrilles"	2	0
2—"Shorncliffe Waltzes"	2	6
3—"Beatrice Mazurka"	2	0
4—"Frederick William Waltz"	2	0
5—"Princess Victoria Quadrille"	2	0
6—"Polish Varsoviana"	2	0
7—"Exeter Polka"	2	0
8—"Apethorpe Galop"	1	6

 The "Bridesmaids' Album," complete in one volume, handsomely bound, 10s. 6d.

REPERTOIRE DES BOUFFES PARISIENS.

| | | |

BACH AND MENDELSSOHN.*

FROM A SOCIAL POINT OF VIEW.

HE who would praise Mendelssohn as he merits, must not forget how many thousands have been attracted to the study of Handel and Bach, through him, and how, with his works, he opened out, for the whole nation, a new appreciation of these men, whose immortal fame will always be ours, yet whom we seemed for a time to have forgotten. Many, even, who cared to hear little else save Parisian and Italian music, have had new pleasure in German musical art awakened in them by Mendelssohn. Here we may plainly see how much more effectual is artistic creation, than all the preaching and theorising in the world. Zealous critics had long thought to direct attention, with words, to the sublime models Bach and Handel offered us; but as soon as Mendelssohn set his exhortation to notes—or in notes—it succeeded at one blow.

Mendelssohn never betrayed his nationality; how few German masters there are, who can be placed side by side with him in this! Many write in an un-German spirit, and know not what they do. For of all arts, music is the oftenest pursued without thought, while poetry, painting and sculpture allow the changeful conditions of national life to flow in upon them, the majority of composers create according to chance, or, at best, as a happy instinct guides them.

This is the principal reason why music, that otherwise might become so extraordinary a power, rarely works practically upon the spiritual life of the nation. Mendelssohn chose, consciously, the stand-point of national effectuality. There are some musicians who can forgive him all but this!

With such a view of the case, it seems a rare accident of destiny—if not something more—that Mendelssohn did not produce an opera. Formerly, an opera might have been carelessly enough composed, and, for all that, it might succeed famously; but the case is altered now. Half a musical generation asked a deep, artistic completion for the opera; and Mendelssohn, the very man of men for this, the only man, perhaps, who could have entirely forced German opera from its incompletion—must die, when the first act of his opera was yet scarcely finished.

That restorative tendency, by means of which German historical paintings has lately gained such triumphs, naturalised itself with music, in Mendelssohn; indeed, it is a characteristic sign of the musical present. As Overbech, Veit, and Steinle painted the sacred histories, of which people did not want to hear anything more, in the serious old style, so Mendelssohn wrote his oratorios and church compositions; but he did not stand still at the ecclesiastical, though he clung as obstinately as the painters to the antiquated; and his circle of view become wide as the world itself, his works more full of life, and more in accordance with the spirit of our own age, although he did not always succeed in making himself fully master of his powers. When a good historic school is founded in our music—and we may safely predict that the near future will see it—Mendelssohn will be named the precursor of that school. We would have the young generation swear at the Master's grave, not to forget that this is the great heritage he has left to us: and to see to it, that to such an inheritance an heir is raised up.

Mendelssohn's position in the history of music, may be compared with that which the Caracci occupy in the history of Italian painting. They also purified degenerate art, and returned to the study of the old classic masters, while, sustained by theoretic knowledge—like Mendelssohn — they created thoughtfully conceived works. Their aim has been styled an eclectic one. The same may be truly said of Mendelssohn, who with studied consciousness united in one whole the prominent characteristic of earlier schools; a union, which is new in its combination, if not in its parts. It betokens a season of decay, when artists feel themselves obliged to look backward, in order to gather inspiration for new creations, from the study of more fortunate predecessors. Is this also the case in the history of music? Does not the over-abundance of merely technical effects, the abuse of form, look desperately like the degenerate time of historic painting? the Caracci were not able to dam the in-breaking flood of destruction; will the Mendelssohnian school permanently succeed?

When Mendelssohn placed Handel, Bach, and Beethoven, as foundation posts of all further progress in modern music, he brought great changes, not only into production, but even into the current traditional aspect of things. The masters who were looked upon at that time, as peculiarly classic, namely Mozart and Haydn, have been—and especially the last named—practically ignored by Mendelssohn. His entire direction is, in fact, an indirect polemic against theirs. This is easy to understand; for that very degeneration in modern music, against which Mendelssohn fought so manfully, is rooted, partly in a misunderstanding of Beethoven, and partly in the spiritless superficiality, which may be traced back, in a direct line, to the stupidly mechanical imitators of Mozart and Haydn. It is plain that such music, running into the sand of the driest triviality, must have been a peculiar horror to a man like Mendelssohn; and when the silly tone-play decorated itself with the spangles of German and French new-romanticism, it was difficult to subdue—for the Philister is immortal. But Mendelssohn was a re-action in himself; he caused us to forget the Viennese tone-school in Handel, Bach, and Beethoven. And we must acknowledge, besides, that, in spite of his classic spirit, he knew better how to set off the clear, delicately sensuous geniality of Haydn and Mozart, than all young Germany and the new romanticists together.

(To be continued).

* (From Riehl's Musikalische Charakterköpfe.)

OTTO JAHN'S "MOZART."

(From the Morning Post.)

MOZART! Such is the brief and compendious title of Mr. Otto Jahn's very long, elaborate, and scrupulously careful work, the fourth and last volume of which is just out; the first having appeared in 1856, more than four years ago. Mr. Jahn was obviously in no hurry to complete his labours, but he has proceeded surely as well as slowly; and so vast is the amount of facts accumulated, so valuable the information acquired, that those who have the courage to read the production from end to end will doubtless be more than satisfied. Of Mozart the composer—a being whom all civilised creatures know, or think they know—there remained, perhaps, but little to tell; but about Mozart the man it appears that a good deal was left for Mr. Jahn to communicate, and he has told it with a disregard to brevity and concentration quite astonishing even in a German writer. Such a book, the first volume of which is alone longer than Johnson's "Lives of the British Poets," should have been published in the age of the patriarchs; for the present exceedingly curtailed duration of human life it is far too long. Methuselah might possibly have found it light reading.

Our objection, however, applies only to Mr. Jahn's method of treating his subject; to his extreme prolixity and verbosity; his unhappy fondness for dwelling upon merely subordinate matters and trifling events, which throw no new light upon the character or genius of his hero, and are therefore of no use to the world; and must not be understood to call in question the importance of the subject itself—to involve any insinuation that Mozart did not deserve the greatest possible amount of attention which enlightened criticism can bestow; for we consider him to have been one of the greatest men that ever lived; and as there is even now a tendency to believe that music is a peculiar faculty, and that a composer may be superlative in his own particular art without possessing generally any intellectual supremacy—an opinion supported by certain literary men who influence the public mind, but which we reject as utterly false and ridiculous—it may, perhaps, be permitted us to observe that when we trace in a musical composition the operation of precisely the same principles which would constitute the greatness of a first-class poem, or any other noble work of art, we cannot help recognising the same grand qualities of intellect applied to different objects; and if further comparisons be needed, we can add that when we have to note the absence of these great qualities in a small literary work, we naturally conclude that it is decidedly inferior as an intellectual production to the musical composition which does possess them; and thus, for example, we find Mozart's Jupiter symphony very much more intellectual than the Godolphin of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, who says, "very stupid people often become very musical; it is a sort of pretension to intellect that suits their capacities. Plutarch says somewhere that the best musical instruments are made from the jaw-bones of asses. Plutarch never made a more sensible observation." And we also consider Handel's "Messiah" to be a very much greater illustration of human genius than the "Biography of the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli," in which music is again treated with contempt, or even the "Coningsby" of this anonymous author's hero. The fact is, that such littérateurs are not in a condition to feel or understand great intellectual achievements of any kind, simply because the smaller cannot contain the greater. If they could comprehend the principles upon which noble works are wrought, they would necessarily recognise them in whatever form they might appear, and write much better than they do, or not at all.

Beside the musical composition, which exhibits with soul-searching power the sublime and beautiful of human feeling, the loftiest and purest ideality, expressed by such scientific means as can only be acquired through the exercise of reason in its highest state of development, surely the modern novel—the mere minute copy of manners, and sometimes very silly manners—or the "brilliant fantasia" upon history, in which the description of dresses, scenery, or social customs constitutes the chief attraction, dwindles into hopeless insignificance, just as it would before the Iliad, the Laocoon, or the Last Judgment.

We can thus easily understand and sympathise with the enthusiasm that led Mr. Jahn to write so long a book, and can likewise applaud him for leaving nothing untold with respect to the private career of his immortal hero. Some think that it lessens our admiration for a creative artist—for the poet "hidden in the light of thought"—to see him brought before the world "in his habits as he lived;" to be made acquainted with what he said, and wrote, and did, and suffered as a private citizen. In certain instances it may do so; but we are nevertheless of opinion that the humanity which would throw a veil over the errors of genius is at best but an amiable weakness, and the fastidiousness that would exclude the knowledge of what are termed "every day occurrences" (how poetical are many of them!) for fear of disturbing some æsthetical impression, is a refinement of selfishness, and an unwholesome squeamishness worthy only the Sybarites of sentiment. Even where revelations of the private life of genius afford more pain than pleasure, it is of the utmost importance that the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, should be spoken, that the heart of the divinely-gifted should be laid palpitating before the world, that the secret springs of thought and action should be unveiled, the causes and influences which can act upon immortal mind be noted and remembered. But where, as in the case of that beautiful, bright, and loving spirit, Mozart, there is no vice to describe that is not covered by a hundred virtues, no tares to be detected that are not inextricably entangled with the wholesome wheat, it were difficult indeed to find even the shadow of a reason why any one thing relating to him should be kept from the public.

This copious, conscientious, and excellent biography of Mozart, who combined in his own works the greatest qualities of all previously existing schools, and looked far into the future; who, commingled the sensuous beauty of Italian melody, the deep expression of German harmony, and the dramatic truth of the so-called French manner; of him who rendered the rigid contrapuntal science of the ancient masters completely subservient to the purposes of poetical thought and emotion; who could sing as spontaneously and sweetly in fugue or canon as in the simplest composition; who, in short, carried musical art to the highest perfection, and is the "model master," if ever there was one—this carefully written record of all that Mozart did and suffered—this elaborate philosophical disquisition upon his merits, both as a man and as an artist, is certainly not to be disposed of satisfactorily in one brief notice. Mr. Otto Jahn was more than four years writing the work, and a few days must be conceded us for reviewing it. Meanwhile we recommend the biography strongly to the attention of the musical public.

VIENNA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

THE musical event of the week has been the performance of Ernani at the Kärntnerthor Theatre. Mad. Csillag most eminently distinguished herself as the heroine of the evening, and by her energetic singing and acting achieved a great success. Herr Wachtel sang the tenor part admirably. An opera by Rubenstein, the pianist, is in active rehearsal, and will probably be produced early next month. It is spoken of by the friends of the composer as a work of merit, and great hopes are entertained of its success. Nous verrons.

HOW IS IT?

TO HORACE (ESQ.) MAYHEW.

MY DEAR HORACE,—How many of the present generation, who really have given any time and attention to music, have felt this thought pass through their minds: How is it? The operas of the present day, with few exceptions, are written for money, and money only. Did the great "tone poet" write for money only? Examine his works, and then say if what you find there waited for a price, or was written to order. We will not dispute that he did write for money, because money procured that without which he could not live, and consequently could not write; but, see his house, his furniture, his dress—all that belonged to him. Did he look as if he wrote for money. Would his nine great symphonies have remained pent up in that wonderful soul of his, never to have come out, except for money? How is it? Was Mozart's only idea to gain money? How is it that nearly all musicians, or rather great writers, die poor? They make a great deal of money most of them. Money, as I said before, is a necessary evil; but look at our writers of the present day—money is all they care about! They write operas to order; so much an air—so much an act—so much more for an overture.* Do ever any of our great writers of the present day write three overtures to their operas, as we find for Fidelio? Why, a good overture in the present day is as "rara" an "avis" as a dead donkey. We do occasionally get a tune that has the honour of reaching a barrelled organ. Its composer, no doubt, as he wends his way through otherwise silent squares, wraps his cloak around him, and hears with great satisfaction his production dinned, in the most objectionable way possible, into the ears of his fellow-citizens. What is more objectionable or sickening than a constant quoter of Shakspeare? And how many other luxuries become nuisances by being served up when they are not wanted. The English Opera, which is making gigantic struggles to obtain a permanent footing in London, is all written to order. How is it? Music cannot be written to order; neither can anything which involves a high order of inspiration. On the contrary, it mars and mutilates, very frequently, ideas which are unripe, and which, if allowed to bud and bloom without being forced, bring forth good fruit, which might live for posterity to delight in; but now you see we have our monthly roses, which we take a passing smell of, and they wither and die. How is it? They are written to order! Is that a correct and final answer, or not? Would these composers write immortal works if they did not write for money? Perhaps there are some sufficiently interested to endeavour to solve this question. One thing is quite certain, that the operas of the present day are written to order, and like most things written to order, soon wear out. How is it? What, my dear Horace, has become of the "tone poet" genus?

As ever, your faithful

CRUMB.

Rolls Alley, Loaf Circus, Bread Street, Dec. 5.

[* Beethoven wrote four overtures to Fidelio as Mr. Horace Mayhew very well knows, and could have told "Crumb" had he seen "Crumb" before "Crumb" committed his letter to paper;—four overtures, three in C, and one—as Mr. Horace Mayhew very well knows, and could have told "Crumb," &c.—in E.—PETIPACE.]

MR. GYE, lessee and manager of the Royal Italian Opera, has returned from the continent.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER I.

He is an anomaly. Never at rest and yet an idle man. Selfish, but continually promoting the success of others. Worshipped when sought after, to be, when found, remorselessly tormented. He leads the most anxious life, and can, nevertheless, indulge in venison and champagne while others make his fortune. He is at once the most despotic ruler and submissive slave. The "super" trembles at his nod while he is kneeling at the prima donna's feet. He is the impersonation of unlimited liability. He is liable to the public, liable to the artists, liable to government, liable to proprietors, in short, liable to everything and everybody except himself.

By nature amphibious; at times strutting proudly upon the high and dry land of prosperity; at others wallowing in the muddy waters of misfortune; equally familiar with both—a philosopher—he is indifferent to either. His habits are luxurious, even to extravagance. Whether fortune frown or smile, he keeps his carriages and horses, is a good whip, and, if not gouty, riding is his favourite exercise. I have studied the "enterprising Impresario" carefully in every phase of his existence, and confess my inability to understand him thoroughly. He varies in some respects from every other member of the community. I purpose giving an account of my experiences and observations of the race, in order that others may form some notion of their anomalous characteristics.

I recal with pleasure that I was of service to the first "enterprising Impresario" with whom I became acquainted. The incident is fresh in my memory. I still hear the shrill angry voices; but let me tell the story.

It was some years ago, in a London theatre late at night. The performance of the evening had terminated; the audience had dispersed; the gas was extinguished—all was dark and silent. I had occasion to see the Impresario in question upon important business, and was requested by his secretary to wait but a few moments, and that he would be disengaged. The moments had extended into hours, and I was still doing, as the French say, l'antichambre. The secretary had locked up his desk and departed—I was left alone to await the desired interview. Some time after I had been thus forsaken, and when almost on the point of also taking my departure, my attention was arrested by the sounds of high words in the adjoining room, followed by a noise of what appeared to be the clashing of swords. The hour of night and stillness of all around added to the interest of the situation, and perhaps made the noise seem more important than it really was. I listened attentively—the quarrel waxed warmer—there were two voices audible, although one was less distinct, being overcome by the power and volubility of the other. Both spoke in a foreign tongue. A sword, or some other steel instrument, was evidently in the hands of one of the disputants, from its ringing sound when struck forcibly against the ground in the anger of the holder. Everybody had left the building; there was no one within hearing, except myself and the two whose dispute I overheard. What course to take?—Whether to interfere, perhaps to prevent bloodshed, or quietly await the result of the quarrel? I was a stranger, quite unknown to both, in fact, was ignorant who they really were. My unceremoniously rushing in upon them would perhaps be resented as an intrusion, and yet some interference seemed imperatively necessary. I listened again, and knocked at the door. Some time elapsed before I was answered. At last, being told to "come in," I entered, and a most remarkable scene I witnessed. The "enterprising Impresario" whom I then saw for the first time, was seated at his writing table, surrounded by the usual quantity of letters, newspapers, and play bills peculiar to a manager's room, while before him stood a figure in stage costume, brandishing a sword, and speaking in a voice excited to the highest pitch by the most violent passion. The quiet manner and seeming indifference of the Impresario, afforded a remarkable contrast to the menacing gestures of the other, whose anger was evidently exasperated by his imperturbable coolness. I was requested to be seated, and my surprise was great, when, upon looking at the figure a second time, I discovered it to be that of a female in male attire! At length the Impresario rose and came towards me. The lady had not observed my entrance. Upon seeing a third person present, her manner completely changed, and making some hurried apology, she suddenly left the room.

It appeared she was a member of the comp and had, after the performance, rushed to the manager in her stage dress, to complain of some real or imaginary grievance which it was utterly hopeless the unoffending Impresario could rectify. "Had you not so kindly interrupted us," he said to me, "we should have been here till daylight or God knows what might have happened." And thus I released the first "enterprising Impresario" of my acquaintance from an unpleasant position, and rendered him a service for which he was grateful ever after.

ANTEATER.

NEW SCHOOL OF DANCING MUSIC.

To the joined Authors of the "Goose with the Golden Eggs."

GENTLEMEN, BURLESQUISTS, and WITS,—Having suggested improvements in some of our musical instruments, I beg to add one on the elegant and enlivening art of dancing, which some one, at a future period, will probably introduce to the notice of the public.

Like other accomplishments, dancing has undergone changes during the last thirty years, and the music that accompanies it become of a more varied character; and instead of only one description, we have five kinds of tunes—the waltz, polka, quadrille, hornpipe and country dance; and although the waltz, polka, and quadrille are generally of a lively character, the shortness of the tunes renders them, after a few times hearing, monotonous to advanced musicians.

To improve upon our present dancing music, and at the same time introduce and render familiar to the million the higher provinces of instrumental composition, it has occurred to me that figures might be invented by a skilful dancing-master to fit the quick movements of the best overtures and symphonies, the slow introduction to the former to be played by the band, and the allegro danced; and by repeating some portions of the figure, it might be spun out the length of the quick portion of the overture, and, with a little extra tuition, become as common to dance the overture to Figaro or Tancredi as a polka or a set of quadrilles.

The first allegro of a sinfonia being equal in length to about three sets of quadrilles, I would recommend the opening adagio to be played without a figure, the allegro following danced, the next movement played, to afford the dancers time to rest, and then finish with the minuetto and finale; the former danced as a waltz, and the latter with a suitable figure. This new school of dancing music would render familiar to the majority the finest instrumental compositions of the greatest masters, and thus elicit more attention when played at our places of public amusement than they do at the present, besides procuring them a larger sale at the music shops, and also holding out encouragement to such of our rising composers as possess talent enough to write them to try their hand, restoring the public taste in the majority to what it was forty years ago, which has been on the decline for genuine scientific music, instead of improving, during the last thirty years, that any person may perceive who observes the amount of attention paid by the audience at our theatres and tavern concert-rooms when a symphony or overture is even well performed by a good band at the former, and on the pianoforte at the latter, whatever some may be inclined to assert to the contrary. Yours, Gentlemen and Wits,

HAYDN WILSON.

MISS POOLE.—We are happy to be able to inform our readers that the report of the death of this charming vocalist, which obtained such currency at the beginning of the week, and caused such deep grief to her numerous admirers, is entirely without foundation. Miss Poole has been indisposed, but is now so far recovered as to be on the point of resuming her professional duties. It would appear that the more distressing a rumour the wider its probable circulation, for we have received inquiries from all quarters respecting the one which we now with so much pleasure and satisfaction contradict.

Letters to the Editor.

FLORAL HALL CONCERTS.

Sir,—Having read some time since an article on the Floral Hall Concerts, in which occurs the following passage:—

"It is unnecessary to say more than that this concert was regarded somewhat in the light of a festival, being expressly 'for the benefit of Mr. Alfred Mellon' (we had been led to believe, by the way, that the entire series were for his 'benefit;' in other words, that the undertaking was exclusively his own,)" &c.—

Will you kindly permit me to state that the undertaking was exclusively mine, and that no other person had any interest in it whatever.

It being customary for managers to take a benefit at the conclusion of the season, I only followed an established rule in announcing a night as my own.

Apologising for troubling you with this letter,

I remain, Sir, your obliged and obedient Servant,

Alfred Mellon.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Sir,—It is with more than usual gratification that you should chronicle the first performance of this season. The programme of coming events is big with a promise of Beethoven's Mass in D, a work twice performed five years ago, but since then most undeservedly laid on the shelf. Another good thing from the Society's répertoire, which is not often done, is Solomon, and its performance on Friday week now claims your attention.

The oratorio Solomon is throughout a remarkable and characteristic work of Handel. Among the choruses, we find "With pious heart," "From the censer," "From the East," and several others which contain some of his greatest ideas, and many of which exemplify his skill and felicitous use of the antiphonal form. Indeed, the opening chorus of the second part, "From the censer curling rise," must be classed with "The Horse and his Rider," and "He gave them hailstones for rain," as a specimen of a style in choral treatment, which is without a rival for breadth and grandeur of effect, and has been seldom equalled in point of skill, or tact in management of voices and instruments. One or two of the choruses are unique, such as "May no rash intruder," and "The name of the wicked," each being an individual specimen of phases of Handel's multifarious and comprehensive style. The admirable overture and accompaniments of this work are an additional charm; and among the airs are the well-known "What tho' I trace?" and "Every sight these eyes behold."

The execution of the instrumental and choral portion of the work on Friday night was, as you are aware, apart from the well-known capabilities of the Society, remarkable for its general efficiency and accuracy. The choruses with solo, "Music spread," &c. were sung—as you must remember—with an artistic feeling rare in so large a body. The much talked of reform in the choir, seems to have come into operation. Are you of my opinion?

The solo singers are answerable for the effect which this oratorio produces to an unusual extent. The solos, particularly the recitatives, are numerous and long, and require the most artistic treatment. When it is stated that the soprano music was in the hands of Mad. Sherrington-Lemmens and Miss Banks, your readers may be assured that all that an easy and fluent delivery, an unswerving faultlessness of intonation and wonderfully distinct articulation, joined with a perfectly natural, free, and unaffected style, could do, in exaltation of so great a work, was done. In contralto singing, Mad. Sainton seems to gain in beauty of voice and dignity and benignity of manner, no less than in vocal skill and knowledge of the art; and yet this would have been thought impossible when we remember her singing during the last few years. Mr. Montem Smith is welcome on many accounts; a good healthy manly tenor voice is a rarity in the present day; and Mr. Smith always uses his natural gift with taste and judgment. Mr. Lewis Thomas claims (and readily obtains) credit for the possession of one of the finest real bass voices we have had for some years. The volume of tone, and the vigour of the lower notes is remarkable; while the manly expression with which he renders his most ponderous passages shows artistic taste of no common order.

In this oratorio, as in Deborah and some others, Mr. Costa's pen has been called into requisition for additional accompaniments. To meddle with Handel is an unwelcome task, and includes rivalry with Mozart among other considerations; but making every allowance for the difficulty of the case,— &c., &c., &c.

I am, Sir, your obedient

Shoulder.

[We agree here with "Shoulder," if not there; which, he will urge is neither here nor there; to which we may re-urge, or r'urge—in extenuation of a passage omitted, and for which "&c. &c. &c." must be accepted as substitute—"Quippe non delicta regum illos, sed vires ac majestatem insequi." The words applied by the Latin historian to the persecutors of crowned heads will serve equally well as a reproof to "Shoulder," in his new capacity of persecutor of batoned hands. He pursueth not the faults but the strength and majesty. What says Pascal?—"La raison agit avec lenteur . . . . ou elle s'égare;" and Burns?—"Ah Nick! ah Nick! (Old Nick—"Shoulder") it is na fair;" and Huon of Bordeaux,—"Je scais bien vétir le haubert, et mettre le heaume en mon chef." Michael Costa knows eke.—Ah "Shoulder!"—must it be spoken of you, as of the ambitious man in Burton's Partn. 1 Sec. 2, Mem. 3, Subs. 11—we quote from memory—"Si appetitum explere non potest furore corripitur?" It is sad to think it, but we are shouldered into that conclusion. "Sæpe homo de vanæ gloriæ contemptu, vanius gloriatur," as Shirley Brooks might exclaim, without in the least parodying Austin.—Petipace.]

A LAPSUS PENNÆ.

Sir,—Mr. Punch, who, like a wise man and philosopher, reads the Musical World, informs the ordinary world that he has learnt from your columns how the natives of Baden-Baden, sensibly appreciating the genius of Meyerbeer, had newly christened one of their thoroughfares, L'Avenue Meyerbeer, in honour of the composer of Les Huguenots. To the best of my recollection, however, it was stated that the inhabitants of Spa, in Belgium—not of Baden, in Baden—had added to the interest and attractions of their pretty town, by paying so graceful a compliment to their honoured guest, who has composed many of his chefs-d'œuvre while residing amongst them. I am sure that Mr. Punch would not willingly disturb the harmony existing between the Musical World and Spa, and must therefore conclude that your humorous contemporary has for once been guilty of a lapsus pennæ—a-liner.—Yours,

Porcupine of Liverpool.

[If so, a considerable calami—ty.—Petipace.]

ORGANS AND ORGAN-PLAYERS.

(From Punch.)

The art of (street) organ-playing, dear Mr. Punch, has attained to such a degree of popularity at the present day, especially in the suburbs of London, that, knowing as I do from a constant perusal of your pages the great interest you take in the subject, I venture to offer a few suggestions for your consideration; and my remarks will perhaps have greater weight if I mention, with all due modesty, that I am myself a performer of some experience on that noble instrument, as I have frequently in my younger days, by the offer of small coins, induced the gentleman who attended our house to allow me to turn the handle of his organ.

I would suggest that, with regard to the performance of the most favourite airs,—as, for example, Il Balen or the Power of Love,—it should not be considered necessary to play them oftener than about twenty-five times each in any one place, as a more frequent repetition occasionally produces a feeling of monotony; and if the organ should happen to be revoltingly out of tune, as might sometimes be the case, the performer should consider himself limited to a fifteenth repetition of those ever-fresh and beautiful melodies. In cases where the player accompanies the organ with his voice,—where a pedal passage is introduced,—where there is a monkey obbligato,—in short, where any gesticulation is required from either performer,—the duration of the entertainment should be limited to half an hour before each house, as a longer performance is an unreasonable tax on the physical powers of the executants. In case of sickness in any house which he might visit, I think it should certainly be left to the judgment and good taste of the performer to determine how long he should play; and no remonstrances ought, under any circumstances, to be offered by the inhabitants. I trust that these few suggestions will be received in the spirit in which they are offered by those whose arduous business it is to perambulate the streets for our gratification, and I hope that they will meet with due consideration from all admirers of the Italian school of of organ-playing.

I remain, dear Mr. Punch, very truly yours,
A LOVER OF THE "DIVINE ART."

NEW YORK.—Looking back during the period of some five or six months since I have written to you, I find that I have passed through some agreeable if not startling musical experience. Various brief opera seasons under transient Italian and German dynasties have come and gone. Stigelli, whom I hailed with rapturous delight on his first appearance here, has become the tenor of a New York audience. Fabbri has appeared and established a good lyrical reputation. Colson has sung and acted and dressed, and looked so indescribably bewitching, that with half the opera enthusiasts in New York I have fallen deeply—oh! so unfathomably deeply—in love with the delightful creature. Adelina Patti has worn her popularity not quite out—but sufficiently so to demand a change. Carl Formes has returned, and D'Angri has arrived, and that classic ruin Frezzolini, whose every operatic performance (notwithstanding her decaying voice) is positively worth shekels of gold, has flitted away down South, to Dixie, for all I know. Were you ever in the Mammoth Cave? It is, with all its wonders, the most god-forsaken, dreary, gloomy spot mortal ever entered. Yet there is some strange mystic power in the place to transfigure the weakest, most wretched music into harmony for the celestial spheres. After poking about in the bowels of the earth for three or four hours, visitors to the Cave arrive at Echo River, where they embark on a disgustingly muddy scow, or if the party is large enough, two or three wretched boats are brought into requisition. The women are all dressed in fancifully coloured bloomer dresses, and with the uplifted lanterns, present a strange and weird appearance as the boat is pushed from the shore, and floats down into the black gloom, the lights reflecting themselves on the surface of the deadly still water, and lighting up with strange effect the arch of rock overhead. When they are fairly out of sight we enter the other boat, and ourselves push out into the dark stream. Dark—awfully dark it is. The dark river of Death finds on earth no more vivid parallel than this. You know, in the first picture of Cole's "Voyage of Life," the gloomy river of the past, from which floats out into life and light the little boat of the baby voyager. The stream issues from a dark rocky cavern, mysterious and unknown. Such a stream is this on which we are embarked. Silent and gloomy, dark and mysterious, it serves as a type of the past and the future—of the past mystery whence all life evolves of the inscrutable future whither all life tends. The feeling of security is not very great. The boat sinks down almost to the water's edge, and the perpendicular slippery rocks on either side offer no ledge on which a shipwrecked voyager might find a temporary footing. Above, sometimes so low that you must crouch to avoid it, and again so high as to be scarcely visible, rises the rock-roof, while the water in which you glide is thirty feet in depth, and as cold as the brow of a corpse. There is no sound but the rippling made by the boat; not a cricket along the shoreless stream, not a fish to plunge up and flash a moment in the air before returning to its watery home—no symptom of life, no sound, no motion save that made by ourselves.

Hark! there is a sound! Far off a delicate shade of music, so faint as to seem the ghost of some wandering echo. But by degrees it increases. It becomes clear and defined. Rich harmony trembling with strange sensuous wildness—fluttering around the rocky projections, swelling in waves of harmony to the arched roof above. Now it appears to come from one direction, now from another. Anon a higher note or strain is heard like some clear voice rising above a mighty chorus. Never did syren sing more magic songs to listening traveller, never did the mysterious maiden of Lurlei-burg chant more entrancing melody to the unwary boatman who floats along the moonlit Rhine. Suddenly a turn of the boat brings you opposite a break in the perpendicular rock-shore, and perched upon a mass of broken rock you see a party of four negroes playing upon violins and a cornet. Those are the syrens, these the Lurlines of Echo River. Out on the earth's surface their music would be merely quaint and odd, but here, in the Mammoth Cave, it is weird and unearthly.

Floating away, out of sight of the above minstrels,—who are in fact the barber, bootblack, or waiter from the hotel at the mouth of the cave—their music resumes its supernatural tones and effect, and so until we land at the opposite shore of the dark river, it haunts the ear with its peculiar harmony—while ever after it forms the most vivid reminiscence of a visit to the Mammoth Cave. —Correspondent of Dwight's Journal of Music.

BOSTON, UNITED STATES.—We hear of a movement for the organisation of an Amateur Musical Society, composed of gentleman in this city, who propose meeting weekly for the purpose of practising the orchestral works of the great masters, under the guidance of one of our best musical directors. In some features this organisation will resemble a club, which known to many of us as the "Boston Amateur Club" has existed here for many years (we think since about 1830) but has lately been discontinued. Most of the best members of the old Club, whose performances have been listened to by many of us with much interest, will compose the nucleus of the new organisation with the addition of some fresh active members, and, if found necessary, some professional talent. In one important point the enterprise will be new to us. It is intended to add associate members to the active ones of the association, somewhat on the plan of the Orpheus Club, so that those who cannot play may at least help pay, and have the pleasure of being present at the musical and social meetings of the Society, by thus contributing a part of the material aid which every such enterprise requires. The members are gentlemen of the highest standing in this community, of culture and refinement. We understand that the first meeting for the season will be held on Monday evening next, to organise for the winter campaign, which offers an opportunity for new members to join.—Dwight's Journal of Music.

MILAN.—Yesterday was given the Barber of Seville with a perfection of execution seldom heard on the stage of our greatest theatre. This could not be otherwise when the parts were confided to the artistic intelligence and prodigious throats of a Witty (Whitty), a Stecchi Bottardi, and a Ronconi. They did not sing the smallest branch of that divine music without being two and three times recalled; in fact the Barbiere was yesterday evening one applause, one ovation. Stecchi sustained his well-merited reputation; Ronconi betrayed a talent superior to every eulogium, and played the part of Figaro, both in singing and acting, to make it appear a novelty—a creation whose originality was all and entirely his own. The Witty, who appeared in the Cenerentola, the humble, mortified, and ill-treated child of the ashes, became in the Barbiere the brilliant and astute Rosina. She adapted so well every expression of her face, every smile and every gesture to all the different and difficult points of her position, that it would be hard to decide whether she is more charming as a singer than she is as an intelligent and accurate actress. Don Bartolo (Parodi), Don Basilio (Rigo), and even Berta (Nebuloni), had applause in their airs, that they sang in a way that rendered them worthy of standing by the side of companions of such reputation.—Lombardia.

At the Santa Radegonda the Cenerentola has ceased for the present, at least to triumph; the Witty in the last representation was regaled with a beautiful bouquet of flowers, that put a perfumed seal to the glory she has acquired this season, a glory of which she can be all the prouder, for it has been gained in a city that, in the art of singing, stands the first in Italy, which for so long has dictated the laws to every other country.—Gazetta.

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

BY GENERAL DESIRE,

A SECOND BEETHOVEN NIGHT,

On MONDAY, DECEMBER 10,

BEING THE LAST CONCERT BUT ONE BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Grand Quartet, in A major (Posthumous), two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello, first time at the Monday Popular Concerts (Beethoven), Herr BECKER, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song, "The maiden and the river" (Benedict), Miss LASCELLES. Duet, "Thy pardon, dearest treasure"—Canzonet, first time—(Dussek), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON and Miss LASCELLES. Sonata, in E flat, Op. 7, Pianoforte solus—second time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Beethoven), Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

PART II.—Sonata, in F major, for Violoncello and Pianoforte—second time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Beethoven), Signor PIATTI and Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Canzonet, "Fidelity" (Haydn), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Song, "Sweet evening star" (W. V. Wallace), Miss LASCELLES. Trio, in G major, for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello—second time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Beethoven), Mr. CHARLES HALLE, HETT BECKER, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT.

ON MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 17th,

THE LAST CONCERT BEFORE CHRISTMAS,

Will be devoted to the Works of various Masters.

Pianiste ... ... Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—LAST WEEK OF THE SEASON.

THIS EVENING (Saturday), December 8, ROBIN HOOD.

MONDAY, December 10 (in consequence of the brilliant success on Wednesday last), LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR will be repeated, with TITIENS, VIALETTI, BRIANI, and GIUGLINI (their last appearance but two).

TUESDAY, December 11, re-appearance of SIMS REEVES, first time since his domestic calamity, and last time but two this season, in ROBIN HOOD.

WEDNESDAY, December 12, MARTHA; TITIENS, LEMAIRE, VIALETTI, and GIUGLINI.

THURSDAY, December 13 (last time but one), ROBIN HOOD. Last night but one of SIMS REEVES.

FRIDAY, December 14 (last night of the Italian Operas), Grand Miscellaneous Performance for the BENEFIT of MLLE. TITIENS (being her and Signor GIUGLINI's last appearance previous to their departure for the Continent), on which occasion will be performed the First Act of NORMA. Pollione (on this occasion only), Signor GIUGLINI; Oroveso, Signor VIALETTI; and Norma, Mlle. TITIENS. After which, the Second Act of MARTHA; TITIENS, LEMAIRE, VIALETTI and GIUGLINI. To be followed by a Selection from IL TROVATORE, including the celebrated MISERERE, in which Mlle. TITIENS and Signor GIUGLINI will appear. To be followed by a Ballet Divertissement, in which Mlle. MASSOT and Mad. MORLACCHI will appear. To conclude with the Fourth Act of LES HUGUENOTS, in which TITIENS and GIUGLINI will take their farewell.

SATURDAY, December 15, the last night of ROBIN HOOD (last appearance of SIMS REEVES and last night of the season).

Commences each evening at 8 o'clock. Reduced prices.

To Correspondents.

J. H. N. (Liverpool).—Spa was the place, not Baden-Baden.

SY. BS. (Alsatia).—"Nunc tunc. Non habes aliquid dicere, bonum aut malum." "Macedonia (tamen) ante a nomine Emathionis regis, cujus prima virtutis experimenta in illis locis extant." This without malice, prepense or otherwise.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d. / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1860.

TO resume a still unsifted topic:—

Some, even among the grave and wise, are led to regard music in no higher light than that of a frivolous and enervating luxury; but, on the other hand, it has had advocates,—eloquent advocates, indeed—and among these many exalted and famous intellects. One of the sternest and least sensual of ancient legislators, the magnificent Lycurgus, was a great and earnest encourager of the "divine art;" one of the most learned and sagacious of ancient historians, the unequivocal Polybius, attributes the ultra-humanitarianism of the sons and daughters of Arcady to the universal influence of music among them, and the savage barbarity of their neighbours, the ferocious Cynethians, to their as universal neglect of, nay, contempt for it; one of the most urbane, polished, systematic, and far-seeing of modern philosophers, the Voltaire-worshipped Montesquieu, preferred music before all other means of recreation, and pronounced it the only one among the arts incapable of corrupting the mind—wherein, nevertheless, we find him unjust to the other arts; for although art may be corrupted, art which in itself is pure cannot corrupt.

Then fancy the, if not exactly dry, laborious, and, though deep and wise, a thought pedantic Quintilian—or Quinctilian: he is incessant in his praises of music, extols it not merely as an incentive to valour, but as an useful instrument of moral and intellectual discipline, not merely as a pleasant auxiliary to science, and an object of attention to the most gifted among men, but as a source of comfort and an alleviator of toil to the humblest. And it is but truth to say that in this, like the illustrious author of the Esprit des Lois, Quintilian, or Quinctilian, is no more than just.

What though the pluponderous Samuel liked not music; what though Othello cared not greatly for "a music that might be heard," and instructed his clowns to make his bridal serenaders "play soft;"—what of this and that? Read Shakspeare, with whose allusions to the art of their affection we will not insult our readers by presuming they are not familiar. Read Shakspeare, did we say? Read all the greatest poets. Even Walter Scott loved music, although incapable of recognising a tune he might have heard ever so frequently. His harmonious numbers would have showed that, had we not his historiographed words to attest it. We entertain an immeasurable, if not an incommensurable, esteem for the modern race of comic epigrammatic minstrels, whose lyres are strung with quirks, and who, headed by Horace Mayhew, and other versicular cultellators, twang the world to cachinnation; but would it be just to weigh them in the scale with Phœbus, with Hermes, with the demigods, or even with the mortal heroes of old Hellas? "We suppose, nay," as Aries the cowherd said, in reply to King Arthur's interrogatory about the legitimacy of Tor; "we suppose nay." The heroes (to pitch aside the gods and "demis") of ancient Greece, were ambitious (many—most of them) to excel in music; and it is recorded against, rather than in favour of, Themistocles, that he was not. Socrates himself, "the divine" master of Plato (a capital musician, Plato), and fountain of philosophic wisdom, reviled himself for having in his youth neglected the study of this art. Said Socrates to one of his disciples,—"Had I been skilled in music, I could have softened Xantippe." What were his last words to Cebes, before ingurgitating the fatal draught? "I have, O Cebes, all my life been haunted by a spirit, which seemed repeatedly to say to me, 'O Socrates! compose and practise music.'" The admonition of the spirit plagued him in his latest moments; and, when, under sentence of death, he diverted himself with turning Æsop's fables into verse, and composing a hymn to Apollo (Phœbus), the only sort of harmonious essay in his power. Our authority for this is Plato himself, who relates the story in the fourth division of his immortal Phædon. Even Horatius (Mayhevius—not Flaccus) must yield the bell to Socrates. But, if he will not give in to the master of Plato, is he ready to face the author of Ecclesiasticus? Does not the son of Sirach declare the ancient poets and musicians to be worthy of honour, and place them among the benefactors of mankind?

Ex uno—we forgot the rest. Music has ever been the delight of accomplished princes and the most elegant amusement of polite courts. Thus might argue Mr. Samuel Warren, if not Mr. James Hannay, no less conservative though better worth conserving. Mr. James Hannay might argue (and may, if he pleases, in the Edinburgh Courant), that music is just at present so combined with things sacred and otherwise important, to say nothing of its close connection with our pleasures and amusements, that it seems almost a necessity of existence to nine out of ten of us. Magnam vim habet musica (Mr. Hannay might continue); it plays a considerable part in the Divine service of our churches; it is essential to military discipline; and, in its absence, the theatres would languish, if not die out. There is scarcely a private house without its flute, its fiddle, its harmonium, its harp, its organ, or its piano; it refreshes the fatigued spirits (animos tristes subitò exhilarat); is an antidote (when not an enchanting aid) to melancholy; and mitigates the pains of sickness. Still more, it is a blessing to humanity, for it tends to banish mischief*, and blunt the edge of care.

We never much cared for street music; "the voice of a mandrake had been sweeter;" but that is beside the question. The theme is not exhausted, although our pen is dry; next week we may redip it and resume.

WE should hardly have expected such an immediate and complete justification of the remarks in the last letter upon the decline of the Vienna Opera, from our own correspondent at Vienna, as is contained in the announcement just issued by the Government, of which the following is a translation:—

"It has been ordered that the management of the Court Opera-house, lying contiguous to the Kärntner-gate, Vienna, shall pass into private hands, the concession to continue from 1st April, 1861, to 31st March, 1866; in the event, however, of the newly-projected Opera-house being opened by the expiration of the term stated, such concession thereupon to cease.

"In certain conjunctures, moreover, the entrepreneur, as well as the management of the Imperial Court theatres, would be at liberty to rescind the contract on giving due notice. The representations are limited to operas and ballets; and, although it is desirable that operas in Italian should be given, this is not made an express condition; in the tenders it should, consequently, be stated whether and under what conditions the entrepreneur would be inclined eventually to submit to the requirements set forth in paragraph 7 of "agreement." The subvention to be accorded by the State should be taken into account in such tenders. The entrepreneur would be required to give caution-money equal to one-half the subvention, such caution-money in no case to range lower than 60,000 florins Austrian currency.

"The final particulars of agreement may be learned at the Imperial Finanz-Procuratur, Vienna, throughout the provinces at the respective statthaltereis (lieutenancies); and abroad, at the Imperial Legations. Persons making tenders are required to affix their signatures to the same, expressing themselves fully bound by the several conditions.

"In the event of several persons tendering conjointly, they must hold themselves conjointly liable.

"Those persons who are desirous of making tenders are invited to send them under seal to the Imperial Obers Kammereramte (Chamberlain's office), as being charged with the chief direction of the Court theatres."

What is this but a tacit acknowledgment of the incapacity and uselessness of the present management? Although a change is absolutely necessary, the measure now resorted to is extreme, and not, in our humble opinion, very likely to succeed. Where is the sanguine entrepreneur to be found who will subscribe to such conditions as are here proposed? In plain terms, the announcement says that a private director is wanted to carry on the operas at his own risk for a short time, while a new theatre is being built, the Government being unable, from loss of money or some other cause, to continue the present undertaking. The private entrepreneur is to be liable to ejectment at the option of the Government, upon a certain notice being given; he is to deposit caution-money to the amount of 5,000*l.*, and his lease is in no case to exceed five years. As to the subvention mentioned, it must be looked upon as a bait to induce some private manager to carry on that which the State has found to be a losing speculation. The agreement to which allusion is made, contains, we may suppose, other conditions equally onesided as those stated in the circular. Every publicity is to be given to the fact, that "it has been ordered that the management shall pass into private hands;" but if the terms are none other than are set forth in the announcement quoted, it will be more difficult than is supposed to find "private hands" ready and willing to direct the Court Opera-house of Vienna, notwithstanding the dignity of such a position.

ANTEATER.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD has just concluded a short professional tour in Devonshire—a speculation (annually renewed, and with always increasing success) of the able and enterprising Mr. Ashe of Exeter. Brilliant and well attended concerts were given, alternately, at Plymouth, Torquay and Exeter—the lion's share falling to the capital town, as a matter of course.* At all these the playing of Miss Arabella Goddard was the theme of unanimous admiration and applause. Her first appearance in London for the winter season is announced to take place in St. James's Hall, at the Monday Popular Concerts, Dec. 17th, when among other pieces she is to perform (with Signor Piatti), Professor Sterndale Bennett's sonata-duo for pianoforte and violoncello.

HERR MOLIQUE AND THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.—The sum awarded to Herr Molique by the committee of the Norwich Festival, as a remuneration for his successful oratorio of Abraham, has been returned to the honorary secretary, Mr. Roger Kerrison, with a request on the part of the composer that it may be presented to the charitable fund in behalf which the festival was instituted.—Times.

* "Mischief" is a comprehensive word.

* We have received several letters from correspondents in Devonshire containing details to which we shall give publicity in our next number

Provincial.

Apropos of the erection of the New Music Hall, Brighton, the following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Brighton Herald:—

"Sir,—Since writing in your valuable journal on the subject of a Music Hall for this town—which subject, I believe, I chiefly originated—it has been discussed in many quarters; with fairness in some, with virulence and personal acrimony in others. It is pretty generally admitted that a larger hall is required than we actually possess, not merely for musical purposes, but for important town meetings, &c. The question remains, Who is to build it? Shall it be done by private enterprise, or by the municipal authorities?

"With respect to private enterprise, the fact exists of a gentleman, the head of the leading musical firm in this town, having made an offer of leasing a part, not at present used, of the Pavilion property (not the Riding School); to pay rent for it; and to convert it, at his own expense, into the required Music Hall. This offer has been, as it would seem, systematically misrepresented. Mr. Wright has been abused for asking the town to provide him with a Music Hall, whereas the fact is that he does not ask the town for a single shilling, but would find the necessary three thousand pounds himself, and take the risk of failure. This offer is acceptable; for nothing prevents the town authorities from inserting a clause in the lease to enable them to recover possion of the property at any time, and another to give them the use of the proposed Music Hall on stated terms. It is thus clear that the town can have its hall within a twelvemonth, through private enterprise, without the smallest risk, and with the advantage, when recovering possession, of having had it built on cheaper terms, most probably, than it could have done it for itself.

If we turn from private to public enterprise, the solution of the question is by no means so easy. The town labours under the not uncommon want of money; the debt on the Pavilion will not be worked off for some fifteen years yet; and it is difficult, if not unfair, to increase the already heavy rates, although scarcely any other means offer to develope the great capabilities of the Pavilion property. In this pecuniary difficulty, what shall we do? Shall we sell the ground-rents of the Pavilion buildings? They would sell well, but we should forego great future advantages. Shall we build on portions of the Pavilion grounds—for instance, on the frontage in New Road? That would be advantageous, and would improve a locality that stands somewhat in need of it; but the inhabitants might not consent to lose a corner of the central lung of Brighton. If the town is to do anything, it would seem that the only plan is to procure a short Act, enabling it to extend the repayment of the Pavilion purchase-money over a long term of years, then borrow on the security of the rates the necessary sum for completing the appropriation. This will take some time to do; meanwhile the most feasible thing for the Music Hall seems to be to accept the proposals of private enterprise, for which the town, when it comes into money, can substitute its own action. But, above all, it is necessary, in discussing matters of such public importance, to do so fairly, and to lay aside all private pique or animosity.

"I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
"An Occasional Concert-Giver."

—Our Windsor correspondent informs us that Mr. Dyson's second concert took place at the Town Hall on Tuesday evening, under distinguished patronage. The singers were Miss Wilkinson, Miss Janett, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Lambert; instrumentalists, Mr. Gunniss, violinist, of her Majesty's private band, and Mr. Goss Custard, pianist. The concert was well attended. —The Bath Express has a long article devoted to Mr. Walter O. Gibbs' concert, given at the Assembly Rooms, Bath, Tuesday evening, the 27th ult., and which was an affair of more than ordinary importance, inasmuch as a trio and pianoforte sonata of Beethoven, and a violoncello sonata by Mendelssohn for pianoforte and violoncello, were performed. The programme was entirely instrumental, the executants being Mr. Walter Gibbs (pianoforte), Mr. Carrodus (violin), and M. Paque (violoncello). The strictly classical character of the selection does not appear to have been thrown away on the amateurs of Bath. The Express speaks in high terms of praise of the pianoforte used by Mr. Gibbs, sent especially for the occasion by the Messrs. Broadwood.

Royal Academy of Music.—A private chamber concert was given by the students at the institution, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, on Saturday evening, December 1st, when the following selection was performed:—

Part First.—Scherzo, romance, and rondo, pianoforte and flute, from Sonata, Op. 11 (C. E. Horsley), Miss Brinsmead and Mr. Radcliffe. Duet, "Two merry gipsies" (G. A. Macfarren), Misses Robinson and Ibbotson. Song, "In a drear-nighted December" (J. W. Davison), Miss Bramley. "The Lake," "The Millstream," "The Fountain," three musical sketches for pianoforte (Dr. W. S. Bennett), Miss Walsh. Trio, "The coming of May" (Walter Macfarren). 1st voice, Misses Armytage, Robinson, Sellman, and Walsh; 2nd voice, Misses Bramley, Henderson, Tayler, and Watson; 3rd voice, Misses Flewitt, Ibbotson, Pitt, and Spence. Song (MS.), "If to thy heart I were as near" (F. Westlake, student), Miss Henderson. Duet in B flat, two pianofortes (Schumann), Miss Tasker (K.S.) and Mr. Masom.

Part Second.—Trio in E flat, pianoforte, clarionet, and viola (Mozart), Messrs. G. H. Thomas (K.S.), A. Williams, and F. Westlake. Song (MS.), "The Exile's Adieu" (Miss Jenkins, student), Miss Bramley. Introduction and rondo, violin and pianoforte (Spohr), Messrs. Amor and Weekes. Duet, "How beautiful is night!" (B. Richards), Miss Flewitt and Mr. Barraclough. Duet, allegro, brillante, pianoforte (Mendelssohn), Miss Lindley and Mr. J. B. Turner. Romance, "Long I've watched," preciosa (Weber), Miss Henderson; flute obligato, Mr. Radcliffe. Trio, "Rest thee on this mossy pillow" (Henry Smart). 1st, 2nd, and 3rd voices as above. The vocal music was accompanied by Messrs. J. B. Turner and Mr. H. R. Eyers.

The entertainment was greatly enjoyed by a select company of friends and patrons of the institution, who were present by invitation. We trust this may be only the first of a series of such meetings. They are both useful and interesting. The more the students act for themselves the better.

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The performance of Solomon, which inaugurated the winter oratorio season on Friday evening se'nnight, was in almost every respect worthy of the high position by unanimous consent awarded to the Sacred Harmonic Society among the musical institutions of Europe. The admirers of Handel assembled in large numbers at Exeter Hall, and were more than usually warm in their demonstrations of satisfaction. Though Solomon, as a whole, is not to be ranked with certain of the more familiar works of its author—who wrote it in the decline of life, when his invention was on the wane, shortly before the loss of sight brought his career as a producer to an end—it contains quite enough of beautiful thoughts, of vigorous colouring, and ingenious contrivance, to stamp it with immortality. Its merits, and its shortcomings (such as they are), nevertheless have been sufficiently dwelt upon; and it is unnecessary to repeat what has so often been said in extenuation of one who rarely needed apology, but who in Solomon was trammelled with as feeble and ill-constructed a book as was ever submitted to composer. Wherever the subject is amenable to effective musical treatment, Handel is no less striking and impressive than in the Messiah, Israel, and other oratorios, where inspiration never failed him. Many of the choruses, indeed (we need not specify them all by name), reach the highest flight. As an example of antiphonal writing, "From the censer curling rise" (Part II.) may be ranked with some of the finest of his so-called "double choruses"—examples of which, by the way, abound in Solomon. in pathetic force "Draw the tear from hopeless love" has hardly been excelled; while for dramatic expression "May no rash intruder" and "Shake the dome" (Part III.), in precisely opposite styles, challenge comparison with the most remarkable passages of a corresponding nature in Samson, Judas, Deborah, or (to quit the domain of oratorio) Alexander's Feast. To hear such choruses as they are now given by the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society—who since the appointment of Mr. Costa have continually made progress—is well worth a visit to Exeter Hall, and an attentive hearing of a much more unequal work than Solomon—which, it may be added, is so unsparingly condensed as to do away almost entirely with the prolixity inevitable where there are no omissions. We admit that to meddle with Handel is a task both delicate and ungrateful; but, on the other hand, the whole of Solomon at a sitting would exceed the limits of ordinary endurance. As well think of taking in Paradise Lost from end to end, without a pause. It is even found expedient to pass habitually one or two pieces from the third part of the always interesting Messiah; and perhaps the only oratorio of Handel which at public performances can safely be offered without curtailment is Israel in Egypt, which has the advantage of being as conveniently short as it is unceasingly sublime. That a judiciously abridged Solomon can not only be endured, but listened to, with unabated pleasure, was shown on the present occasion, when nearly all the choruses were more or less applauded, two of them—the epithalamium at the termination of Part I., and the martial ebullition in Part III. (one of the series in which the varied powers of expression attributed to music are so powerfully illustrated)—rousing the audience to enthusiasm.

The solo music was in excellent hands. No one in our time has declaimed and sung the part of Solomon so admirably as Mad. Sainton-Dolby, who, now at the very pinnacle of her reputation as a mistress of the sacred style, seems resolved to put rivalry out of the question. The soprano music was divided between Mad. Lemmens-Sherrington, apparently summoned to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Mad. Novello, and the young and clever Miss Banks, one of Mr. Hullah's most promising discoveries, who, in the part of the Queen of Sheba, did full justice to her rising fame. What little is left for the bass enjoyed the advantage of Mr. Lewis Thomas's fine voice and ripe experience; while the arduous recitatives and airs of the tenor were allotted to Mr. Montem Smith, an artist who, to say the least, is invariably painstaking and correct. The band was as strong and efficient as in former seasons, and Mr. Costa (whose additional accompaniments were used) conducted the performance with his accustomed energy and skill. On the whole, this representation of Solomon more than sustained the credit of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

The Messiah (the first of the Pre-Christmas series) was given last night.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—The epithet "popular," as applied to a performance of music, no longer means something adapted to an uneducated and unrefined taste—something in which the high and classic productions of the art are eschewed as being calculated only to weary the audience. At some of our popular concerts the customary fare is fit for the palate of the most fastidious amateur; and, far from being neglected on this account, such concerts flourish more and more. Such is the case with the Monday Popular Concerts, given every week during the season at St. James's Hall. At first we had some suspicion of the reality of the musical taste shown at these concerts. When we heard pieces of great length, highly complicated, such as we had always believed to be "caviare to the general," not only attentively listened to, but applauded with enthusiasm, we could not help thinking that there must be some affectation at bottom, and that people would tire of pretending to be delighted with things they did not understand! But time has shown that this was a mistake. These concerts, successful the first season, are still more successful the second. They are even improved in quality; an inferior piece is never admitted into their programmes, nor is an inferior performer employed. Yet the spacious hall is every night crowded to the doors by persons in the habit of frequenting cheap entertainments; and no assembly of cognoscenti could show a sounder or more discriminating taste. And the consequence is, that these concerts are now attended by the most musical people in London. —Spectator.

MR. SIMS REEVES.—It may not be generally known that the domestic calamity which prevented this eminent singer from resuming his part in Robin Hood at Her Majesty's Theatre, on Saturday last, according to announcement, was the sudden and unexpected death of his father, which happened on the Friday previous, and rendered a suspension of all professional duties for a period inevitable. Our readers will hear with pleasure that Mr. Sims Reeves will positively re-appear on Tuesday, and perform in Robin Hood at least three times before the temporary close of the theatres.

WINDSOR.—On Tuesday evening, Dec. 4th, Mr. Dyson's second concert for this season took place in the Town Hall under distinguished patronage. The artists engaged for the occasion were Miss Wilkinson, soprano (of the Crystal Palace Concerts); Miss Jarrett, contralto; Mr. Dyson, tenor; and Mr. Lambert, basso. Mr. Gunniss, solo violinist (of her Majesty's Private Band), and Mr. W. Goss Custard, solo pianist and accompanist. The concert commenced with the trio, "When shall we three meet again?" sung by Miss Wilkinson, Miss Jarrett and Mr. Lambert. Miss Wilkinson next gave "Summer Night," by Henry Smart, very effectively, and "Take this cup of sparkling wine" her singing of which much gratified the audience. Mr. Lambert contributed two songs, Callcott's "Last Man," an "Old English Melody," and "The Holy Friar." He was in good voice and gave them with his accustomed power and success. Miss Jarrett gave great satisfaction, and was much applauded, in her songs, "I'm a poor shepherd maid," and "Truth in absence." Mr. Dyson's tenor voice was heard to advantage in "The Troubadour's Song," Verdi, and "Shine on Beautiful Star," in both of which he was very successful. The duet by this gentleman and Miss Jarrett, "Home to our mountains," was pleasingly sung. Mr. Gunniss and Mr. Custard each gave a solo, the former on the violin and the latter on the pianoforte. Macfarren's trio, "The Troubadour," was very effectively sung by Miss Wilkinson, Miss Jarrett, and Mr. Lambert. The concert gave entire satisfaction to a crowded audience, and concluded with the "National Anthem."—MUSICUS.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA FOR 1861.

A PARODY BY PORCUPINE.

(Inscribed to Augustus Mayhew, Esq.)

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA,

SEASON OF 1860.

Lessee and Director,

SIGNOR RE GALANTUOMO.

The public is respectfully informed that the season of this popular Establishment will shortly recommence under unusually favourable auspices, and with the most powerful and talented Company ever yet brought before its numerous friends and patrons, while the répertoire will include a number of works entirely new to the majority of them. In proof of this, the Lessee submits the following list of artists, many of them of European reputation, and others of great promise.

SIGNOR CAVOUR,

(Primo basso profondo, of the Theatre Royal, Turin).

SIGNOR GARIBALDI,

(The unrivalled primo tenore di forza of the South American, Roman, Lombard, and Two Sicilian Opera Houses, unanimously pronounced by the entire press to be the greatest artist of the age).

SIGNOR FARINI,

(Of the Theatres Royal, Florence and Milan).

SIGNOR CIALDINI,

(Whose performances at the Theatres of Ancona and Castelfidardo excited a perfect furore, and who is now engaged at Gaeta, where he "takes" immensely).

SIGNOR PERSANO,

(The admirable delineator of nautical characters, from the Theatres of Ancona and Capua), and

SIGNOR FANTI,

(Whose triumphs at the Theatres of Central Italy are too well known to need mention).

The Company will also include other well-known artists, such as

LA MARMORA,	RICASOLI,
DURANDO,	RATAZZI,
PEPOLI,	POERIO,

And those youthful pupils of Signor Garibaldi, whose recent débuts at the Sicilian and Neapolitan Theatres excited the admiration of the most critical audiences—namely, Signori

MEDICI,	TURR,
COSENZ,	EBER,
BIXIO,	DUNNE,
SIRTORI,	WYNDHAM,

And others too numerous to mention. Among the novelties to be produced, the Lessee would call especial attention to the revival of the famous Operas,

LA CONSTITUZIONE,

IL PARLAMENTO,

AND

LA GAZETTA LIBRA,

By Signor Inglese,

For many years the most popular and attractive works ever produced at Turin, and which are almost unknown in other parts of Italy; and to

LA LIBERTA,

(an entirely new Opera, by Signor Garibaldi and the Lessee, in which the former will sustain the principal character). Other works by well-known composers will also be produced at the earliest possible opportunity; and in the spring, the Lessee hopes to enter into an engagement with the temporary managers of the Roman and Austrian Opera Houses, for the production of the great chef-d'œuvre

L'ITALIA UNITA,

the promise of which has excited such enthusiastic hopes in every civilised country. Should the Lessee be able to produce this long-expected work, the whole strength of his company will be engaged in its performance, and, if necessary, several French and Hungarian artists will be solicited to strengthen the caste. Further particulars will be shortly announced.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The students give a concert today at the institution in Tenterden Street, the principal feature in which is to be a selection from Mozart's Idomeneo.

PUN.—Let the organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, play ever so badly, at the worst he is BEST.—(Goose with the Golden Eggs.)

The Opera.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—Another glorious triumph for English opera—another hope for national music. Mr. Balfe's new opera, Bianca, the Bravo's Bride, produced on Thursday evening, was one of the most legitimate successes ever witnessed within the walls of any theatre. The excitement commenced with the overture, which was encored, and was rampant at the end of the first act, when a vociferous call was made for Mr. Balfe, who, after some delay—doubtless not being prepared for so early a summons—made his appearance, and was received with deafening acclamations. Four long acts, enduring four hours and a half, would have cooled any ordinary enthusiasm, and have tired any ordinary patience; but the applause, far from abating, went on increasing, and was most vehement in the last two acts, the audience unanimously encoring a gallop in the last scene, which was indeed inevitable, since the music is exciting in the extreme, and the pas is most admirably arranged by M. Petit, the maître de ballet, and was capitally danced by the young ladies.

The libretto of the Bravo's Bride is from the pen of Mr. Palgrave Simpson, who has founded his plot on Monk Lewis's melodrama, Rugantino, the Bravo of Venice, and has pretty closely adhered to the original. Rugantino is not only utterly buried in oblivion, as far as regards production on the stage, but is excluded from most editions of English dramatic works, even from those, like the London Stage, which pretend to comprise every work that achieved popularity in its day. It is, however, included in "Cumberland's Plays," but does not appear to have obtained much favour at any time. The story, as adapted in the libretto, may be thus briefly detailed:—

A certain romantic young Prince of Ferrara falls in love with Bianca, daughter of the Duke of Milan, but, though betrothed to her in some mysterious way, which does not appear, wishes to be loved for himself, and not for his princedom. He takes upon him the guise of a young soldier of fortune, and wins the heart of the tender Bianca, but withholds confession of his affection. He departs to the wars—to test the young lady's love by absence, we may suppose—and "crushes the bravo band." How this is effected we are not informed; but the "bravo band" is headed by a terrible chief, Fortespada, whose very name strikes terror to all the country round. Our prince is "led by fate" to the brigand's den, and finds him dying, and so penitent, that he confesses "a foul conspiracy of death" on the part of certain nobles against the Duke of Milan, in which he is implicated. The brigand gives the prince a list of the traitors, and dies. Upon this, the better to prosecute his plans to discover the heads of the conspiracy, the prince disguises himself as the brigand, gains access to the conspirators, and induces them to elect him as their chief. He has them thus entirely in his power, but why he does not denounce them at once is not told. The prince is a great adept at disguises. Two of the conspirators having determined to kill Bianca in the grand cathedral of Milan, where she goes alone to pray, our prince, who knows everything, is ready behind a pillar, caparisoned as a mendicant, and stabs the highborn gentleman who was about to stab her. Bianca faints, and on coming to herself she sees the beggar transformed into the brigand, and is terrified when she hears him claim her, in life or death, as the "Bravo's Bride." The young lady—who must have been singularly obtuse as to vision not to detect her lover through one of his disguises—naturally screams, and brings her father and friends to her assistance. The Prince, however, is not so easily caught. Directly he hears the approach of footsteps he assumes the garb of a monk, and makes his escape. We need not dwell upon the incident of the Prince appearing to the Duke as the bravo, since nothing comes from it, but may go at once to state the dénouement, which happens thus:—Changing his tactics, the Prince appears to Bianca as Odoardo, when a confession of love takes place on both sides. The lovers are detected in their transports by the Duke, who, at first enraged with Odoardo, at last consents to grant him his daughter's hand, provided he would place Fortespada in his power that night, at twelve, in the great ducal hall. Nothing can be easier for the Prince to comply with, as we know. Accordingly at night, when the ball goes forward, and the midnight hour has tolled, Odoardo appears and announces that he has captured Fortespada alive. "Bring him before us," cries the Duke, whereupon the Prince retires, and returns as the Bravo. He is unanimously voted to destruction, when the royal troops appear, and, at a sign from the Prince, carry off all the conspirators in custody. Lastly, his Royal Highness declares that Fortespada and Odoardo are the same, and, being pressed for further disclosures, confesses that the Prince of Ferrara is identical with the bravo and the young officer.

As a specimen of Mr. Simpson's work, we shall quote the two verses, addressed by Bianca to her father, in the duet, "From my childhood," wherein the young lady is desirous to disbosom herself of that secret which she thinks she has too long kept to herself:—

"BIANCA.

"From my childhood did'st thou pray me
In thy heart to seek, my father,
Should a false world e'er betray me,
That pure love which ne'er betrays;
And my sorrow I have brought thee,
In affection weak, my father,
Thee I seek now, as I sought thee,
In my early childhood's days.

"In my childhood, ay, I swore thee
To respect thy wish, my father,
And my spirit bowed before thee,
As a loving child obeys;
But, my heart has now betray'd thee,
Nor bows 'fore thee still, my father,
With the same love that obey'd thee
In my early childhood's days."

Of the music generally we are inclined to think that the composer has expended more thought and care upon it than on any previous occasion. But on this point we must defer entering into details until our next. With respect to the first performances of Bianca, let the subjoined extracts from two of our morning contemporaries bear witness. Our own impressions shall be published with our criticism of the music.

BIANCA, THE BRAVO'S BRIDE.—(From The Times, Dec. 7th.)—A grand romantic opera in four acts, abounding in complicated music, built upon a story that embodies a great variety of incidents, and written throughout with an evidently serious purport, cannot in fairness be dismissed after a single hearing, more especially at half an hour past midnight. Such an opera is the long and anxiously-expected new work of Mr. Balfe, who for upwards of twenty years has been the most popular of our native composers for the stage, and who last night added another to his long list of successes. His Bianca, the Bravo's Bride, is framed more ambitiously than any of his latter productions, and for that reason demands and merits stricter attention. We shall therefore be satisfied at present with announcing its enthusiastic reception by a crowded house. The composer was thrice summoned before the curtain, and again appeared a fourth time, leading on Mr. Alfred Mellon, who had well earned the compliment by the ability and labour he must have bestowed in preparing what was an admirable representation, even for this theatre, where imperfect first-night performances form the exception rather than, as is too frequently the case, the rule. It may as well be stated that Bianca is founded on the well-known romance of Rugantino, or the Bravo of Venice, also once familiar to the public as a melodrama, and that Mr. Palgrave Simpson has turned the original materials into an operatic libretto with the tact and judgment of an experienced hand. Nearly every member of the company is engaged in the distribution of characters, which are so numerous that Mr. Balfe has been able to accommodate as many as six bases and barytones—Messrs. Wharton, Lawrence, Corri, Wallworth, Kelly, and Distin—with more or less conspicuous parts. Mr. Harrison represents the mysterious and formidable bravo—

"Like Cerberus, three gentlemen in one;"

Miss Louisa Pyne, whose singing from end to end was a model of finished and brilliant execution, the Princess distinguished by his tender solicitude; Mr. St. Albyn a (comic) second tenor; and the promising Miss Thirlwall, a maid of honour somewhat advanced in years. To conclude, scenery, costumes, and a more than usually animated ballet, all effectively combine to lend attraction to the spectacle. The star of English opera is clearly in the ascendant.

BIANCA, THE BRAVO'S BRIDE.—(From the Daily Telegraph, Dec. 7th.)—Mr. Balfe's anxiously-expected opera was produced last night, and achieved the most unquestionable success. The popular composer was called before the curtain after the first and second acts, and again at the conclusion of the opera, and on each occasion was received with tumultuous applause. Although the performance did not terminate until midnight, the enthusiasm of the large audience seemed to increase rather than diminish, as the work approached its conclusion, and from the overture to the dance in the last scene there was a continual demand for the repetition of pieces which at once seized the popular taste. But while in Bianca Mr. Balfe's wonderful facility for inventing striking melodies is quite as conspicuous and as inexhaustible as ever, the work exhibits an immense superiority over all his former efforts in the orchestration. In this important matter the example of Meyerbeer's enduring success seems to have exercised a beneficial influence on our English composer. The story of Bianca has been adapted by Mr. Palgrave Simpson from the well-known tale of the Bravo of Venice; and in each of the four acts into which the opera is divided opportunities for musical effect have been presented, of which the composer has always availed himself with the happiest results. Mr. Balfe has been most fortunate in the representation of his work. Indeed, we have never seen all the members of the Covent Garden company to such advantage as in Bianca; and it would not be too much to affirm that the chorus and orchestra have never been so perfectly irreproachable on the first performance of any opera. Miss Louisa Pyne has great opportunities for the display of her varied powers. The charming ballad in D flat in the third act—which we prophesy will be the favourite morceau of the opera—was delivered with exquisite pathos, while the trying scena that opens the fourth act, and the brilliant finale to the opera, in which the vocalist reached almost the extremest limits of the human voice, were sung with the perfection to which we are accustomed in Miss Pyne, but which we may elsewhere seek in vain. Miss Thirlwall's singing is always conscientiously correct, but as yet she has not had so good a chance of showing that in action she is no less artistic and admirable. Mr. Alberto Lawrence's noble voice, judiciously subdued, was heard to much more advantage than on his first appearance in Il Trovatore; Mr. Henry Wharton, throughout painstaking, was compelled to repeat the ballad in praise of gold, which, with its bold and striking melody, is sure to become a popular drawing-room song; and Mr. St. Albyn excited great applause, no less by his terpsichorean than by his vocal efforts. On Mr. Harrison, however, the most onerous duties—histrionic as well as musical—devolve; and in all his disguises, whether as bandit, beggar, or noble, he sustained the character with unflagging energy and invariable effect. The mise en scène, while offering no novelty, is as admirable as usual; and we must not omit to mention the dance in the last scene, which is very prettily contrived. Nor should we forget to state that Mr. Alfred Mellon, in answer to a loud demand, was led on with evident satisfaction by Mr. Balfe at the conclusion of the opera, and was received with cordial and well-merited applause. Altogether, we have never had to record a more unequivocal success.

MR. BALFE'S BIANCA.—(From the Morning Post, 7th Dec.—Last evening the first important novelty of the season, namely, Mr. Balfe's new opera of Bianca, was produced at the above theatre with complete and well-deserved success.

Bianca, the libretto of which is by Mr. Palgrave Simpson, is founded upon Monk Lewis's well-known tale of the Bravo of Venice, which was adapted to the stage many years ago as a startling melodrama, under the title of Rugantino. Mr. Balfe's opera begins on the cathedral square at Milan, and as the curtain rises groups of penitents are discovered kneeling on the steps of the famous "Duomo," and in various parts of the stage. After a brief instrumental introduction played upon the organ the penitents sing a solemn choral prayer, "To Thee above our hearts we raise," an excellent specimen of Mr. Balfe's talent in the serious style of composition. This over, a herald (Mr. Distin) appears with a proclamation, which sets forth, in the name of the high and puissant Matteo Visconti, Duke of Milan, that a reward of 500 ducats will be paid for the apprehension of the notorious bravo, Fortespada (Mr. W. Harrison), whose daring iniquities have rendered him the terror of Milan and the surrounding country. The crowd of citizens to whom this proclamation was addressed now begin to debate among themselves how it will be possible to secure the bravo, and are presently assisted in their deliberations by a young nobleman called Memmino (Mr. H. Corri), and Beppo, an attaché to the Duke of Milan's household (Mr. St. Albyn). Beppo relates a dreadful legend about the bravo, interrupted occasionally by exclamations of terror from the crowd, or the vainglorious boasting of Memmino. A chorus of monks, who appear at the gate of the cathedral and desire the crowd to disperse, in order that the Duke and his daughter may pass without intrusion to their evening vesper prayers, brings the first scene to a conclusion.

All this, which is musically expressed in one connected piece, beginning with the chorus of citizens, "What man so bold?" is certainly one of the best things Mr. Balfe ever wrote. It is spirited, genial, full of variety, and thoroughly dramatic. Mr. Simpson, too, deserves great praise for the very ingenious construction of this scene for musical purposes. In the second scene we find Count Malespina (Mr. Henry Wharton), Montalto (Mr. Wallworth), Memmino (Mr. H. Corri), Contarini (Mr. Lyall), Michele (a ruffian in the service of Malespina), and others enjoying the pleasures of the wine-cup, and plotting the destruction of the Duke of Milan (Mr. Alberto Lawrence) and his daughter Bianca (Miss Louisa Pyne). Malespina says to his friends that > "The ducal guard is bribed,

> The Church is zealous for our good:
> The Emperor approves. When once the blow is struck
> His troops will hasten to support us, and, meanwhile,
> We must be zealous—bold."

It also appears that the chief Ministers of State are to fall by the assassin's steel. A first-class bravo being wanted, of course no better man than Fortespada could be found, and that his professional services may be obtained is sufficiently proved by a written communication to the following effect, and which has been mysteriously placed in the hands of one of the conspirators:—

> "Ye, who need my dagger—seek me; ye shall find.
> Ye who blood would shed shall see it shed around.
> When you meet, wherever gathered, then behold
> The bravo, Fortespada."

But a sudden alarm obliges the conspirators to be brief, and depend upon themselves. A young nobleman, who has discovered their machinations, determines to betray them. He must then, be disposed of at once, and thus lots are drawn to decide who is to strike the blow. Before, however, this matter is definitely settled, Fortespada suddenly appears before the astonished and affrighted conspirators. His terms for aiding them are that he shall be made their leader. They refuse; whereupon Fortespada wishes them "good evening." But Malespina, more determined than his companions, throws himself between the bravo and the door, and calls upon the rest of the conspirators to fall upon Fortespada and destroy him. They hesitate, the bravo laughs loudly and hideously, and, seating himself at the wine-table, looks calmly at them all. "I know your secrets," says he; "a certain scroll lying on my table contains a full account of them, and if I return not in half an hour that scroll will be in the hands of the Grand Duke."

Fortespada is at once elected chief of the gang, and having with some difficulty obtained all the names of his associates, taken an oath to annihilate the oppressors of Milan, drunk a bumper to the success of their enterprise, and overheard Michele promise to assassinate Bianca that very night as she returns from the cathedral, he takes leave in the pleasantest possible manner of his newly-made friends. Here ends the first act, the music of which is for the most part in Mr. Balfe's very happiest manner. The baritone scena, "Yes, proud Bianca," in which Malespina expresses his determination to take revenge for his slighted love, has a sweet and cantabile slow movement, very charming in itself, if not in the strictest accordance with the sentiment of the words; and the cabaletta, beside being quite unimpeachable with respect to verbal expression, is highly spirited and eminently tuneful. But the finale, beginning with the words, "Friends, we must act without delay," has still higher claims to consideration, arising from the very skilful treatment given to a large mass of dramatic material which it was necessary to bring into accordance with the laws of strictly musical form. To construct one coherent piece in dealing with such ever-varying and frequently opposite emotions, and to make it constantly vivacious and entertaining, was certainly no easy task, and yet Mr. Balfe has accomplished it to the satisfaction both of musicians and the general public.

Before terminating our remarks upon this act, we must specially mention the capital bacchanalian song—

> "Glorious wine, > Liquor divine,"

as one of the most genial and attractive pieces in the opera.

The second act opens with a scene supposed to represent one of the aisles in Milan Cathedral. It is night, and Bianca is about to depart, after her evening devotions, when she is confronted by Malespina, who here makes a last and ineffectual attempt to win her love before he allows his dreadful purpose to be carried into execution by the ruffian Michele, who, dagger in hand, is waiting to murder her, according to his promise. Upon the final rejection of Malespina, the assassin approaches to execute his design; but just as he is about to strike, his hand is arrested, and the poignard turned into his own heart, by an old man habited as a mendicant, who suddenly emerges from some obscure corner. Bianca, terrified, demands to know who is her deliverer, and is thus answered by the supposed beggar:—

Go, tell thy father, on his throne of pride,
'Twas Fortespada; thou the bravo's bride!"

Bianca calls for help, and the bravo having momentarily disappeared behind a pillar, returns clad as a monk. Nobody recognises him but Bianca, who cannot bring herself to denounce the man who has saved her life, and thus Fortespada again escapes. This closes the second act, to the music of which, as to that of the first, we can award high praise.

The opening chorus for female voices, "Slowly fades the light of day," is as pretty and spontaneous a piece of vocal harmony as Mr. Balfe ever composed; and the succeeding dialogued recitative and duet for Bianca and Malespina, "Although with cold disdain," if of a more elaborate complexion, and perhaps less fluent and cantabile than Mr. Balfe's inspirations generally are, must, nevertheless, be set down as particularly creditable to him as an orchestral colourist, and exceedingly dramatic in purpose. The melodic accompaniments assigned to the first violins over the subject in the duet is not only brilliant, fanciful, and charming, but at the same time quite original. The florid figurative counterpoint is indeed richly varied throughout the slow movement, which has peculiar merits, though perhaps not such as are calculated to strike the general public at a first hearing. The second movement, with its Verdian unisons, is less to our taste, but we doubt not it will find its way to the barrel organs.

In the commencement of the finale to this act, "Forebodings sad come creeping o'er my mind," Mr. Balfe has again displayed his imagination and ingenuity as an orchestral writer to very great advantage. The rather Meyerbeerish employment of the clarinet in F solus, as accompaniment to the voices, makes a pure and legitimately musical effect, charming yet simple in construction.

The solo assigned to Fortespada, "Thou art the bravo's bride," is also to be highly commended for dramatic fire and accent; and the praise which belongs to a melodious and well written concerted piece in the modern Italian manner is due to the slow movement, "Ah, mystery strange," which terminates this act.

The third act shows us, firstly, a scene in which Beppo and a young lady of the Court, Zeffrina (Miss Thirwall) are practising an old-fashioned gavotte, and sundry other dances, for the grand ball, which the Duke of Milan is about to give in honour of the Duke of Ferrara, who is expected to visit the Milanese Court, and to whom he has promised his daughter Bianca in marriage. The music here is exceedingly spontaneous and pretty; its only fault being a somewhat barbarous mixture of stiff ancient musical phraseology with the ultra-modern style. On the whole, however, it must be admitted that Mr. Balfe (who shines most brightly in light and brilliant music—witness his spirituel and charming "Quatre fils d'Aymon") has distinguished himself most honourably in setting this rather unsuggestive scene to music. The bright, joyous dance tunes with which it abounds will doubtless be reproduced in every possible shape, and played upon every piano. At the end of this scene, Bianca enters, and presently expresses her repugnance to the projected union with the Duke of Ferrara, and her love for the desperate man who saved her life, in a thoroughly Balfian ballad, "In vain I strove to teach my heart," one of the most genial and characteristic effusions that ever emanated from the facile and prolific pen of our popular English, or rather Irish, composer.

The second scene in this act opens with a recitative and air for the Duke, in which he expresses his anxious cares as the wearer of a prince's crown of thorns. The instrumental introduction to this, assigned to the violoncellos, accompanied by double basses, affords another proof of Mr. Balfe's fancy and science as an orchestral composer. If the following air, "If treachery base," were less uncertain in tonality, more simple and natural in melody and harmony; if the major and minor modes were not so confused in the peroration, we should like the composition much better. In the following duet, however, "From my childhood," Mr. Balfe gives us more of himself. Anything more unaffected or idiosyncratic than the two principal movements he has not given to the world. The dramatic action of the rest of this scene makes us acquainted with Fortespada's offer to the Duke to espouse his cause with his daughter, the indignant rejection of the bravo's proposal by his highness, and the consequent grief of Bianca. The principal musical features here are a bold and energetic melody, "Say, why this bold disdain" (a worthy companion to the famous "When the fair land of Poland"), and the concerted piece, "Oh, night of woe!" which is full of dramatic sentiment, and musicianly from first to last.

In the third act we discover that Fortespada, the supposed "Bravo of Venice," is a noble in disguise, the very Duke of Ferrara to whom Bianca was betrothed by her father. The principal pieces in this act are an admirably written scena for Bianca, "Yes, I shall see him once again;" a ballad for Fortespada, "Once more upon the path of life;" the baritone air, "Chiefs on might relying;" a sparkling and thoroughly dansante polka and gallopade; and a most brilliant rondo finale sung by the heroine of the opera.

With respect to the performance we have only time to state that it was on the whole admirable. The artists, one and all, exerted themselves to the utmost, and unanimous applause of the warmest kind was bestowed upon them on every possible occasion.

Mr. Balfe was called for at the termination of each act, together with the principal executants. All critical details upon the performance must, however, be deferred, as the opera did not terminate till midnight.

THE SISTERS MARCHISIO.—A Paris journal, La Presse, in noticing a musical performance which recently took place at the house of Madame Orpila, one of the most distinguished amateurs in the French metropolis, thus speaks of the two fair artists, Mlles. Carlotta and Barbara Marchisio, who have already won for themselves so much renown at the Grand Opera and in private salons by their ensemble singing:—

"But the principal attraction of the evening was the first appearance in this artistic salon of the sisters Marchisio: they sang the duos from Matilda di Shabran and Norma in the midst of a transport of enthusiastic applauses; the perfection of their method, the richness of their organ, but, above all, that admirable combination of the two voices, the quality of which harmonises so perfectly, that marvellous blending together even of the most difficult nuances; those oppositions of light and shade so wonderfully managed, so exquisitely graduated, in short, all those qualities of ensemble, twins, as it were, which characterise and individualise the talent of the sisters Marchisio, astonished, no less than enchanted, the brilliant auditory. We doubt whether the sisters Marchisio ever obtained a success more real and more flattering at the same time. Among the company who were most liberal of their applause were Mad. Miolan-Carvalho, M. Duprez, and the "brothers Braga."

THE MARCHISIO SISTERS.—Mlles. Carlotta and Barbara Marchisio, in making their first appearance at the Opéra in Semiramide, had real difficulties to surmount. They had been at least twelve months engaged; the quasi-official announcements of the opera had promised beforehand two singers of the highest order, two young and great artists of different kinds, the one gifted with an agile and brilliant dramatic soprano voice, the other having a magnificent contralto voice, both tragédiennes, devoted to the art and possessing the sacred fire.

It was consequently with extreme emotion that the sisters stepped for the first time on the redoubtable scene of the Opéra, where so many artists of talent failed, where great and enduring celebrities consecrated themselves. With what ardour the two sisters confronted so terrible an ordeal is matter of history. They were accepted immediately by the chosen public, whose opinion is sovereign, and of which the press is the faithful echo. Mlle. Carlotta was compared, and with reason, to the best Semiramises who had ever interpreted the adorable music of Rossini; and Mlle. Barbara to the most renowned Arsaces of whom the Italians have preserved the recollection. The success of the sisters Marchisio is then the most sincere, the most positive, if, in matters of art, it may be permitted to employ the term. It is doubtful, nevertheless, if they consent to sign a new treaty with the Opéra; and doubtless they feel that the Italian stage offers them more profit, more glory, and more easy triumphs. It will be a serious loss to the Opèra that it could not retain two singers of such extraordinary talent; but the great artists can hardly be deceived in regard to their future prospects, as trees bend their leaves in that direction whence proceed the rays of the sun. Why, then, should not the sisters Marchisio, like other queens of song, having won Parisian applause, seek for admiration and enthusiasm in other capitals of Europe, and even in the New World?—La Presse Théâtrale (reduced into English.)

Advertisements.

NEW PIANO MUSIC,

PUBLISHED BY

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18 HANOVER SQUARE.

			s.	d.
		PIANO SOLO.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	"The harp that once thro' Tara's Halls	3	0
ERGMANN, A.	...	"Rondo appassionato" (dedicated to Mad. Davison)	4	0
"	...	"Réminiscences d'Obéron"	3	0
FIELD, JOHN	...	Six Nocturnes (edited by F. Liszt) ... ... each	2	0
GANZ, WILHELM	...	"Santa Lucia" (a brilliant transcription)	3	0
KONTSKI, A. DE	...	"Aux armes!" caprice heroïque	5	0
LIDEL, BLANCHE	...	"Valse de Salon"	2	6
LISZT, FRANZ	...	March from Wagner's Tannhäuser	4	0
MAUSS, THEODOR	...	"Prometheus." Galop brilliant	4	0
MOZART, W. A.	...	Romance in A flat	2	0
ROUBIER, HENRI	...	"La vallée des roses." Mazurka de Salon	3	6
"	...	"Josephine" ... ... do. do.	3	0
RUBINSTEIN, A.	...	Barcarolle in F minor	2	6
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Vedrai carino" (Don Juan)	3	0
"	...	"Batti, batti" (ditto)	3	0
"	...	"The mermaid's song" (Haydn)	3	0
SCHUBERT, F.	...	Impromptu in E flat, Op. 90, No. 2	4	0
"	...	Impromptu in B flat, Op. 142, No. 3 (played by Mr. Charles Hallé)	3	6
SELLE, W. C.	...	"Marche Triomphale"	3	0
SILAS, E.	...	Romance, Op. 48	2	6
"	...	Impromptu à la Mazurka, Op. 50	3	0
"	...	Tarentelle, Op. 51	4	0
		PIANO DUET.
BRISSAC, JULES	...	Rigoletto (transcription of the Quartett)	4	0
LEFEBURE-WELY	...	"Hommage à sa Majesté Napoléon III." caprice militaire	6	0
"	...	"Le retour de l'armée." Marche triomphale ...	6	0
SCHLOESSER, A.	...	"Don Juan." Grand Duo sur l'opéra de Mozart...	6	0
WAGNER, R.	...	March from Tannhäuser, arranged by T. Mauss ...	5	0

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK for 1861, will be issued early in December, price 1s. 6d.; per post 1s. 8d. Advertisements and Lists of Music to be sent in by the 1st December, to Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20 Charing Cross.

"TEN THOUSAND STARS WERE BURNING BRIGHT,"—New Hymn for Christmas. Harmonised Vocal Score and Organ. Sent post free for Four stamps. R. Andrews' Cheap Pianoforte, Harmonium, and Music Saloon, 84 Oxford Street, Manchester, where may be had the "Original Easter Hymn," Four stamps.

NEW MUSICAL WORK.

ANNALS OF THE KINGS AND QUEENS OF ENGLAND from the CONQUEST to the REIGN of VICTORIA. The words written and the music arranged and composed by GEORGE LINLEY, embellished with an illustrative title by JULIAN PORTCH, and elegantly bound in cloth price 10s. 6d.

London: Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210 Regent Street; Simpkin, Marshall and Co., Stationers' Hall Court; and Hamilton, Adams and Co., Paternoster Row.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147. —May now be had upon application to the

Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

Price 3s. per Part.

OPERATIVE SURGERY, by C. F. MAUNDER, F.R.C.S. The first of Two Parts containing Operations on the Blood-Vessels and Joints.

London:—John Churchill, New Burlington Street, W.

Price 4s.

ON SYPHILIS, a New Issue of Ricord's, Lectures. Translated by C. F. MAUNDER, with a Paper on Stricture by the Translator.

Sold by Renshaw, Strand, W.C.

Just Published,

BREAK! BREAK! BREAK! A Song—words by ALFRED TENNYSON, Esq., Music by E. BURNETT, Mus. Bac. Price 2s. 6d.

London: Leader & Cock, 63 New Bond Street.

"The well-known and beautiful stanzas of the poet-laureate, which will at once be suggested by the thrice reiterated "Break," have frequently been set, with more or less felicity, but not often with such real and unaffected expression as by Mr. Burnett, who, in the present instance, shows himself worthy to be a bachelor of the same university where Sterndale Bennett holds the rank of professor."—Musical World.

STEPHEN GLOVER'S 60 VOCAL DUETS.—"A Catalogue Thematique" of these distinguished compositions may be had gratis and postage free.

W. H. CALLCOTT.—CLEMENTI'S GOLDEN PIANOFORTE EXERCISES, selected from his great work, "Gradus ad Parnassum," edited, with Remarks, by W. H. CALLCOTT. 6s. An invaluable epitome of Clementi's masterpiece.

MEDITATION pour PIANO. Par THEODORE MAUSS. Op. 36. 2s.

TEARS of JOY; Impromptu for the Pianoforte. By ADOLPHE SCHLOESSER. 2s. 6d.

"OH! CHIDE NOT MY HEART." Song—words by Mrs. AYLMER, Music by W. T. WRIGHTON. 2s. 6d. Composer of "Winter's warm Fireside," "Her bright smile haunts me Still," "My mother's gentle word," &c.

GLEES.—ONE HUNDRED and EIGHTY GLEES, Catches, Canons, Madrigals, Part-Songs, &c., in Numbers, 4to. size, 2d. and 4d. each. Three volumes complete, each, bound in cloth, 8s. This celebrated collection is arranged in vocal score, with pianoforte accompaniment. List of contents gratis and postage free.

London: Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

12 DUETTS IN BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET, No. 16, price One Shilling. Now ready. Contents:—

1. I would that the love . . . . . Mendelssohn.
2. The Passage Bird's Farewell . . . Mendelssohn.
3. Greeting . . . . . Mendelssohn.
4. Autumn Song . . . . . Mendelssohn.
5. Oh! wert thou in the cauld blast . . Mendelssohn.
6. The May Bells and the Flowers . . Mendelssohn.
7. The Happy Hunter . . . . . Kucken.
8. The Flight of the Swallow . . . Kucken.
9. I muse on thee . . . . . Kucken.
10. Oh! gentle music . . . . . Keller.
11. Oh! could I teach you, warbling bird . Keller.
12. Morning . . . . . Keller.

12 SONGS BY SCHUBERT in BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET, No. 18, price One Shilling. Now ready. Holles Street.

15 SONGS BY BEETHOVEN in BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET, No. 12, price One Shilling. Now ready. Holles Street.

16 SONGS BY KUCKEN in BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET, No. 15, price One Shilling. Now ready. Holles Street.

BOOSEY'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL OF DANCE MUSIC, price One Shilling (being the Christmas Number of the MUSICAL CABINET), contains the following New Compositions (never before published), all complete and unabridged:—

A Maiden's Blush Valse	Laurent.
The Bal Masque Quadrille	Burckhardt.
Kiss in the Ring Polka	E. Berger.
Chateau des Fleurs Schottische . . .	Laurent.
The New Year's Quadrille	Burckhardt.
Henrietta Waltzes	Marriotte
Knickerbocker's Polka	Burckhardt
Snap-Dragon Quadrille
The Waterfall Galop	Marriott.

THE GERMAN SONG BOOK, with ENGLISH WORDS, price 4s. handsomly bound in Cloth, gilt letters and edges, containing—20 songs by Mendelssohn, 16 songs by Kucken, 12 songs by Schubert, all with English words and pianoforte accompaniements.

BALFE'S SINGING METHOD, without the use of Solfeggi. Third Edition, price 5s. The whole of the necessary exercises are provided in the form of original ballads and songs, written expressly for the purpose.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE BALL-ROOM MUSIC BOOK. Price 4s., handsomely bound, contains Fifty Waltzes, Forty Polkas, Ten Galops, Two Varsovianas, Two Schottisches, and Twelve Sets of Quadrilles, by popular composers, being the cheapest and most entertaining collection of music ever published.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

BOOSEY AND SONS'

CHEAP INSTRUMENTAL WORKS.

Each arranged by the most distinguished Master of the Instrument.

TUTORS.

Boosey's Shilling Pianoforte Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Harmonium Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Violin Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Cornet Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Flute Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Concertina Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling German Concertina Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Singing Tutor.

VIOLIN.

Boosey's 100 Dances. (First Series.) 1s.
Boosey's 100 Dances. (Second Series.) 1s.
Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Popular Ballads. 1s.
Boosey's 100 German Waltzes. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies. 1s.
Boosey's 10 Standard Overtures. 1s.
Boosey's Edition of De Beriot's Airs. 1s.
Boosey's Edition of Kreutzer's Studies. 1s. 6d.
Boosey's Edition of Rode's Studies. 1s. 6d.
Boosey's Edition of Fiorillo's Studies. 1s. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Songs. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Country Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Operatic Airs. 6d.
Boosey's Complete Operas (23) each 1s.

FLUTE.

Boosey's 100 Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Operatic Airs. 6d.
Boosey's Complete Operas, each 1s.

CORNET-A-PISTONS.

Boosey's 100 Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs. 1s.
Boosey's 25 Duets. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Operatic Airs. 6d.

CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Sacred Melodies. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Popular Melodies. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Sacred Melodies. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Secular Melodies. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.

GERMAN CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Dances and Songs. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Dances and Songs. 1s.

NOTICE.—Boosey and Son's Editions must, in every case, be ordered, as other works have been arranged by persons totally unacquainted with the above Instruments.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, HOLLES STREET.

BIANCA: THE BRAVO'S BRIDE.

Now ready,

All the Songs, Duets, Trios, Choruses, &c., from

BALFE'S NEW OPERA.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

	s.	d.
THE OVERTURE, arranged as a Duet by Balfe	5	0
THE FAVOURITE AIRS, arranged by Nordmann as Solos and Duets, in 3 books ... ... (each) 3s. and	6	0
THREE GEMS, arranged for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards ... (each)	3	0
FANTASIE BRILLANTE, on Bianca, by W. Kuhe	3	0
GRAND FANTASIE, by Mad. Oury	4	0
QUADRILLES and VALSES, by Henri Laurent. Illustrated in colours by Brandard ... ... (each)	4	0
POLKA and GALOP, by Henri Laurent. Illustrated in colours by Packer (each)	3	0
FOUR FAVOURITE MELODIES, arranged for beginners on the Pianoforte, by Nordmann ... ... (each)	1	0

 Numerous other arrangements in the Press.

Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

AN EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT

OF

FOREIGN PRINTED MUSIC,

IMPORTED FROM GERMANY, FRANCE, AND ITALY

DURING THE LAST 50 YEARS,

Including many Works out of Print and the Plates of which have been destroyed,

TO BE SOLD AT

ONE FOURTH OF THE MARKED PRICES AFFIXED,

BY

MESSRS. BOOSEY & SONS,

28 HOLLES STREET, OXFORD STREET,

In consequence of their discontinuing the Sale of Miscellaneous Foreign Printed Music and requiring the Room for other purposes;

ORCHESTRE SYMPHONIES, OVERTURES, DANCES, &c., &c.
MILITARY and BRASS BAND MUSIC.
VIOLIN CONCERTOS—Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, Trios, Duets, and Solos.
VIOLONCELLO and TENOR MUSIC for ditto, ditto.
FLUTE MUSIC—Concertos, Septuors, Quintetts, Quartetts, &c., &c.
CLARIONET, HAUTBOY, HORN, and BASSOON MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos.
HARP and GUITAR MUSIC, of all kinds.
PIANOFORTE MUSIC, from Concertos to Solos, including an extensive assortment of Music for Four Hands.
VOCAL MUSIC in Score, Oratorios, Operas, &c., &c.
Ditto, ditto, with Pianoforte accompaniment.
THEORY and HISTORY of MUSIC.

Early applications are recommended as of many of the Works only one or two Copies are left, and the whole Collection must be cleared off in the course of a short time.
Hours of Sale from 10 to 4.

THE ENGLISH SONG BOOK. Price 4s., superbly bound in cloth, gilt letters, containing Forty-four songs and ballads (with Pianoforte Accompaniments), by Balfe, Hatton, Linley, Mori, Loder, Wrighton, and other popular composers. Postage 4d.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

THE DRAWING-ROOM PIANOFORTE BOOK. Price 4s., superbly bound in cloth, gilt, containing Thirty-one Pieces for the Pianoforte, including Nocturnes, Fantasias, Mazurkas and Galops de Salon, Reveries, Romances, &c., by Ascher, Talexy, Wely, Cramer, Goria, Rosellen, Ravina, Beyer, Comettant, &c. Postage 4d.
Boosey & Sons, Holles Street.

MENDELSSOHN'S MIDSUMMER NIGHTS DREAM, Music in BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET, No. 17, price One Shilling, complete for Pianoforte. Contents:—
The Overture, Scherzo,
Intermezzo, Notturno,
Wedding March.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, December 8, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 50 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1860 PRICE { 6d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Dr. TENDALL.
Vocal Classes
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

50

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR and MAD. FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

FLUTE, GUITAR, and CONCERTINA.—LESSONS by Mr. and Mad. R. SIDNEY PRATTEN, at 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W., where may be had the whole of their publications for the above instruments, consisting of nearly 300 Pieces, vocal and instrumental.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and a Day Performance on Saturday afternoon at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

NEW LECTURE HALL, CROYDON.—Mr. GEORGE RUSSELL has the honour to announce that his ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT will take place on Tuesday, December 18th, 1860. To commence at 8 o'clock.

VOCALISTS:
Mad. PALMIERI, Mad. SAINTON-DOLBY, and M. VERZEY (Pupil of M. Duprez).

INSTRUMENTALISTS:
Pianoforte, Mr. GEORGE RUSSELL. Violins, M. SAINTON and Herr WERDEMEYER.
Viola, Herr STEHLING. Violoncello, M. PAQUE.
Contrabasso, Herr BIEHL. Conductor, Mr. W. G. CUSINS.

Prices of admission:—Reserved seats, 5s.; unreserved seats, 2s. 6d. and 1s. To be obtained of Mr. Thomas Weller, 2 High Street, Croydon; and of Mr. George Russell, High Street, Croydon.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

MUSICAL PRESENTS.—The HOLY FAMILY, Sacred Airs for Piano, by W. H. CALLCOTT; and the Adoration, by W. H. Callcott—each work complete in 1 vol., handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges, 12s. Also, the Beauties of Beethoven, by W. H. Callcott, 10s. 6d. Each work is beautifully illustrated.

London: Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington Street, Regent Street, W.

THE COLLEEN BAWN QUADRILLE, finely illustrated, 4s.

London: Robert Cocks & Co.

SOUVENANCE, by HENRI LITOLF, Impromptu, pour piano, 2s. 6d.; Ballade, pour piano, by Henri Litolf, 3s. 6d.; Valse élégante, pour piano, by Henri Litolf, 3s. 6d.; Polka caractéristique, pour piano, by Henri Litolf, 2s. 6d. Four pieces of great merit.

London: Robert Cocks & Co.

W. H. CALLCOTT.—CLEMENTI'S GOLDEN PIANOFORTE EXERCISES, selected from his great work, Gradus ad Parnassum, Edited, with Remarks, by W. H. CALLCOTT. 6s. An invaluable epitome of Clement's masterpiece.

London: Robert Cocks & Co.; and of all musicsellers.

Just Published,

BREAK! BREAK! BREAK! A Song—words by ALFRED TENNYSON, Esq., Music by E. BUNNETT, Mus. Bac. Price 2s. 6d.

London: Leader & Cock, 63 New Bond Street.

"The well-known and beautiful stanzas of the poet-laureate, which will at once be suggested by the thrice reiterated "Break," have frequently been set, with more or less felicity, but not often with such real and unaffected expression as by Mr. Bunnett, who, in the present instance, shows himself worthy to be a bachelor of the same university where Sterndale Bennett holds the rank of professor."—Musical World.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER, AND ALMANACK for 1861, will be issued early in December, price 1s. 6d.; per post 1s. 8d. Advertisements and Lists of Music to be sent in by the 1st December to Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20 Charing Cross.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 3s.), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

WEBER'S LAST WALTZ, transcribed by F. ROSENFELD. This is one of the best arrangements for pupils, yet offered to the public, of the above admired waltz. It is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above popular Neapolitan melody, specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêvérie)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the above arrangement for that purpose.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W. (Sung also with distinguished success, and invariably encored, by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, (with Captain Morton Price) at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.; where "I love you" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d. London: published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

The day, pretty darling, draws near to its close,
Come, cease from your play, on your pillow repose,
You peep from the cradle still laughing and bright,
Kind angels for ever preserve you, good night.

With freedom from sorrow, dear child, you are blest,
To you a pure heaven is your fond mother's breast;
Wild passion some day will your happiness blight,
Kind angels preserve you, my darling, good night.

Ah! happy is he who can slumber like you,
Be ever, dear child, to your innocence true,
The righteous are watched by the spirits of light,
Who guard them while sleeping, my darling, good night.

"Few songs of modern days have achieved a more decided or better merited success than Herr Reichardt's charming lied, "Thou art so near and yet so far," which has for the last two years been the delight of all concert-goers and drawing-room vocalists of more than ordinary pretensions. Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have just published a new composition, from the same original and elegant pen, entitled "Good Night" (a cradle song). The words are exquisitely simple and unaffected, being the address of a mother to her sleeping babe; and it is but justice to Herr Reichardt to say that he has wedded an exquisite domestic poem to a most graceful, unaffected melody, which breathes the very spirit of maternal tenderness. The song, which is written for a tenor voice—the composer being, as our readers know, one of the first of living German vocalists—is in the key of F major; and to amateurs of taste we can cordially recommend "The Cradle Song" as a composition worthy of their attention."—Liverpool Mail.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline;
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone.
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHÜR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. WEISS.

The custom of watching armour in church was a religious duty imposed upon knights who used to consume whole nights in prayer to some saint whom they chose as their patron.

Sir Neville spurr'd his gallant grey,
And hied him on his lonely way;
But ere he from the saddle sprung,
The abbey's midnight chimes had rung.

He doffed his armour, whose fair sheen
The stains of battle ne'er had seen;
And said, "Heav'n send thee I may be,
A worthy son of chivalry."

In hours when bright remembrance came
Athwart his memory like a flame,
A crimson scarf was given to tell,
Of one who loved Sir Neville well.

The gift was fondly cherished yet,
And while his burning glance it met,
He sighing said, "Be thou to me
The beacon star of victory."

Sir Neville kept his vigil lone,
Till the matin star had come and gone,
Then donned his armour and away,
He sped him on his gallant grey.

In many a land on fields of fame,
The watchword was Sir Neville's name.
Where fell the bravest, there fell he,
Fighting for love and chivalry.

The above popular and romantic ballad, now being sung everywhere with the greatest success by Mr. Weiss, is just published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq., is just published price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

		s.	d.
BILLET (Alexandre)	"Lucia di Lammermoor"	4	0
	"Les Huguenots"	4	0
	"La Traviata"	4	0
BRISSAC (Jules)	"Rigoletto" (transcription of the Quartet) ...	4	0
BRUNNER (C. T.)	"Martha"	3	6
CUNIO (Angelo)	"La Sonnambula"	5	0
LEFEBURE (Wely)	"Hommage à sa Majesté Napoléon III." (caprice militaire)	6	0
	"Le retour de l'armée" (Marche triomphale) ...	6	0
LOUIS (N.)	"Fleurs Venitiennes." Trois mélodies Italiennes variées. No. 1 in G. 2 in C. 3 in B flat (each)	4	0
MAYER (Charles)	"The Royal Saxe-Coburg March"	4	0
ROUBIER (Henri)	"Le départ du Zouave." Grand Quadrille militaire...	4	0
RUMMEL (J.)	"La Favorita"	4	0
	"I Lombardi"	4	0
SCHLOESSER (Adolphe)	"Don Juan" (Grand Duo)	6	0
	"Terpsichore" (Duo de Salon)	6	0
WAGNER (R.)	March, from Tannhäuser, arranged by Theodore Mauss	5	0

The above duets are of a pleasing and popular character, and are adapted for moderately advanced performers.

London: Ashdown & Parry, 18 Hanover Square.

THE LONDON GLEE and MADRIGAL UNION, whose Concerts of Old English Ballads and Part-songs, Glees and Madrigals, obtained a remarkable success last Season, will resume their Entertainments at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, for a short period of One Month only, commencing on Monday, January 7.

LETTS' APPOINTMENT DIARY, price 2s. 6d. in roan tuck pocket-book. An hourly arrangement of each day, to enable Professors and Teachers of Music to regulate their engagements exactly. This book originated with one of the greatest Vocalists of the day.
Sold by all Booksellers. Descriptive catalogues, gratis.

Letts, Son & Co., Publishers, 8 Royal Exchange.

TO HARMONIUM TUNERS.—Wanted a good HARMONIUM TUNER.—Apply to Boosey and Sons, 24 Holles Street.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MUSIC.*

IT must be matter of observation that the practice of commenting upon art has now become a field of independent mental exertion, it having of late years been shown that, in the investigation of works of art, faculties and gifts of mind have been elicited as great and original as those which produced the art itself.

The reason of this is apparent in the consideration that amongst the votaries of the arts there are always some in whom susceptibility to impression is greater than the faculty of demonstration; and thus in these the artistic energy vents itself in adding its fire to ideas already formed and inspired; in imparting a second soul—the added soul of their own pent rapture—to an object of art, by means of some other medium of expression. It may be language. Thus their minds are driven into the recesses of the object of art they contemplate. Thus the artistic impulse is brought to bear upon art itself, and thus the above object comes out from this process still further spiritualised.

If I were to define art, I should say it is preceded by a distinct emotion of admiration, created through the influence of some external object of beauty, or by an indefinite rapture of feeling aroused by the general action of outward nature, upon the sense and intelligence of man. It arises in the tendency this condition of feeling exerts to push the pent ardour, amassed in the receptive channels of the mind, outwardly, through the demonstrative faculties of the nature; to employ the outward senses; to wreak itself upon expression.

In consummating this expression, it involves the action of that remarkable tendency prevailing in the human breast whenever charged with an emotion partaking of the character of admiration, to reproduce, to conjure up again and again the natural influence of that feeling. Thus the painter reproduces upon canvas the fair aspect of nature that impresses him—thus the lover conjures up, in poetic rhapsody, the charms which excite his admiration.

Now, this reproduction of the external influence of emotion constitutes art. But it must be remarked that the impulse of the breast, thus resulting in art, is twofold in its action. For the representation of an outward incentive of feeling not only in its production employs the demonstrative faculties—not only constitutes the expression of an emotion, but in its effect reacts upon the receptive faculties, and also perpetuates the emotion.

Thus art is the embodying an inward idea of beauty, by repeating in ideal form the external influence of that idea, and the expressing and perpetuating an emotion of admiration in the production, and by the effect of this embodiment. This is art, and this is the operation of a great principle of the human mind, by means of which it may be said to multiply its offspring, to perpetuate the existence of its own emotions.

From this principle the whole phenomenon of art is developed, and by its aid can be accounted for. The distinction in character, for instance, between a natural influence and the same influence reproduced in the aspect of art, may be thus explained. The mind, in reproducing the object that elicited its admiration, recreates it in the light of that admiration, with those attributes of charm only visible in its original aspect, through the medium of esthetic taste and poetic meditation, in its artistic form, shining outwardly and apparent to ordinary contemplation. Thus it may bear its original shape, but its soul is no longer hidden, its beauty shines outwardly. It may reappear in bodily form, but its expression is spiritual.

Through these few remarks upon the general constitution of art, it will be understood how the attentive and intelligent observer of art may gain a deep insight into truth; how, through the effect of art, he may behold the spirit of nature; how it has been the destiny of many earnest writers upon art to attain to this comprehensive vision; to wield the Ithuriel spear of art as an instrument of moral application.

Poetry, painting, sculpture and architecture have, in several instances, led their commentators and recorders to totally new and original eminences of mental observation; and thus to these arts the human mind in general is greatly indebted for the discovery of truths of deep import, and beauties of all-pervading influence. On the other hand, music, of all the arts, has hitherto been the least serviceable in guiding the mind on its path of moral inquiry. The reason of this may be that, of all the arts, music is that which, in its own conquest and acquisition, absorbs more undividedly the whole attention, monopolises more completely the varied faculties, claims in a greater degree the continued experience of man, and thus reduces the function of its votaries solely to the illustration and interpretation of its simple effect.

There may also exist another reason, which is revealed in the consideration, that music, with regard to other ministrations of art, deals the least with the palpable forms and influences of nature, and is the only one without the faculty of representing them in their natural aspect. Consequently, in tracing its influence, in wandering amongst its array of expositions, we meet with no effect common to other branches of moral demonstration, and with no object of external human interest. And thus the large sphere of suggestiveness which these influences possess is lost in the contemplation of music. Thus the mind in the exploration of music does not arrive at new starting-points of thought, but traversing the etherial stream of sound, glides continuously on its emotional course, undiverted into new channels by the external features of nature.

In the analysis also of musical effect we are searching into that which we cannot grasp, cannot see, and can only feel. Thus in inquiring into an effect we are analysing an emotion; whereas in the analysis of other effects of art, the mind is brought into contact with a material influence. In music it is mind acting upon mind. In the other arts, mind acting upon matter. In the case of music the intellect works inwardly. In that of the other arts, outwardly. And thus the result is, that in commenting upon musical effect, the mind is lost in its own mazes and checked in its progress. Thus its lucubrations in this direction are mostly of a metaphysical character; and meeting with so little support and light from without, the borrowed light of fancy and vague imagination is so often visible upon them.

In the following pages, however, an attempt is made to push the fragile skiff of thought along this subtle current; and by aid of the compass of known truth, the rudder of argument, and other mental means for obtaining steadiness and straight progress, to gather reliable and practical information upon the nature and meaning of musical effect in the mind; to probe to its source this mystic Nile of tone, and to establish thereupon a few firm positions for the human intellect to affix its standard.

And as the deeper the voyager of discovery penetrates into the recesses of nature, the greater becomes his knowledge of the laws of his own being, so does the mind in exploring its empire inevitably refract light upon itself; so may we in our present path of research gather new truth for the mind, as well as in casting the light of conquest upon our subject, still further develop its resources.

When we pause in admiration of a flower, the reason is not only lulled by the absorbing influence of beauty upon the senses, and its subtle property of reaching the finer perceptions, without arousing the mind to conscious action; but the activity of the intellect is further superseded through the consciousness we possess of the origin and function of the flower in question. We do not regard this effect as the poet the stars, which he describes as "a beauty and a mystery." On the other hand we are all the while aware that the flower is a natural and necessary feature in the development of the plant whereon it grows. Though there may be in this object much food for reflection, there is still therein nothing, as in the case just alluded to, which strongly arouses the mental activity simultaneously as it invokes the admiration. Now this is the distinction at the outset between the state of the mind in contemplating the effects of all other species of art, and that which it assumes when wrought upon by the influence of music.

Here is a strangely beautiful phenomenon. But what is it? Is it "bright effluence of bright essence increate," or where is the connection between it and the world's more palpable and functional influences; as the flower and its subtle odour that floats like

* Introductory Remarks to the Philosophy of Music, being a series of essays, entitled respectively, "The Relationship of Music to the other Fine Arts," "The Moral Theory of Music," and "The Laws of Life in Art," which appeared in the MUSICAL WORLD. Corrected and amplified by the Author. By Joseph Goddard.

sound through the air is threaded to the rest of nature by the fine tissues of the plant?

Now, in the course of the arguments pursued in the essay termed "The Moral Theory of Music," it is shown that music is the flower of human speech; that it is developed from the ordinary materials of language, as the blossom from the substance of the shrub; that it retains the finer attributes of speech, namely, tone, emphasis, and pause, as the flower still possesses in its roseate petals, the beautified likeness of the green leaves; and that it loses the mixed and dull sound of ordinary language, and wholly assumes the vesture of melody, as the flower relinquishes the opaque and neutral tints of the plant, and beams totally in the dazzling raiment of colour.

In closing these preliminary observations, it may be remarked, that in regarding "music" from the point of view occupied by this work, we do not discover it in its technical and mechanical details. We regard it as an astronomer a heavenly body; not so much to unfold its individual principles, as to discover those great laws that bind it to the universe; to trace the spring of its orbit, and the influence it exerts upon, and receives from, the other solar influences in the mental concave. Its surface aspect is not again gone over; but its rise from the general human horizon is endeavoured to be traced, and its power, brightness, and ultimate effect as a light in the moral firmament of man revealed.

Therefore, although the present work on account of its subject (and as tending, by connecting in a near relationship that subject with some of the most momentous, moral, and intellectual phenomena of man, to lift up the art of music to a lofty and dignified position in general estimation; to exhibit it by the light of reason to all, at this altitude, which otherwise were only visible to the believing few through the far more eloquent language of its effect), though for these reasons the present work recommends itself specially to the musician; still it solicits the attention of all who are interested in the philosophy of art generally; and through the light it endeavours to throw upon common human phenomena, the laws of the mind, the evolution of the feelings, and the principles of moral demonstration, in the subjects with which it has presumed to cope, it applies to all who possess emotion and employ a language.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER II.

My introduction to the impresario, mentioned in the last chapter, led to many subsequent business transactions between us, which brought me into frequent communication with some of the most celebrated Italian singers at different times under engagement to him, and moreover, gave me an insight into the amenities and difficulties of his position.

I have seen the crowd of courtiers at his door, waiting patiently to be received by the successful manager. I have heard the mob of creditors clamour rudely for their rights, when the public was blighting all hopes of a replenished treasury by "damning" the last new opera. I have seen him in knee-breeches and silk stockings, a silver candlestick in either hand, proudly receiving royalty; and, oh! I have seen him when, in accordance with slavish custom, trying to walk backwards up the treacherous stairs, miss his step, and bump down in a sitting posture, candlesticks, knee-breeches, and all, in the front of royalty, to the horrible confusion of himself and infinite amusement of the lookers-on. Yes, there are indeed moments of striking contrast in the career of an impresario.

Among other distinguished artists with whom I became intimate during my association with theatrical affairs, was Lablache—old Lablache, the incomparable basso, the inimitable buffo—whose voice and presence moved us to tears in Norma, or made our sides ache with laughter in Barbiere. Dear old Lablache! with your fund of anecdote and bons mots you have left us, and your pretended successors do but prove the irreparable loss we have sustained. I was constantly in company with the great basso, and often had my pity excited by the inconvenience he suffered from his colossal proportions. No ordinary made chair was safe beneath his enormous weight; a servant, whenever it was practicable, carried one about for his especial use. It was difficult to find a carriage the doors of which were large enough for him to pass; in London he had, of course, his own brougham in attendance. On one occasion the rehearsal at the theatre terminated sooner than was expected, and Lablache, anxious to reach home, ordered a street cab to be called. The driver looked alarmed when his fare issued from the stage door. "He'll never get in, sir," said the man despairingly to me, as I was shaking hands with Lablache, who also seemed to have his doubts upon the subject. We approached the vehicle—the door was opened wide. Sideways, headways, frontways, backways, the prize basso tried in vain to effect an entry. Without assistance it was impossible. Two men went on the opposite side, and dragged with all their force, while two others did their utmost to lift him in. "It's no go," cried the cabman; he'll ruin my cab." One more effort. A long pull, a strong push, a pull and a push together—the point was gained—Lablache inside, puffing and blowing from the exertion. But the difficulties were not yet terminated,—he had inadvertently sat down on the wrong seat, with his back to the driver. Wishing to change the position, he rose; in turning round, the whole of his prodigious weight was upon the few slender boards forming the bottom of the cab. Imagine the horror of the cabman, the astonishment of Lablache, and the surprise of a large crowd which had been attracted by the terrible struggle we had had, when the boards gave way, and his two feet were seen standing in the road! The cabman swore, Lablache grinned, the crowd roared. No scene in a pantomime could have been more ludicrous. Fortunately Lablache sustained no injury; had the cab been in motion, the consequences of the accident might have been serious. The same process of shoving and pulling, but reversed, was necessary to get him out again. Whether greater violence was used than at first, or not, the door in this instance was torn from its hinges, and the cab (previously a good-looking vehicle) now presented the most melancholy appearance of a perfect wreck. The driver uttered curses both loud and deep, but was pacified by the assurance that the damage should be repaired, and his loss of time remunerated. I am not aware that the portly basso ever again attempted to ride in a hack cab.

Lablache was one of the "Old Guard"—one of that incomparable quartet of whom Grisi is now the only singer to be heard—the quartet for whom I Puritani was composed.

Rubini has gone. Tamburini has left the stage. Lablache is no more. Grisi alone remains, the last link in the chain which connects the Italian opera of our youth with that of the present day; and Grisi will (if it can be believed) make her last appearance before the London public next season. It is asserted, upon very good authority, that she will give her positively farewell representations at Her Majesty's Theatre, the theatre which more than any other, whether in London or Paris, is associated with her successes; the theatre which lost its prestige when she left it, and now that she is about to return, seems to be regaining its good name and to offer more serious opposition than ever to Govent Garden. If that mysterious attribute which we call good luck exists, no one individual can boast of possessing a greater share, in addition to transcendent talent, than Giulia Grisi.

Throughout her extraordinary career it has been always constant, and not only herself but those with whom she has been associated seem more or less to have been affected by its influence. I have heard Grisi tell the story of her début,—how, when hardly fourteen years old, she sang the part of Emma in the Zelmir at Bologna. It was at an hour's notice. There was no one to be found to replace the singer who had been suddenly taken ill. Giulia, hearing of the embarrassment of the manager, offered, to the surprise of all her family, her assistance, was accepted, and acquitted herself admirably. So satisfied was the impresario with her success, that he offered an engagement for the rest of the season. From Bologna Grisi went to Firenze, and thence to Milan in 1831. On every occasion the same "good luck" attended her, until her first appearance in London, in 1834, when, strange to say, the young débutante was but coldly received. She had previously, in Paris, sang with great success, when Laporte had heard and engaged her. Grisi was disconcerted with the reception of La Gazza Ladra, the opera in which she first appeared, and expressed her disappointment to Laporte. "Cela ne fait rien," said that enterprising impresario, "it will be all right." His prediction was fulfilled. Before the termination of the first season Grisi had become a popular prima donna, a position she has ever since sustained against the opposition of innumerable rivals. Perhaps no singer ever paid so little attention to her voice than Giulia Grisi, none whose great dramatic effects were less premeditated and more impulsive. When the two theatres, Covent Garden and Her Majesty's, were open some seasons ago, I remember calling upon a prima donna of the latter house, and finding her reclining upon a sofa, with a cold water bandage round her throat, "What's the matter?" I exclaimed, fearing she was indisposed. "Oh, nothing," was the reply, in a very low voice, "but I sing to-night, and am making my usual preparation." On leaving this lady (as poor Albert Smith would have said) in pickle, I had occasion to call upon Grisi. Knowing she was announced to sing in the Huguenots that same evening, I was uncertain whether she would be visible. My doubts, however, were soon removed when I reached the house. "Madame is in the garden, Sir," said the servant, pointing to where he supposed his mistress to be. I followed his directions, but tried in vain to find the Diva, who presently came running out of the kitchen, making many excuses, and saying she had a new cook to whom she was obliged to give instructions.

ANTEATER.

Letters to the Editor.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

SIR,—"It is too much the custom of journalists to take for granted the performances of certain societies, especially with regard to well-known works. In the case of the Messiah, for instance, a criticism of a performance of this universally appreciated work seldom appears. The consequence is, that this, the best known oratorio, is, all things considered, frequently very ill performed. If progress is to be the life of any musical society, the pressure of the critical screw should never be relaxed."

It was thus that Kewcha Sannyman, Esq., the well-known tenor, discoursed on Friday evening last, as he accompanied his friends to Exeter Hall. It was then many years since he had listened attentively to Handel's masterpiece, for he could found no original remarks upon so old a composition; and his invention having failed to produce new phrases, and especially adjectives and substantives of remote derivation, he took no interest therein. But on arrival at the well-known Hall, the rumour of a tightened rein and sharper bit in the mouths of desultory chorus singers brought unwonted fire to his eyes, and lit up his finely formed countenance with ecstatic joy. The goodly promise of a full audience was also grateful to his feelings, though his ribs suffered severely on the narrow stairs. In the room his expectations were more than fulfilled; never before did he hear a better performance. He found the familiarity of the orchestra and chorus with the work still shown in the ease with which it was delivered; while the collective nose, being constantly kept at the conductorial grindstone, was productive of the best results. He proceeded to admit the folly of the pianissimo commencement of "For unto us;" but thought that further remonstrance was useless—with both of which conclusions I cordially agree.

Miss Parepa taking the soprano part, K. S., Esq. was delivered of some well-digested reflections. "Effect is not always produced by loudness of voice. Volume of t ne, if it were an eagle, might be heard from London to York, while a skylark would not be audible through a quickset hedge. The purity of voice and perfect tune, together with clear enunciation of the words, are the requisite qualifications for singing sacred music. The departed Mad. Novello was my beau idéal of a classical singer. The lady of this evening, in all the exuberance of a great voice and brilliant vocalisation, loses sight of the purity and unaffected beauty of the great Englishwoman's style. Nevertheless, her voice is very fine, and her singing remarkably clever."

Without altogether endorsing his opinion, I pass on to his estimate of Mad. Sainton's style, as shown in the Messiah. "Of all composers," says he, "Handel shows most power in the pathos of simplicity. While the elaborate use of the science of harmony, and the art of instrumentation serve to point the melodic beauty of Beethoven's and Mendelssohn's most thrilling passages, there is in Handel a quiet dignity and touching expression that goes to the very heart of the audience. 'He shall feed His flock,' and 'He was despised,' may serve as examples of this. In the declamatory 'But who may abide,' we find a power and intensity that carries us back to the days of the old Hebrew prophets. Handel had not many predecessors in his art; but he looked well to the future; and if we say that in writing for a contralto powerful alike in declamation and pathos, he predicted the existence of Miss Dolby, we are accounting for the marvellous fitness of her capabilities in the only satisfactory manner."

Of tenors his discourse was naturally diffident and modest. "I find few who 'please by manly ways.' Your Italian tenor of the present day is generally a poor, effeminate creature. Among English artists I find men who can deliver the sentences of Judas Maccabeus in a manner that would set a whole nation on fire. In the present case vigour cannot be dispensed with, hence it is that we never heard a foreigner sing the tenor music of the Messiah to satisfaction. Mr. Sims Reeves, lately bereaved, is par excellence the tenor I like; his two deputies, Messrs. Cooper and Perren, are both genuine artists with good gifts. The latter pleased me, especially to-night. There is much refinement in his singing, which he shows without detracting from his manliness." And, again, who remembers to have read such writing as the following. "Ponderosity and closeness of tone please me in bass singing. Mr. Weiss has a magnificent voice, which he damages at times in trying to sing too loud. A properly winded 16-foot pipe is better, i.e., more effective, than an underwinded 32. Let not this, however, apply to his singing. 'The trumpet shall sound,' but now," continued our friend, "as supper is ready, we will leave a parting word of high praise for the incomparable Mr. Thomas Harper, and retire to our habitations, wondering for the five thousandth time at the powers and royal genius of the great Saxon, and the hold he possesses on the ears, minds, hearts, and souls of men so many scores of years after he has passed away." It was in vain for us to attempt to improve or add to these excellent remarks, so we left the great artist, not without sorrow that such a train of thought should be suddenly cut short.

SHOULDER.

[Shoulder arms! "Shoulder."—PETIPACE.]

DEAR PETIPACE,—Many thanks for your emendations of my last. Why an elegantly written sentence, pregnant with significance, should be excised to make room for "&c., &c., &c.," I don't know; but anent the same transaction, let me quote the words of the Bolognese Adolfo, which have been excellently translated by the late Mrs. Susan Creever:—

"When success and popularity are gained the fortunate possessor is apt to be dazzled with the result of his endeavours. Others pay him reverence and admiration, and attribute to him capabilities he never possessed, which latter he himself may be induced to believe in, till, some great occasion demanding an exercise of the reputed talent, he is rapidly adjusted to his proper level by his failure. Even then there be some who will not perceive his mistake, but continue to assert the value of deeds which have, in the minds of right-thinking men, produced only disgust and repulsivity."

I am yours faithfully,
SHOULDER.

SIR,—In reference to a paragraph in Sunday's Observer stating that "an extensive system of fraud had just been discovered, which had been carried on for some time, especially in the matters of the stores of the company," I beg to state that there is no ground whatever for any such statement.

The only way in which I can account for such a misapprehension arising is from the circumstance that the directors recently found it necessary to discharge one of the superintendents in the building, in whose transactions some irregularities were found to exist; but they did not amount to 5l. in money value, which has since been made good to the company, but at the same time infringements of principle were involved in the transactions which the directors felt it necessary to mark with the severest censure. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, GEORGE GROVE, Secretary.

Crystal Palace, Sydenham, SE., Dec. 10.

IN RE LEEDS.

SIR,—It may be of scant moment that the prize infant, Master Tinley, or the Chippian Doctor have adorned (!) Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith" with their own variations, in place of the melodious "changes" of the mighty Saxon on his particular anvil; but is it not a curious index of the musical progress of the cloth emporium to find (after the good seed sown by Field-Marshal Bennett at the late musical festival) that local societies serve up OPERAS (!) with the miserable accompaniment of a piano, to their woolly patrons? Another DISCREET and learned society takes credit for executing * Mendelssohn's picturesque conception, the Loreley finale, with sundry supplementary growls from the Town Hall ORGAN (a tremendous fellow, I have heard). Let the men of cloth establish a "Philharmonic Society," with a properly-appointed orchestra and chorus, as is the wont of the big manufacturing towns, and advance the musical art by performances of a legitimate and elevating character. * RESPECT THIS.*

(When the leaves of the oak tremble it is well to hasten and descend Mont Cenis, as the Chevalier prefers the champaign lands.)

 At Bradford, I have been told, George Macfarren's cantata of Christmas has been performed by a society in the Hall of St. George, in that overgrown hamlet, to the "beautiful piano accompaniment of Mr. Burton." Was it he of that ilk who displayed himself at a Yorkshire Concert, * at St. James, his Hall (some time ago), by eccentric gyrations on that domestic instrument, while Hallé's fingers were as yet dank and trembling on the clavier?

(Knowing these things, why not cross the Eastern Lake before the YEAR is ended? The Chevalier will approach by the Olive Fields.)

BE DUMB.

PAPPUS OF BIRKENHEAD.

[SAMUEL SMITH you're wanted!—PETIPACE.]

WIPING AWAY TEARS.

DEAR SIR,—I observe an advertisement in the Daily Telegraph thus worded:—

"Brinley Richards wipes away tears from all eyes. Price 3*s*."

Can you inform me of that gentleman's address, and at the same time give me an idea of what his charge would be to keep my wife's eyes dry by the year?

Yours, truly,
AN UNHAPPY HUSBAND.

A LETTER FROM WEBER.

[The following is a translation of a letter addressed to the father of Mr. Benedict, the well-known composer, when, as a boy, he was studying under the illustrious author of Der Freischütz.]

Dresden, 10th February, 1822.

I have been always prevented from thanking you for your esteemed letter and your kind present. I wished to write you a long and detailed letter, but could not find leisure for it. Now, at last, only a few hours before starting for Vienna, I claim the greater indulgence for brevity.

My excellent Julius gives me real gratification, and I trust that time, severe study and application, combined with his true talent and intellectual endowments, will some day present him to the world as a genuine artist. Such a long separation from your dear son must indeed be a great trial for you, but I think it my duty to urge upon you not to do the thing by halves, but secure yourself twofold joy and comfort for your whole life by what you now deny yourself.

A serious and deep study of the art must progress slowly and by degrees, and can only thus give self-possession to the artist's mind. Indeed it is a lamentable symptom of our time, that we are all content with the mere surface; and, casting of too soon the bond of apprenticeship, henceforth, in ever vacillating weakness, aim at producing effects, which, glaring without substance, quickly vanish. It excites a sad smile when we think how everybody admits that the business of a merchant requires several years of application, and that even for a mechanic, besides the three or four years' apprenticeship, other probationary years are deemed essential. In art only—the profoundest and most comprehensive study of life—probably a few months' of superficial observation are thought sufficient to accomplish the task.

Instead of giving your son the twelve lessons a month I promised, I have had him with me daily. I do not mention this in order to obtain your thanks, but merely to show you what time is required for the simplest elementary studies. To keep alive his inventive faculty, I have even now let him venture upon compositions, which he ought not yet to have been allowed to undertake; but, thank God, I have found my rich reward in his own good sense, since through these very compositions he has acquired the conviction of how great the distance still is to the goal. I must leave off, as the abundance of my subject would carry me too far. The little I have said comes from my inmost heart and conviction, and from the truly sympathetic interest and affection I feel for my dear Julius.

In my thoughts I share with you the joy of your meeting again. My wife unites with me in kindest regards, and I remain, with greatest esteem,

Yours faithfully,
C. M. VON WEBER.

MR. JOHN BROUGHAM AT LIVERPOOL.—Few, if any, names have become more honourably associated with English literature on the American stage than that of John Brougham, the universally popular Irish comedian, and the author of Romance and Reality, Columbus, Playing with Fire, &c. A son of the Emerald Isle, his wit is eminently racy of the soil; while, gifted with genius of no ordinary kind, he is at once an accomplished actor, an entertaining author, and, above all, a gentleman. Mr. Brougham, during his residence in America, won troops of friends, who testified, in the most marked and pleasing manner, their sense of his worth and abilities. In Liverpool he has also many admirers; and these, last evening, showed their appreciation of him by entertaining him to a splendid supper at the Waterloo Hotel. About 40 gentlemen sat down to supper. Colonel Beverly Tucker occupied the chair, having on his right the guest of the evening. Mr. M. J. Whitty filled the vice chair, and amongst the other gentlemen present were Mr. George Francis Train, Captain Newlands, L. V. E., Mr. Charles Mozley, Captain Miller, Messrs. John Bingham, W. H. Peat, Joseph Belcher, Worrall, Montgomery, &c. Dessert having been placed on the table, the Chairman proposed "the Queen." The toast was drunk with all the honours.—The Vice-chairman then gave "The President of the United States" (great applause).—The Chairman, in responding, said he was proud to witness the good feeling which prevailed between the two countries, and might that feeling long continue (applause). He knew that Americans felt proud of their mother-country, and he thought the latter was equally proud of her full-grown and prosperous child (applause). The two countries were knitted together alike by affinity and common interest, and he believed that what redounded to the credit of the one could not but favourably affect the interest of the other (loud applause).—The Chairman again rose, and proposed the toast of the evening, "The health of, and long life to, their friend, Mr. Brougham" (loud and continued applause). He had had the honour and the pleasure of knowing Mr. Brougham for some time, and he knew him to be both a man of genius and a gentleman (applause). As an author, an actor, or a friend, he was equally to be admired; and, speaking for himself, he might, in the words of Hamlet to Horatio, say to Mr. Brougham, "Give me that man that is not passion's slave, and I will wear him next my heart of hearts, as I do thee" (loud applause).—Mr. Brougham, who was heartily cheered on rising to respond, said he felt deeply the cordial welcome with which he had been received in this great town. A native of Ireland, he had felt, after a twenty years' sojourn in America, a strong desire to visit and a yarning towards his native land, and he could only say that since his return he had received many proofs of the kind feeling entertained towards him by his countrymen (applause). After making some humorous but highly complimentary allusions to Mr. F. Train, the projector of street railways, he spoke in terms of eulogy of the country from which he had lately returned, and concluded by again thanking the company for the unexpected honour they had done him in inviting him to be their guest that evening (applause). Various other toasts followed, and a most agreeable social evening was passed.

THE GOVERNMENT of China is divided into four departments, each presided over by a mandarin. The fourth department is that of music, and is managed by the brother of the late Emperor.

THE TENOR, Herr Reichardt, is in Paris, where he will sing at several concerts. He has also accepted engagements for the provinces with several local musical societies.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—With one exception, the instrumental pieces of last Monday (fifth concert) were the same as on Nov. 26th, when the name of Beethoven was the attraction. Thus the sonata in E flat, Op. 7, for pianoforte alone, that in F major for violoncello and pianoforte, and the trio in G major (Op.1), were heard for the second time and with increased pleasure, the pianoforte solos especially eliciting the warmest applause. As before, the whole sonata was played by M. Hallé from memory. The novelty was the quartet in A minor (No. 15, Op. 130), (MM. Sainton, Ries, Schreurs and Piatti being the executants), one of the erroneously-styled "posthumous," for an explanation of which we cannot do better than refer our readers to the analytical programme. Not one nor a dozen hearings would suffice to reveal the numberless beauties with which this composition abounds. From the opening bar to the last note there is an unceasing vein of the most highly-developed musical thought, never-ending melody —combined with the most perfect harmony, and an overflow of ideas the most original, a tithe of which would be sufficient to stock many modern composers for life. So replete with charms, that it is almost difficult to individualise any particular movement as finer than another, we are nevertheless inclined to select the adagio as our favourite. The "Song of Thanksgiving in the Lydian mode," written in gratitude for recovery from severe sickness—anything more solemn and impressive than this it would be impossible to conceive; and we do not wonder at the devout attention of the audience and their subsequent enthusiastic plaudits. Sceptics who, not believing in themselves, are inclined to place everybody else on the same level, should attend St. James's Hall on one of the Monday Popular Concert nights. There they will find that, be the weather what it may,—the thick November fog, the pelting, merciless rain, the blinding snow, or the melting hot evening of midsummer,—the large hall is always filled, and that with an audience who have paid their money; that almost all the audience are seated by the time the concert commences, and that, let a quartet or sonata last even forty-five minutes, as was the case with the A minor on the present occasion, it is heard throughout with an intense gratification that finds in applause the genuine heartiness of which there is no mistaking. This is the second of the later quartets which has been heard at the Monday Popular Concerts. We shall anxiously await the third. The vocal selection comprised two songs, in which Miss Lascelles' remarkably fine voice was heard to great advantage; one by Benedict, "The maiden and the river," a work of easy expression; the other, Mr. Wallace's "Sweet evening star." Miss Augusta Thomson sang Haydn's canzonet "Fidelity," and took part with Miss Lascelles in a charming duet of Dussek's, "My pardon, dearest treasure," in which Mr. Oxenford's beautiful words have been substituted for the weak originals. Mr. Benedict accompanied the vocalists with that skill and taste for which he is noted. The new screen at the rear of the orchestra is a manifest improvement. The sound is now thrown out into the room, and the most delicate passages are distinctly heard. At the next concert (and last before Christmas) the programme will be selected from various composers—Miss Arabella Goddard, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss making their first appearance this season.—DODINAS.

ROYAL ALHAMBRA PALACE.—The new Music Hall in Leicester Square was opened on Monday night, and attracted an immense audience. The Alhambra Palace is an extraordinary establishment, and one which, with proper and enterprising management, is likely to prove a fortune to its proprietor. We shall not enter into a minute detail of the decorations or arrangements of the salle, which will be found better set forth in the advertisements. Enough to say that the general effect is brilliant and tasteful, and that accommodation has been provided for about four thousand persons, who may sit, and eat, and drink at their ease, listening to music, and witnessing terpsichorean performances. The whole designs have been conceived and carried out on the most liberal scale, and afford an assurance that everything is likely to be done necessary to make the Alhambra Palace highly attractive to the million. For the admission fee of sixpence an excellent series of diversions has been provided. A numerous and efficient orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Tully, performs a selection of appropriate and effective music, while the vocal portion of the entertainment is in the hands of such artists as Mr. Parkinson, Mr. E. Rosenthal, Miss Emma Heyward, Mad. Volkener, &c. The programme of the week, besides vocal solos from these virtuosi, includes a duologue called "Folly and Fashion," by Mad. Caulfield and Miss Louisa Graham; a comic mélange, in which Mr. George Perren, Mr. Tom Matthews, Miss Rosina Collins, and other performers appeared; with a mixed entertainment of ballet and opera, well devised and executed. On Monday night, after the National Anthem, Mr. E. T. Smith was summoned before the curtain, and vehemently cheered and applauded. We may venture to predict that the new undertaking of the great "entertainer" will be hailed with welcome by thousands, the moderate and decorous amusement of whom we have persistently advocated.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The concert last Saturday comprised, for the instrumental pieces by the band, Mendelssohn's symphony in A major and the overture to Euryanthe, vocal solos by Mad. and Signor Palmieri and Miss Eleanor Armstrong, and a solo on the violin by Mr. Joseph Heine. The songs most admired were the polacca from I Puritani, by Mad. Palmieri, and the grand scena, "Bel raggio," from Semiramide, by Miss Eleanor Armstrong. The last-named young lady is a highly promising singer. "Bel raggio" is taxing to the most accomplished and experienced singer; but Miss Armstrong exhibited such good taste and skill, and showed such a nice voice withal, that the audience were delighted, and applauded liberally. The new violinist played Ernst's Pirata fantasia, and created a decided impression. We shall be glad to hear him again.

MYDDELTON HALL, ISLINGTON.—A concert was given here on Monday evening, the proceeds of which were to be devoted to the liquidation of the debt on the new organ of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. The hall was well filled, so that something, at all events, may be anticipated in liquidation of the debt. The vocalists were Miss Clari Fraser, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Donald King, and Mr. Lewis Thomas; instrumentalist, Mr. T. J. Cooper (piano): Mr. Liddell was accompanist. The performance calls for no particular remarks, beyond stating that Miss Clari Fraser and Mad. Sainton both sang admirably, and excited great enthusiasm, the former being encored twice, the latter once.

GRAND VOLUNTEER CONCERT OF THE FIRST SURREY RIFLES.—This exceedingly brilliant affair came off at the Athenæum, Clapham Common, on Tuesday evening, and brought together all the rank, youth and beauty of the neighbourhood. Such an assemblage indeed has rarely, if ever, been witnessed at the Music Hall on the Common. An establishment under the direction, or patronage—we are not authorised to say which—of the First Surrey Rifles, more especially of that distinguished section of the corps, No. 5 Clapham and Wandsworth Company, would of itself have proved eminently attractive to the fair sex at any rate; but when it is added that the concert was supported by those eminent artists, Mad. Sainton-Dolby and Miss Arabella Goddard, assisted by the Orpheus Glee Union and the band of the corps, under the direction of their band-master and leader, Mr. J. Callcott, enough has been said to account for any degree of excitement. The programme was constructed skilfully and with taste. The band of the Rifles played selections from Der Freischütz, Il Trovatore, and Robert le Diable, and proved themselves blowers of the first wind—players of the first water. They also performed an arrangement from the Prayer in Mosé, and a polka by Mr. J. Callcott, which was greatly admired. Miss Arabella Goddard gave Liszt's enormously difficult fantasia on the quartet from Rigoletto, and Benedict's enchanting "Where the bee sucks;" in both of which she was rapturously encored. She respectfully declined the first, but graciously accepted the second, giving in place of Mr. Benedict's piece, Mr. Wallace's "Home, sweet home," again with triumphant success. Mad. Dolby was not less heartily received. She sang "The skipper and his boy," which she was compelled to repeat; the ballad, "Janet's choice," and Signor Randezzger's serenade, "Sleep, dearest sleep," all in her most admirable manner. Mr. Fielding, too, sang with the Orpheus Glee Union Kücken's solo and glee, "Soldier's love," a very effective performance; while the "Union" contributed Webb's glee, "Discord, dire sister," Hatton's part-song, "When evening's twilight," and Otto's part-song, "Pretty maiden." The concert, in short, was a great success, and thoroughly pleased and gratified every one present.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

First Appearance this Season of

MR. SIMS REEVES, MR. WEISS,

AND

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.

SIXTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON, AND LAST BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 17, 1860,

The selection, Vocal and Instrumental, from the works of various Masters.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in E minor, Op. 44 (Mendelssohn), Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello. By desire, M. SAINTON, Herr RIES, Herr SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song, "The Monk within his Cell" (Macfarren), Robin Hood. First time, Mr. WEISS. Canzonet, "Gentle Hope, from Heav'n descending" (Dussek), Canzonets, First time, Mr. SIMS REEVES. Sonata, in E flat, Pianoforte solus dedicated to Madame Buonaparte (Steibelt). First time at the Monday Popular Concerts, MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.

PART II.—Sonata, in F major, Pianoforte and Violin (Haydn). First time at the Monday Popular Concerts, MISS ARABELLA GODDARD and M. SAINTON. Song, "Adelaide" (Beethoven), by general desire, Mr. SIMS REEVES, accompanied by Miss ARABELLA GODDARD. Song, "I'm a Roamer" (Mendelssohn) Pedlar's Song—Son and Stranger, Mr. WEISS. Quartet, in A, Op. 18, with Variations (Beethoven). Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello. By desire, M. SAINTON, Herr RIES, Herr SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street, And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

ROYAL ALHAMBRA PALACE MUSIC HALL,

LEICESTER SQUARE.

Lessee and Proprietor, Mr. E. T. SMITH.

IN announcing the Opening of this Grand Establishment, Mr. E. T. Smith ventured to remind the public that he appeared in their midst as a favoured caterer for their amusement, and based his claim for a patent of precedency in that respect upon the "Great Fact" that, by no ordinary struggles against "quality" prejudices, he had established the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, as the playhouse for the people. Mr. Smith further challenged the musical army to point out one volunteer who had made more rapid strides towards advancing the taste for music than himself. He had provided for the million, at the lowest prices of admission, the grandest Operas, English and Italian, illustrated by the most accomplished artists; in a word, he had broken up that inharmonious monopoly which shut out high-class compositions, not only from the humbler, but from the middle classes of English society. In his present great effort, unmatched in the history of modern times, Mr. Smith would, he trusted, amply sustain the character it is his ambition to boast.

The Alhambra Palace was no ordinary place of entertainment; and, with emphasis, Mr. Smith directed attention to the Opening Night, on Monday, December, 10, 1860.

The Musical Direction was confided to Mr. JAMES TULLY, the popular Conductor at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane, whose name was alone a guarantee for the Orchestral Department.

In the Refreshment Department a prospectus was needless, when it was stated that it would be under the superintendence of Mr. JAMES ELLIS, from Australia, favourably remembered as the original proprietor of Cremorne Gardens, Chelsea, and of the Adelaide Gallery, Strand. Mr. Ellis might fairly lay claim to having given rise and impetus to all the popular music halls and salons of amusement which now form so conspicuous and leading an element of public appreciation.

Mr. Smith felt it scarcely necessary to add, that he had gone to enormous expense in making the Palace of the Alhambra a giant specimen of good taste and of public comfort. Experience had long since proved that those who solicit the patronage of the public must endeavour to deserve it; and nothing less than the supply of the very best articles could entitle any public caterer to that high distinction. In evidence of his good intentions, Mr. Smith trusts the opportunity of publishing the names of the firms in the wholesale trade with whom he was dealing, and thereby made them responsible, with himself, for the excellence and genuineness of the Wines, Spirits, &c., which were supplied by Messrs. Swaine, Boord and Co.; and of the Malt Liquors, which are supplied by the celebrated firms of Messrs. Huggins and Co., Messrs. Reid and Co., Messrs. Bass and Co., and Messrs. Guinness and Co. A Tariff of Charges was conspicuously placed in every part of the building. It was respectfully requested that any complaint of incivility or inattention on the part of the waiters or assistants might be at once communicated to the Manager. In thanking the public for the gracious support previously conferred on him, Mr. Smith respectfully submitted to their patronage an unparalleled example of his energy, expenditure, and zeal.

CATTLE SHOW WEEK.—ROYAL ALHAMBRA PALACE MUSIC HALL, Leicester Square: Proprietor, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Immense Success.—Visited by 6,000 persons nightly.—THIS EVENING, at 7 o'clock. The musical direction is confided to Mr. J. H. TULLY, the popular conductor at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane. The whole of the building has been altered, and the designs carried out under the superintendence of Mr. William Beverley, of Her Majesty's Theatre, and the Theatre Royal Drury Lane. The proscenium and paintings in the dome have been executed by the celebrated artists, Messrs. Danson and Sons; the decorations by Mr. Hurwitz, of Southampton Street, Strand. COME THIS EVENING!

REFRESHMENTS the most récherché at a MODERATE TARIFF.

ADMISSION, 6d. Commence at 7.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Last Night of the Season.

This Evening, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15,

ROBIN HOOD,

SIMS REEVES, SANTLEY, SHERRINGTON, and LEMAIRE.

Reduced prices.

Commencing at Eight o'Clock.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6d.

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1860.

A GREAT book, a wonderful book, has come before us—a history in music! The history, that of England, the music, that of Mr. George Linley. Mr. Linley is of opinion that next in importance to knowing one's-self, is a knowledge of the history of one's country, which is quite true to a certain extent, though we do not think an acquaintance with the bare facts, the "dry bones," of history serves any purpose but that of enabling the person possessing this knowledge not to appear grossly ignorant before his betters. That, however, is something, and it is an advantage that may be attained by any man, woman, or child, who chooses to read over a few times the eight hundred lines or so to which Mr. George Linley has reduced the records of his native land.

"Learning, to some, is a mistress,
Of charms which can never decrease;
To others, a cow which supplies them,
With excellent butter and cheese," says Schiller; to which we may add

"To others a cloak which permits them
Their folly to hide with more ease."

And no one need seem unable to understand the history of England since the Norman conquest who has once accustomed himself to say or sing the metrical annals of Mr. George Linley. Whether the music will aid many students in remembering the verses is another question, and, we believe, we may safely say, that scarcely one person can recollect a melody perfectly and distinctly where twenty can with ease learn to repeat stanzas of poetry by heart. Whether it is that Mr. Linley is greater as a poet than as a composer, no matter for what other reason, we think the majority of persons would be more impressed by such striking lines as the following, than by the somewhat mild music to which they are set:—

"In the year fifteen hundred and fifty-eight,
Elizabeth governed the English state;
Her soldiers and sailors and ministers grave
Brought conquest and glory on land and on wave.
Her rule was an era of talent and worth,
The genius of Shakspeare beamed brilliantly forth;
Brave Sidney, and Raleigh, and Crichton, and Drake,
Howard, Burleigh, and Effingham shone in her wake."

Unfortunately, Mr. Linley, in setting history to music, has restricted himself to the most simple style of composition, so simple that we fancy here and there it falls somewhat beneath the dignity of the subject. Otherwise, and if Mr. Linley in his music of the past had any ambition to rival Herr Wagner in his music of the future, he might have made the melodies and harmonies which the particular events of each reign would naturally have suggested to him, as instructive as a course of historical philosophy. Modern teachers of history aim above all at showing how one great event naturally and inevitably led to another, and how certain centuries are characterised by certain important intellectual, religious, and political movements. Could not this connection, and above all, this characterisation, be admirably shown in music? The invention of printing would be a difficult thing, perhaps, to suggest by musical means; but let it once be understood that a certain air stands for it (or "typifies" it, as we might say in such a case as this), and by introducing this air again in combination with another intended to indicate the Reformation, the composer would be able to show not only that the one event preceded the other, but that there was intimate connection between the two. The Reformation and the civil wars might be treated in a similar fashion.

Foreign history, or the history of England's relation with foreign powers, could be musically illustrated in a still more striking manner, by the appropriate introduction of the national airs of our enemies and of our allies, and the system might even be extended to great political questions. There is the celebrated Eastern Question, for instance, which a skilful composer might certainly expound in music; and, as it is now being brought forward again, it would be quite a relief to hear it sung after it has been made the pretext of so much fatiguing talk. The cantata of the "Eastern Question" might be prefaced by an overture, which should depict the contentions between English, French, Russian, and Austrians, to which it has given rise. Then the cantata proper should open with a Turkish march, symbolising (and at the same time "cymbalising," as H. M. would remark), the irruption of the Turks into Europe, in the 15th century, unless indeed the composer liked to go further back, and commence with the first attack of the Russians upon Byzantium, under Vladimir the Great, grandson of Ruric the Norman.* The battle of Lepanto, the great victory of Sobieski under the walls of Vienna, the successful campaigns of Potemkin and Souvaroff in the Crimea, and in Turkey itself, might be just hinted at in the instrumentation, but the general progress of Russia, coincident with the decline of Turkey, should be made the subject of a grand dramatic air. How the cantata should end is a question it would be rather difficult to answer; indeed, neither more nor less difficult than to arrive at a solution of the Eastern Question itself. Perhaps, however, the most interesting and satisfactory termination for musicians would be the appointment of Joseph Donizetti to the post of band-master to the Sultan.

WHENCE is derived the power of music to delight mankind? whence proceeds the magic spell through which it works such wonders on the soul?

To answer somewhat mystically: music represents an inward sense and inward expression of the symmetry and rhythmical force that reign in the creations of genius. We cannot explain what we mean, and would not if we could.

May the charm of music be traced to the pure enjoyment experienced by the ear in the concord and harmony of sweet sounds? In a measure, undoubtedly, it may—or must it be attributed to the pleasure attending the perception of dissonances unfolded and resolved, and to the faculty of divining by anticipation the ideas and intentions of a composer? In part, "assurément," as Théophile Gautier answered Victor Hugo, not wishing to discuss his theories. At least this has much to do with the gratification of a connoisseur.

But the chief effect of music is magnetic. We are woven out of fibres quiveringly alive to the sense of what is exquisite, and therefore are affected to the heart's depths by the influence of dulcet tones, of long-drawn melodies, of rich and various harmony. These vibrate diversely, according to the characters and temperaments of individuals. Hence the same music does not touch all alike, for the degree of pleasure must be in proportion to the susceptibility of nerve.

Music is the art of youth. It is also the art of love and poetry. "Musicam docet amor et poesin," says the wise Erasmus, whose discordant theological controversies failed to untune him altogether. Music is the art of youth, because it is the spontaneous growth of the soul—because it perishes if forced to put forth its blossoms in an uncongenial atmosphere. In manhood, however, as in youth, it holds its sway, notwithstanding that the fibres become less susceptible; the sensibility is blunted, and that, with certain square-cut natures, ardent enthusiasm gives place to calculating analysis, criticism usurping the throne of feeling. Beethoven, for example, was never a more thorough-paced enthusiast than when imagining his ninth symphony and his last sonatas. Look at the unfathomable C minor, Op. 111, and his last quartets; instance the uncontrollable A minor. Love may gradually evaporate as the blood begins to circulate less freely; but music is a consolation to age, as it is a spur and stimulus to youth. Let the man of many sorrows seek comfort in the fugues of John Sebastian Bach. Every fugue, entirely mastered by intellect and finger, will surely quench a sorrow.

Yet music is the cherished art of youth. The true musician must, as a boy, have charmed the public and obtained applause. If his genius has not declared itself in his early days, if it is only in riper years that he enters upon the paths of science, he can never attain real greatness in music. If he begins to learn late in life, his very acquaintance with those whose works have already enchanted the world, will prevent his feeling any keen relish for the produce of his own labours, or entertaining the necessary confidence in his own ability. He will know too well how to estimate the plaudits of the crowd to covet such distinction over greedily. He will experience the want of that vigorous ambition, of that instinctive yearning, so to say, which excites the youthful aspirant to his boldest essays, and impels his spirit towards the highest flights of imaginative art. He may coin money; he may write as cleverly as any of those who have merely studied hard; but he will never be A MASTER. Did Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Cherubini, Mendelssohn begin music when adults? No; they were musicians from the cradle.

In spite of all this, maturity, nay, even old age, &c.

> "Genius may sometimes gloriously offend,
> And rise to faults your critics dare not mend."

But let us pause at the threshold of the subject. To pass the door would induce too long and tedious a homily.

PETIPACE.

---

* Composers who wish to treat the subject, ab initio, should consult a little book published by Messrs. Parker, entitled "Vladimir, or the Conversion of the Russians to Christianity."

BOTH Italy and France are about to pay a just tribute to the memory of one of the most illustrious musicians of modern times. The first stone of a monument to Cherubini was laid at the church of Santa Croce, in his native city of Florence, on the 14th of September, the centenary of his birth, the great composer having been ushered into life on the same day and month, 1760. The site of the monument has been chosen close to the tombs of Michael Angelo and Galileo, which figure conspicuously in the church. The idea of the memorial erection originated with the Florentines, and a commission of the most eminent men of the city was formed to receive subscriptions. At the head of the list of subscribers appeared the names of King Victor Emmanuel and the Prince of Savoy-Carignan, while the city contributed a large sum. The commission of Florence appealed to France. Should France have waited for the appeal? We think not. Cherubini was born in Italy; in Italy certainly his genius was fostered, and there it bloomed and blossomed. The fruits, however, were destined for a foreign land. In France the great master composed nearly all his chefs-d'œuvre; in France he founded a school, the influence of which is now universally felt and acknowledged; and in France, after a protracted career of honour and renown, his bones repose. France, then, should not have waited for the summons; should not have permitted even Italy to teach her how to offer proper homage and respect. The debt France owes to Cherubini no time and no gratitude can repay. It will remain undischarged while music lives, and will be felt as long as art takes cognizance of its benefactors. If France, nevertheless, did not lead the initiative in paying a last tribute to the memory of him who constituted one of the glories of her capital, she did the next best thing; she nobly and immediately answered the call, and attested that she only required to be told what to do, to do it in the best manner. No sooner was it announced in Paris that a monument was about to be erected at Florence to the memory of Cherubini, and that contributions were wanted for this purpose, than a committee was instituted, the members of which included, among others, the illustrious names of Prince Poniatowski, Rossini, Auber, and Meyerbeer, and a subscription list was opened at the Conservatoire, at the office of M. Rety. That Paris will surpass Florence in its contributions towards the completion of a fitting monument to the renowned composer, cannot be doubted. Nothing less, indeed, could be expected from the "metropolis of civilisation and the fine arts."

Cherubini was one of the most voluminous of composers. He wrote in all styles, and has bequeathed to posterity imperishable worth in every department of the art. As an abstract writer of Church music he surpassed, both in the quantity and quality of his contributions, all his predecessors, contemporaries, and successors. Cherubini was also one of the profoundest of musicians. Even the giant Beethoven regarded him with admiration and respect for the depth of his learning and the subtlety and penetrative quality of his mind. That he was never a popular composer, in the common acceptation of the term, must be conceded; but this, in our opinion, is to be attributed to that peculiar mental bias which led him to muse alone and apart, rather than to any want of capacity, or even desire, to accommodate his thoughts to general appreciation. Although his music, for the most part, is of grave and serious character, his operas show that he could unbend his loftiness on occasions, and write with the utmost ease, and aim at nothing beyond simplicity. Elisa, Ali Baba, and Les Deux Journées abound in beauties calculated to strike the popular ear, and have recommended Cherubini's operas perhaps more than the deep meaning and elaborations of his grand, serious cogitations. But the wonder is that the dramatic compositions, grave or comic, of so profound a thinker and so great a master—in an age like the present, when, from the dearth of writers, revivals have all the force of novelties—should be overlooked or ignored altogether. We allude more immediately to France and England, where Cherubini's operas are seldom or never heard, since in Germany the great master figures prominently among popular composers. England may perhaps stand exculpated for her neglect, although Cherubini bequeathed her no mean memorial in the grand symphony he wrote expressly for the Philharmonic Society; but France, where the genius of Cherubini was fostered and matured, and where he laid down his life and found a grave, can find no excuse or palliation. Would it not be worth the while of our managers to turn their attention to the neglected works of the illustrious composer, who was the glory and wonder of his time? Les Deux Journées has been affirmed by those well capable of pronouncing a correct opinion, as the perfection of a comic opera, and Medea has elicited admiration and excited enthusiasm wherever it has been performed. Let us then recommend both these masterpieces to the consideration of Mr. Gye and Mr. E. T. Smith. It is time that some one would "say a word for poor" Cherubini. The Monday Popular Concerts gave him a powerful lift in the musical world last season. The frequenters of St. James's Hall were in ecstasies with one of his quartets. The Philharmonic Societies and the Musical Society of London make us acquainted with sundry of his overtures. It only remains to hear one of his operas. For this we must look to the manager of Her Majesty's Theatre or the manager of the Royal Italian Opera. We shall then have something more to say about Cherubini.

ANGUISH.

A STEP UPWARDS IN LIFE.—The Gray's Inn stall was exchanged for handsome chambers, and by the time that these looked as delightfully as possible, that the pictures were finally and tastefully hung, that the pianoforte was in admirable tune, and that the oak and velvet furniture left nothing to be desired, except the upholsterer's receipt, the susceptible Archibald discovered that to live as a gentleman meant to live with a lady, who, being his wife, could not be expected to live in chambers. So the pictures, pianoforte, oak and velvet, and Mrs. Vernon, were established in a charming house, not much too large at Craven Hill. All went delightfully, for Emmeline Vernon was an accomplished musician, and Archibald was just of the calibre of mind that dotes on music, and it was the pleasantest occupation in the world to sit with his pretty wife till two or three in the day singing duets, or hearing that divine thing of Mozart's. Vernon with his feet in slippers, elegantly worked by his bride, and in a velvet coat that gave the refined-looking man an appearance between that of an artist and of an Italian nobleman, as beheld in ancient portraits. The children came with their usual celerity, and it was not until Emmeline grew rather cross and cold about playing Mozart after disagreeable interviews with traders, that Archibald Vernon once more began to think that he really must buckle to work.—Shirley Brooks, in Once a Week.

M. RUBINSTEIN'S opera, Les Enfants des Landes, has been put in rehearsal at the Viennese Opera.

THE PRIVILEGE of building a new theatre in Vienna has just been granted to Baroness Pasqualeet. It is to bear her name.

SPOHR'S Stradivarius is to be sold by auction for the benefit of his heirs. The great master is said to have used it for half a century. One might have thought such a relic would be kept in the family as an heir-loom. Probably they prefer gold to notes.

The Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. — On Tuesday night Mr. Sims Reeves made his first appearance in public since the loss of his father deprived the theatre of his invaluable services. We constantly hear reflections made on the capriciousness of artists, and as in most cases these observations are totally unfounded, we are always glad of an opportunity to give full credit to those who do their very utmost to keep faith with the public. It ought to be made known that Mr. Sims Reeves has throughout the season strained every nerve in order to avoid disappointing his audience. During the run of Robin Hood he has contracted no other engagement; indeed, he has never once sung at the concerts at which he usually appears — as he was expected to do on the off-nights of Macfarren's opera — fearing lest the additional exertion might possibly prevent his doing full justice to the part he had undertaken to perform. Mr. Reeves has thus made real and tangible sacrifices for the sake of aiding the success of national opera, and this proof of self-denying devotion to his art will be fully appreciated by all. Certainly the warmth of the reception accorded to him last night seemed to express sympathy with the man as much as admiration of the artist. Mr. Sims Reeves was in splendid voice, the enforced rest having exerted an evidently beneficial influence, and he never sang with more expression and effect. "Thou art my own, my guiding star," was deliciously rendered and vehemently applauded, while the spirited drinking-song was given with immense vigour; it was, however, in the long and arduous scena in the prison that the exquisite taste and consummate skill in vocalisation of the great tenor were both most remarkably displayed. But we have dwelt at such length on Robin Hood that we need not recur to it; suffice it to say that Madame Lemmens-Sherrington sang so charmingly — although she was suffering from a severe attack of influenza — that the preparatory apology seemed needless; and that Madame Lemaire was as artistic, Mr. Santley as full-voiced and admirable, and Mr. Honey as comic as ever. Of the orchestra the praise must still be as restricted and qualified as usual; and of the chorus the less said the better.—Daily Telegraph.

The Theatres.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—The revival of Mr. Palgrave Simpson's Daddy Hardacre at this house, after its performance at Windsor, enables the public once more to appreciate to its full extent the genius of Mr. Robson, which for some time was confined to the delineation of merely farcical personages. This is the first great part of what is called "domestic interest" in which he ever appeared, and his acting in it is still pre-eminent as one of the most remarkable instances of characteristic impersonation ever witnessed on the stage. In the miser Daddy Hardacre, who is perhaps a more legitimate descendant of the Euclio of Plautus than of the Grandet of De Balzac, the most diverse peculiarities are brought together, and Mr. Robson not only grapples with them all, but brings them into the most perfect harmony. Daddy Hardacre is facetious, in his rough way, when he has the best of a bargain; his love for his daughter imparts an exceptional tenderness to his nature; his grief when he is robbed rises to a tragical demonstration of intense agony. Every one of these peculiarities is pursued to the minutest detail, and the chuckle which accompanies his dealings with his less astute neighbour, Jobling, is as effective in its way as the frenzy of rage with which he assails his too charitable daughter. But, although Mr. Robson's representation of Daddy Hardacre stands alone among the theatrical phenomena of the day, the general excellence with which the entire piece is played is too remarkable to pass observation. As the miser's daughter, devoted to her father, and only sinning from excess of kindliness, Miss Hughes acts with that appearance of gentleness and goodness which renders her one of the most valuable performers in domestic drama. Mr. George Cooke is, of course, at home as the village lawyer, one degree less sharp than the overreaching Daddy; and his nephew, the rustic beau, is endowed with all that eccentricity which Mr. H. Wigan knows so well how to bestow when he has to deal with a sketch of decided character. Mrs. Stevens thoroughly renders the hearty qualities of the old servant, and Mr. Walter Gordon is a satisfactory representative of the interesting cousin, who is deprived of the unamiable attributes with which he has been invested by De Balzac. There is not a defective place in the entire drama.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—Although, in representing those sympathetic twins who have been famous in London ever since Mr. Charles Kean presented the public with a version of Les Frères Corses, Mr. Fechter has not the same scope for his genius as when he delineated the enthusiastic and impassioned Ruy Blas, he makes us aquainted with a new form of his artistic skill. To define his conception of the characters, apart from his talent in producing those melodramatic effects which are so essential to the piece, we would say that it is based on a combination of the qualities proper to a rude state of society with those of a nature eminently susceptible of conventional polish. His Corsican is a Corsican heart and soul, with a love for the wild condition of his fatherland, but he is not without a feeling for a higher state of civilisation, and this is eminently shown when he reconciles the quarrelsome peasants, and appears as a true gentleman amid a fraternity of ruffians. Still his cultivation has not penetrated much below the surface, and when his passions are roused they speak out with a native frankness that distinguishes him from those who have been trained in great cities. Fancy a country gentleman of the old school placed in a metropolis, and you have an approximation to Mr. Fechter's idea of the Dei Franchi. The piece has been remodelled from the shape which it originally wore in Paris, and also in London, the incidents of the masked ball being transferred to the commencement, so as to introduce all the other events, both of the natural and supernatural classes. This arrangement, at the first glance, has in its favour the law of cause and effect, for the logical mind will be more easily satisfied by seeing a gentleman's ghost follow his decease than by seeing the ghost come first and the death afterwards. But then, on the other hand, it will be recollected that, contrary to dramatic precedent, the incidents in two acts of the Corsican Brothers are supposed to be not consecutive, but simultaneous, the spectre being less a posthumous ghost than a "wraith," and we may add that the old-fashioned plan had this advantage, that it interrupted the sequence of supernatural gloom with the fun and brilliancy of the Parisian carnival. The piece is generally well acted, and capitally put upon the stage, a new and effective dance being introduced in the masquerade scene; but we must regret that Mr. W. Lacy did not play his old part of Chateau Renaud. Mr. A. Harris is a lively and agreeable actor, but there is an obvious good-humour about him which recoils from the impersonation of the cold-blooded duellist.

MR. BALFE'S BIANCA.—Mr. Balfe's new opera is an unquestionable success. On Saturday night, at the third representation, a very crowded audience confirmed the favourable verdict which had been unanimously awarded on the Thursday previous, and the composer was again loudly summoned at the fall of the curtain. Having already glanced at the general merits of the performance, our remarks at present must be confined to a brief examination of the work itself.

The old German drama, by Zschokke, entitled Abällino, the origin of Monk Lewis's romance of The Bravo of Venice, and of Monk Lewis's play of Rugantino — both at one epoch the delight of our forefathers — is also the origin of Bianca, the Bravo's Bride. In how much Mr. Palgrave Simpson is indebted to the German original, in how much to the English adaptation, and in how much to his own invention, would take too long to examine, and indeed would scarcely repay the pains. Enough that he has manufactured an effective operatic libretto out of a subject once universally familiar, now almost universally forgotten. Mr. Simpson's Bravo (Mr. Harrison) is a gentleman of sufficient ingenuity to pass muster creditably for a considerable period as three different personages. His object is to win the heart of Bianca (Miss Louisa Pyne), daughter of the Duke of Milan (Mr. Alberto Lawrence)—the scene, for some not evident reason, being changed from Venice to Milan — and to accomplish that object he undergoes two successive formations. The bonâ-fide Duke of Ferrara, he has been selected by the Duke of Milan — against the wish of Bianca, who has a leaning towards some one else — as a son-in-law; but, anxious to obtain the goodwill of the young lady, who has never seen him, on the strength of his own personal merits rather than by the weight attaching to his rank and dignity, he appears at the Court of Milan as a young soldier, under the name of Odoardo, winning at one and the same time distinction in the Duke's armies and a place in the affections of Bianca. At the head of an expedition organised against the renowned brigand Fortespada (Abällino—Rugantino)—whose name, in consequence of many daring and successful escapades, inspires a kind of supernatural terror — he traces that worthy to his lair, and from Fortespada's dying words gleans information of a conspiracy, in which the bravo himself was to have taken part against the life of the Duke of Milan, who, together with his daughter, his ministers, and others connected with the Court, is to be assassinated at a certain place on a certain day. But, though Fortespada's aid was reckoned on as an important element of the plot, with the easy indifference to probability belonging to a particular class of romance, we are given to understand that his person is unknown to the heads and promoters of the conspiracy. Informed of this, Odoardo, passing himself off for the bravo, penetrates into the counsels of the conspirators, and prevails on them by threats of discovery to acknowledge him as leader, eventually frustrating their plans and handing them over to justice. The various and startling manœuvres by which the catastrophe is brought about, the lives of Bianca and her father saved, the heart of the lady won not merely for the soldier but for the bravo, and ultimately even for the dreaded Duke of Ferrara — much to the satisfaction of the high-minded ruler of Milan, whose objection to Odoardo is founded on scruples about birth and extraction — had best be witnessed. To recount them, step by step, would be a thankless task, while to view them, one after the other, through the attractive medium of Mr. Balfe's music, which scarcely for an instant allows the interest to sleep, is quite another matter. Suffice it, the audience, perfectly satisfied at the end that Odoardo, Fortespada, and the Duke of Ferrara are one and the same person, experience no surprise that the designing conspirators, the unsuspecting Duke of Milan, and the enamoured Bianca herself, should have been throughout so consistently deceived. In the last scene Mr. Harrison has only to perform a series of evolutions with the assistance of an accommodating cloak, which, according as it is assumed or laid aside, is allowed to stand for his credentials, and everybody accepts him for just what he pleases to declare himself,— Odoardo, Fortespada, or the Duke of Ferrara — which of the three he may find it convenient for the moment to impersonate. He has, however, subdued a bravo, baffled a conspiracy, rescued the state, won the hand of a princess, and afforded a popular composer a great many excellent opportunities of display; what more need be demanded of the hero of a romantic "libretto?"

Mr. Balfe has written more ambitiously in Bianca than usual, and, it must be added, with a proportionate degree of success. His first act is a closer approach to what is termed "grand opera" than anything from his pen with which we were previously acquainted. After a brilliant, if not very coherent, overture, the curtain rises upon an introduction admirably designed and full of genuine beauties. This comprises, among other things, a prayer—"To Thee above our hearts we raise" (with organ accompaniment)—remarkable for melody and grace, and an air with chorus —"The demon of darkness"—for Beppo (Mr. St. Albyn), the comic personage of the drama, who narrates the legend of Fortespada's diabolical birth in music alike vigorous and characteristic. Not less remarkable is the scene which ensues—the conference of the conspirators, the chiefs of whom, Count Malespina (Mr. H. Wharton), a thorough-paced villain, and Memmino, a bit of a coward (Mr. H. Corri), are effectively contrasted in the musical treatment. This scene, which emulates the declamatory breadth of Meyerbeer, contains an air of considerable merit for Malespina, the first and best part of which, "When cruel scorn and cold disdain," was omitted at the third performance, the quick movement only, "The vengeance cloud," being retained. The action of the first finale further developes the conspiracy, and introduces Fortespada, whose individuality here, as throughout the opera, is indicated and preserved with consummate skill. This finale is conducted in a masterly manner. Besides being thoroughly well knit, it includes one or two passages that stand out with vivid distinctness, and are remembered for themselves, independently of the framework that surrounds them. Instance the concerted piece where the conspirators swear never to rest until Milan is freed from its tyrant; and the drinking song, "Glorious wine," with chorus, with which Fortespada enlivens the ceremony —one of the most sparkling and exhilarating bacchanalians that modern opera has produced. The musical passage, too, which, whether the bravo is on the stage or not, illustrates, with more or less prominence, every hint at his personality, is here presented in extenso, and cannot fail to impress by its originality. Mr. Balfe has, perhaps, laid himself open to the charge of excess in his employment of this peculiar means of individualising his principal character (invented, if we are not mistaken, by Weber, who thus everywhere identifies Zamiel in his Der Freischütz); but the intention is good, and we are not disposed to criticise what, at the worst, may be arraigned as a stretch of consistency. At all events, in the first finale, often as it is alluded to, the Fortespada passage is never out of place.

The second act is shorter than the first, but hardly less interesting from a musical point of view. It opens with a delicious chorus for women's voices—"As slowly fades the light of day"—sung at the door of the cathedrals by the ladies of Bianca, who is about to perform her orisons in the interior of the sacred building. A duet for Bianca and Malespina—"Although with cold disdain" —contains several fine passages, the last movement being none the less agreeable on account of its slightly approximating to the manner of Verdi. The accompaniments to this offer some new and striking combinations; and it may be remarked en passant that in almost every scene of Bianca Mr. Balfe has zealously endeavoured to distinguish his orchestral arrangements by bold and suggestive colouring. If occasionally, as now and then with the stringed instruments, he may be accused of transgressing the conventional limits of experiment, in the majority of instances he is eminently successful. This onward tendency in a composer so unreservedly acknowledged that it is unnecessary for him, in order to insure continued acceptance, to deviate from the path he has hitherto been accustomed to tread, merits honourable acknowledgment. Another very happy example is revealed at the commencement of the second finale, when Fortespada, disguised as a beggar, solicits the aid of Bianca, whose life he subsequently preserves from the dagger of Michele, a hired assassin of Malespina. Here the combination of the tenor voice with the bass clarionet in the orchestra recals the scene of the pretended miracle in Meyerbeer's Prophète, of which, nevertheless, it is in no sense a plagiarism. The second finale includes other good things, among the rest a graceful phrase addressed by Fortespada to Bianca, after the death of Michele, by the hand of the assumed beggar, and the chorus of the "Gratias Agimus" from the chapel of the cathedral. "Look up, look up, my dearest," indeed, if it occupied a more isolated position, might aim at becoming a popular ballad. The whole finale is cleverly built, and although the Verdi-like coda is scarcely up to the mark of its more original precursor, at the end of Act I., it is always animated and dramatically effective.

The introduction to Act III. is a masterpiece of tuneful, light, and sparkling music. Zeffirina (Miss Thirlwall), Bianca's principal attendant, is preparing for a masque about to be held in the palace, and instructing groups of dancers in the parts they are destined to play. A comic vein is elicited by the co-operation of Beppo (Mr. St. Albyn), an emissary of the Duke of Ferrara (Fortespada), whose mission is to sound Zeffirina about the state of her mistress' affections, and who is compelled to ferret out the desired information while being drilled severely in a pas de deux set down for him to execute at the masque with Zeffirina herself. The stage effect is as ludicrous as the music is irresistible, and, coming immediately after so much that is serious and even gloomy, nothing can be more happy or to the purpose. The occasional interpolation here and elsewhere, however, of snatches from the chorus, "As slowly fades the light of day" (Act II.), has no evident meaning, and may be justly stigmatised as a musical non sequitur, —unlike a similar expedient already defended, which stamps the individuality of Fortespada. In the same scene Bianca sings a ballad—"'Twas he, my only thought"—for its catching melody and expressive character to be compared with the "Power of Love," which made the fortune of Satanella, and upon the orchestral accompaniments to which the composer has bestowed equal pains. The Duke of Milan's song, "Oh crown of power," bears a faint resemblance to one of the only real tunes in Herr Wagner's Tannhäuser; but we are loth to charge the composer of The Bohemian Girl with any intention of emulating so eccentric a model and must put the resemblance down for an unanticipated "coincidence." "From my childhood"—a somewhat laboured and spun out, though undoubtedly clever, duet, in which the Duke endeavours to mould the heart of Bianca to his wishes with respect to the Ferrara alliance—commences with a very original declamatory phrase; contains further on a passage unquestionably suggested by Verdi, in his Trovatore; includes another and even finer phrase of declamation, where Bianca pleads the cause of Odoardo—"His manly form, his beaming eye," &c.—and winds up with a quick movement, which, but for one or two somewhat uncouth transitions near the end would be unexceptionable. The third finale, embodying Fortespada's unexpected apparition before the Duke of Milan, his recognition by Bianca, and his sudden flight when just within the grasp of his baffled pursuers (described in the book as "tableau of confusion and consternation"), is ingeniously contrived, ably written, and full of animation. The response of Fortespada, however, to the contemptuous reproaches of the Duke —"'Tis not purple and gold that ennoble the man"—is so like "The fair land of Poland" (Bohemian Girl), both in sentiment and melodic outline, that the least practised ear can hardly fail to detect the plagiarism. Mr. Balfe may, of course, plead that he only repeats himself; and, as many will in all probability prefer the new version to the old (if only because it is new), the energetic outburst which reveals the patriotism of Thaddeus may have to give place, at least for a time, to a successor.

The fourth act opens with a grand scena for Bianca, the last movement of which—"A torrent roaming"—as florid, brilliant, and difficult to execute as the first—"Yes, I shall see him once again"—is unaffectedly expressive. A piece of very unequal merit comes next, comprising a duet for Bianca and Fortespada—"One only boon on earth I prized;" a ballad for the last named —"Once more upon the path of life," and a trio in which the Duke of Milan makes up the complement of singers. The duet is extremely pretty, and charmingly instrumented; the ballad opens promisingly, but does not fulfil its promise; the trio is dramatic and effective. As a whole, however, the undue length of this miniature trialogue is scarcely atoned for by the amount of musical interest it presents. The next scene has been considerably abridged since the first representation. This was, perhaps, inevitable, in order to bring the duration of the performance as nearly as possible within the limits of four hours; but some very fresh and charming music of the Auber cast has thus been necessarily relinquished, the pretty chorus, "While twinkling stars," and the not very lively ballad of Malespina, "Chiefs on might relying"—only the last verse of that, by the way—being all that remains of the original structure—with which, if we do not greatly err, the composer himself must have been well pleased. The last finale opens with some capital ballet music, including a galop (the lively and picturesque arrangement of which, by M. Pettit, has been noticed) set to a tune once heard not easily forgotten. It was said of Auber's Gustave III.—"At least there is a galop in it;" and as much may be remarked of Mr. Balfe's Bianca—which, when it is remembered what a crowd of beautiful things, besides the famous galop, are contained in the masterpiece of the French musician, will not be misconstrued into a sneer. Another feature of this last finale—less solidly constructed, by the way, than the others (in accordance with a custom only disregarded as a general rule in the scores of Mozart, Beethoven, and Cherubini)—is the chorus, "Seize him! seize him!" occurring just after Mr. Harrison, as Fortespada, has accomplished his first metamorphosis with the cloak, a chorus marked undoubtedly by vigorous dramatic expression, but apparently modelled after (without plagiarising from) the "Guerra! Guerra!" of Bellini's Norma. The last concerted piece for the principal characters, immediately preceding the betrayal of the conspirators by Fortespada, is in keeping, if not startlingly new; the last two phrases of recitation put into the mouth of Fortespada, and the words of which, as affording a sort of bird's-eye view of the imaginary bravo's self-imposed mission, we subjoin:—

"The bravo-band I crush'd. Fate led me then,
Where Fortespada, in his brigand den,
On death-bed lay, and with his dying breath
Confess'd the foul conspiracy of death.
As bravo, then, disguis'd, I sought to learn
The traitors' plans, and thus their schemes o'erturn;

(pointing out the conspirators)

I swore my fate to bind to her alone,
Whose heart of love, unconscious of my throne,
Should love me for myself—whate'er betide—
And now my bride I've won—the Bravo's Bride;"

(when, after the final cloak-transformation, Fortespada, as Duke of Ferrara, claims the hand of Bianca), are declamatory, if nothing more; while the last piece for Bianca, a so-called "rondo-finale,"—

"What sunshine bright,
Through murky night,
Upon my wakening soul doth glide!
What heavenly joy,
Without alloy,
To own myself the Bravo's Bride!"

is a tuneful, sparkling, and brillant display (original to boot—something uncommon in a "rondo-finale") for the heroine of the opera, enough to make the fame and fortune of a "prima donna" capable, like Miss Louisa Pyne, of executing it to absolute perfection.

From the foregoing it will be concluded that in our opinion Mr. Balfe's reputation is likely to be increased rather than diminished by his Bianca. The recent example of honourable emulation has clearly not been lost upon him. The genuine reception accorded to Lurline and Robin Hood, and the revival of the Night Dancers, followed up with another success achieved by the most fertile of our dramatic composers, looks well for the future. National opera seems now to have a chance of being established on a firmer basis than it ever previously reposed on. The musical public will anticipate with interest Mr. Wallace's forthcoming Amber Witch, Mr. Macfarren's Sleeper Awakened (which was surely never originally intended for the concert-room), Mr. Frank Mori's Lambert Simnel, Mr. Benedict's Esmeralda, and last, not least, Mr. Howard Glover's Ruy Blas—all of which are promised, and from all of which great things are anticipated. Formerly an opera—by which is not intended a mere ballad opera,—from the pen of an English composer, was regarded in some sort as a phenomenon; but it would appear from what is now on hand that our musicians have progressed with the times.—Times.

Provincial.

A musical phenomenon has appeared in BRIGHTON in the person of Mlle. Carlottina Badia, aged four years, and—if we are to accept the verdict of the local authorities as correct—with extraordinary success. This young sapling of the tree of art is daughter to Signor and Mad. Badia, whom we have heard playing and singing respectively at the Crystal Palace Concerts last season. Our readers are well aware that we put no faith whatsoever in the forcing system, which we have always found in the animal economy to be deleterious, if not entirely ruinous. We have followed the career of numerous phenomenons, and invariably found they never arrived at greatness, in most instances, indeed, sinking into utter incompetence. Morally and physically speaking, a child of four years old cannot escape the effects of rigid training, but must succumb either to toil or thought. The pity is that the parents will not wait for the young and promising bud to put forth its blossoms, but must have recourse to all kinds of didactic guanos to urge it into premature growth. The leaves look green, the flowers expand, the colours seem bright; but, alas! it is at the expense of life and health. Nature, just mother, frowns at those who despise her gentle and sure ordinances, and will not interfere to save the poor tortured babe who has been kidnapped from her supervision. In speaking thus, we say nothing directly regarding Miss Carlottina Badia, but argue from example, that no amount of talent can justify the parents in bringing the child before the public. What the Brighton public thinks of the child may perhaps be gathered from the following notice taken from the Brighton Guardian:—

"The principal novelty of the soirée was the appearance of the child, Carlottina Badia, whose advent had exalted her into something approaching a 'phenomenon.' She is an interesting child, and perhaps may well lay claim to some extraordinary capabilities when she stands beside a piano, to the key-board of which her head hardly reaches, for the purpose of performing operatic solos before a fashionable audience.

She had to be lifted on to the platform, and when there, paternal encouragement had to be given to her before she would begin. The audience could not be anything else than sympathetic, and the little lady, on her second essay, got off into 'La donna e mobile' in sparkling style. She sang it most correctly, and even somewhat artistically. The latter quality was, however, more apparent in 'Di quell' amor,' from La Traviata, her second song, which she sang immediately after the first. During this performance her imitations (we hope the word will be forgiven; it is the most correct one occurring to us) of the usual attitudes adopted by stage and platform singers drew forth loud laughter and applause. When she retired, the audience would fain have further tested her musical attainments, but she declined the honour with an orthodox curtsey, thus still further increasing the good opinions she had gained. Her voice has that beautiful freshness only found in a first-class child's voice, and the simple efforts of which possess an inexpressible power of charming the ear, even when one would turn uninterested from the laboured roulades of a prima donna. Mixed opinions are held as to the advisability of introducing children in this way at such a tender age; but, apart from this, the appearance of Carlottina Badia on the present occasion seemed to give unmixed gratification to the audience."

There is also a glowing eulogium in the Brighton Gazette, so that the success of the "phenomenon" can hardly be doubted.—The Caledonian Mercury informs us that Mr. Howard Glover's cantata, Tam O'Shanter, has been produced at the Popular Concerts, given at the Music Hall, Edinburgh, with eminent success, in spite of a very indifferent performance. As its reception, according to the writer, "is likely to ensure its repetition at an early period," it is to be hoped a little more pains will be taken with the rehearsals. The nationality of the Scotch should be enlisted in the cause. The tenor music, written especially for Mr. Sims Reeves, does not appear to have fallen into inefficient hands in Mr. Kennedy, whose singing and acting (?) are much praised. At the Saturday Evening Concerts, the sixpenny public was last week tested with Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, a classical overture, and a fugue on the organ, with most satisfactory results. The audience were most attentive and reverend, and applauded with discrimination. That the "land o' cakes" was also the "land of song" we never doubted.—The first concert of the Birmingham Musical Union is thus alluded to in the Birmingham Journal:—The first concert of the present series took place at Dee's Hotel, and was well calculated to maintain the prestige of these enjoyable gatherings. The attendance was numerous, although scarcely attaining the average of previous years. The performers were Miss Armstrong (vocalist), Messrs. H. and G. Hayward (violins), Mr. R. Blagrove (viola), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Messrs. Duchemin and Flavell (pianists). The vocal selections, consisting of Blumenthal's song, "The Orphan," and Weber's "When the thorn," were rendered by Miss Armstrong with characteristic sweetness, but a perceptible deficiency of expressive power. Mr. Duchemin played one of Heller's "Wanderstunden," and a capriccio by the same master, on a theme of Schubert, and Signor Piatti a violoncello fantasia on popular airs. Both gentlemen experienced a hearty reception. The selection embraced Beethoven's instrumental quartet, No. 3 (Op. 18), executed by Messrs. H. and G. Hayward, R. Blagrove, and Signor Piatti; Mozart's quartet, No. 2, in E flat, pianoforte and strings, and Mendelssohn's second grand trio, for pianoforte and strings, (Op. 66), by Messrs. Duchemin, Hayward, and Signor Piatti, may be described as the most remarkable performance of the concert.—Devonshire has been more than musical of late. Miss Arabella Goddard and the English Glee and Madrigal Society have been delighting the amateurs of Devonport, Torquay, Plymouth, and Exeter with a series of concerts (two at Exeter), all of which were well attended; all of which went off brilliantly, and as a specimen of the style of which on each successive occasion the following programme may suffice:—

Part I. — Quintet, "Come see what pleasures" (Elliott), by the Union. Glee (four voices), "Discord, dire sister" (S. Webbe), by the Union. Song, "The voice that we love" (S. Glover), Mrs. Lockey. Pianoforte Solo, "Grand Sonata" in F. Major, No. 2, Op. 10 (Beethoven), Miss Arabella Goddard. Quintet, "Blest pair of Sirens" (S. Smith), by the Union. Four Part Song, "The hunt is up" (Hatton), by the Union. Recitative and Air, "Genevieve" (Hatton), Mr. Montem Smith. Pianoforte Solo, "Songs without words," by particular desire (Mendelssohn), Miss Arabella Goddard. Quintet, "To my lute" (R. Cooke), by the Union.

Part II. — Quintet, "Blow, gentle gales" (Bishop), by the Union. Song, "True love" (Macfarren), Miss Banks. Quintet, "Mark'd you her eye" (Spofforth), by the Union. Song, "The maid I love" (J. L. Hatton), Mr. Lockey. Pianoforte Solo, Grand Fantasia, on the Quartet from Il Rigoletto, first time of performance (Listz), Miss A. Goddard. Duet, "The exile's home" (Romagnesi), Mr. and Mrs. Lockey. Glee (four voices), "Here in cool grot" (Mornington), by the Union. Song, "The blacksmith's son" (Hatton), Mr. Winn. Glee (four voices), "Lo, the day's champion" (Bishop), by the Union. Catch (three voices), "Ah! how Sophia" (Dr. Callcott), by the Union.

Mr. Ashe was, as usual, the entrepreneur, and on Monday evening, at the first concert (of which the foregoing was the programme), a crowded and fashionable audience was attracted to the Royal Public Rooms, Exeter, which presented, according to the Exeter Western Times, a brilliant appearance. The following is an extract from the article published by that paper:—

The vocalists included Mrs. Lockey, Miss Banks, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. Winn, and Mr. Foster, but the greatest attraction, and sole instrumentalist, was Miss Arabella Goddard, the first of English pianistes. Mr. Lockey was also to have been present, but was prevented by illness, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper was his substitute. The first two glees were warmly applauded, Mrs. Lockey sang Glover's song very sweetly, and the correct style, and clear enunciation of this charming vocalist must have been most pleasing to the refined ear. Miss Arabella Goddard, on entering, met with a cordial greeting, and her pianoforte solo was a wonderful piece of execution. The quintet was rendered by the Union with thrilling effect, and met with an encore which was readily conceded. Mr. Hatton's "The hunt is up," was given briskly, and with effect. The same composer's ballad of "Genevieve" was a perfect success in the hands of Mr. Montem Smith for whom it was expressly composed. Miss Arabella Goddard riveted the feelings of her audience on Mendelssohn's expressive "Songs without words," which were warmly applauded. The glee "To my lute" was given with exquisite sweetness by the "Union." The quintet "Blow gentle gales," met with a spontaneous encore. Miss Banks, who possesses a delightful soprano voice, gave Macfarren's exquisite "True love" with great taste and feeling. The glee, "Mark'd you her eye," was the least successful in the programme. Mr. Lockey being absent, the song set down for him was passed over, and Miss Arabella Goddard performed her grand fantasia (Liszt's Rigoletto) with matchless power, ease, and delicacy of touch. The rapidity and brilliancy of execution created a furor, and an encore was inevitable. The pianiste returned and treated the audience to the ever favourite "Home, sweet home," by Thalberg, which was loudly applauded. Mr. Wilbye Cooper, who gave a song in lieu of Mr. Lockey, and Mrs. Lockey and Mr. M. Smith in "The exile's home," and the Union in "Here in cool grot," were all received with much applause, while "The blacksmith's son," by Mr. Winn, sung with great spirit, received an encore. The concert closed with "God save the Queen," by the Union. The performers arrived at Exeter by the down express on the South-Western Railway, and had had an uncomfortable journey. Owing to the overflow at Coombe Water, the train was delayed a couple of hours, and did not reach Exeter till six o'clock, just two hours before the commencement of the concert. On Friday there were two concerts at Exeter, one in the morning at half-past one, and the second in the evening. Both were well attended, and we trust that the result may induce Mr. Ashe to treat the city and neighbourhood to a repetition of such admirable concerts in due season. It may be remarked that a more classical tone was given to some of the concerts by the introduction alternately of Beethoven's admirable sonatas in C sharp minor (Moonlight), and in F major (Op. 10), played to perfection by Miss Arabella Goddard, and thoroughly appreciated by the audience.

A correspondent from Gloucester sends us an account of the first concert of the Philharmonic Society, which is far too long for insertion. The programme indicated a feebleness on the part of the directors not easy to be accounted for. The performance of the first movement only of a symphony is a bad example set by an important institution. Miss Clari Fraser, the solo vocalist, acquitted herself admirably, singing "Vedrai carino," "Where the bee sucks," and the ballad from Lurline, "Sweet spirit, hear my prayer," in her most charming manner. Our correspondent writes warmly of the young lady's efforts, and says she was the real attraction of the concert.

HERR BECKER.—Our readers are doubtless aware that, in consequence of an unfortunate and vexatious accident, we are deprived for a time of the presence of one of our most welcome musical guests, the excellent violinist, Herr Becker. This accomplished artist has been unfortunately suffering so severely from the effects of this accident (the snapping of a string, which struck, though not, it is apprehended, seriously injured, one eye) as to have been prevented from fulfilling several public engagements, and to render it prudent for him to abstain from playing altogether for a while. He has therefore left England for the purpose of spending a short time at his residence in Strasbourg, and reckons upon returning to London towards the end of January.

FUNERAL OF RELLSTAB, THE CRITIC.—Berlin, December 2.—The funeral of Ludwig Rellstab, who was well known in the literary and artistic world, took place yesterday, and was attended by a vast number of eminent men, representing the arts and sciences and literature. The deceased was not less renowned for his ability as a musical critic than for the various services he had rendered society by his exertions to promote useful works, and especially for the part he took in the question as to how Prussia might be best furnished with a railway system some years since. Among the mourners at the funeral, science was represented by Professor Bockh; art, by the General Musical Director, M. Meyerbeer; the public institutes, by the Intendant-General von Hulfen; the press, by the chief editors of two of the Berlin papers; and there was besides a great concourse of public men and officials of all grades. The procession was of immense length, and comprised the members of several choral societies and the bands of a dragoon regiment and of the Cuirassiers of the Guard, who at intervals along the route sang and played solemn music, and again at the interment, which took place at St. Peter's Cemetery.

CHRISTMAS DANCE MUSIC.

Illustrated by BRANDARD and PACKER, in Colours, published by

BOOSEY AND SONS,

HOLLES STREET.

Laurent's Bianca Waltzes.
Laurent's Bianca Quadrilles.
Laurent's Bianca Polka.
Laurent's Bianca Galop.
Laurent's Spring Buds' Waltzes.
Laurent's Margaretta Waltz.
Laurent's Christmas Waits Quadrille.
Laurent's Daisy Waltz.
Burckhardt's Ramsgate Sands Quadrille.
Burckhardt's Serpentine Quadrille.
Burckhardt's New Year's Quadrille.
Burckhardt's Knickerbocker's Polka.
Burckhardt's Bal Masque Quadrille.
Marriott's Waterfall Galop.
Marriott's Colleen Bawn Waltz.
Marriott's Woman in White Waltz.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147.—May now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

BOOSEY AND SONS'

CHEAP INSTRUMENTAL WORKS.

Each arranged by the most distinguished Master of the Instrument.

TUTORS.

Boosey's Shilling Pianoforte Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Harmonium Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Violin Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Cornet Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Flute Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Concertina Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling German Concertina Tutor.
Boosey's Shilling Singing Tutor.

VIOLIN.

Boosey's 100 Dances. (First Series.) 1s.
Boosey's 100 Dances. (Second Series.) 1s.
Boosey's 100 Reels and Country Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Popular Ballads. 1s.
Boosey's 100 German Waltzes. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies. 1s.
Boosey's 10 Standard Overtures. 1s.
Boosey's Edition of De Beriot's Airs. 1s.
Boosey's Edition of Kreutzer's Studies. 1s. 6d.
Boosey's Edition of Rode's Studies. 1s. 6d.
Boosey's Edition of Fiorillo's Studies. 1s. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Songs. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Country Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Operatic Airs. 6d.
Boosey's Complete Operas (23) each 1s.

FLUTE.

Boosey's 100 Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Exercises and Studies. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Operatic Airs. 6d.
Boosey's Complete Operas, each 1s.

CORNET-A-PISTONS.

Boosey's 100 Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Operatic Airs. 1s.
Boosey's 25 Duets. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Operatic Airs. 6d.

CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Sacred Melodies. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Popular Melodies. 1s.
Boosey's 100 Dances. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Sacred Melodies. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Secular Melodies. 6d.
Boosey's 50 Dances. 6d.

GERMAN CONCERTINA.

Boosey's 100 Dances and Songs. 1s.
Boosey's 50 Dances and Songs. 1s.

NOTICE.—Boosey and Son's Editions must, in every case, be ordered, as other works have been arranged by persons totally unacquainted with the above Instruments.

BOOSEY & SONS, 28, HOLLES STREET.

BALFE'S NEW OPERA,

BIANCA,

THE BRAVO'S BRIDE,

AS PERFORMED WITH IMMENSE SUCCESS AT THE ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"An unquestionable success."—Times.

"It contains melodies not only beautiful, but strikingly original."—Daily News.

"This last work is beyond comparison Mr. Balfe's best."—Daily Telegraph.

"It is clever, gay, full of motion, and, above all, full of melody."—Athenæum.

"Bianca is the most perfect and beautiful of all Balfe's operas."—News of the World.

VOCAL MUSIC.

	s.	d.
'TWAS HE MY ONLY THOUGHT. Ballad. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	0
"In vain I strove"
YES, I SHALL SEE HIM ONCE AGAIN (Song) with Cabaletta } Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	3	0
AS TORRENT ROAMING O'ER THE HEIGHT }
WHAT SUNSHINE BRIGHT. Rondo Finale. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	6
MY CHILDHOOD'S DAYS. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE.	2	0
ONE, TWO, THREE. Song from the Minuet Scene. Sung by MISS THIRLWALL	3	0
FROM MY CHILDHOOD DIDST THOU PRAY. Duettino. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE	2	6
ALTHOUGH WITH COLD DISDAIN. Duet. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. WHARTON	3	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song (with Chorus). Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	3	0
ONCE MORE UPON THE PATH OF LIFE. Ballad. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	6
'TIS NOT PURPLE AND GOLD THAT ENNOBLE THE MAN. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GOLD RULES THE WORLD. Song. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
OH! CROWN OF POWER. Song. Sung by MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE	2	0

 The Concerted and other remaining portion of the Vocal Music is nearly ready.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

	s.	d.
The Overture, arranged as a Duet by the Composer.	6	0
The Favourite Airs, arranged by NORDMANN as Solos and Duets, Three Books . . . each 5*s.* &	6	0
Brinley Richards. Three Gems . . each	3	0
Kuhe's Fantasie Brillante	4	0
Kuhe's Grand Galop di Bravura	4	0
Oury's (Madame) Grande Fantasie	4	0
Berger's (E.) Fantasie de Salon	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Quadrille. Illustrated by Brandard	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Valse. Illustrated by Brandard .	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Polka. Illustrated in Colours .	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Galop. Illustrated in Colours .	3	0
Nordmann's Four Favourite Melodies (Arranged for Beginners on the Pianoforte) . . . each	1	0

 Numerous Arrangements for Pianoforte and other Instruments are in hand, and will be published immediately.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, December 15, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 51 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. / Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) / Vocal Classes	Dr. TENDALL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,
Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,
Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 20 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

51

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR and MAD. FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

FLUTE, GUITAR, and CONCERTINA.—LESSONS by Mr. and Mad. R. SIDNEY PRATTEN, at 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W., where may be had the whole of their publications for the above instruments, consisting of nearly 300 Pieces, vocal and instrumental.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and Two Day Performances on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—A TESTIMONIAL CONCERT for Mr. HULLAH, under the patronage of the Right Honourable the EARL of CARLISLE, K.G., Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, the Right Honourable W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Noblemen and Gentlemen of the "Hullah Testimonial" Committee will be given by the Members of the first division of Mr. Henken's Choral Association, on Monday Evening, the 31st December, at which eminent artists will assist.

Communications to be addressed to the Hon. Secretary to Council,
A. L. BAXTER,
2 Cumberland Villas, Stoke Newington.

Just Published,

BREAK! BREAK! BREAK! A Song—words by ALFRED TENNYSON, Esq., Music by E. BUNNETT, Mus. Bac. Price 2s. 6d.
London: Leader & Cock, 63 New Bond Street.

"The well-known and beautiful stanzas of the poet-laureate, which will at once be suggested by the thrice reiterated "Break," have frequently been set, with more or less felicity, but not often with such real and unaffected expression as by Mr. Bunnett, who, in the present instance, shows himself worthy to be a bachelor of the same university where Sterndale Bennett holds the rank of professor."—Musical World.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method for acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214, Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81, Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where pupils are also received.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147.—May now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

TO HARMONIUM TUNERS.—Wanted a good HARMONIUM TUNER.—Apply to Boosey and Sons, 24 Holles Street.

BALFE'S NEW OPERA,

BIANCA,

THE BRAVO'S BRIDE,

AS PERFORMED WITH IMMENSE SUCCESS AT THE ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"An unquestionable success."—Times.

"It contains melodies not only beautiful, but strikingly original."—Daily News.

"This last work is beyond comparison Mr. Balfe's best."—Daily Telegraph.

"It is clever, gay, full of motion, and, above all, full of melody."—Athenæum.

"Bianca is the most perfect and beautiful of all Balfe's operas."—News of the World.

VOCAL MUSIC.

	s.	d.
'TWAS HE MY ONLY THOUGHT. Ballad. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	0
"In vain I strove"
YES, I SHALL SEE HIM ONCE AGAIN (Song) with Cabaletta AS TORRENT ROAMING O'ER THE HEIGHT } Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	3	0
WHAT SUNSHINE BRIGHT. Rondo Finale. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	6
MY CHILDHOOD'S DAYS. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE.	2	0
ONE, TWO, THREE. Song from the Minuet Scene. Sung by MISS THIRLWALL	3	0
FROM MY CHILDHOOD DIDST THOU PRAY. Duettino. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE }	2	6
ALTHOUGH WITH COLD DISDAIN. Duet. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. WHARTON	3	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song (with Chorus). Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	3	0
ONCE MORE UPON THE PATH OF LIFE. Ballad. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	6
'TIS NOT PURPLE AND GOLD THAT ENNOBLE THE MAN. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GOLD RULES THE WORLD. Song. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
OH! CROWN OF POWER. Song. Sung by MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE	2	0

 The Concerted and other remaining portion of the Vocal Music is nearly ready.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

	s.	d.
The Overture, arranged as a Duet by the Composer.	6	0
The Favourite Airs, arranged by NORDMANN as Solos and Duets, Three Books . . . each 5*s.* &	6	0
Brinley Richards. Three Gems . . each	3	0
Kuhe's Fantasie Brillante	4	0
Kuhe's Grand Galop di Bravura	4	0
Oury's (Madame) Grande Fantasie	4	0
Berger's (E.) Fantasie de Salon	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Quadrille. Illustrated by Brandard	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Valse. Illustrated by Brandard	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Polka. Illustrated in Colours	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Galop. Illustrated in Colours	3	0
Nordmann's Four Favourite Melodies (Arranged for Beginners on the Pianoforte) . . . each	1	0

 Numerous Arrangements for Pianoforte and other Instruments are in hand, and will be published immediately.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, December 15, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 51 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his
ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL
For the Training of Masters to conduct
CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC
For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) Vocal Classes	Dr. TENDALL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 20 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

51

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR and MAD. FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

FLUTE, GUITAR, and CONCERTINA.—LESSONS by Mr. and Mad. R. SIDNEY PRATTEN, at 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W., where may be had the whole of their publications for the above instruments, consisting of nearly 300 Pieces, vocal and instrumental.

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening, C. H. Goumod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and Two Day Performances on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—A TESTIMONIAL CONCERT for Mr. HULLAH, under the patronage of the Right Honourable the EARL of CARLISLE, K.G., Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, the Right Honourable W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Noblemen and Gentlemen of the "Hullah Testimonial" Committee will be given by the Members of the first division of Mr. Henken's Choral Association, on Monday Evening, the 31st December, at which eminent artists will assist.

Communications to be addressed to the Hon. Secretary to Council,
A. L. BAXTER,
2 Cumberland Villas, Stoke Newington.

Just Published,

BREAK! BREAK! BREAK! A Song—words by ALFRED TENNYSON, Esq., Music by R. BUNNETT, Mus. Bac. Price 2s. 6d.
London: Leader & Cock, 63 New Bond Street.

"The well-known and beautiful stanzas of the poet-laureate, which will at once be suggested by the thrice reiterated "Break," have frequently been set, with more or less felicity, but not often with such real and unaffected expression as by Mr. Bunnett, who, in the present instance, shows himself worthy to be a bachelor of the same university where Sterndale Bennett holds the rank of professor."—Musical World.

WALLWORTH'S ART OF SINGING. Second Edition, just out, full music size, price 7s. A new and modern method for cultivating the Voice, and for gaining a perfect vocalisation—a practical work—Contains 35 pages of music. With a true method for acquiring the Shake, now for the first time introduced in a Singing Tutor. By T. A. WALLWORTH, Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.

Published by A. W. Hammond (late Jullien), 214, Regent Street; and may also be had of the Author at his residence, 81, Park Street, Grosvenor Square, W., where pupils are also received.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147.—May now be had upon application to the Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

TO HARMONIUM TUNERS.—Wanted a good HARMONIUM TUNER.—Apply to Boosey and Sons, 24 Holles Street.

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 3s.), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above popular Neapolitan melody, specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the above arrangement for that purpose.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W. (Sung also with distinguished success, and invariably encored, by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, (with Captain Morton Price) at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.; where "I love you" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

"GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d. London: published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

The day, pretty darling, draws near to its close,
Come, cease from your play, on your pillow repose,
You peep from the cradle still laughing and bright,
Kind angels for ever preserve you, good night.

With freedom from sorrow, dear child, you are blest,
To you a pure heaven is your fond mother's breast;
Wild passion some day will your happiness blight,
Kind angels preserve you, my darling, good night.

Ah! happy is he who can slumber like you,
Be ever, dear child, to your innocence true,
The righteous are watched by the spirits of light,
Who guard them while sleeping, my darling, good night.

"Few songs of modern days have achieved a more decided or better merited success than Herr Reichardt's charming lied, "Thou art so near and yet so far," which has for the last two years been the delight of all concert-goers and drawing-room vocalists of more than ordinary pretensions. Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have just published a new composition, from the same original and elegant pen, entitled "Good Night" (à cradle song). The words are exquisitely simple and unaffected, being the address of a mother to her sleeping babe; and it is but justice to Herr Reichardt to say that he has wedded an exquisite domestic poem to a most graceful, unaffected melody, which breathes the very spirit of maternal tenderness. The song, which is written for a tenor voice—the composer being, as our readers know, one of the first of living German vocalists—is in the key of F major; and to amateurs of taste we can cordially recommend "The Cradle Song" as a composition worthy of their attention."—Liverpool Mail.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline;
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone.
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. Weiss.

The custom of watching armour in church was a religious duty imposed upon knights who used to consume whole nights in prayer to some saint whom they chose as their patron.

Sir Neville spurr'd his gallant grey,
And bled him on his lonely way;
But ere he from the saddle sprung,
The abbey's midnight chimes had rung.

He doffed his armour, whose fair sheen
The stains of battle ne'er had seen;
And said, "Heav'n send thee I may be,
A worthy son of chivalry."

In hours when bright remembrance came
Athwart his memory like a flame,
A crimson scarf was given to tell,
Of one who loved Sir Neville well.

The gift was fondly cherished yet,
And while his burning glance it met,
He sighing said, "Be thou to me
The beacon star of victory."

Sir Neville kept his vigil lone,
Till the matin star had come and gone,
Then donned his armour and away,
He sped him on his gallant grey.

In many a land on fields of fame,
The watchword was Sir Neville's name.
Where fell the bravest, there fell he,
Fighting for love and chivalry.

The above popular and romantic ballad, now being sung everywhere with the greatest success by Mr. Weiss, is just published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

In a leafy garden, 'neath the evening star,
Hand in hand they wander, they that lovers are.
In the west a gleaming, where the sun went down,
In the east a splendeur from eve's brightning crown;
Gloom beneath the branches, odours in the air,
Happy are the lovers wandering slowly there.

Night hath many voices, none to him so dear
As the low-toned whispers dying on his ear;
Night hath dim revealings, none for him so high,
As the true love beaming in that soft dark eye;
In a summer garden, 'neath the evening star,
Ever will they wander, they that lovers are.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"MAY."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

I hail thee, May,
Midst smiles so gay,
And song and sunny hours;
'Tis sweet to stray
At close of day
To cull thy daisy flowers.

'Tis sweet to tread
The chosen bed
Of daisies bright and fair,
And hear the song
Which floats along
From feather'd warblers near.

Then while I live
I'll ever give
A welcome to thee, May,
For thou art queen,
Of fairest green,
Oh! smiling, lovely May.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC by HENRY SMART.—"Fugue in E minor," from Handel's "Lessons." Arranged for the Organ by HENRY SMART, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STIRLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROUSE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PETS OF THE PARTERRE."

This world is a garden, and women I'll prove,
Are the flowers that surround us wherever we rove,
The blooming and blushing, the sad and the gay,
All beauties combined in dear nature's bouquet.

London: Published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq., is just published price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

Dec. 6, 1860.

At last the long-talked of new ballet, due to the invention of the celebrated ex danseuse Mad. Taglioni—Le Papillon, as it is called, —has emerged from its chrysalis state, and expanded its bright wings before an admiring multitude. Never in the annals of insect life was butterfly doomed to more tribulations than the heroine of this pantomimic drama, who, by the way, is no butterfly at all, but a beautiful human being of the female sex. Some account of the story may interest your readers, especially as the new ballet will no doubt be mounted on one or other of your great operatic stages—perhaps on both. The scene is in Circassia. Farfalla is a charming young creature in the service of the wicked fairy Hamza, of whom the young prince Djalma, nephew of the Emir Ismael Beg, grows enamoured. She thus becomes the rival of the fiery Hamza, who employs her supernatural powers against her. By a wave of her wand, she changes her into a butterfly, in which shape Farfalla is captured by the prince, who, with the cruel indifference of a Kirby or a Spence, pins her up against the bark of an oak tree. Immediately, by an optical device of the most charming effect, the butterfly is transfigured, and, detaching herself from the tree, is seen to sail through the forest amidst a swarm of winged sisters. Djalma recognises the young girl with whom he had fallen in love, and hastens in pursuit of her, but the wicked fairy again intervenes with her magic wand, and entangles the butterfly in a net. A woodman however succeeds in robbing the old fairy of her wand, and Farfalla is thus delivered from her captivity, while Hamza is herself caught in her own trap. The captive fairy is brought before the Emir Ismael, who has a long and terrible reckoning to settle with her. She it was who years ago had carried off his beloved daughter, and that daughter is Farfalla herself. Hamza is frightened by the threats of the Emir, and as she has recovered her magic wand, she promises to restore his daughter to him. Accordingly, Farfalla is presently seen preceded by a brilliant procession, and seated in a palanquin. Ismael is transported with joy, and presents his daughter to Djalma, whose bride he had destined her to be. Djalma at first rejects the offer, but recognising Farfalla, he throws himself at the feet of his cousin. Just as he is about to imprint a kiss on the cheek of his betrothed, Hamza steps between them and intercepts the kiss to her own advantage. At the same instant her wrinkles, hoary locks, and decrepid figure vanish, and she appears dazzling with youth, beauty, and magnificent attire. Farfalla resumes her butterfly shape and flutters away, while the Prince falls down in a swoon, fascinated by the magnetic glance of Hamza, who strikes the earth with her wand, and transports herself with him to her enchanted garden. Djalma on awaking, imagines he has been dreaming, and while he is gazing in wonder around him, he hears a slight rustling as of wings, and beholds Farfalla approaching him as she hovers above a bed of flowers. He seizes her and places her in safety in the midst of a cluster of roses. Hamza reappears surrounded by a brilliant retinue, and preceded by a lovely child bearing a lighted torch,—the torch of hymen. The light attracts the butterfly; she flutters restlessly round it, and at last burns her wings. Immediately the spell is broken. The magic wand of the fairy is shattered in her grasp, and Farfalla resumes the form of a lovely maid, to the great joy of the prince, of his uncle, and in fact of all Circassia.

Mlle. Emma Livry, on whom the filmy mantle of the renowned Taglioni has airily descended, plays the heroine of this graceful fiction, and has completely fulfilled the highly-wrought expectations of the public. The marvellous grace and agility with which she sustains her butterfly attributes are really admirable. The air seems her natural element, and when she touches the earth, it is only to bound up from it with renewed buoyancy. Mlle. Louise Marquet distinguished herself not a little also as the fairy Hamza. To veil her natural gifts under the semblance of age and decrepitude, must have been a mortifying task, but she amply repaid herself in the second act by appearing twice as radiant with youth and beauty, as if her charms had never suffered the temporary eclipse. M. Jacques Offenbach's music is graceful, lively and rhythmical, as ballet music should be. The melodies are of the popular and catching sort, and one air in particular, that of the Valse des Rayons, made a vivid impression, and is destined no doubt to be done to death by wandering organs. Mlle. Livry was enthusiastically called for at the fall of the curtain, and appeared leading by the hand her theatrical sponsor, Mad. Taglioni, the once adored executant and now ingenious inventress of ballets. The Emperor was present on the first night, and seemed gravely to enjoy the performance. By the way the recent ministerial changes which have placed Count Walewski in the position of M. Fould, also invest him with the control of the Imperial Opera. This is a curious conglobulation of attributes, to concert measures of imperial policy with the head of the state, and dispose of the destinies of cantatrices and ballerinas. Figaro was not more versatile in the service of his patron than the supple Count Walewski. If the minister is allowed a benefit after the manner of other operatic managers, he might increase its attractions by effectively making his début in the part of the accommodating barber. His "Largo al factotum" would be irresistibly natural, and Rossini would have to look to his laurels.

Drawing-room operas again promise to be in vogue this season among the wealthy patrons of musical art, and Mad. Gavaux Sabatier, the fauvette des salons, who so enchanted London some ten or eleven years ago, having resumed her profession, will be the reigning star of these performances. She sang the other evening at Mad. Orfila's, in an operetta entitled La Perruque du Bailli, with brilliant success. The words and music of this little book, both of which are charmingly graceful, are by Mlle. Pauline Thys, now Mad. Sebault.

A new and important phase in the musical pitch movement has just occurred. At the last sitting of the Royal Academy of Belgium, in the Fine Arts class, M. Fetis read a report on the question whether it was expedient that Belgium should imitate France in adopting the measures which have there been taken with respect to the new diapason. The learned professor came to the conclusion that the diapason should be fixed as it at present exists, but not lowered. M. Fetis probably wishes that the C sharp, "de poitrine" of certain exceptionally gifted tenors, should lose none of its marvellous character

Mad. Carvalho is now at Nantes, where, after singing at a concert given by the Société des Beaux Arts, she is giving a series of performances at the theatre. There is an excellent operatic troupe there to assist her, under the direction of M. Solié.

The opera balls, under the direction of Strauss, whose orchestra will be employed, are to commence on the 15th of this month, previous to which there will be a ball for the pension fund of the establishment.

I suppose you have already heard of the death of poor Louis Lurine, the director of the Vaudeville. It was quite sudden, and he was in the prime of life. He was a very amiable and a very clever fellow, and is much regretted by his friends, of whom he had many. They buried him last Sunday; the funeral service was performed at Notre Dame de Lorette.

December 12, 1860.

It is an ill wind that blows nobody good. The new opera of M. Offenbach, Barkouf, which has been put off on account of Mlle. Saint Urbain's illness, has caused the manager of the Opéra Comique to bring unexpectedly forward a little opera called l'Eventail, which its authors had given up all hope of seeing performed before next year, if at all. The words are by MM. Barbier and Carré, and the music by M. Ernest Boulanger. In plot it resembles not a little Alfred de Musset's Caprices de Marianne, except as regards the dénouement. A young widow, who is growing tired of her lone condition, is beloved by a poet, but being both cruel and a coquette, she has him driven away with cudgels when he attempts to serenade her. The poet confides his sorrows to a friend, a military gentleman of swaggering and tavern-haunting propensities. He attributes the poet's failure to his romantic nonsense, takes his mandoline from him, and promises to show him how to win a woman's heart. The captain places himself under the widow's balcony, and trolls forth a jolly ditty, with a slight spice of satire about it. The lady truly answers to the appeal, and shows herself at the balcony,—but it is to throw the minstrel a penny. The captain is exasperated at this treatment, and joins the poet in a scheme to mortify the proud beauty. In carrying it out, the captain, however, really falls in love with the widow, while the poet is quickly prompted to console himself with the affection of her sister, which he discovers he has won. A double match terminates the little comedy, in which a fan passed from hand to hand has much to do with bringing about a satisfactory settlement of affairs. The music is not deficient in melody, which is made the most of by skilful treatment, and the success of the work was as complete as could be desired.

M. Offenbach's opera will, it is said, be produced on the 20th inst., and Mlle. Marimon will take the part intended for Mlle. St. Urbain.

The new ballet Le Papillon proceeds in its career with increasing success. The Emperor has been twice to see it since the first night. Whether he seizes eagerly at anything that will momentarily draw his mind from the care of his present anxious position, or whether he desires to give a fillip to the fortunes of the establishment under the immediate superintendence of his prime minister, I know not. Perhaps both motives weigh with him.

At the Italian Opera Marta has been revived, and Mad. Alboni has made with her brilliant singing and consummate acting in the part of Nancy, a complete sensation.

In the theatrical department, there has been a new comedy in five acts at the Odéon, by M. Louis Bouilhet, entitled L'Oncle Million, which has proved successful, and at the Palais Royal two amusing little pieces have been equally fortunate. One is called Le Passé de Nichette, the other Le Serment d'Horace. The latter is by M. Henri Murget, and does not belie its authorship, for it abounds in pleasant and witty sallies. The Vaudeville, until a new manager is appointed, is being carried on by a committee composed of MM. Lafont, Brindeau, and Saint Germain.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER III.

WOULD you see the impresario in trouble—a cloud of thunder on his brow—the victim of despair? Watch him when he hears that his popular primo tenore, or the favourite prima donna is indisposed. The opera which is drawing crowded houses has to be changed, or sung by a substitute not attractive to the public. The manager may for a while have thrown the reins of government carelessly aside, a flourishing account from the box office having increased his appetite for the good dinner at which he is comfortably seated. A delicate little note is handed to him (whether from a tenor or prima donna does not signify; they both indulge in similarly diminutive sized envelopes). It is opened; the manager turns pale as he peruses the contents; a few incoherent sentences escape his lips; his dinner and peace of mind for four and twenty hours are irremediably ruined. The delicate little note informs him that a change of opera is unavoidable. The soup is left untouched; he hastens to the theatre; his secretary is forthwith despatched to summon other artists; the call-boy runs for his life to the printer; instructions are given to the door-keepers, scene shifters, in fact, to the entire establishment, to prepare for the emergency. A bill is drawn up, expressing the regret of the "management" (why the impresario of an Italian Opera insists upon calling himself the "management," I know not) in being obliged to announce a change in the performance of the evening, Signora So-and-so being unable to appear. The secretary returns, having had a furious drive to all the outskirts of London (singers, strange to say, in this country, always manage to live as far away as possible from their place of business, the theatre), and finds the manager pacing his room in an agony of disappointment and uncertainty. Sometimes the secretary has been successful, and tranquillises his chief with words of consolation. Sometimes, however, it is otherwise; and he is the bearer of anything but satisfactory intelligence: the artists he has sought may not have been to be found, or, if found, are equally unable to appear as the singer whose illness is the cause of all the difficulty. The impresario is now in what is popularly called a "quandary," and uncertain whether to open the theatre or not. Generally matters are so arranged that it is unnecessary to resort to the last alternative; but the impresario's appetite and dinner are spoiled, and his temper pretty considerably ruffled. The chances are, moreover, that he is abused by the aristocratic habitués of the stalls, and the democratic frequenters of the pit, for not keeping faith with the public, neither aristocrat nor democrat considering for one moment that it is the singer's throat that is sore, and not that of the impresario, who would willingly sing soprano, contralto, tenor, and base, were it in his power to do so to the satisfaction of the aforesaid grumblers. Strange contretemps will sometimes happen on such occasions. Artists who were not to be found when wanted will arrive at the last moment, after others have been persuaded to sing for them. I remember such an occurrence at Covent Garden some years ago. Illness had necessitated a change of opera, and Il Barbiere was to be given instead of the one originally announced.

The alteration was made at a very short notice. Ronconi, who, according to a stipulation in his engagement, had the part of the Barber allotted to him, was out of town. No other opera, under the circumstances, being practicable, Tamburini, after much coaxing, consented to sing the Figaro, and repaired to the theatre at the usual time. A few minutes before the opera was to begin Ronconi made his appearance, and insisted upon his right to the part Tamburini had undertaken. He went to his room and dressed. As the curtain was about to be drawn up, there was Ronconi on one side of the stage and Tamburini on the other, both in the well-known costume, and ready to appear as the vivacious Figaro. Here was a chance of a Barbiere after the fashion of the Corsican Brothers. It was truly a momentous question. Had the curtain been raised, the Figaro would have had a "double," which would have puzzled the audience more than even Charles Kean's celebrated impersonation of the De Franchis. The commencement of the opera was for a short time delayed while the matter was explained to Tamburini, who, to his honour be it said, relinquished the position with the politeness of a gentleman and good feeling of a true artist.

When it is considered how entirely the fulfilment of the announcement of an Italian opera depends upon the health (and sometimes, with all deference be it said, the caprice) of the sensitive soprano or tenacious tenor, it is, perhaps, surprising that disappointments are not more frequent, and that an enterprising impresario can at any time enjoy his dinner undisturbed.

ANTRACTE.

OTTO JAHN'S "MOZART."

(From the Morning Post.)

SECOND ARTICLE.

MR. OTTO JAHN, having duly acknowledged the efforts of preceding biographers, and informed us that such new sources of information have been opened up to him as to make it his duty "to erect an entirely new building upon a new ground" ("auf neum grund ein ganz neues gebünde aufzuführen") proceeds at once to his work.

The first book, embracing a period of twelve years, from 1756 to 1768, treats of Mozart's boyhood, and naturally includes an account of the composer's family, especially of his father, Leopold Mozart, the violinist and composer, who exercised so very great an influence over his son's career.

Mr. Jahn gives Leopold Mozart a very high character; but here we cannot quite agree with the generous biographer. May it not be gravely questioned whether the terrible illnesses of which he speaks (four desperate struggles for existence within a short space of time) were not brought on in a great measure by the unnatural exertions and constant excitement to which Wolfgang was subjected in being at a very tender age carried from court to court for exhibition as a prodigy? Were such proceedings beneficial to any one but the father who pocketed the pecuniary rewards?

In an artistic point of view, this eternal locomotion and interruption to study could be of no use to the little wunderkind; and it was difficult not to ascribe the early death of the immortal composer, which deprived the world of many a masterpiece, partly at least to the forced premature development of his powers. Had Leopold Mozart been the sensible, honest, and amiable person Mr. Jahn supposes, he would have felt that a young, delicate creature like Wolfgang, whose nervous system was so exquisitely sensitive that the mere blast of a trumpet once threw him into a state of most violent excitement, whose soul-felt passion for ideal beauty, for the abstract loveliness of sound and form, rendered him tremblingly alive to any manifestation of it, and who was so impressionable with respect to outward influences, that things unheeded by others would act upon his being like the wandering wind upon the Æolian harp—thrilling him with music—was not fit to bear the enormous amount of downright hard work and constant excitement thrown upon the earliest years of his career, and acted accordingly.

Would a really sensible man have risked the permanent value of his stock-in-trade—which in Leopold Mozart's case was a son's life—without some pressing, immediate, and personal motive? We would wish to consider Leopold Mozart as the reverse of sensible, because by so doing—in relieving him from great responsibility—we should protect him from great blame; but such worldly shrewdness and diplomatic caution are exhibited in the later portion of his career that we cannot certainly set him down as a fool.

Did Leopold calculate upon the amount of mental and physical labour his son might possibly endure for so long a time as he might be serviceable to the paternal interest, without care for a future, which, according to the ordinary course of things, might probably relate to others rather than to himself? Such hypotheses are proposed quite à contre-cœur, but we must take them as they occur to us. Mr. Jahn himself suggests them by the "inexorable logic" of his facts, the real bearing of which upon Leopold's character appears to have escaped him.

In October, 1762, we find Wolfgang laid on a sick bed for fourteen days with the scarlet fever. In August, 1764, an inflammation of the throat again placed his life in jeopardy. Passing through Lille in 1765, he was equally in danger—four weeks confined to his room; and in the same year the child had one more terrible trial, namely, an attack of malignant fever, which nearly carried him off; and all this time he was being hawked about from country to country, from town to town, and made to display his genius in public as often as he was able, the sensible and amiable father profiting thereby.

To us, we must confess, all this looks doubtful, and more especially as the sister of Wolfgang, also a wunderkind, who accompanied the expeditions, and was exhibited with her brother in the concerts, suffered likewise from constant excitement; and once indeed, up the Hague in 1765, was in such imminent danger that, despite all the efforts of Professor Schunnckel, physician to the Princess Wulburg, sister of the Prince of Orange, the young artist's life was despaired of.

With Mr. Jahn's estimate of Leopold Mozart's moral worth we cannot agree; neither in the proceedings of the father with respect to his son's early career, nor in later events can we discover any of his acts untainted by selfishness.

Letters to the Editor.

VERSUS "PETIFACE."

SIR,—Your periodical of the 8th instant contained a contribution of mine, as it has done many before; but you have not previously found it necessary to make additions, and to adapt my communications for what they were not intended. My object for sending you occasionally such thoughts as were suggested was not for the sake of playing the fool with an art which seems to be the principal object of one of your contributors—but for the purpose of calling attention and exciting discussion on certain points which appeared to me defective; and for the amelioration of which in all departments of science and art such journals as the present are, I presume, specially called into existence. Now, to come to the point; I am at a loss to know by whose authority your eccentric and incomprehensible friend "Petiface" alters and adapts according to his peculiar whims, the contributions whose authors he knows nothing of, and who know nothing of Mr. "Petiface." My contributions are doubtless of but little value; but I should imagine that the MUSICAL WORLD found it difficult in a country like this to obtain matter worth printing for nothing. Certainly, however low my contributions may be valued, I cannot suffer such impertinence to be again practised, which I think on the part of any one is a great familiarity. Had Mr. "Petiface" affixed my proper name, I should have been extremely disgusted, as I have not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Horace Mayhew, nor the least wish to criticise his recent performances.

You will oblige me by inserting this, as I consider by altering or adapting the occasional contributions of your supporters, is not only the way to lose their support, but that of others, to say nothing of its being an act of unprovoked familiarity.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

A CRUMP.

[The signature of the first communication was unintelligible. "Crumb" was the nearest guess that could be made, and the Socratic irony that distinguished the style of our correspondent warranted its acceptance as genuine. Nevertheless, Petipace—not "Petiface"—apologises to Messrs. Crump and Mayhew; although had Mr. Crump affixed his (Petipace's) proper name, he (Petipace) might have been "extremely disgusted."—ANGUISH.]

A SUGGESTION FOR FACILITATING THE READING OF MUSIC.

SIR,—If printers would use red ink for the first and fifth lines, they would greatly facilitate the execution of difficult and crowded passages.

HAWK.

Birmingham, Dec. 7th, 1860.

SIR,—If you can possibly get through it, read the enclosed, and mark the taste, style, musical knowledge and critical acumen displayed by the Brummagem critic. Oh for a "Petipace" to pickle such an idiot. Your constant reader,

MUSICAS.

"In the allegros, as a rule, notwithstanding the invariable evidence of earnest thought and high musical capacity, Beethoven's genius is less thoroughly at home than in the andantes. He writes them frequently in evident compliance with the exigencies of the sonata form rather than the instigation of his fancy, and appears to find in a solemn adagio, a plaintive andante, or a wildly sportive scherzo, more congenial expression for the teeming visions of his mind. The first allegro of the No. 3 quartet is nevertheless a long, richly instrumented and symmetrical movement, and thanks partly to the admirable execution of the before-named gentlemen was warmly applauded. The second allegro, a short graceful movement, and the concluding presto, with its fiery tarantula measure, experienced in a minor degree the sunshine of popular favour, and the performers retreated from the platform amid a shower of plaudits."

[Chacun à son gout, est notre gout.—ANGUISH.]

DANCING-MUSIC, OR MUSIC-DANCING.

To HORACE MAYHEW, Esq.

GENTLEMAN,—In the MUSICAL WORLD of the 8th instant, appears an article of mine, headed "New school of Dancing Music," to which the editor has added under the title, "To the joined Authors of the Goose with the Golden Eggs;" and at the end of the article, "Yours, Gentlemen and Wits." As no such expressions were in my copy, will you oblige me by exerting your interest at head-quarters in procuring the insertion of this reply in the next number, that I may be free from the imputation of having begun or concluded the article with two such ridiculous absurdities? The plan of dancing to music of a higher class than that now in use is not by any means impracticable; but in offering something new to the public, the author has to contend with the class of narrow-minded persons who may be the arbitrators on its merits, as remarkably exemplified in the two following instances:—Haydn, on entering his career in instrumental composition, presented himself on the lists with six trios. The peculiarity of the style and the novelty of the thing gave them immediately the greatest celebrity; but the grave German musicians warmly attacked the dangerous innovations with which they were filled. The charming thoughts of the young musician, the warmth of his style, called forth against him all the invectives of the Vienna musicians, particularly the amateurs, who would not have hesitated, had the idea crossed their minds, to have designated this new school, the Goose with the Golden Eggs. The other is an instance in the career of the engineer Stephenson, who in endeavouring to get an Act of Parliament passed through the House of Commons to enable him to lay down the first railroad he accomplished, on asserting to some of the members that he would obtain a speed of twenty miles per hour, these gentlemen (like the writer of the two witty expressions in my recent article on a new school of dancing-music), replied, "Your mind, Mr. Stephenson, is deranged through too much application to your railroad, or you would not talk of a speed of more than fourteen miles per hour." When, in order to pacify them for the time being, to avoid retarding the passing of the Bill, he deemed it prudent to say fourteen instead of twenty, when they were satisfied; otherwise, like the author of the lofty expression added to my heading, emanating (no doubt) from a mind equally as lofty as the sublimity of the two additions—the members would probably have designated Mr. Stephenson's scheme, the Goose with the Golden Eggs. The articles I have furnished to the MUSICAL WORLD were not written expressly for it, but merely copied from one hundred and fifty in prose and verse, filling three books composed by your humble servant during the last ten years; and, whatever may be their "shortcomings," as my motive is good, the editor might refrain from endeavouring to turn into ridicule, what is intended to advance one of the popular accomplishments of the day, and no doubt will be carried out at some future period, or something approaching it, when the present music will not have sufficient variety to meet the improved taste of the dancing class.

Craving your excuse for troubling you with this communication,
I ascribe myself, Gentleman, yours respectfully,
Dec. 12th, 1860. HAYDN WILSON.

VIENNA, Nov. 15, 1860.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The rehearsals of Rubenstein's opera, Les Enfantes des Landes, have been suddenly discontinued. It appears the tenor Wachtels is in litigation with the direction of the court theatre at Hesse Cassel, having failed to fulfil his engagement last year for some cause, whether sufficient or otherwise, to be decided by the lawyers. An official request has been made by the legal authorities of Prussia, that Wachtel, pendente lite, should not be allowed to sing in Vienna, which request has been acceded to by the Austrian Government, and Rubenstein's opera postponed in consequence. It is a question whether Wachtel's salary will be suspended, but I should hardly suppose the Viennese authorities will so far take part in a quarrel, in which others only are concerned. It is bad enough that they have prevented his appearing, and acted courteously to a neighbour to the detriment of an artist. Refusal of payment would be the most unjustifiable and discreditable proceeding, as evincing decided partiality in a dispute, the rights of which have yet to be determined.

MADRID.—In a recent number of the Madrid Correro there appears the following critique respecting the début of an artist who for some years held an honourable position in the Royal Italian Opera Company:— "The great novelty of the evening was Mad. de Méric Lablache, who was making her début in our theatre. Every one was anxious to see and hear the celebrated contralto, who had sung for ten consecutive seasons at the Imperial Theatre of St. Petersburg, and has been so well received in all the capitals where she has appeared. Expectation was not disappointed; and the part of Orsino was sung by Mad. de Méric in a style thoroughly worthy of an artist of her reputation. She possesses a magnificent and fresh contralto voice, an excellent method of singing, and a fine presence. She acts with consummate talent, and is, in fact, gifted with all the qualities which may be expected from an artist of her reputation. Our public saw immediately what kind of lady had to be judged, and soon pronounced in favour of the talented and comely contralto, covering her with applause both in the course of the opera and in the well-known brindisi. This last Mad. de Méric sang in the best style possible, giving proofs of a rare talent, and that exquisite taste which is peculiar to great singers. Mad. de Méric dresses with such gracefulness and propriety that she won for herself general approval, and she wears the male attire in a fine and very engaging manner. The reception which this artist met at the hands of the public could not be more brilliant; it was, in fact, in keeping with her merit. From this great success we areled to look forward with much pleasure to further performances, such as Arance and others of the same kind, wherein Mad. de Méric will have an opportunity of displaying all her powers. M. Bagier, the manager, could not have secured a better artist, and we congratulate him with as much warmth as several of our contemporaries have done before us."

MAD. DE VAUCHERAN, the pianist, gave an evening concert in the new Vestry Hall, Chelsea, on Monday last, under the patronage of Lord Ranelagh and the officers of the South Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. As a matter of course the room was well attended, and a great number of the "force" were present. Among the vocalists were Miss Clari Fraser, Fraulein Von Kettler, Mr. Leonard; Herren Goffrié and Schmidt were the violins; Mr. R. Blagrove was concertina, and Herr Oberthur harp. The fair concertgiver, played several times during the evening, her best performance being Herr Oberthur's duet for harp and pianoforte, on Lucrezia Borgia, which she gave in capital style. She was ably assisted by Herr Oberthur in the harp part. The latter also played in his usual elegant manner some pieces of his own composition. Mr. R. Blagrove's solo on the concertina (airs from Lurline), was equally successful. Among the best vocal performances were those of Miss Clari Fraser in "John Anderson my Joe," and "Where the bee sucks," (both of which delighted the audience); of Fraulein Von Kettler, in an Italian cavatina, and some German lieder; and of M. Leonard, in "Largo al factotum," which he declaimed and sung with infinite spirit, obtaining well merited applause at the conclusion. Macfarren's charming trio, "The Troubadour," might have had more pains bestowed upon it than it received, the vocalists evidently not having rehearsed it. Mr. Thomas accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte.

MISS WHITTY.—A letter from a friend in Milan, speaking of Miss Whitty, says—"La Signora Vitti, as she is called here, is a great favourite—and no little merit as a singer is required to please a Milanese audience. An engagement here is an affair not easy of attainment, and an honour greatly coveted, as, if successful, the fortune of a vocalist is made. Miss Whitty is, moreover, an excellent actress, and, although not strictly handsome, is very sweet-looking, graceful, and ladylike. In Florence she created quite a furore.—Another young countrywoman, Mary Beati, daughter of the late Dr. Davey of London, made her début a few weeks ago at Lugano with great success: she played thirteen or fourteen times in succession, and was on each occasion more warmly received. She has been very much spoken of in the papers, and very favourable opinions are entertained of her voice and style of singing."

DR. M. V. BLY.—Necromancy in some shape or other is one of the fashions of the day, now descending into the prosaic card-trick, now soaring into the more mysterious region of spirits and mediums (Priscian would have preferred "Media"); now boasting that it can restore a burnt pocket-handkerchief without the aid of a double-bottomed casket, now more awfully pretending to maintain an intercourse between the living and the dead. The gentleman who years ago would have been burnt for a wizard now finds the black art a very convenient source of revenue; and really this art is splitting into so many departments, that we may in time have a numerous body of conjurors, who will all thrive merrily without jostling one against the other. Among necromancers of the more mystical school, Dr. M. V. Bly, a newly-arrived American professor, who displays his wonders at the New York Hotel, Leicester Square, is likely to take a conspicuous place. Indeed, he has already puzzled many connoisseurs, accustomed to all the marvellous illusions of the last twenty years; not only does he abstain from the use of apparatus, but he even refuses the advantage of distance, the person to whom he displays his proficiency being invited to sit with him at the same table—an ordinary piece of mahogany, with its legs perfectly visible, and consequently as far above suspicion as the required reputation of Cæsar's wife. Thus brought face to face with the magician, the visitor writes with a pencil the names of a number of persons on some scraps of paper, which he immediately crushes up into little pellets, without giving Dr. Bly the least chance of seeing the inscription. The learned doctor is at once seized with a convulsive trembling of the true Pythian kind; and, frantically snatching up a pencil, writes backwards a short note, signed with one of the names contained in the pellets. He also orders his visitor to put the pellets into sealed envelopes, and picks them out by name, when repeated crumpling has rendered the inscriptions almost illegible to the writer himself. The information contained in the notes written by the doctor is not of a very exciting description; but how he acquires knowledge of the names, hastily written as they are, and crushed up immediately—this is really a mystery, especially as the feat is performed under circumstances which seem to preclude the possibility of collusion. Indeed, the exhibition ordinarily takes place in the presence of a very select few, any one of whom is at perfect liberty to take the post of honour at the table, and test the professor to his heart's content. Sometimes an imposing variety is given to the exploit by the appearance of the name in red letters on the doctor's wrist. Details of this kind, as well as the convulsive movements of the magician, and the noises occasionally elicited from the table, will be set down by the sceptical as belonging to the hocus-pocus of the art; but how did the name get into the doctor's head? That's the real question.

MR. SIMS REEVES ACCEPTING AN ENCORE.—"Mr. Sims Reeves, who was in the fullest possession of his incomparable voice, added to his long list of artistic triumphs by his exquisitely beautiful rendering of Dussek's charming, quite Mozartian, canzonet, which elicited unanimous applause of the warmest kind. This can scarcely fail to become a stock piece at concerts. Of Mr. Sims Reeves' version of 'Adelaide,' what can we find to say that has not been said a hundred times already? Such singing as this, with the pianoforte accompaniments of Miss Arabella Goddard, is indeed an executive triumph, which we believe no other two artists in Europe could achieve. The 'Adelaide' was so overwhelmingly redemanded, that Mr. Reeves, despite his objections to the 'encore system,' obliged the audience by singing the second movement again."—Morning Post.

MR. WEISS AT THE MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—"To Mr. Weiss, firstly, belongs the praise of having been the first to let the public know what Mr. George Macfarren really means by the very fine song from 'Robin Hood' entitled, 'The monk within his cell,' which we may safely assert was never sung in public before last night, however well it may have been acted. Mr. Weiss did ample justice to this admirably characteristic composition. It suits his noble voice exactly, and he sung it with all the musical skill and dramatic expression it demands. Secondly, our famous English basso must be unreservedly eulogised for his inimitable rendering of Mendelssohn's 'I'am a roamer;' but, as Mr. Weiss's version of this capital comic song is thoroughly familiar to the musical world, we need only record that it was heartily encored, although the singer merely returned to the orchestra and bowed his acknowledgments of the compliment."—Morning Post.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD AT THE MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—"To those who are curious to know how our eminent English pianist, Miss Arabella Goddard, acquitted herself—who would learn whether she has been progressing backwards or forwards since last she appeared in a London orchestra—we can say at once that the young lady never achieved a greater triumph, or more richly deserved the homage of musicians. The symmetry, chasteness, and dignity of Miss Arabella's style, her full, sympathetic tone, and solidly brilliant agility, might doubtless have been more profitably employed than in the execution either of Steibelt's or Haydn's sonate (the latter of which, by the way, is but an arrangement of one of the author's string quartets), though both these works are highly interesting, and far too good for oblivion. Miss Arabella Goddard might have selected a solo sonata by Beethoven—for instance, the long 106, which she plays better than any one. The audience, we feel convinced, would have been delighted to hear it again from her, if only because no other pianist ever attempts it. However, the accomplished artist, if she did not show all she can do on this occasion, at least vindicated her claim to the laurel crown that graced even her baby-brow, and which she has worn unblemished for many years in spite of rivalry by no means despicable. Miss Arabella Goddard was most enthusiastically received, warmly applauded on every possible occasion, and unanimously recalled into the orchestra at the termination of Steibelt's sonata, which she played to perfection."—Morning Post, Dec. 17th.

DR. WYLDE gave his annual Christmas performance of the Messiah in St. James's Hall, on Thursday evening, before a large audience. The Messiah is more attractive at Christmas than at any other time, since many look upon it as a duty to attend a performance of Handel's sublime oratorio at this season of the year. The soloists were Miss Parepa, Miss Spiller, Miss Lascelles, Mr. G. Perren and Mr. Santley. Miss Parepa sung her very best, and Miss Spiller, who shared with her the soprano music, acquitted herself exceedingly well. Miss Lascelles was most effective in "He was despised." Mr. G. Perren sang the tenor music very artistically, and Mr. Santley's fine voice and admirable delivery were highly appreciated in that allotted to the bass. The chorus was not quite so steady, in many pieces, as we could have wished, though Dr. Wylde conducted with his accustomed vigour and ability.

SPOHR AND THE VIOLIN.—Of Spohr's distinguished merits as a composer of quartets, enough has been said in the analytical programmes of the Monday Popular Concerts. The reproduction of a few sentences will suffice to explain, to such as have not hitherto been in the habit of attending these performances, the opinion entertained of the late Kapellmeister of Hesse-Cassel as a fertile and ingenious producer in this particular branch of his art. As a composer of quartets—it was urged—and indeed of all varieties of chamber music,—for stringed instruments, Spohr eminently excelled. Only Hadyn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn can be said to have surpassed him; while, on the other hand, he produced in this department almost as much as the last three in common. Here, however, his darling instrument was at command, and none will refuse to admit that, as a writer for the violin, Spohr was unrivalled. No predecessor or contemporary has done so much or so well for the first of orchestral, as it is the first of solo, instruments. His compositions for the violin (as a performer on which, in many respects, he equally transcended all competitors) form one of the most important and valuable bequests that genius has made to art. He represented, moreover, and pre-eminently, the great German school of playing, the most solid, legitimate, and classically pure, if not the most graceful, impetuous, and brilliant. "All the composers for the violin put together, since legitimate music was provided for that instrument, would not," says a modern critic, "make one Spohr." This was the domain in which he knew no rival, and in which, whether as producer or executant, he distanced all competitors. Spohr was the rock against which the so-called virtuosity of his time could make no head. In an age of semi-charlatanism he retained for his darling instrument its classic character, and dedicated works to the fiddle which are likely to survive while music continues to be cultivated. Violinists, indeed, of every category, those alike who aim at mere display and those who entertain a worthier ambition, are infinitely his debtors; since, through the method he inculcated, and the writings he published, he not only regulated taste and developed style, but, more than any predecessor or contemporary, helped to advance the mechanism of the instrument, and thus to multiply its resources and vary its means of effect. His quartets (of which he produced about three times as many as Mozart, and twice as many as Beethoven), his quintets, and other examples of what is termed chamber music, form a library of themselves.—Programme of the Monday Popular Concerts.

FOOD FOR BABES.—(In Words of not more than Two Syllables.)—Once up-on a time, a hawk had a num-ber of lin-nets in a tree, who sang so sweet-ly that the pas-sers by gave the hawk bits of meat. But the pas-sers by did not want to hear all the lin-nets at once. So the hawk sent some of them a-way from the tree, which stood in a large Mark-et for Hay, to a gut-ter near Der-by Round, that o-ther pas-sers by might give bits of meat to hear them. But when the lin-nets came back to the Mar-ket for Hay, the pas-sers by (who were call-ed swells) would not hear the lin-nets who had been sing-ing in the gut-ter. So all the lin-nets flew a-way, and the hawk had to go with-out his meat.—SHOULDER.

STAINES.—On Thursday evening, December 6th, a concert was given in the Literary Institution. The artists were Miss Eleonora Wilkinson, Miss Louise Jarrett, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Lambert; Mr. W. Goss Custard presided at the pianoforte. The programme was miscellaneous. The inclemency of the weather prevented many families from attending.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The nomination for the two King's scholarships vacant at this time of the year took place on Monday the 17th inst. The board of examiners consisted of Mr. Charles Lucas (chairman), Mr. John Goss, Mr. Henry Blagrove, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. W. H. Holmes, Mr. Frank R. Cox, and Mr. Walter C. Macfarren. The number of candidates examined was 25—nine young gentlemen and 16 young ladies. The following were elected scholars:—Miss A. Zimmermann and Master John Still. The following candidates were specially commended:—Miss L. Bayley, Miss R. A. Brinsmead, Miss Kinkel, Miss E. Peachey, and Miss E. G. Stevens; Messrs. F. J. Amor, B. Mallatratt, and S. Weeks. The following were commended:—Miss H. Milton, Miss E. P. Sellman, and Miss S. J. Thomson; Master C. H. Deffell.

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, 1861,

On which occasion the celebrated Violinist,

M. VIEUXTEMPS

(Who has been expressly engaged for these Concerts),

Will make his First Appearance in London, after an absence of Eight Years.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in D minor, for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Schubert), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song (Benedict), Miss LASCELLES. Song (G. A. Macfarren), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Prelude and Fugue, à la Tarantella, in A minor—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(J. S. Bach), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

PART II.—Sonata, in C minor, for Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, Pianoforte, and M. VIEUXTEMPS, Violin—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Beethoven). Song (Henry Smart), Miss LASCELLES. Canzonet (Dussek), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Quartet, in E major, No. 59, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (Haydn)—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street, And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

To Correspondents.

A correspondent will be glad if the editor of the MUSICAL WORLD will answer the following questions in his notice to correspondents, also the same questions with respect to Signor Giuglini:—

What is the age of Mlle. Titiens?
Where is she living?
What place is she a native of?
Has she any relations living with her?
What is her private character?
What is her Christian name?
Of what religion is she?
How long has she been on the stage?
Is there any talk of her being married?
Correspondent's initials, E. M. E.

December 1st, 1860.

MUSICAS.—Petipace is on a journey. Call him louder.

J. T., BRIGHTON.—If our correspondent will forward a description of his implement we shall be happy to insert it.

DISAPPOINTMENT.—The compositions are nowhere to be found. It is possible they may have been mislaid, possibly they may never have come to hand. In either case our correspondent might, without much trouble, forward other copies to the office of THE MUSICAL WORLD.

MR. T. DYSON will receive early attention.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1860.

WE have much pleasure in directing the attention of our readers to the following:—

MR. HULLAH.—A strong desire has been manifested, in various influential quarters, to render some service and encouragement to Mr. Hullah, late of St. Martin's Hall, at a very trying period of his life. With the view of consolidating this general feeling of goodwill towards a gentleman who has faithfully devoted many years and many acquirements and energies to an important branch of public education, and whose labours have now to be begun again, the following Committee has been formed:—

Charles Dickens, Esq., Gadshill, near Rochester, Kent, Chairman. The Most Noble the Marquis of Lansdowne, Bowood, Wilts; the Right Hon. Sir J. T. Coleridge, Knt., Heath's Court, Ottery St. Mary, Devon; Sir James P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart., 38 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park, W.; the Very Rev. R. C. Trench, D.D., Dean of Westminster, Dean's Yard, S.W.; A. W. Blomfield, Esq., 8 St. Martin's Place, W.C.; W. Butterfield, Esq., 4 Adam Street, Adelphi, W.C.; the Rev. Samuel Clark, the College, Battersea, S.W.; Harry Chester, Esq., 63 Rutland Gate, S.W.; J. D. Coleridge, Esq., 3 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.; the Rev. Derwent Coleridge, St. Mark's College, Chelsea, S.W.; the Rev. R. Elwyn, Charterhouse, E.C.; Edward Foster, Esq., 220 Marylebone Road, N.W.; Edward J. Fraser, Esq., 26 Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.; James Humphry, Esq., 49 Hilldrop Crescent, Holloway, N.; H. C. Hextall, Esq., 145 Cheapside, E.C.; T. H. Headland, Esq., 9 Heathcote Street, Mecklenburgh Square, W.C.; the Rev. H. W. Phillott, Staunton-on-Wye, Herefordshire; the Rev. E. H. Plumptre, Kings College, W.C.; Geo. T. Porter, Esq., 4 Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.; Geo. Richmond, Esq., 10 York Street, Portman Square, S.W.; H. Wedgwood, Esq., 6 Queen Anne Street, W.

Subscriptions will be received on behalf of the Committee by any Member of the Committee, or by Messrs. COUTTS and Co., Strand, or Messrs. GLYN and Co., Lombard Street, London. The Committee are already enabled to announce the following:—

The Marquis of Lansdowne 100*l.*; the Right Hon., W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer, 50*l.*; Sir J. P. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart., 50*l.*; A. Hobhouse, Esq., 50*l*; G. Richmond, Esq., 25*l.*; S. Pitts, Esq., 10*l.*; C. Dickens, Esq., 10*l.*; E. C. Tufnell, Esq., 5*l.*; Rev. E. H. Plumptre 5*l.*; E. Foster, Esq., 100*l.*; H. Wedgwood, Esq., 25*l.*; E. Raphael, Esq., 5*l.*; Harry Chester, Esq., 21*l.*; Rev. F. D. Maurice 10*l.*; H. C. Hextall, Esq., 50*l.*; W. Butterfield, Esq., 25*l.*; T. H. Farrar, Esq., 10*l.*; J. Humphry, Esq., 20*l.*; E. J. Fraser, Esq., 20*l.*; E. B. Denison, Esq., Q.C., 10*l.*; A. W. Blomfield, Esq., 5*l.*; Rev. D. Coleridge, 10*l.*; Rev. T. Helmore 5*l.*; Mrs. Carr 5*l.*; Rev. S. Clark 10*l.*; Rev. Muirhead Mitchell 25*l.*; C. Wentworth Dilke, Esq., 10*l.*; Rev. Thos. Astley Cock, King's College, London, 20*l.*; S. Servante, Esq., 5*l.* E. J. Fraser, Hon. Sec., 26, Craven Street, Charing Cross.

Mr. Hullah's claims need no advocacy. They speak for themselves. We understand that in addition to the subscription two grand concerts (morning and evening) are being organised for his benefit. No professor of whatever eminence will withhold his services on such an occasion. As soon as we are acquainted with further particulars they shall be published. Meanwhile our columns are open to any suggestion that may help the cause.

THE last of the Monday Popular Concerts was interesting, for more than one reason, and especially for the introduction of a name which has hitherto been somewhat unaccountably ignored. Steibelt may be neither a Dussek nor a Hummel, but his merits are too solid not to be taken into account by directors of entertainments such as these; a principal object of which, if we are not mistaken, is to explore the whole field of art-culture, from the Bach-Scarlatti-Handel period until now. To trace further back would involve the consideration of a still more various, comprehensive, and extended plan; but in attempting thus much the Monday Popular Concerts are already affording valuable aid to the progress of musical taste, and thus fully establish their claim to be viewed in the light of a bonâ fide art institution. This necessarily assumed and unanimously recognised importance, however, brings with it certain inevitable duties. To accomplish with entire success their cheerfully accepted and highly honourable task, it is manifestly insufficient to parade a catalogue of the most eminently celebrated names. A prominent feature of their mission is unquestionably that of revivals. Dead giants must temporarily make room even for living dwarfs. The world has only one conglomerate ear, and cannot listen to all at once. But when the dwarfs have strutted and the asses brayed for an hour, the world, if directed by skilful and conscientious pioneers, will once more readily give attentive audience to the lions and colossi. Round about these last, moreover, are grouped a number of healthy, strong and genuine workers, who, if they achieved less than the others, are not the less worthy to revolve in their direct vicinity, as satellites and planets. There can be only one sun to a system; but the light derived from its solitary magnificence is reflected by the lesser stars, the more brightly as they approach nearer to the self-luminous centre of their different orbits. But, to quit the celestial spheres, into which we have soared unwittingly, and redescend to earth;—such labourers on the fertile soil of art as Daniel Steibelt, &c., must not be passed over in a scheme like that of the Monday Popular Concerts. In presenting his patrons (the "great public") with so fair a specimen of Steibelt's genius as the sonata in E flat, dedicated to Mad. Bonaparte, Mr. S. Arthur Chappell, the active, zealous, and really enterprising manager, has done nor less nor more than see his way clearly though the carrying out of a principle professed at the outset, and—to the credit of those concerned, be it said—adhered to with immovable pertinacity up to the present moment. Whatever shades of opinion might have existed in reference to the precise value of this particular sonata—as a plastic whole, as an artistic structure, or simply as an exhibition of individual acquirement,—its thorough adaptability to the place accorded it on Monday could hardly otherwise than, by common consent, be admitted. The appearance of Steibelt, therefore, at the forty-seventh of the Monday Popular Concerts was hailed with satisfaction, as the opening of a new vein of interest; and gracefully as the hitherto forgotten master was introduced, through the medium of Miss Arabella Goddard—in whose agile and expressive fingers lives an unfailing eloquence with which mere verbal arguments cannot compare—his success was triumphant. Miss Goddard's remarkable talent, notwithstanding the youthfulness of its possessor, has for years been the lamp to light earnest seekers after the beautiful to those treasures of the past which have so long lain hidden and neglected, and into which, with the co-operation of rare genius and kindling enthusiasm, she breathes new life. In an admirable notice of the last of the Monday Popular Concerts, the musical critic of the Daily News pays a warm tribute to Miss Goddard, the more immediately appropriate, inasmuch as it is connected with her revival of the sonata by Steibelt, to which allusion has been made. We subjoin an extract:—

"The concert of last night drew the most crowded audience of the season; the great attractions evidently being the first appearance of Miss Arabella Goddard and Mr. Sims Reeves. Our fair pianist has been absent from town for a considerable time, engaged, as we learn from the provincial papers, on a very successful tour in the west of England. She received an enthusiastic welcome. Her first performance was Steibelt's sonata in E flat for the pianoforte solo, dedicated to Madame Bonaparte; a chef-d'œuvre of one of those great composers of the eighteenth century whose admirable works for the pianoforte Miss Goddard has done so much to revive. She has made the long-forgotten name of Dussek once more a household word familiar in the mouths of the English public, and is now apparently going to do the same thing for the name of Steibelt, by showing us that he, too, is a great master, whose works have been allowed to fall into unmerited neglect. From this sonata in E flat Steibelt may be said to belong to the school of Mozart; but his music shows individuality of character, a brilliant imagination, and much grace and delicacy. His cantabile phrases are charmingly melodious, and his bravura passages are sufficient to tax the powers of the most accomplished pianists even of the present day. Miss Goddard's playing of this sonata was absolute perfection. We could not even imagine a more exquisite combination of tone, execution, and expression."

There is still another sonata from the same pen, and in the same key (E flat), to which Miss Goddard's attention might advantageously be directed. We mean the sonata, Op. 60, inscribed to the Duchess of Courlande, an eminent dilettante performer in her day,—a "virtuosa," indeed, of the first rank—who received instructions in Paris from Dussek as well as from Steibelt, and to whom Dussek, as well as Steibelt, dedicated one of his most remarkable compositions.

LAMORAKE.

—♦—

EXPERIENCE is the best of all instructors. There can be no mistake about the lessons she teaches. He that will not learn what knowledge inculcates is either wilfully blind, or is unable to better his condition. It is to be hoped that Mr. E. T. Smith has been taught wisdom from the past season at Her Majesty's Theatre. Enterprise and energy do not always command the success they merit, and speculation, for the most part, is a mere hazard of the die. The new manager of the great opera in the Haymarket is a bold thrower as well as a shrewd and liberal director. His shrewdness and enterprise led to the establishment and ultimate success of a second national opera; but his love of playing at chances with the fickle goddess spoiled what promised to turn out one of the most lucrative of modern theatrical undertakings. Who doubts that, had Mr. Smith abided by the English performances alone at Her Majesty's Theatre, he would have filled the coffers of his treasury? Can anybody call to mind on the boards of any Opera whatsoever, foreign or native, a more legitimate success than that of Robin Hood at Her Majesty's Theatre? Could any one have anticipated a failure, under any circumstances, for Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini? It is but justice to these great singers to say that their want of success was entirely irrespective of artistic considerations. The public who support the Italian Opera were out of town; and the music-loving section of the public who remained, not caring for Italian music, were uninfluenced by reduction of prices. Moreover the attractions of the new English company were almost unprecedented. Mr. Sims Reeves' return to the stage after several years' secession would alone have created the most powerful excitement. Then there was the first appearance on the boards—in England, at all events—of Mad. Lemmens-

Sherrington, who had elicited such unqualified praise from every one who knew her in the concert-room, and about whose dramatic future the best anticipations were formed in the highest quarters. The fact, too, that the great theatre of the aristocracy would be opened for the first time for English opera constituted a strong appeal to those who, standing up for the honour of their country, love to behold national amusements treated with as high regard as those of the privileged classes, and would be inclined to view such a circumstance as a breaking down of one of the strongest and most invidious barriers between the nobility and the people. Hundreds, no doubt, supported English opera at Her Majesty's Theatre who never lent their countenance to Italian performances, there or elsewhere, either not caring about them, or acting on a false principle. When to the above unusual causes of attraction it is added that the opera first produced was from the pen of one of England's most accomplished living musicians, and that the libretto, founded on a popular English legend, was from the pen of one of England's most accomplished living writers, we have said enough to show that the success of Robin Hood was the direct result of natural causes.

Under these circumstances, what possible chance had the Italian Opera of succeeding? Everybody can now answer, "none whatever;" and yet few, if any, were wise enough at the commencement to hint at such a conclusion. Nay, was it not predicted by more than one most sapient aristarch of the stalls that it was injustice to English Opera and native talent to place them side by side with acknowledged masterpieces of the Italian repertory, and in approximation with two of the most eminent foreign artists of modern times? Moreover, did they not augur utter annihilation to the national speculation in consequence? Now, however, everybody blames Mr. Smith for his want of foresight in not seeing that the establishment of Italian Opera at that period of the year was a mockery and a delusion. The manager, nevertheless, did not act without some show of reason. Having engaged Mr. Sims Reeves as a first step towards the establishment of English Opera, and finding that the great tenor would sing three times a week only, Mr. Smith was compelled to look for attraction on the remaining three nights, or, in point of fact, to sacrifice those nights. In an unlucky moment—no doubt thinking that he had thus the power of conciliating two distinct sections of the public at once—he secured the services of Mlle. Titiens and Signor Giuglini, and announced a series of Italian operatic performances, to alternate with the English. This was the head and front of his offending. Had he not had to pay the two foreign artists exorbitant sums—amounting almost to the entire expenditure on the English Company—he would at least have escaped scot free. The effects of the new coalition season may be stated simply thus:—a great deal of money was brought to the treasury by the performances of Robin Hood, but the larger portion was required to reimburse Mlle. Titiens, Signor Giuglini, &c. ANGUISH.

—♦—

WHAT has become of the ballet? We have two Italian operas, two English operas, and actually no ballet—or at least none that anyone thinks it worth while to stay and see after a long operatic performance. The ballet decidédly went out with Mr. Lumley. No choregraphic star of the first magnitude has been seen in London since Rosati and Pocchetti danced and mimed so admirably in the pretty ballet of the Somnambule, which was revived as if to give appropriate choregraphic brilliance to the last days of Lumley's management. We do not regret the ballet much. Let it go. But if it is to disappear, we should like it to vanish altogether; not merely as a separate entertainment, but also, and above all, as an element in our operas to which at present it seems to be considered indispensable. To have in the same entertainment one set of characters who express themselves not in ordinary speech, but in song, and another who replace the spoken language of everyday life by gestures and dancing is too absurd. Let us have either, but not both—at least not at the same time or in the same piece. Such a mixture is worse even than the confusion of speaking with singing in the Opéras Comiques of France, of which, by the way, the form was not invented by poets and musicians, but was forced upon the French by the stringent government regulations in favour of the one recognised Operatic Theatre.

Therefore, we say again, if we are to have no more legitimate ballets—no more Esmeraldas, or Sylphides, or Almas, or Gitanas—let us gain what we can by this loss, and exclude divertissements of dancing from our operas, or at least not have the corps de ballet dragged into them by the head and shoulders as, in a figurative sense, is too often the case at present.

But after all, why should the ballet die? We turn to our dramatic theatres and find Miss Lydia Thompson gaining wreaths of success at the Lyceum, while at the St. James's, bouquets of well-merited approbation fall to her imitator (or at least follower) Mlle. Albina di Rhona, to whom, by the way, Mr. Owen Meredith Bulwer Lytton might appropriately dedicate one of his forthcoming Serbski Pesme, or Songs of Sewid. Might not ballets, we mean legitimate ballets, containing nothing but pantomime and dancing, be given with good results at the Royal Italian Opera and at Her Majesty's Theatre? The managers at both these establishments prefer pantomimes at Christmas, it will be said; but why not get up ballets on pantomime subjects? The cattle show, for instance, as we could have treated it, would have been an admirable subject for a grand ballet in the antique style.

"Did the ancients, then, have cattle shows?" it will be asked.

"No; but the ancient Egyptians worshipped oxen, and danced before the sacred Apis, and fed him on oilcake like the bovine heroes of Baker-street; so that Apis, the holy prize ox of Egypt, might easily have been made the central figure in a ballet, which again might easily and naturally have been connected with the Baker-street cattle show. The dance of the Hebrews around the Golden Calf could also have been represented—the Golden Calf being, of course, an infant heifer to whom a medal of gold has been awarded for his obesity.

Could not something, too, have been done with Europa and the bull?

But all these notions occur too late. Christmas is at hand, and the libretto of our pantomime-ballet, which we had entitled "Harlequin Prize Ox, or Columbine and her Calf of Gold," is not even begun.

DINADAN.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL CHOIR commenced its operations Friday night week by a rehearsal of Mozart's Twelfth Mass. We cannot fancy the work to have been well chosen for the purpose. It is all in vain, we suppose, but we cannot help putting in a word for Cherubini's Requiem, which (the Dies Iræ, perhaps, excepted) is finely adapted to a mass of voices with only the organ.—Athenæum.

Provincial.

The Edinburgh Musical Association, according to the Evening Courant, last week gave a very excellent performance of Mendelssohn's music to a Midsummer Night's Dream, at the Music Hall, EDINBURGH. The play was recited by Miss Aitken, of Glasgow. The performance, however, did not prove attractive, whereupon the journalist thus denounces the public for their lack of taste:—"The attendance was very poor. If the conjunction of such names as Shakspeare and Mendelssohn could not draw out an audience, we daresay that Orpheus himself, if a reality and alive, would have found in Edinburgh his skill and 'occupation gone.' It seems that people must blacken their faces, and deal in buffoonery, to enlist the interest and patronage of our enlightened and art-loving population!"—A correspondent, dating from MANCHESTER, sends us the following chatty letter anent the doings of the touring party composed of Mesdames Louisa Vinning and Baxter, MM. Tennant and Allan Irving, Herr Becker, &c., &c., which has been lately rapidly and successfully coursing the provinces:—"What a blessing for sinners as well as singers that the Lord's day comes once a week, and that the said day is not an exclusive luxury. Here we are once more in Manchester, with nearly two-thirds of our tour over, and still some twelve or fourteen concerts yet on hand. I don't know how it is, but the weeks and days on tours appear to me to have unusual length, at all events, our day is often a precious long one, a matter of sev enteen hours, consequently the night on musical tours has only seven hours, a fact I have yet failed to see noticed in almanacks. It is also curious to note the perfect league that exists between the different hotels as to food. Twenty-eight establishments have I put up at, and never yet finished my dinner without an apple tart. Only imagine the whole twenty-eight to appear fresh and lively in a row before one some fine night! and as there are fifteen or sixteen more concerts, one has a sad look-out for the same number of the now detested pastry. Wonderful to relate, on this tour we have not only managed to get on right well with the public, but also—a far more difficult thing to do—with each other. Our ladies, Mad. Vinning and Mad. Laura Baxter—the latter singing for Miss Poole—have done wonders. I think Mad. Vinning's voice singularly improved since her marriage (not always the case), and her singing of the 'first violet' regularly brings down the public. Mad. Laura Baxter, although singing under a disadvantage (Miss Poole having been the lady engaged), makes matters all right with the public the moment they hear her really fine voice. 'Che farò' and 'Fanciulle che il core' are sure cards every night. Mr. Allan Irving and Mr. Tennant make up the rest of the vocal quartet, and do their best. Last, though not least, comes Herr Becker, who, I need hardly assure you, has made a grand success wherever he has performed, always playing genuine music, without resort to clap-trap of any kind. At Birmingham, the night of the day on which his accident took place, although quite blind and suffering tortures, the impression he made was positively enormous. He was recalled three times. I am delighted to hear through your columns that he is better. Mr. Chatterton (harp) and Herr Bohrer (piano) have joined the troup. There has been something to do since the tour commenced. Two concerts at the Crystal Palace, one at Chatham, Croydon, Leicester, Nottingham (engaged by the Robin Hood Rifles), Lincoln, Hull, Stockton, Edinburgh, Glasgow (with an audience of 3,500 to listen to music they would not have done ten years ago), Sunderland, Redditch (so called from the quantity of blood shed in the neighbourhood by one Cromwell, now celebrated for its needles, pins, and fish-hooks), Kidderminster, Leamington, Birmingham, Shrewsbury (where the party sang a local ode, with local orchestra, in honour of certain Wenlock games), Manchester, Worcester, Ashton-under-Lyne (with an hotel quite a caution to future tourists), Lancaster, Blackburn, and, last night, Manchester again. The rest of the tour will be taken out in Ireland, at Cork, Dublin, Armagh, and Belfast. Then Glasgow, Carlisle, and Newcastle, which will finish their peregrinations.

From the Malvern News we glean the following account of the new organ just completed for Manchester Cathedral:—

MR. Nicholson, of Worcester, has just completed a new and magnificent organ for Manchester Cathedral, the construction of which is carried out in a manner that more than sustains the reputation of the builder. The instrument is complete, and Mr. Nicholson has introduced a great many new inventions and mechanical contrivances, which are much desired by organists, and render it, as it was pronounced by Mr. Haynes, the most perfect instrument he had ever touched. It comprises upwards of forty stops, with three manuals, and gives to the organist full scope and power over the instrument. Among other additions there is a great improvement in the pneumatic lever, which makes it repeat as distinctly as the notes of the pianoforte. The plan of the pedal organ is quite new, and makes it easy to the organist to play upon. Instead of the pedals being flat on the surface and arranged in a straight line as the manuals, they are made concave and radiated, thus adapting themselves to the position of the performer, as the pedals will meet his feet as he is required to turn upon his seat. The diapason and reed stops are very fine, and the choir organ is particularly brilliant from its sweetness and purity of tone, the solo flute in the choir organ being as fine a one as we have heard. On Saturday last a large number of admirers of organ music and the élite of the neighbourhood assembled at Mr. Nicholson's manufactory, in Worcester, to hear the instrument. The company numbered upwards of 100, and amongst those present were Canon Wood, Revs. R. Sarjeant, T. L. Wheeler, R. R. Fowler, R. Cattley, J. H. Wilding, Temple, Atkins (Ombersley); W. P. Price, Esq. (a great admirer of organs, who came specially from Gloucester to hear the instrument), J. W. Isaac, Esq., — Osborne, Esq., &c., &c. The programme, the performance of which by Mr. Haynes, organist of the Priory Church, Malvern, brought out the many beautiful qualities of the instrument with admirable effect, was selected as follows:—Grand Organ Sonata in A major, Mendelssohn; Andante, 1st Symphony, Haydn; "Cujus Animam," "Stabat Mater," Rossini; grand fantasia, "Russian Hymn," Freyer; Benedictus and Gloria, "Twelfth Mass," Mozart; fugue, in A minor, Bach; Andante, Symphony in C, Mozart; grand fantasia, "Partant pour la Syrie," pedal obligato, W. Haynes. The pieces most admired were "Stabat Mater," the Benedictus, and the fugue. Universal admiration was expressed at the brilliancy and purity of tone of the instrument. We are pleased to find that the rev the vicar, in his arduous task of promoting the restoration of the fine old Priory Church, has not forgotten the organ; and we are informed that he has given orders to Mr. Nicholson to rebuild the entire organ in the Abbey, and to make several valuable additions, from specifications furnished by Mr. Haynes.

One of our Irish correspondents sends the following communication from ARMAGH, bearing date December 17, which we print entire:—

"A very excellent morning concert was given here on Thursday last, by Mr. Allan Irving's touring party, consisting of Mad. Louisa Vinning, Mlle. Laura Baxter, Mr. Tennant, Mr. Allan Irving, Herr Bohrer, and Mr. Frederick Chatterton; in addition to which we had Mr. Thackeray, a very good tenor, who has lately joined our cathedral choir, and Mr. George B. Allen. Mad. Vinning's sympathetic voice told effectively in a room well adapted for sound; and Mad. Baxter's fine deep notes came out most powerfully. Both ladies received much applause, and were encored in several pieces. Mr. Tennant was encored in Blumenthal's ballad, "We are parted," which honour, however, he declined; and Mr. Irving's chaste interpretation of Salaman's song, "I arise from dreams of thee," was highly appreciated by the audience. Mr. Thackeray sang "Sweet form, that on my dreamy gaze," from Lurline—a song, by the way, that few tenors would like to attack in the morning, its pitch being so very high—and proved himself equal to it. Herr Bohrer's playing of Liszt's grand fantasia on airs in Le Prophète was very fine, and established him as a first-class pianist. Mr. Frederic Chatterton gave two of his own effective solos in his own brilliant style, one of which was encored and was repeated, the audience not being disposed to let him off with merely a bow as they did the singers. Mr. Allen and Herr Bohrer alternately accompanied the vocal music in a musician-like manner; and, altogether, the concert gave great satisfaction to a most aristocratic audience, among which we observed the Countess of Erne, Lord and Lady Crichton, Lady Molineaux, Lady Caroline Burgess, the Dean of Armagh, Mrs. and Miss Disney, Major Caulfield, Mr. and Mrs. Verner, and a host of other fashionables."

From the same correspondent we have received a letter respecting a concert given by the same party at BELFAST, dated the day following which we also publish in extenso:—

"Mr. Allan Irving's party gave two concerts here last week with great success, as far as excellency of performance went, but not as regards audience. The fact is we are all here members of some society, and we go to our own concerts, but we object to all others from principle This is very absurd but it is quite true; and it is but fair that touring parties of artists should be made acquainted with the fact. Our town is fast expanding, and we may hope in the course of a few years to see it outgrow the miserable petty jealousies which now exist between the musical societies to the detriment of all, and what is far worse—to the positive injury of art. A proof of the latter is not wanting. When Mad. Novello was about to pay us her farewell visit, it was proposed that each of the two leading societies—the Anacreontic and the Classical Harmonists—should engage her and party for one concert, so that this great singer should be heard in some great sacred work with band and chorus at one place, and in secular music at the other, and thus all tastes would have been satisfied; but, in consequence of a niggardly spirit shown, this admirable arrangement was prevented, and those who loved sacred music were obliged to hear such songs as those in the Messiah and Creation sung to a pianoforte accompaniment, or not at all.—But to return to Mr. Irving's concerts. The programme contained many pieces from the new works, Robin Hood, Undine, Lurline, &c., and the concerts were most agreeable ones and gave much pleasure to those who were fortunate enough to be present."

The Musical Union of BIRMINGHAM keeps up the character of its programme with fastidious care. At the last concert the following first-rate selection was given :—

Quartet No. 3, (Op. 18) Beethoven. Song, "The Orphan" Blumenthal. Solo, pianoforte, Heller. Quartet No. 2, in E flat, Mozart. Solo, violoncello, Piatti. Song, "When the thorn," Weber. Second Grand Trio (Op. 66), Mendelssohn.

The executants were Miss Armstrong (vocalist), Messrs. H. and G. Hayward (violins), Mr. R. Blagrove (viola), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Messrs. Duchemin and Flavell (piano). The string quartet of Beethoven, a lengthy, elaborate, and beautiful work, but scarcely comparable as a whole to some other quartets of the same master introduced at former meetings, opened the proceedings. "In speaking of its performance, by Messrs. H. and G. Hayward, R. Blagrove, and Signor Piatti," writes the Birmingham Journal, "criticism becomes almost a task of supererogation. Whether as regarded the conception or the execution, the precision of the individual artists, or the unity of the whole, the performance was equally irreproachable, and even the accidental flaws to which human instruments in human fingers are ever liable, so few and unobtrusive as to excite the astonishment of every intelligent observer." Some remarks on Signor Piatti's playing, by the same writer, are worth quoting: "Signor Piatti's playing is characterised by great ease and fluency, and his tone by equal sweetness and power. He never seeks to dazzle but is content to delight, and evokes the sentiment of admiration more by the absence of all apparent effort in producing the most brilliant results than by the acrobatic dexterity which constitutes so remarkable a feature in the performance of other great violoncellists, especially of the famous Bottesini. With the same apparently limited expenditure of muscular effort he can produce the round, liquid tones of the flute, and the deep sonorous pealing harmonies of the organ, while in the more florid passages his roulades almost equal in ease, fluency, and emotional character the vocal execution of a brilliant songstress." Miss Armstrong, the vocalist, appears to have pleased more by her sweet voice and concert style, than her force or expression.

At LEEDS Handel's oratorio Samson was chosen for performance by the Leeds Town Hall Concert Society, at their last Saturday evening's concert, and was under the patronage of the Mayor (J. Kitson, Esq.), and the Corporation. The solo vocalists engaged were—Miss Helena Walker (soprano), Miss Crosland (contralto), Mr. John Morgan (tenor), and Mr. Weiss (basso). The chorus was composed of the Madrigal Society's Concert Choir, and the band was that of the West Riding Orchestral Union, led by Mr. Haddock. Mr. Spark presided at the organ, and Mr. Jackson, of Bradford, officiated as the conductor.

DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who are engaged by Mr. Mitchell, will make their first appearance in London early in January, at the large room, St. James's Hall, and will give a short series of their highly attractive Concerts.

BERLIN.—An intended performance of La Traviata, in Berlin, has been forbidden by the authorities on the ground that the libretto is unfit for the ears of a Protestant city; seeing that this drama in its original form of La Dame aux Camelias has been frequently performed on the stage there, this official interference is somewhat curious and inconsistent.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.—The sixth concert proved by far the most attractive of this season, St. James's Hall being crammed to such an extent as to make standing room a matter of difficulty. Independently of the excellence of the selection, which included compositions of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Haydn, Dussek, Macfarren, &c., there were other causes to account for the enormous attendance, the names of Miss Arabella Goddard, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss no doubt exercising their influence, to say nothing of this being the last concert before Christmas, a month, indeed, elapsing ere the Monday Popular Concerts can be resumed. The quartets, Mendelssohn's in E minor (Op. 44), and Beethoven's in A (Op. 18), have already more than once been introduced at these entertainments; while Steibelt's sonata in E flat, for pianoforte solus (dedicated to Mad. Bonaparte), and Haydn's in F major, for pianoforte and violin (adapted from one of his string quartets), were heard for the first time. The pianoforte sonata of Steibelt was thoroughly welcome as a genial and interesting novelty, if not altogether, to be compared with many of those forming the extensive répertoire with which, thanks to the Monday Popular Concerts, the public are now familiar. Perhaps no small share of the applause it created may be attributed to the unsurpassable performance of Miss Arabella Goddard, who made her first appearance this season, and was received with that genuine heartiness only accorded to special favourites, and unanimously recalled at the conclusion of the sonata. As a second sonata from the same pen (and in the same key) is hinted at, we may possibly have another opportunity of judging of a composer who has been undeservedly neglected of recent years. Without pretending (as some insist) to very marked individuality *, Steibelt's music seems to possess (does possess) a certain (an absolutely) graceful and even flow, which must satisfy, if it does not precisely entrance (how often is that the case?) the hearer; and we doubt not it will improve upon acquaintance.† In the duet the honours were shared with M. Sainton, who, Frenchman though he be, shows himself thoroughly cosmopolitan in capability, and in every instance rendering the most ample justice to his composer, being alike at home in all and every school of music. Particularly noticeable was M. Sainton's playing in the quartets we have mentioned, firmness, vigour, and richness of tone characterising it throughout. Messrs. Ries, Schreurs, and Piatti, as usual, took the second violin, viola, and violoncello, and worthily maintained their reputation as executants of the highest class. From this our readers may infer that the whole of the instrumental part was, as it generally is here, little short of perfect. Nor was the vocal selection in any way less admirable. A charming canzonet by Dussek (the third of his that has been revived at the Monday Popular Concerts), "Gentle hope from heaven descending," was given by Mr. Sims Reeves with the utmost delicacy, and is sure to become as great a favourite as the two others that have preceded it. The music is as unaffected as it is charming, and the words, by Mr. John Oxenford, as in the other instances, present a marked improvement upon the original. The "Adelaide," of Beethoven, has fairly exhausted all terms of praise, and Mr. Reeves' singing, sustained by the refined and exquisite accompaniment of Miss Arabella Goddard, was the vocal "gem" of the evening. The audience would not rest satisfied with the eminent tenor's bowing his acknowledgments, but persisted in an encore, to which Mr. Reeves responded by repeating the last movement, an unwise concession, we think, from one who has lately set his face resolutely against the system so often justly decried as vicious. The Sompnour's song, "The monk within his cell," from Macfarren's very successful opera, Robin Hood, was heard for the first time as it is written, without curtailment, and those who know (and who does not?) the magnificent voice Mr. Weiss possesses, can well imagine how completely effective such a song would be in his hands. We hope to hear our great English basso repeat this at a future concert. The pedlar's song from Mendelssohn's Son and Stranger has been so frequently sung by Mr. Weiss that we need do no more than say that upon this occasion it was rendered with even more than his usual spirit and energy, and commanded the most hearty applause. The concerts will be resumed on January 14th, when M.

* The exact contrary being the truth.—ANGUISH.

† It has no need of the ordeal.—Ibid.

Vieuxtemps is to make his first appearance in London after an absence of eight years.

DODINAS.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—A concert, for the exhibition of the students as composers or executants, was given on the 8th inst., at the rooms of the institution, Tenterden Street. The following was the programme:—

PART I.—Selection from Idomeneo, Mozart; Overture; Coro, "Gediam la pace, trionfi amore," solo parts by Miss Sellman, Miss Flewitt, and Mr. Wallace Wells; Aria con coro, "Tutti nel cor vi sente," Miss Robertine Henderson; Aria, "Se il padre perdei," Miss Armytage; Aria, "Idoi mio se ritroso," Miss Robertine Henderson; Marcia and recit. "Odo da lunge," Miss Robertine Henderson; Coro, "Placido è il mar," solo part, Miss Robertine Henderson; Tersetto, "Pria di partir O Dio," Miss Robertine Henderson, Miss Robinson, and Mr. Wallace Wells; coro, "Qual nuovo terrore," solo part, Mr. Wallace Wells; recit, "Solitudini amiche aure amarose," aria, "Zeffiretti lusinghieri," Miss Armytage; duetto, "S'io non moro a questi accenti," Miss Armytage and Miss Robinson; coro, "O voto tremendo," solo part, Mr. Wallace Wells; Marcia Funebre.

PART II.—Andante and rondo, from concerto in C minor (MS.), for pianoforte, Mr. G. H. Thomas, G. H. Thomas; cantata (MS.), "The Sea Fairies," H. C. Banister. For chorus of female voices, soprano, and tenor solos, orchestra, and harp—Prologue, tenor solo, "Slow sailed the weary mariners," Mr. Wallace Wells; chorus, "Whither away?" "Day and night to the billow the fountain calls;" song with chorus, "And the rainbow forms and flies on the land." Miss C. Westbrook (harp obbligato, Miss H. Condron). Ballad (MS.), "The parting Wish," Miss Robertine Henderson, Miss Clint; coro pastorale, "L'Asia in faville' (L'Aureliano in Palmira), soli parts by Miss Bramley, Miss Spence, and Mr. Wallace Wells, Rossini.

Mr. Lucas conducted. The concert was in every respect interesting, and in most respects satisfactory.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—The sixth season was inaugurated on Friday evening in St. James's Hall, the destruction of St. Martin's Hall having rendered it necessary to seek another arena. St. James's Hall is much better adapted for a comparatively small number of voices than we should have expected. The area of the orchestra was contracted by means of a screen with projecting top, an arrangement by which much was gained. The following was the programme:—

PART I.—God save the Queen. Part-song, "Summer is flying," George Benson; part-song, "Shepherds up!" Fred. Clay; cradle-song, Henry Smart; sonata, for pianoforte and violoncello, W. S. Bennett; glee, "Once upon my cheek," Dr. Callcott; glee, for male voices, "O thou whose beams," John Goss; madrigal, "As Vesta," Thos. Weelkes.

PART II.—Summer song, W. C. Macfarren; glee, "When winds breathe soft," Samuel Webbe; serenade, "In this hour of softened splendour," Ciro Pinsuti; part-song, "Welcome, spring," Henry Leslie; air with variations, for pianoforte and violoncello, Mendelssohn; part-song, "Ah! could I with fancy stray," J. L. Hatton; madrigal, "April is in my mistress's face," madrigal, "Now is the month of Maying," Thomas Morley.

The part-songs, by Mr. Benson, Mr. Walter Macfarren, Mr. Clay, and Signor Pinsuti, were new, while Mr. Goss's glee, Weelke's madrigal, Morley's "April," and Mr. Hatton's part-song were novelties. There was, therefore, a good deal of freshness about the entertainment, though no special piece, on a large scale, was brought forward. The execution was almost uniformly good, the only exception being a slight trip in Mr. Leslie's part-song, which was, nevertheless, encored, a compliment also bestowed on Mr. Henry Smart's cradle song, Calcott's glee, and Pinsuti's serenade. The glee was sung by Miss Fosbroke, Mrs. Dixon, Mr. Regaldi, and Mr. Hodson, and created quite a sensation. Such finished part-singing is seldom heard. "When winds breathe soft" was well sung by Miss Annie Cox, Mr. Barrett, Mr. Matthison, Mr. F. Walker, and Mr. Henry. The instrumental performers were Signor and Mad. Piatti, whose execution of Mendelssohn's duo and Sterndale Bennett's sonata gained them the warmest plaudits. Mr. Henry Leslie conducted with his usual steadiness and decision.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.—On Thursday evening a lecture was delivered at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, on Weber and his works, with musical illustrations, undertaken by the Arion choir. The conclusions arrived at by the lecturer appear to have been formed from a careful consideration of Weber's compositions. A comparative analysis of the pianoforte music of the great masters, in which the lecturer placed Weber as a writer for the instrument in a very exalted position, was perhaps the most interesting part of the discourse. The pieces performed by Mr. Gilbert, in exemplification of his remarks, were the slow movement and rondo (moto continuo) from the sonata in C Op. 24, and the Polonaise in E flat, Op. 50. The vocal illustrations were the Mass in G, the soli parts by Miss Charlier, Mad. Andrea, Messrs. Belton, Haughton, and Milne; a charming little chamber song, by Miss E. Gresham; "O Araby," (Oberon), by Mad. Andrea; and the soprano song from Preciosa, by Miss Fosbroke. In the scena, "Softly sighs," (Freischütz) Madame Gilbert was eminently successful. The final chorus in Preciosa, and a selection from Euryanthe concluded a most successful evening. From the manner in which the members of the Arion choir acquitted themselves, we are inclined to think they will take high ground amongst our metropolitan choirs. The accompanists, Mr. W. C. Filby (pianoforte) and Dr. Bennett Gilbert (harmonium) added much to the effect of the choral parts. The lecture was largely and fashionably attended.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—(Communicated.)—The Crystal Palace is likely to be the scene of great gaiety this Christmas. The movement for making Monday a general holiday has met with so much success, that it has been determined to commence the usual Christmas festivities on that day instead of on Boxing-day, as before. The centre transept and naves of the Palace will be garlanded and festooned with holly and evergreens, and decorated with shields and flags of various nations, and coloured lanterns; and in the centre of each twenty-four feet girder is hung a banner with an appropriate Christmas inscription. In the great transept, a spacious stage is placed, on which a variety of amusements by many of the most popular artists of the day, will be continued from mid-day until dusk, when the shadow pantomime will be displayed on the great screen in front of the stage. Besides these, there is to be a "Tent of mystery," various sports and pastimes, and other matters calculated to afford abundance of amusement and entertainment apart from the other well known attractions of the Palace. The whole of these amusements are under the direction of Mr. Nelson Lee. The great Christmas Tree is erected at the junction of the north nave with the centre transept. The thousands of toys, bannerets, variegated lamps, &c., depending from its branches and sparkling in every ray of light, give it a cheerful and brilliant appearance. This is of course the characteristic attraction of the season; but hardly less attractive, especially to the juvenile visitors, are the exhibitors' stalls, running the entire length of the naves, literally groaning beneath a crowd of countless varieties of toys and articles of a better description, adapted for Christmas presents. At dusk every stall is lighted up for the evening promenade, and then the entire Palace presents one of the gayest scenes conceivable.

It seems now pretty generally decided, that Monday the 24th, is to be a general holiday, and therefore, as we have already said, the Christmas entertainments will begin on that day. The London holiday makers are sure to gather here in great strength, and as additional facilities for railway communication are now offered by the opening of the Victoria Station, as well as the line to Canterbury, which passes through the Crystal Palace Station, a large accession of country visitors may be looked for at Christmas, particularly as the announcements of the Company truly state, that wet or dry, frost or snow, the Crystal Palace is the true winter resort for all classes. It is unnecessary to state that the Palace will be open as usual on Christmas day itself from nine till dusk.

MR. BALFE'S BIANCA.—Mr. Balfe's new opera of Bianca was repeated on Saturday evening before a crowded audience with increased effect. Certain judicious cuts made the piece play "closer" than on the first night, and the performers were naturally more at their ease. Mr. W. Harrison, in the very arduous character of Fortespada, fully maintained the reputation he has so long enjoyed. His intimate knowledge of what is termed "stage business" was perhaps never called more largely into requisition than in this opera, where also his conscientious delivery of concerted music, in which he always takes care to be perfect to a note, proves particularly valuable, as the work abounds in morceaux d'ensemble, and his vocal means are excellently suited throughout, but especially in two songs—the spirited "brindisi," "Glorious wine," and the thoroughly Balfian ballad, "Once more upon the path of life," both of which, we may state by the way, were heartily redemanded on Saturday as on the first night of the opera. The scenes where Fortespada confronts the conspirators, becomes master of their secrets, and forces them to recognise him as their leader; when the bravo, disguised as an old mendicant, saves the life of Bianca; and when he mysteriously enters the Duke's chamber to demand his daughter's hand in marriage, unquestionably demand from the principal tenor of the opera ability of no common order; and it was precisely in these trying scenes that Mr. Harrison acquitted himself most honourably, and gained the largest amount of applause. The three new baritones brought forward by the Covent Garden management during the present season are furnished with parts in Bianca. Matteo Visconti, Duke of Milan, is played by Mr. Alberto Lawrence; Count Malespina (the chief conspirator), by Mr. Henry Wharton; while Mr. Theodore Distin appears as "a herald." Mr. Wharton's best success was gained on Saturday evening, as on the previous occasion, in Malespina's scena, "Yes, proud Bianca," the slow cantabile movement of which he sings gracefully and with considerable feeling. Mr. Alberto Lawrence, as Matteo Visconti, gave fresh evidence of talent which, with study and practice, may eventually be turned to good account. The scena, "A warning scroll," the duets, "From my childhood," and "Demon more than man," require very high musical and histrionic talent from the executant; and it is therefore no small praise to Mr. Alberto Lawrence to state that his performance was in every instance satisfactory. Of those clever and experienced performers, Mr. H. Corri and Mr. St. Albyn, little need be said beyond remarking that they have both parts well suited to their abilities, and play with their accustomed excellence. It should perhaps be added, that Mr. St. Albyn made an unusual sensation, not so much by singing or acting as by his extraordinarily vigorous and agile dancing. So captivating indeed were his performances upon the "light fantastic toe," that the house applauded him most enthusiastically. It was doubtless something quite novel to see a tenor make entrechats and jettées sur la pointe. To Miss Thirlwall, one of the most promising of rising vocalists, very great praise is due. Her intelligent and genial performance of a somewhat ungrateful part contributed largely to the success of the opera. For Miss Louisa Pyne we have nothing but eulogy. Whether as singer or actress she shone with extraordinary brightness, and never, certainly, was her genius more thoroughly appreciated. Such transcendently-beautiful singing as her renderings of the ballad "In vain I strove my heart to teach," the florid air, "Yes, I shall see him once again," and the rondo-finale, is rarely heard upon any stage; and as much may be said in honour of Miss Pyne's really fine musical declamation in the duet with the Duke in the third act, especially of the solo, "His manly form." We need scarcely add that Miss Pyne was enthusiastically applauded on every possible occasion, or that all her principal pieces were redemanded. Never, in short, did our great English soprano achieve a more legitimate triumph. The subordinate parts were well filled; and the band and chorus, under the able direction of Mr. Mellon, were all that could be wished.—Morning Post, Dec. 10th.

A THEATRE BEHIND THE SCENES.—A theatre is like a Hindoo household, and all the men and women before you are divided from each other by the law of caste. In one corner sits a "singing chambermaid"—a performer confined to acting such parts as waiting-women (with songs) and nothing else. If, in your ignorance as a young dramatic author, you were to wish her to take a character requiring the appearance of age, you would offend her, and the middle-aged lady sitting at her side, whose duty it is to play all the "second old women," and no others, upon that particular stage. On another couch is the "first old woman,"—an imperious-looking lady of the mother-in-law class—who has her sphere of action as strictly defined as that of a chess-board queen. Near her you will observe a rather cheerful middle-aged gentleman, known only dramatically as the "first old man," supported on his right by another middle-aged, rather thin gentleman, who is similarly known as the "second old man." The slim, genteel gentleman, not very young, who is talking to a handsome commanding lady, is the "light comedian," but nothing more. His companion is known as the "leading lady;" while the two young men who are standing opposite to her on the other side of the room, are the "first and second walking gentlemen." Near them is that highly important person the "leading low comedian," almost faced by his more humble brother act or the "second low comedian." Two other gentlemen, in different parts of the room, are known respectively as "eccentric comedian" and "utility actor;" and they have corresponding companions amongst the ladies.—"Cornhill Magazine" for December.

THE TRINUMMUS OF PLAUTUS.

BY HUDIBRAS THE YOUNGER.

"Old Charmides, gone money getting,
Has left a son too fond of betting;
So Callicles must keep an eye on
His house and very hopeful scion.
The youngster turns out most unsteady,
Gets very soon in want of 'ready.'
His purse grown empty, he supplies it,
Selling his house—his guardian buys it.
The world at this begins a mocking,
Good-natured friends cry out, 'How shocking!'
So one, whose name my verse won't fit in,
Determines with his fault to twit him,
But Callicles, to his oration,
Returns a thorough explanation:
'He's bought the house—he don't deny it—
'For fear another man should buy it.
'The father, knowing youth loves pleasure,
'Down in his cellar hid a treasure.
'It now is safe, i' th' proper quarter,
'For Charmides, or else his daughter.'
The youth Lysiteles advances—
Prefers hard work to love and dances.
Gets his papa's consent (not willing)
To wed a girl without a shilling.
Nay more, at last, on his suggestion,
Old Philto goes to pop the question.
The spendthrift now, with proper spirit,
Protests he'll bear his own demerit:
For dowry he is bent on giving
A farm—his only means of living.
So Stasimus, his servant trusty,
Finding his master cut up rusty,
Depicts in colours most unpleasant
The evils of this marriage present.
Tells Philto (such a lie is scrubbish)
It's just the place for shooting rubbish.
The youngsters next dispute and bother,
But neither can persuade the other.
The oldsters then, in consultation,
Hit on a plan of operation:
So Callicles the treasure digs up,
The while his friend an actor figs up
To come to save the youth's last pittance,
As father's friend, with a remittance.
Fourth act: quoth Charmides, excited—
'Had such a passage—quite delighted.
'But who's my friend? and who's his hatter?
'Calling—I'll find out what's the matter.'
But little does it take to show him;
'None knows himself as others know him.'
At last says he, concealment scorning,
'I'm Charmides, my friend—good morning.
Of course now comes an explanation—
Speeches polite, congratulation.
The wedding's fixed, and all are jolly,
The young man's pardoned for his folly;
But, as good vows sometimes miscarry,
With this condition—he must marry.
And this the poet thinks is quite a
Fate hard enough—so does the writer."

Advertisements.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

	s.	d.
BILLET (ALEXANDRE).
"Lucia de Lammermoor"	4	0
"Les Huguenots"	4	0
"La Traviata"	4	0
BRISSAC (JULES).
"Rigoletto" (transcription of the Quartet)	4	0
BRUNNER (C. T.)
"Martha"	3	6
CUNIO (ANGELO).
"La Sonnambula"	5	0
LEFEBURE (WELY).
"Hommage à Sa Majeste Napoleon III." (caprice militaire)	6	0
"Le retour de l'armee" (Marche triomphale)	6	0
LOUIS (N.)
"Fleurs Venitiennes." Trois mélodies Italiennes variées. No. 1 in G. 2 in C. 3 in B flat (each)	4	0
MAYER (CHARLES).
"The Royal Saxe-Coburg March"	4	0
ROUBIER (HENRI).
"Le depart du Zouave." (Grand Quadrille militaire)	4	0
RUMMEL (J.)
"La Favorita"	4	0
"I Lombardi"	4	0
SCHLOESSER (ADOLPHE).
"Don Juan" (Grand Duo)	6	0
"Terpsichore" (Duo de Salon)	6	0
WAGNER (R.)
March from Tannhauser, arranged by Theodore Mauss	5	0

The above duets are of a pleasing and popular character, and are adapted for moderately advanced performers.
London: Ashdown and Parry, 18, Hanover Square.

ORGANIST.—An ORGANIST is required for the Parish Church of St. George the Martyr, Queen Square, Middlesex. Salary, £40 per annum. The duties to be performed will extend to three services on Sundays and on the Feasts and Holy Days, when there is service in the church, and to the instruction of the Choir and School Children. Testimonials to be sent to Mr. Church (Clerk to the Trustees of the said parish), at 9 Bedford Row, W. C., on or before Thursday, the 27th December, 1860.

ORGANS.—To be DISPOSED OF, on very liberal terms, on account of dissolution of partnership, a number of Church Organs, including two of 20 Stops, others varying from 10 stops to the smaller sizes—all first class modern instruments and worthy of immediate attention. A printed list forwarded on application to H. Bryceson, at the Organ Factory, Brook Street, Euston Road, N. W.

HARMONIA DIVINA.—A COLLECTION of STANDARD PSALM and HYMN TUNES, Anthems, and Sacred Songs. Edited and arranged for one voice, with an accompaniment for the pianoforte, by J. T. STONE. In three volumes, price 7s. 6d. each. This work is beautifully printed from engraved plates, and elegantly bound. A fourth volume is on the press, and the complete work—4 vols. in 1—superbly bound in crimson cloth, price £1 1s., will be published early in 1861.
Brewer and Co., 23 Bishopsgate Street Within.

LETTS' APPOINTMENT DIARY, price 2s. 6d. in roan tuck pocket-book. An hourly arrangement of each day, to enable Professors and Teachers of Music to regulate their engagements exactly. This book originated with one of the greatest Vocalists of the day.
Sold by all Booksellers. Descriptive catalogue, gratis.
Letts, Son & Co., Publishers, 8 Royal Exchange.

BOOSEY & SONS' LIST OF POPULAR PIANOFORTE and DANCE MUSIC, by the most celebrated Composers.
N.B.—The Dance Music is all illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD and PACKER.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.
'Twas He my only Thought, from Bianca.
Gold Rules the World, from Bianca.
What Sunshine Bright, from Bianca.
The Marriage of Georgette.
The Skipper and his Boy.
Come into the Garden Maud.
Santa Maria, from Dinorah.
The Shadow Air, from Dinorah.
The Power of Love, from Satanella.
Thou art so Near, (Reichardt).

KUHE.
Bianca, Fantaisie Brillante.
Bianca, Galop de Bravura.
Dinorah, Fantaisie de Concert.
Dinorah, Fantaisie Brillante.
Satanella, Valse de Concert.
Satanella, Fantaisie Brillante.
Zampa, Fantaisie Brillante.
Domino Noir, Fantaisie Brillante.
Robert le Diable, Fantaisie Brillante.
Rigoletto, Fantaisie Brillante.
Schubert's Ave Maria.
Schubert's Serenade.

ASCHER.
Toujours Gai, Galop Brillant.
Les Cloches du Village.
Thou art so Near (Reichardt).
Dinorah, Illustration.
Les Vepres Siciliennes, ditto.
Un Ballo in Maschera, (Nocturne).

T. MAUSS.
Merrily over the Snow (Schloesser).
De Corsaire Galop Brillant.
Nourmahal, (Nocturne).

EMILE BERGER.
Notre Dame Romance, Illustrated.
Campanella Mazurka.
Fantaisie on Balfe's Bianca.
Selection from Bianca, Illustrated.
Selection from Satanella, ditto.
Selection from Dinorah, ditto.
Selection from Martha, ditto.

MADAME OURY.
Bianca Fantaisie Brillante.
Santa Lucia.
Auld Robin Gray.
Souvenirs d'Ecosse.
Fantaisie on Jacobite Airs.

BENEDICT.
Albion, Fantaisie on English Airs.
Erin, Fantaisie on Irish Airs.
Caledonia, Fantaisie on Scotch Airs.

TALEXY.
Satanella Polka Mazurka.
Dinorah Polka Mazurka.
Eva Polka Mazurka.

NORDMANN.
Evening with Meyerbeer.
Evening with Balfe.
Evening with Christy's Minstrels.

LAURENT.
Bianca Waltz, Illustrated.
Bianca Quadrille, ditto.
Bianca Polka, ditto.
Bianca Galop, ditto.
Spring Buds Waltz, ditto.
Margaretta Waltz, ditto.
Daisy Waltz, ditto.
Christmas Waits Quadrille, ditto.
Lord Lovel's Waltz, ditto.
Beloved Star Waltz, on Thou art so near.

BURCKHARDT.
New Year's Quadrille, Illustrated.
Ramsgate Sands Quadrille, ditto.
Serpentine Quadrille, ditto.
Bal Masque Quadrille, ditto.
Knickerbocker's Polka, ditto.
Dream of the Rose Waltz.

MARRIOTT.
Colleen Bawn Waltz, Illustrated.
Woman in White Waltz, ditto.
Don Pasquale Waltz.
Waterfall Galop.

BALFE'S NEW OPERA,

BIANCA,

THE BRAVO'S BRIDE,

AS PERFORMED WITH IMMENSE SUCCESS AT THE ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"An unquestionable success."—Times.

"It contains melodies not only beautiful, but strikingly original."—Daily News.

"This last work is beyond comparison Mr. Balfe's best."—Daily Telegraph.

"It is clever, gay, full of motion, and, above all, full of melody."—Athenæum.

"Bianca is the most perfect and beautiful of all Balfe's operas."—News of the World.

VOCAL MUSIC.

	s.	d.
'TWAS HE MY ONLY THOUGHT. Ballad. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	0
"In vain I strove"
YES, I SHALL SEE HIM ONCE AGAIN (Song) with Cabaletta } AS TORRENT ROAMING O'ER THE HEIGHT . . } Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	3	0
WHAT SUNSHINE BRIGHT. Rondo Finale. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	6
MY CHILDHOOD'S DAYS. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE.	2	0
ONE, TWO, THREE. Song from the Minuet Scene. Sung by MISS THIRLWALL	3	0
FROM MY CHILDHOOD DIDST THOU PRAY. Duettino. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE	2	6
ALTHOUGH WITH COLD DISDAIN. Duet. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. WHARTON	3	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song (with Chorus). Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	3	0
ONCE MORE UPON THE PATH OF LIFE. Ballad. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	6
'TIS NOT PURPLE AND GOLD THAT ENNOBLE THE MAN. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GOLD RULES THE WORLD. Song. Sung by MR. WHARTON	2	0
OH! CROWN OF POWER. Song. Sung by MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE.	2	0

 The Concerted and other remaining portion of the Vocal Music is nearly ready.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

	s.	d.
The Overture, arranged as a Duet by the Composer.	6	0
The Favourite Airs, arranged by NORDMANN as Solos and Duets, Three Books . . . each 5*s.* &	6	0
Brinley Richards' "'Twas He my only Thought" .	3	0
Brinley Richards' "Gold Rules the World" . .	3	0
Brinley Richards' "What Sunshine Bright" . .	3	0
Kuhe's Fantaisie Brillante	4	0
Kuhe's Bianca Galop	3	0
Oury's (Madame) Grande Fantaisie . . .	4	0

	s.	d.
Berger's (E.) Fantaisie de Salon	3	0
Jules Brissac's Fantaisie on Bianca . . .	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Quadrille. Illustrated by Brandard	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Valse. Illustrated by Brandard .	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Polka. Illustrated in Colours .	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Galop. Illustrated in Colours .	3	0
Nordmann's Four Favourite Melodies (Arranged for Beginners on the Pianoforte) . . . each	1	0

 Numerous Arrangements for Pianoforte and other Instruments are in hand, and will be published immediately.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, December 22, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES"—Göthe

SUBSCRIPTION—Stamped for Postage—20s. PER ANNUM

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, London, W.

VOL. 38—No. 52 SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1860 PRICE { 4d. Unstamped / 5d. Stamped

V. R.

UNDER THE DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES,
THE PRINCES AND PRINCESSES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
AND MANY OF THE
Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S

GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at his

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC, AT MANCHESTER.

To encourage Native Musical Talent, and to promote the general advancement of Music upon his New and Effective System; also as a

NORMAL SCHOOL

For the Training of Masters to conduct

CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC

For little Children throughout the United Kingdom.

Director and Conductor	Dr. MARK.
Medical Adviser	CHARLES CLAY, M.D.
The Rev. J. B. WILKINSON, of St. John's Church, Manchester, kindly superintends the Religious Instruction.
Master of the General Educational Department	Mr. POWELL, assisted by Junior Masters.
Theory and Harmony	Dr. TENDALL.
Pianoforte	Dr. TENDALL. / Mr. WRIGLEY.
Organist	Dr. TENDALL.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. / Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. / Mr. DONOVAN.
Clarionet and Oboe	Mr. DOWLING.
Flute, and Piccolo	Dr. TENDALL.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Dr. TENDALL.
Vocal Classes	Dr. TENDALL.
Military Drill and Calisthenics	Sergt. FARRELL.
Librarian	Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Secretary to the College	Mr. SQUIRE.

Dr. MARK is open to Engagements either for

THE FIRST ORCHESTRA,

Consisting of 30, 40, or 50 Performers, is conducted by Dr. Mark, and composed of the Advanced Pupils of the Royal College of Music, and some of the "Little Men," who perform Sacred, Classical, Operatic, and Popular Music. Also a Vocalist, Solo Harpist, Solo Pianist, and Organist—or

THE SECOND ORCHESTRA,

Conducted by Mr. Wrigley, which consists of 30 Performers, and is composed of the "Little Men," who play Operatic and Popular Music, and sing favourite Airs and Choruses. Also a Vocalist, and Solo Instrumentalists.

Dr. MARK begs to inform young ladies and gentlemen who are preparing for the profession that he affords opportunities of introducing them to the public by performing at his concerts.

Orphans of the musical profession, and poor children possessing musical talent, are admitted free, and receive a general and musical education, together with board, lodging, and clothing, until the age of fourteen years, when they are either apprenticed to a trade or trained for the profession.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Manchester.

Visitors are admitted from Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two to Four, p.m. every day, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

52

MISS HELEN HOGARTH (Teacher of Singing) begs to inform her pupils and the public that she has RETURNED to town for the season, and has removed from Weymouth Street to No. 71 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square.

SIGNOR and MAD. FERRARI beg to inform their pupils and friends they have REMOVED to 32 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

FLUTE, GUITAR, and CONCERTINA.—LESSONS by Mr. and Mad. R. SIDNEY PRATTEN, at 24 Holles Street, Cavendish Square, W., where may be had the whole of their publications for the above instruments, consisting of nearly 300 Pieces, vocal and instrumental.

DR. MARK and his LITTLE MEN.

BAND OF FORTY BOYS.

First Visit to London—For One Week Only.

St. James's Great Hall, Regent Street and Piccadilly.

Mr. MITCHELL begs to announce that he has entered into an Engagement with Dr. Mark, of the Royal College of Music, Manchester, for the First Appearance in London of his BAND of LITTLE MEN, 40 in number, selected from the students of the College, an institution originated by Dr. Mark, for the purpose of affording an efficient musical and general education to boys in the poorer or middle classes of society throughout the kingdom. Notwithstanding the great success which has attended the concerts given by Dr. Mark and his Little Men throughout Scotland, Ireland, and the provinces, they have never yet appeared in London, and the present engagement is limited to one week only.

The FIRST CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY EVENING, Jan. 12, 1861, at 8 o'clock; Second Concert, on Monday afternoon, Jan. 14, commencing at half-past 2, to terminate about 4 o'clock. The subsequent Concerts will be given on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday Evenings, Jan. 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19; and on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, Jan. 17 and 19.

Sofa stalls (a few numbered and reserved near orchestra), 5s.; reserved seats, 3s.; area, 2s.; back seats and galleries, 1s., which may be obtained at the principal libraries and musicsellers; and at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33 Old Bond Street, W.

Programmes and full particulars will be duly announced.

BUCKLEYS' SERENADERS.—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.—Crowded houses every performance. Every evening at 8, and Two Day Performances on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 3. Tickets may be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, 28 Piccadilly, from 10 till 5. Stalls, 3s.; area, 2s.; gallery, 1s. No bonnets are allowed in the Stalls. Books of the Words, 6d. each. Change of Programme, including Operatic Selections from Lucrezia Borgia, Trovatore and La Sonnambula.

"The most unique and varied entertainment in London."

CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS.—This Evening C. H. Gounod's Opera, FAUST, and selections from "Dinorah," "Trovatore," "Macbeth," &c. After which, the ETHIOPIANS, consisting of Seventeen performers, organised expressly for this establishment, for the performance of Vocal and Instrumental Music, Comic and Sentimental, with Negro Delineations, Anecdotes, &c., in addition to the usual entertainment. The Fine Arts Gallery is open from Eleven a.m. till Twelve p.m.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, and OLD BALLADS, Egyptian Hall.—Mr. MITCHELL begs respectfully to announce that the popular and eminently successful performances of Glees, Madrigals, and Old Ballads by the LONDON GLEE and MADRIGAL UNION, Miss J. Wells and Miss Eyles, Mr. Baxter, Mr. Cumming, Mr. Lawler, and Mr. Land (Conductor) interspersed with Literary Illustrations by T. Oliphant, Esq., will be resumed for One Month Only, commencing on Monday, January 7.—Royal Library, 33 Old Broad Street, W.

EVANS' COTTAGE HARMONIUM at 6*l.* 6s., in a French Polished Pine Case, has the full compass Five Octaves, and a soft, subdued agreeable quality of tone—designed expressly for a cottage or small sitting room.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' HARMONIUM, at 10*l.* 10s., is in a handsome French Polished Oak Case, and possesses that rich organ-like quality of tone so peculiar to all Evans' Instruments.

Boosey & Sons, Manufacturers, 24, Holles Street, London.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—An Illustrated Catalogue of the whole of these well-known Instruments, with one and two Rows of Keys, the Percussion Action and Pedals, at prices ranging from £6 6s. to £147 —May now be had upon application to the

Manufacturers, Boosey & Sons, Holles Street, London.

MUSIC FROM NEWSPAPER

"SCHOTTISH D'AMOUR," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above new Schottish by the popular composer of "A Summer's Day," is just published, for the piano, price 2s. (Orchestral parts, 3s.), by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"SANTA LUCIA," by EUGENE MONIOT. The above popular Neapolitan melody, specially arranged (without octaves), for young pianists, by Eugène Moniot (composer of "A Summer's Day") is just published, price 1s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

R. F. HARVEY'S NEW PIECES for the PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
"Cupid's Repose" (Melody)	3	0
"Pensez à moi" (Rêverie)	3	0

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Harvey's compositions are marked by a decided originality of character. A delightful flow of thoughtful melody pervades all his works. Mr. Harvey, as a writer of music for drawing-room performance, is justly becoming one of the most popular of the day."—Globe.

'THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER," as a Piano Duet, arranged with variations by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

N.B. The above piece will be found suitable for pupils, moderately advanced. Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's acknowledged experience in tuition is a guarantee of the excellence of the above arrangement for that purpose.

NEW SONG—"That Handsome Volunteer," sung by Miss Emma Stanley in her popular entertainment of the "Seven Ages of Woman," composed especially for her by Emile Berger, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W. (Sung also with distinguished success, and invariably encored, by Miss Catharine Lucette, in her original entertainment, (with Captain Morton Price) at the Prince of Wales's Hall, Regent Street.)

BALFE'S NEWEST and most POPULAR SONGS.

	s.	d.
"I love you" (Sung by Sims Reeves)	3	0
"Fresh as a Rose" (Ditto)	3	0
"If I could change as others change" (Sung by Laura Baxter)	2	6
"I'm not in love, remember" (Sung by Miss Parepa)	2	6
"Oh! take me to thy heart again" (Sung by Miss Poole)	2	0

Published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.; where "I love you" may be obtained, transcribed for the Pianoforte by Emile Berger, price 3s.

'GOOD NIGHT," (Cradle Song—Wiegenlied) composed by ALEXANDER REICHARDT, price 2s. 6d. London: published by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

The day, pretty darling, draws near to its close,
Come, cease from your play, on your pillow repose,
You peep from the cradle still laughing and bright,
Kind angels for ever preserve you, good night.

With freedom from sorrow, dear child, you are blest,
To you a pure heaven is your fond mother's breast;
Wild passion some day will your happiness blight,
Kind angels preserve you, my darling, good night.

Ah! happy is he who can slumber like you,
Be ever, dear child, to your innocence true,
The righteous are watched by the spirits of light,
Who guard them while sleeping, my darling, good night.

"Few songs of modern days have achieved a more decided or better merited success than Herr Reichardt's charming lied, "Thou art so near and yet so far," which has for the last two years been the delight of all concert-goers and drawing-room vocalists of more than ordinary pretensions. Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have just published a new composition, from the same original and elegant pen, entitled "Good Night" (a cradle song). The words are exquisitely simple and unaffected, being the address of a mother to her sleeping babe; and it is but justice to Herr Reichardt to say that he has wedded an exquisite domestic poem to a most graceful, unaffected melody, which breathes the very spirit of maternal tenderness. The song, which is written for a tenor voice—the composer being, as our readers know, one of the first of living German vocalists—is in the key of F major; and to amateurs of taste we can cordially recommend "The Cradle Song" as a composition worthy of their attention."—Liverpool Mail.

A SONG FOR THE SEASON.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." (Poetry by M. A. STODART.) Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline;
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone.
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW HARP MUSIC by C. OBERTHUR, "Thou art so near and yet so far." Reichardt's popular song transcribed for the Harp by C. Oberthür, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

MR. WEISS'S NEW SONG—"THE KNIGHT'S VIGIL." (Poetry by J. P. DOUGLAS.) Composed and sung by Mr. W. H. WEISS.

The custom of watching armour in church was a religious duty imposed upon knights who used to consume whole nights in prayer to some saint whom they chose as their patron.

Sir Neville spurr'd his gallant grey,
And hied him on his lonely way;
But ere he from the saddle sprung,
The abbey's midnight chimes had rung.

He doffed his armour, whose fair sheen
The stains of battle ne'er had seen;
And said, "Heav'n send thee I may be,
A worthy son of chivalry."

In hours when bright remembrance came
Athwart his memory like a flame,
A crimson scarf was given to tell,
Of one who loved Sir Neville well.

The gift was fondly cherished yet,
And while his burning glance it met,
He sighing said, "Be thou to me
The beacon star of victory."

Sir Neville kept his vigil lone,
Till the matin star had come and gone,
Then donned his armour and away,
He sped him on his gallant grey.

In many a land on fields of fame,
The watchword was Sir Neville's name,
Where fell the bravest, there fell he,
Fighting for love and chivalry.

The above popular and romantic ballad, now being sung everywhere with the greatest success by Mr. Weiss, is just published, beautifully illustrated, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW BALLAD.—"IN A LEAFY GARDEN," by GEORGE LODER. Sung with great success by Mr. RICHARD SEYMOUR, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

In a leafy garden, 'neath the evening star,
Hand in hand they wander, they that lovers are.
In the west a gleaming, where the sun went down,
In the east a splendour from eve's brightning crown;
Gloom beneath the branches, odours in the air,
Happy are the lovers wandering slowly there.

Night hath many voices, none to him so dear,
As the low-toned whispers dying on his ear;
Night hath dim revealings, none for him so high,
As the true love beaming in that soft dark eye;
In a summer garden, 'neath the evening star,
Ever will they wander, they that lovers are.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"MAY."—New Duettino for equal Voices, by HENRY SMART, is just published, price 2s. 6d.

I hail thee, May,
Midst smiles so gay,
And song and sunny hours;
'Tis sweet to stray
At close of day
To cull thy dainty flowers.

'Tis sweet to tread
The chosen bed
Of daisies bright and fair,
And hear the song
Which floats along
From feather'd warblers near.

Then while I live
I'll ever give
A welcome to thee, May,
For thou art queen,
Of fairest green,
Oh! smiling, lovely May.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW ORGAN MUSIC by HENRY SMART.—"Fugue in E minor," from Handel's "Lessons." Arranged for the Organ by HENRY SMART, is just published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

"THIS WORLD IS A GARDEN."—Song by GEORGE LODER. Words by J. STERLING COYNE. Sung every evening by Mr. ROCKE, and enthusiastically encored, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the successful Operetta of "THE PETS OF THE PARTERRE."

This world is a garden, and women I'll prove,
Are the flowers that surround us wherever we rove,
The blooming and blushing, the sad and the gay,
All beauties combined in dear nature's bouquet.

London: Published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

NEW WALTZ, "The Woman in White," Valse mystérieuse, by Charles Marriott, dedicated to Wilkie Collins, Esq., is just published price 3s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MEYERBEER'S ROYAL WEDDING MARCH (Quatrième Marche aux Flambeaux), composed in honour of the Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, which was played with such immense effect by the Band of the Guides at the Fête of the Orphéonistes at the Crystal Palace, is published for the Pianoforte, price 5s., by Duncan Davison & Co., 244 Regent Street, W.

THE ENTERPRISING IMPRESARIO.

CHAPTER IV.

He has, however, his moments of enjoyment. If a man of taste and fond of art he has opportunities to indulge his fancy of which but few can boast. He will find a pleasure in his pursuits, such as is the envied privilege of artists who derive profit from that which is most gratifying to their self-esteem. By the exercise of his judgment a large class of the community is influenced. The progress of music and the drama may be promoted by his exertions; he can be of more service to rising talent than "the most distinguished patronage." And are not these advantages upon which an impresario may justly pride himself? His vocation is legitimate—speculative, unquestionably, to a certain extent, but not more so than any other business, while requiring, perhaps, greater judgment and experience to be followed with success.

Reckless speculation, whether induced by opposition or an inordinate desire of notoriety, is not enterprise, and is as much to be censured in a theatrical impresario as in any other individual, and perhaps in his case is more reprehensible when it is considered what numbers depend for their livelihood upon his careful and judicious management. The closing of a theatre or failure of any important undertaking for the amusement of the public deprives many families of their weekly stipend, reducing them to penury and want. Singers, actors, and musicians are not the only sufferers, and are better able to withstand such a misfortune than those employed in the other departments of a theatre. By these inferior officers the obedience paid to the manager or "Governor" (as he is called) approaches slavery. His orders are obeyed as implicitly and promptly as those of a despot. His sway is absolute, and he issues his edicts with the air and dignity of a monarch. A change of temper in the "governor" is discussed by the mercenaries with fear or delight as an important event, affecting their interests and happiness. The governor smiles, and the mercenaries rejoice; he frowns, and they are sad and silent. It is an evil presage, and none dare approach him until he smiles again.

So complete is the submission of these servants they will incur almost any danger, or perform any duty, to gratify the caprices of the manager. An instance is on record of the impresario of an English opera, who in a moment of hilarity, wished to play a practical joke upon the baritone of the company, desiring four of his minions to carry that functionary off the stage at a given signal. The order was executed when the unsuspecting victim was singing a ballad. A man seized each arm and leg, and in spite of violent kicking and struggling the unfortunate baritone was borne away upon the shoulders of the four servants, much to his own surprise and the astonishment of the audience, who had been listening to his singing thus unceremoniously interrupted. The baritone's name was Duruset, and the impresario's—but no, perhaps it is better that should not be mentioned. It was a folly of youth, and one he may perhaps wish to be forgotten, although I'm glad to say experience and age seem to have had but little influence upon his lively Hibernian temperament, which, though it rendered him unfit for the serious duties of an impresario, makes him a most vivacious and agreeable companion.

The "second in command," he whose authority is inferior in importance only to that of the manager himself, is the private secretary. He sits in the ante-chamber, and is the true medium of communication with the "spirit of management," whose "rappings" he interprets. The private secretary alone has free access to the throne-room of the theatrical autocrat. He is at once the Peter and Cerberus of the establishment, admitting those who please him—keeping at bay the importunate intruders. He is better acquainted with the affairs of the impresario than the impresario himself. Court is paid him by those who seek engagements; bribes are offered to secure his interest, which according to his honesty are accepted or rejected; in short, if the impresario is to be conciliated, his secretary is supposed to be the best medium of propitiation. Sometimes the private secretary is of the softer sex; then the representative of the office is a mere dummy, a domestic instructed how to act and what to say. The lady has unlimited influence upon the impresario, and manages the artists better than he can himself. She is generally of a certain age, having once enjoyed the reputation of a prima donna, and had long experience in theatrical affairs. She has a loud, shrill voice, speaks broken English with amazing rapidity and volubility; sometimes, in fact, so fast as to confuse her hearers and lose herself in the excitement of an argument, which she illustrates with the most energetic gesticulations. By Ravenswing, the new soprano who is to make the impresario's fortune, she is called endearingly "mama;" the great tenor, Baroski, is her caro fig'io; and the whole company look up to and respect her as the self-styled madre del reggimento. Most admirably she justifies that appellation by the care she takes of her numerous adopted progeny, who occasionally give "mama" much unnecessary trouble, and by their refractory conduct bring on a bilious attack which endangers the kind creature's life. Her home is a rendezvous for all musical people, who are invariably received with a hearty welcome. There the fate of artists is determined—there the fortunes of a theatre are made or marred. It is easily to be understood how invaluable such a private secretary must be to the impresario who is so fortunate as to secure her assistance. Singers and managers acknowledge her tact and talent, and no one blames her if at times she turns her singular position between them to her own advantage.

ANTEATER.

THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION, conducted by Mr. Land, whose concerts at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, last season, obtained a large share of public favour, are about to recommence their entertainments in the same locality. The vocal efforts of the singers will be as before relieved by explanatory remarks and anecdotes by Mr. T. Oliphant. These concerts, we understand, are to be limited in duration to one month, commencing on the 7th January.

CHRISTMAS ELIJAH AT MANCHESTER.—The custom of giving an oratorio on Christmas day is, we believe, peculiar to Manchester; and it is certainly a matter of surprise that what is so appropriate to, and thoroughly in harmony with, the beautiful associations of the day, should not have induced other large towns to follow so worthy an example. This annual performance is anticipated by numerous families, not only of Manchester, but also of the surrounding districts; and large numbers come long distances to enjoy what they have for many years found a sufficient reward for the trouble bestowed in the journey. On the present occasion the oratorio was Elijah, one of those productions which can never be heard without the regret that Mendelssohn "fell asleep" so soon. Mad. Sherrington, Miss Fanny Huddart, Messrs. Wilbye Cooper and Weiss were the singers, a quartet not often surpassed in the provinces for general concert purposes, and, individually, well adapted to the particular class of music under consideration. There was a large choral body of professional singers. Mr. D. W. Banks, acted as conductor. Mr. C. A. Seymour as leader, and Mr. Henry Walker presided at the organ. Mad. Sherrington gave "Hear ye, Israel" with earnest fervour and in true appreciation of the composer's meaning, and we remember none surpassing her in the duet between the Widow and Elijah. Here Mad. Sherrington is thoroughly at home from the innate dramatic feeling which she undoubtedly possesses, and which her recent appearances in London have so successfully displayed. Miss Fanny Huddart's "Oh, rest in the Lord," is always greatly acceptable, and on the present occasion won a persevering encore. Mr. Wilbye Cooper succeeded in winning a large amount of applause. We are acquainted with but one tenor singer who gives sacred music generally with a truer interpretation—with more purity of tone, greater delicacy, and more earnest feeling. Mr. Weiss seems to have found refreshing influences, for he certainly is at this period singing finer than he has done for two or three years past. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the greater portion of what he had to do. He is always earnest and conscientious, and on the present occasion was in fine voice, and certainly showed that the rising men will have to study hard if they propose to pass him in the race. On the whole, the concerted music was beautifully sung—the trio "Lift thine eyes" gaining a rapturous encore. We have never heard the concluding chorus to the first part, "Thanks be to God," sung more effectively. The instrumentalists, also, must take their fair share of praise. The audience exceeded three thousand, and the applause, frequent and warm, gave indication of no small amount of enjoyment. In looking round upon that mass of earnest faces it would be difficult to believe that the work of the night had not its ennobling and improving influences. On Saturday next (this evening) the whole party will again appear, with an important addition, that of Mr. Sims Reeves.

Letters to the Editor.

CONFUSION OF INSTRUMENTS.

SIR,—Being accustomed to consult your valuable paper, I was astonished to see you quote in your last number, as "worthy of notice," (in what sense quotha?) a certain extract from a Birmingham newspaper. The learned critic in that precious morceau, by his own showing, does not know a violoncello from a double bass. Is it credible that any one undertaking to instruct the public in matters musical should be so grossly ignorant as not to know the instrument on which Signor Bottesini performs? We shall probably hear shortly that the "celebrated violinist M. Thalberg, and the eminent pianist M. Vieuxtemps are about to favour this town with a visit!" AMATEUR.

Birmingham, Dec. 24.

BETTER.*

SIR,—Allow me, in the overflowing of my gratitude, publicly to express my never-dying thanks to MESSIEURS PETIPACE (not desiring to "disgust"), CRUMB (bis ditto), HORACE (Esq.), MAYHEW, and WILL'S SON HAYDN, for the unmerited kindness they have (joined) done me in removing a most severe attack of hypochondriacalism. All the doctors for miles around had cast me up as incurable and to the above gentlemen alone is due the praise and glory of restoring me to an almost sound state of mind. I make this avowal notwithstanding the ANGUISH I may have to endure in so doing, and describe myself, Sir, Gentlemen, and Wit's-End, CRUSTY.

N.B.—That demented Viola, who last addressed you from this neighbourhood, is still at large, but closely looked after. The Gipping is daily expected to show signs of being on fire.

CHRISTMAS MESSIAH AT LEEDS.—The committee of the Leeds Town Hall Concert Society gave their annual performance of the Messiah on Saturday evening in the Victoria Hall. There was a large attendance. With the exception of Mr. Weiss, who enters so thoroughly into the work that he deserves to be a Yorkshireman, the principals, chorus, and band were selected from the West Riding; and, to those who know the resources of our county, we need not say that the performance was an excellent one, and fully realised the hopes which had been held out. The soprano music was entrusted to Mrs. Sunderland and Miss Whitham, the contralto to Miss Crosland, the tenor to Mr. Inkersall, and the bass to Mr. Weiss. The chorus was selected from the Leeds Concert Choir, strengthened for the occasion by voices from various parts of the Riding, and supported by a full band under the leadership of Mr. Haddock, and the organ played by Mr. Spark. Mr. Jackson, of Bradford, conducted. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the season, the principals were all in good voice, and the solos throughout were well sung. The opening recitative was finely declaimed by Mr. Inkersall, and the air "Every valley" with great sweetness, as also "Behold and see." He was followed by Mr. Weiss, whose enthusiastic reception was a well-deserved tribute to his great abilities; and the recitative "Thus saith the Lord," and the air "Who may abide," were given by him with admirable taste and expression. In the splendid air, "Why do the nations," he received the only encore of the evening, but in the trumpet solo his singing was marred by the unsatisfactory way in which the accompaniment was played. Mrs. Sunderland was received with a welcome not less sincere, and deserved the applause with which her singing was greeted. Her declamation was spirited, and the airs, "How beautiful are the feet!" and "I know that my Redeemer liveth," were exquisitely sung. She was ably supported by Miss Whitham, whose "Come unto me" was really a fine piece of vocalisation. The two contralto airs, "He shall feed his flock," and "He was despised," were carefully sung by Miss Crosland especially the former. The choruses were given with power and effect, and the organ accompaniments were well played. "And, the glory" was vigorously sung, and the "grand" choruses, together with "Lift up your heads," were given with true Handelian fire and spirit. The overture and Pastoral Symphony were very well played, and the performance appeared to give entire satisfaction.

MAIDSTONE.—Mr. W. B. Gilbert delivered the first of his two lectures on the Pianoforte on Wednesday evening last, at St. Peter's Schoolroom, on behalf of the St. Peter's Working Men's Institute. In the course of the lecture the following pieces were performed:—

"Gloria Tibi Trinitas," Blitheman, 1555; Popular Air, Bird, 1569; Air with "Doubles," Bull, 1591; Slow "Aire" and Jig, Lully, 1670; Air (varied), Murshausen, 1696; March, Couperin, 1700; "Harmonious Blacksmith," Handel, 1720; Allegro, Schröter, 1750; Air (varied) Haydn, 1760; Piece, Pleyel, 1770; Air (varied), Mozart, 1775; Sonata, Mozart, 1780.

At the conclusion of the lecture a vote of thanks was carried by acclamation. The second lecture was given on Wednesday, when the following pieces were played:—

Clementi's Sonata in C, 1790; Clementi's Air (with var.), 1800; Field's Romance, 1800; Beethoven's Sonata Pathetic; Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata; Beethoven's Licknowsky Sonata; Mendelssohn's Song without words; Döhler's Nocturns.

Before the company broke up, the National Anthem was sung, and a handsome compliment was paid to the lecturer by the Rev. W. A. Hill (seconded by Mr. Arthur Whitehead), who expressed his gratification with Mr. Gilbert's ability and readiness to come forward and help the efforts now in progress at developing an institution whose chief purpose was the benefit of working men.

ROME.—The affair of the Philharmonic Society has been brought to a close much in the way that was anticipated. When the members met for rehearsal on Tuesday night the president vainly endeavoured to obtain a general acquiescence in the performance at the Aliberti Theatre, urging the charitable object, and so forth. The dissentients declared that, after the publicity that had been given to what had passed in their green-room, and to the expectation of a demonstration, that demonstration had become inevitable, because, if a portion of the audience should applaud them, a political motive would be supposed and the opposition would be sure to hiss. Finally, it was put to the vote whether the Aliberti performance should take place or not. Nominal voting was proposed, but objected to and overruled—very naturally, since those who voted against the benefit would have been marked men and women. The voting took place by ballot, and there were 42 noes to 43 ayes. So small a majority was equivalent to a defeat. Nevertheless the president asked the musical director if he would undertake to give the opera with 43 singers. The reply was that it would be impossible, and this was self-evident, since all the chief singers may have been among those who would not sing. The president, Signor Alborghetti, then declared his intention of resigning his post, which announcement was received in profound silence. The musical director and one or two other functionaries of the society followed his example. On the following night the last concert of the season took place under the management of a vice-president. A demonstration was anticipated, but, as it was the closing performance, the Government did not think proper to incur the odium of prohibiting it. The singers enter through three doors, one at the back and one on either side of the platform. As soon as the leading files made their appearance there was a burst of applause from a crowded audience, which was kept up and renewed for several minutes. The performance then proceeded. Yesterday it became known that Cardinal Altieri, Cardinal-Protector of the society—an officer whose functions are rather vague—had notified to the musical director the "suspension" of the Philharmonic Association. This may be taken as equivalent to a dissolution; but as the season is over it matters very little. The majority of the Philharmonists doubtless believe with joy that before another season comes there will be no Pope or cardinal in Rome to hamper their freedom of meeting and singing. The whole affair is an excellent illustration of the pettiness of the Papal authorities, and of the feelings of animosity entertained to them by the Romans. Great spirit was displayed in the matter by some of the ladies—to most of them it may fairly be supposed that it was some sacrifice to give up an opportunity of a little public display and admiration combined with a charitable purpose.

* Replique pour mie.

Advertisements.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,

(REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.)

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SEVENTH CONCERT OF THE THIRD SEASON

WILL TAKE PLACE

ON MONDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, 1861,

On which occasion the celebrated Violinist,

M. VIEUXTEMPS

(Who has been expressly engaged for these Concerts),

Will make his First Appearance in London, after an absence of Eight Years.

PROGRAMME.

PART I. — Quartet, in D minor, for Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Schubert), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song (Benedict), Miss LASCELLES. Song (G. A. Macfarren), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Prelude and Fugue, à la Tarantella, in A minor —first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(J. S. Bach), Miss ARABELLA GODDARD.

PART II.—Sonata, in C minor, for Miss ARABELLA GODDARD, Pianoforte, and M. VIEUXTEMPS, Violin—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—(Beethoven). Song (Henry Smart), Miss LASCELLES. Canzonet (Dussek), Miss AUGUSTA THOMSON. Quartet, in E major, No. 59, for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (Haydn)—first time at the Monday Popular Concerts—M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—MR. BENEDICT. To commence at Eight o'Clock precisely.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28 Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent Street; Bradberry's, London Crystal Palace, Oxford Street; Duff and Co., 65 Oxford Street; Prowse, Hanway Street; Chidley, 195 High Holborn; Purday, 50 St. Paul's Church Yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48 Cheapside, Turner, 19 Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6 Finsbury Place, South; Humfress, 4 Old Church Street, Paddington Green; Fabian, Circus Road, St. John's Wood; Ransford and Son, 2 Princes Street, Cavendish Square; Ivory, 275 Euston Road; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, Hopwood and Crewe, and Willis, Bond Street, And CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond Street.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The Committee of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society have great pleasure in informing their subscribers and the public that they have entered into arrangements with the Directors of the Monday Popular Concerts (Messrs. Chappell and Co., of London), which enable them to announce TWO CONCERTS in the exact style of those justly celebrated entertainments. The Programmes will be exclusively selected from the repertoire of the above Concerts, and include many of those pieces which have been received with the greatest favour at St. James's Hall. The artists, vocal and instrumental—including the renowned violinist,

M. VIEUXTEMPS,

(his first appearance in this country since 1852)—will be of the highest eminence. The Concerts to take place at the Philharmonic Hall, on FRIDAY Evening, January 11th, 1861, and SATURDAY Morning, January 12th, 1861.

The following is a list of the performers:—

INSTRUMENTAL.—Quartet, first violin, M. VIEUXTEMPS. Second Violin, Herr RIES. Viola, M. SCHREURS. Violoncello, Signor PIATTI. Pianoforte, Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

VOCAL.—Soprano, Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Bass, Mr. WEISS. Accompanist, Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

As no less than 47 of the Monday Popular Concerts have been given since their first institution, on November 14th, 1859, and as scarcely two out of the 47 Programmes have been precisely identical, it is of course impossible to do more than present some of those compositions which have produced the most marked effect at St. James's Hall. These, however, have been selected with a view not less to agreeable contrast than to individual excellence; and it is believed that the following may be safely offered as a model specimen of the Programmes to which the Monday Popular Concerts owe their reputation:—

PROGRAMME.

PART I.—Quartet, in G, (No. 1 (Mozart), M. VIEUXTEMPS, HERT RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI. Song, "Name the glad day" (Dussek), Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Prelude, Sarabande, and Gavotte, for violoncello and pianoforte accompaniment (Bach), Signor PIATTI. Song, "The Bell-ringer" (Wallace), Mr. WEISS. Sonata, No. 3, Op. 29, in E flat (No. 18 of Hallé's edition)—(Beethoven), Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

PART II.—Sonata, in B flat, Op. 69, No. 1, for violin and pianoforte (Dussek), M. VIEUXTEMPS and Mr. CHARLES HALLE. Song, "Ah! why do we love" (G. A. Macfarren), Mad. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON. Song, "Sir Marmaduke" (Angelina), Mr. WEISS. Quartet, in B flat, No. 6, Op. 18 (Beethoven), M. VIEUXTEMPS, Herr RIES, M. SCHREURS, and Signor PIATTI.

Conductor—Mr. CHARLES HALLE.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—Lessee, Mr. E. SMITH. THIS EVENING, THE BILLET-DOUX; Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES MATHEWS, Mr. TILBURY; Mrs. F. MATTHEWS, Miss ARDEN, and Miss H. HOWARD. PETER WILKINS; or, Harlequin and the Flying Women of the Loadstone Mountain. Mr. Cormack, Mr. St. Maine; Misses Gunniss; Mr. Naylor, Mr. Martin; Mr. Hulme, Mr. R. Power.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. E. T. SMITH.—Notice.—Grand Morning Performance To-day (Saturday) of the Christmas Pantomime, commencing at 2 o'clock.

THIS EVENING, the original opera, entitled QUEEN TOPAZE. Raphael (a Captain), Mr. SWIFT; Annibal Barbiano (a rich Venetian), Mr. SANTLEY; Francatrippa and Fritellino (Gipsies), Messrs. PATEY and TERROTT; Gritti, Mr. BARTLEMAN; Zeno, Loredano, Manfred, and Bembo (young Venetian Nobles), Messrs. BEALE, St. ALBYN, BAKER, and THOMPSON; Countess Filomela, Mdlle. ALESSANDRI; Hostess of an Inn, Miss HEMMING; and Topaze (a Gipsy), Mdlle. PAREPA. Mdlle. MORLACCHI and M. MASSOT will dance in the incidental ballet. After which the entirely new and original grand musical, magical, and comical burlesque ballet pantomime, founded on one of the most popular of our old national stories, and entitled THE HARLEQUIN AND TOM THUMB; or, Merlin the Magician and the Good Fairies of the Court of King Arthur. The scenery, entirely new, under the superintendence of Mr. William Beverley, Artists, Mr. Charles Brew, Mr. Sanders, &c. The overture, choruses, and the whole of the music composed by J. H. Tully. The libretto by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, and the whole produced under the direction of Mr. Robert Roxby; assisted by Mr. R. Phillips. The pantomimic physiognomy and designs for the dresses by Dykwykyn. The machinery by Mr. Tucker. The tricks and properties by Mr. Needham, Mr. Glindon, and Mr. H. Adam. The costumes by Miss Dickinson and Mons. Laurie, The harlequinade by the Lauri Family. Interior of Gaffer Thumb's Cottage—Gaffer Thumb, Mr. Forster; Goody Thumb, Mrs. Lindon; Merlin (the Wizard of the Early Ages, and Professor of Parlour Magic), Mr. Dixon. Tom Thumb ("the abridgment of all that is pleasing in man," engaged especially for juvenile patrons), M. Lilia Ross. Rosewater Lake and Romantic Haunt of the Fairies.—Rosalie (Queen of the Fairies), Miss Mason. Gaffer Thumb's Cottage.—Tom, the Tinker, Mr. Soiderwell. Farmyard and Distant Country. Turrets and Terrace of Giant's Castle.—Hurlothrumbo (the Giant), Mr. Feefawfofum. The Banqueting Hall in the Palace of King Arthur.—King Arthur ("He was a goodly King."—Minstrel of the Period), Mr. E. St. Albyn: Huncamunca (his daughter), Miss Highbury Barnes. Changing to the Chameleon Temple of the Fairies. Grand Magical Metamorphosis.—Harlequin, Mr. J. Laurie. Columbine, Miss Jenny Lauri. Clown, Mr. C. Lauri. Pantaloon, Mr. H. Lauri. Sprites by the celebrated Arabs. Scene 1.—Grocer's, Surgeon's and Chymist's Shops. Scene 2.—Furnished Apartments. Scene 3.—Light Fleeting Clouds and Final Tableau. Notice.—During the Pantomime the doors open at half-past 6, commence at 7 o'clock. Box-office open from 10 till 5, under the superintendence of Mr. Nugent.,

To Correspondents.

T. P. D. (Shrewsbury.)—Received.

DISAPPOINTMENT.—Received.

HAMMOND and NEPHEW shall be attended to at an early opportunity.

E. T. (Reigate.)—The copies were mislaid, but shall be sought out immediately.

MR. JOSEPH GODDARD.—Acknowledged with thanks. There are two sides to the question, which, however, we have not at present to discuss.

L'ORGUE and "Twelfth Study" next week.

Notice.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28 Holles Street, by quarterly subscription of Five Shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered.

Terms { Three lines (about 30 words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.* / Every additional line (10 words) ... 6*d.*

The Musical World.

LONDON: SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1860.

THE death of Mr. Alfred Bunn, which occurred almost suddenly, from a fit of apoplexy, on Thursday, the 20th instant, at Boulogne, will be deeply regretted by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Some eight or nine years since Mr. Bunn seceded from the management of Drury Lane Theatre, with the history of which his name is most intimately associated, and retired comparatively into private life. In 1833, Captain Polhill having withdrawn from the management of Drury Lane, he became lessee of that establishment, and also undertook the official administration of Covent Garden, which at the same time was left without a head. Mr. Bunn had been manager of the Birmingham Theatre so far back as 1826, and was engaged by Elliston as acting manager of Drury Lane. When Elliston withdrew, the government fell into various hands, and finally centred in those of Captain Polhill, Mr. Bunn retaining the executive reins under every change of administration. On Captain Polhill's abdication, Mr. Bunn was, by universal request of the committee, called to the throne, and filled the regal seat with honour and renown until he laid down his crown and sceptre in 1848, after a brilliant reign of fifteen years. During this period Mr. Bunn proved himself one of the most enterprising and energetic managers that ever presided over the destiny of a great theatrical establishment. Some of the glories of the past drama — more especially the lyric drama — are connected with his administration. Certainly in his day the greatest reverence was not paid to the acknowledged chef-d'œuvres of the opera, and Mozart, Rossini, Auber, and other masters, were submitted without hesitation to the caprice of any musical director—Henry Bishop, Tom Cooke, Rophino Lacy, &c.—who thought proper to hew, hack, alter, and improve any work placed at their option, which they never failed to do mercilessly and without consideration. How such masterpieces as Don Giovanni, William Tell, the Barbiere, &c., were tortured and "fitted," as the saying was, to the popular taste, would be incredible in these days of respect and veneration. Mr. Bunn was no musician, and, if he were, might readily be pardoned for being carried away by the prevailing feeling. The English version of Gustavus the Third, brought out under his management at Covent Garden in 1833, although from the alterations and additions made to Auber's score it would now be termed a desecration, was one of the most magnificent and costly productions ever presented to the British public. With hardly less splendour and completeness, and with a trifle more regard to the composer, Lestocq was subsequently given under Mr. Bunn's direction. But more, besides the production of these and like operas on a grand scale, is due to Mr. Bunn. He introduced Malibran on the English stage, and had the Sonnambula especially translated for her. He first presented an opera by Mr. Balfe, and laid the foundation of the fame of our most popular operatic writer in the production of the Siege of Rochelle. In the first decline of the drama he endeavoured to uphold its fortunes by the engagement of Macready and a strong tragic company; and manifested his desire to please universally and in all ways by securing the celebrated danseuse, Duvernay, for the ballet, and by an occasional engagement with Mlle. Taglioni and lesser stars of the dancer.

With the Maid of Artois, we believe, commenced Mr. Bunn's essays in operatic writing, and one song in that work, at all events, "The light of other days is faded," obtained a celebrity, something of which was due to the character of the words. Having discovered in himself a new vein of talent, Mr. Bunn was not slow in turning it to account. The libretto of the Maid of Artois was followed by that of The Bohemian Girl, a still greater success for poet and musician, and the names of Balfe and Bunn went linked through the land among the shining lights of the day. That Mr. Bunn was a true poet, instinctively and artistically, it would be too much to aver; but that, because he was not a poet born or made, he was therefore incompetent to write, should not, we fancy, be insisted on. Mr. Bunn was extremely shrewd and clever, and knew as well as any man living what would please the million in prose or rhyme. His poetry was suggestive, if nothing else, and we have heard more than one person, and no fools either, go into raptures with the poetry of "When other lips and other hearts," although Mr. Punch offered a reward to any one who could discover its meaning. Nay, Mr. Bunn's poetry began to exert a special influence; managers and singers admired its abstractions and remote sentimentalities, and a school was being formed, of which some of our modern librettists are the true disciples. This is beyond contradiction a manifestation of powers; and if power is not intellect, we should like to know what is.

Mr. Bunn did not confine his literary efforts to inditing books for operas. He is the author of an exceedingly amusing work in three volumes, entitled The Stage, Behind and Before the Curtain, which created an extraordinary sensation when it appeared, in consequence of the fearlessness of its opinions and its theatrical revelations. He also wrote a curious little pamphlet, A Word with Punch, which made even a greater impression than the Stage, but was not so well-directed nor so humorous. Whether Mr. Bunn ever published his American Notes we know not, but we remember attending his lectures on his return from America, and being infinitely amused by their drollery and spirit. His latest contributions to literature have been sundry papers under various titles, which appeared in the Era up to a recent date, and which declare the writer in full possession of his faculties.

In private life Alfred Bunn was one of the most jovial companions that ever placed knee under mahogany; and in his own house he was the most munificent and exhilirating of hosts. He had long ceased dispensing his jests and hospitalities, but his friends will no less remember his unive rsal liberality, his unvarying kindliness, his deep sympathies' his good humour, and the merry, merry laugh that was wont to set the table in a roar.

ANGUISH.

MR. HULLAH.

(From the Morning Post.)

PERSONAL experience of this world's cares and sorrows, its trials and reverses, has been compared by a great writer to a pale musician holding in his hand a dulcimer of patience, whence the strain sends forth, in sad and perplexed minors, harmonies, which we cannot fully understand, of Heaven's will in man's chequered lot. Impatiently we demand, "Where is any certain tune, any measured music, in such notes as these?" And doubtingly, at times almost despairingly, we receive the assurance that what to us sounds harsh and jarring may be recognised in higher and purer spheres as the issue of completed cadence.

The experience imaged by a music so perplexed is at this very time most severely and sharply made by one whose services in the cultivation of English music, in extending its influence and diffusing its highest pleasures, have been above all praise. The pecuniary embarrassments which have overtaken Mr. Hullah in consequence of the burning of St. Martin's Hall have awakened throughout the whole country, but especially in the metropolis, where he has so zealously laboured, a feeling of spontaneous, generous, and active sympathy, which, we heartily rejoice to see, will not evaporate in mere empty words and phrases. The committee which has just been formed under the chairmanship of Mr. Dickens, in consequence of "the strong desire manifested in various influential quarters to render some service and encouragement to Mr. Hullah, late of St. Martin's Hall, and in order to consolidate the general feeling of good-will towards a gentleman who has faithfully devoted many years, and many acquirements and energies, to an important branch of public education, and whose labours have now to be begun again,"—this committee, of which the Marquis of Lansdowne, Sir John Coleridge, Sir James Kay Shuttleworth, the Dean of Westminster, and many others of high social standing, have consented to be members, is only endeavouring to discharge an obligation of which the strong sense must pervade all intelligent classes of the community. It has rarely happened that any single individual has rendered greater services to national culture in the highest sense of the words, to social refinement, and to popular taste, than Mr. Hullah; and it is but fitting that efforts so honourable to himself and so beneficial to the country should call forth a grateful recognition at the time when that recognition will be most prized because it is most urgently wanted.

We doubt if there be any one feature in our present English life by which a cultivated Englishman who returns from the colonies after an unbroken absence of five-and-twenty or thirty years is so much struck as by the increased diffusion of musical science, and the highest standard of musical taste now observable throughout the country. And what an infinite accession to human happiness does this change imply? In the hard work-a-day life of this our toiling and moiling England, where the press is so hot and the strife so keen, and the struggle so intense, it is no light matter that the genial and soothing influences of music should be still more and more invoked as a refreshment and a blessing, and a balm to the jaded spirit. It is quite true that the most exquisitely refined musical taste affords no criterion of the moral progress amongst the people where it is found. Those unhappy Neapolitans, whose whole political life seems one crashing discord, are to this hour conspicuous amongst all Italians, indeed amongst all mankind, by their sure appreciation, and singular relish, and unrivalled command, of all the graces and powers of vocal and instrumental harmony. It is equally true that many of the greatest and wisest benefactors of our species, even those gifted with lofty and imaginative genius, have been as insensible to the charms of music as was Sir Walter Scott, or have shared the contemptuous opinion of Doctor Johnson, that it was "as good as any other kind of noise." But it is not less certain that the general spread of musical tastes in our own country corresponded with our most brilliant epochs of political and literary greatness. It was not merely when England was "merry England, in the golden days of good Queen Bess," that high and low, rich and poor, the noble and the peasant, found in music a solace from the pressure of toil and care. The reader of Mrs. Hutchinson's delightful memoirs finds in them abundant proofs that the severe standard of Puritan manners never for an instant attempted to banish the enjoyments in which a Milton found his chief delight. But the art which was a favourite pleasure in the social life of the sixteenth or seventeenth has become almost an indispensable necessity in that of the nineteenth century. There has always appeared a profound significance in the fact that Shakspere, in the very drama, The Merchant of Venice, in which he has exhibited the most startling vicissitudes of commercial life, and the sordid and selfish passions by which that life is marred, as well as the more fatal antipathies of hostile races and creeds, should have lost no opportunity of exalting and glorifying the power of music, as if to illustrate its peculiar virtues in soothing the mind when agitated and torn either by pecuniary losses or by religious strife. The eloquent condemnation passed on and the stern warning directed against him who is not "moved with concord of sweet sounds," reminds one of the passage in which the most eloquent of ancient sages, when, picturing his ideal commonwealth, denounced the foe of science and of art, and doomed him to be driven forth to herd with the Centaurs and the Cyclops, just because true harmony was a stranger to his breast.

The Englishman who has laboured earnestly, unweariedly, and most successfully to make the "concord of sweet sounds" a cheaply and generally attainable delight has seen all his fortune vanish, swept away in a moment by an unforeseen calamity, in the midst of his professional career. The appeal addressed to the public on his behalf by some of our first statesmen and writers; by men who, having themselves long laboured in the cause of national education, are eminently qualified to judge of the extent of Mr. Hullah's services, will, we cannot doubt, meet with a hearty and practical response wherever it becomes known. The gentleman who is its object has been emphatically a national benefactor. Let all praise and honour be accorded to the man who, in whatever rank or class, performs his part in the hard drudgery of life manfully and bravely, whether to the artisan who toils at the loom, or to the statesman planning measures for his country's welfare in the silence of the Cabinet; but let it at the same time be remembered that he has scarcely less claims on the gratitude of his country whose efforts are still strenously directed to charm away the lassitude which artisan and statesman alike experience from their various toil.

The Theatres.

THE CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENTS.—The good old pantomime is more than ever in the ascendant. A few seasons since his territory was fiercely invaded by that rampant Knight of the Spangles, Sir Burlesque, who not contented with his almost unlimited dominion at Easter-tide, would fain have encroached upon the Christmas holidays, and have driven away from their ancient pride of place Clown, Pantaloon, Harlequin, and the whole troop of motley that had for centuries monopolised the amusements of holy-time. Shining wit and brilliant writing, nevertheless, were found to have no chance with honest nonsense and downright absurdity in their heyday. Christmas is the veritable period of Misrule and Merriment, and freedom of speech is the best proof of universal trust and satisfaction. Let it once be granted that folks speak without thinking, and it follows that offence is impossible, and jollity transcendant. Burlesque, extravaganza, and fairy pieces made a tremendous onslaught on the harlequinade army for a lus re or so; but the magic wand of the chequered hero was too powerful, and the cry of "Hot Codlins" proved a war-blast that scattered the enemy to the winds. It is a fact—to descend from our camel—that in the Christmas amusements of the London theatres some few years since, the pantomime proved the exception, not the rule. In the present year, on the other hand, at every theatre in the metropolis, except one or two, the ancient entertainment is given—much matter for congratulation, we take it, to the children and elders of the present day.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—This theatre commenced its Christmas festivities with an English version of M. Victor Masse's Reine Topaze, of which we cannot speak in the highest terms, although the music is graceful and refined, and the performance was altogether good, the singing of Miss Parepa, Mr. Swift, and Mr. Santley being unexceptionable. On some future occasion we may refer more at large to the opera. Just now our business is with the pantomime, which is founded upon the old English story of Tom Thumb, and is entitled Harlequin and Tom Thumb; or, Merlin the Magician, and the Good Fairies of the Court of King Arthur. The miniature hero, personated by Miss Lilia Ross, goes through all the traditionary adventures, is brought out of a magic album, shaken up in a bag of cherry stones, tied up in a batter pudding, swallowed by a red cow, engulphed by the giant Hurlothrumbo, devoured by a salmon, and finally brought before King Arthur, by whom he is knighted. Here the good fairy interposes, and he is transformed into Harlequin, whilst the rest of the characters undergo the usual metamorphosis. The celebrated Lauri Family support the humours of the harlequinade, and the ballet and the choral departments figure conspicuously in the opening. Mr. William Beverley has invented some most effective scenic contrivances for the embellishment of the opening; and

Mr. Tully, by original music, has given some striking features to the vocal illustrations; the masks and characteristic costumes are by Dykwynkyn. The pantomime of Tom Thumb is one of the most striking and interesting which has been exhibited in London for many years. Indeed, in one respect it is unique. No one living has beheld so diminutive a specimen of the human race exhibited on the stage as Miss Lilia Ross. In her way she is really incomparable, and whether she points a witticism, makes a speech, or indulges in a bit of fun, her shrewdness and perception are remarkable. That Miss Lilia Ross will prove the great attraction of the pantomime season we have scarcely a doubt. The Lauri family undertake the principal personages in the harlequinade, Miss Jenny Lauri being Columbine, Mr. J. Lauri, Harlequin, Mr. C. Lauri, Clown, and Mr. H. Lauri, Pantaloon. The "Sprites" are represented by "the celebrated Arabs," the "Rosewater Lake and the Romantic Haunt of the Fairies" is an exquisite "bit of Beverley." The transformation scene, "The Chameleon Temple of the Fairies," is one of the grandest and most magnificent tableau we ever beheld in pantomime. The excitement following the scene was immense, and a loud cry being raised for Mr. E. T. Smith, he stepped forward incontinently, and was saluted with hearty cheers from all parts of the house.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.—The Marriage of Georgette opened the ball on Boxing night, Mr. Balfe's opera, Bianca, being found too long until the pantomime has been properly worked into trim and shortened by expertness in the performance. The pantomime, entitled Bluebeard; or, Harlequin and Freedom in her Island Home, is by that capital writer Mr. J. V. Bridgeman, who has sustained the Christmas reputation of the Royal English Opera any day these three years. Briefly to describe the plot, let us say Bluebeard is in company with a certain King Despotino, and attended by the Demon of Remorse. Britannia is, of course, our own genius, whose mission is to foster the boldest efforts of Freedom everywhere and for everybody in the world; and the way in which she aids Freedom to overthrow King Despotino, by assuring her that she (Freedom) has her (Britannia's) "best wishes," is a sentiment calculated to reach to the depths of British patriotism. The moral of Bluebeard, as propounded by Mr. Bridgeman, is pointed point-blank at his Sicilian Majesty's head, and hits him remorselessly hard. Of the scenery throughout it is not possible to speak too highly; it is worthy of the artists (Messrs. Grieve and Telbin), whose old renown is associated with the so-called palmy of days pantomime. The dark scene which precedes the "transformation scene" is a design full of poetry. It represents a wreck-strewn seashore, on which there is a lightless lighthouse, giving a look of desolation to the view. The transformation scene is one of the most beautiful scenes of the kind ever seen, and has a charm wanting in such scenic displays, being beautifully harmonious in colour and graceful in arrangement of form. The harlequinade has the merit of being carried on by a double set of clowns, &c., among whom are several favourites, as Harry Boleno, M. Milano, W. A. Barnes. The fact most noticeable in this performance was the occurrence of an accident which, for a moment, threw the audience into a state of alarm. A mass of scenery fell forward with a crash, overthrowing a number of persons who were upon the stage. Mr. Harrison, however, came forward to announce that no one was hurt, and after a few minutes the business went on.

DRURY LANE.—This theatre commenced its winter season in earnest with a grand comic Christmas pantomime entitled Peter Wilkins; or, Harlequin and the Flying Women of the Loadstone Island. The introductory matter is as usual by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, and it is not his fault that the rambling Cornish miner does not afford so many opportunities for comic effects as Tom Thumb, Jack and the Bean Stalk, Little Jack Horner, &c. Nevertheless he is fortunate in being able to illustrate it with some of the most gorgeous and artistic scenery and decorations ever devised by the inventive genius of Mr. W. Beverley. "Elfin Land in the Crystal Sphere," a magnificent Turneresque scene, filled by elves, fairly bedight in gold tissue, was the first great hit of the evening, and one of the most successful efforts of Mr. W. Beverley, who was summoned to the footlights to receive the enthusiastic congratulations of the audience. The "transformation scene," however, completely eclipses the "Elfin Land," and in many particulars surpasses any similar effort of stage decorative structure which we have hitherto seen. It represents a "great gathering of the Winged Women at the trysting place by the spreading Banian Tree," with beautifully winged glumms and gwaries descending through the air, in glittering array, in a grand scene of fairyland, illumined by rays of light of varied hues. Here, again, the audience were so taken by storm that Mr. Wm. Beverley was again vociferously called for, and overwhelmed with a perfect hurricane of plaudits. With the harlequinade which followed we must deal briefly. According to custom at this theatre, we were treated to a double pantomime company:—Harlequins, Messrs. Cormack and St. Maine; Columbines, the Misses Gunniss; Clowns, Messrs. Huline and R. Power; besides "a little one" by young Huline; Pantaloons, Messrs. H. Naylor and R. H. Martin; the Sprites by the celebrated Lavater Lee family. Amongst the allusions to passing events introduced, was a transformation from a gin-palace to a handsome wine rooms — wine at two-pence a glass being substituted for gin at five-pence a quartern. The house was crowded in every part from the very opening of the doors.

HAYMARKET.—The entertainments commenced with Goldsmith's comedy She Stoops to Conquer, and was followed by the new entomological and fairy Christmas pantomime, Queen Ladybird and her Children; or, Harlequin and a House on Fire, "produced with novel effects of fire and real water, never before attempted in any theatre." If this pantomime is to have a run, it must be both curtailed and re-worked. One great feature in it was a "muff dance" in Kensington Gardens, excellently and gracefully danced. As to the "fire and water," there was none of the former, and we have seen the latter better disposed on former occasions; but the combinations of glass in the scenery were superb.

PRINCESS'S.—The pantomime at this theatre, written by Mr. H. J. Byron, is entitled Robinson Crusoe; or, Harlequin Friday and the King of the Caribee Islands. The transformation scene intended for this occasion (in consequence of some accident occurring to the machinery) was substituted by one that had appeared some years since. We here become acquainted with Harlequin (Mr. Smith), Columbine (Miss Caroline Adams), Pantaloon (Mr. Paulo), and Clown (Mr. Forrest). The scenery is by Mr. W. Telbin, Messrs. Neville, Buck, Fenoulhet, Brown, and J. Gates, and does them infinite credit. The pantomime was produced under the direction of Mr. T. H. Higgie.

OLYMPIC.—Working on the old materials of Timour the Tartar, Messrs. Oxenford and Shirley Brooks have produced a most admirably written extravaganza. If the general public had been more fully acquainted with the original melodrama, the merits of the present travesty might have been more adequately appreciated. The extravaganza is very brilliantly mounted, and very well acted. Mr. Robson idealised the Tartar into the presentation of one of the most peremptory and vocal of tyrants, and Miss Louise Keeley sang several parody songs very nicely. Picturesque groupings and lively dances were interspersed, at fitting intervals, during the performance; and the closing scene, showing the "Fairy wedding-cake," properly magnified and illuminated with coloured fires, deserves commemoration. This closing scene is brilliant enough to form an attraction by itself; and the extravaganza generally will probably become a public favourite.

ST. JAMES'S.—The pantomime, by Mr. W. Brough, is entitled The Loves of Diana and Endymion; or, the Naughty Boy who Cried for the Moon.

ADELPHI.—Blue Beard Regarded from a New Point of Hue is the name of the Christmas offering of this house, and is from the ready pen of Mr. J. H. Byron.

LYCEUM.—Mad. Celeste presents her patrons with a Christmas extravaganza, written by Mr. Edmund Falconer, called Chrystabelle: or, a Rose without a Thorn.

Advertisements.

WANTED, in the Music Trade, an ASSISTANT, who can try a pianoforte or harmonium, and is perfectly competent to direct the tuners, packers, polishers, &c., in a large house. Regularity in time and system especially required.—Apply by letter, with references and all particulars, to G. J., at Chappell's, 50 New Bond Street.

ASHDOWN and PARRY (successors to Wessel and Co.), beg to inform the profession that they forward Parcels on Sale upon receipt of references in town. Returns to be made at Midsummer and Christmas.
London: 18 Hanover Square.

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

	s.	d.
BILLET (ALEXANDRE).
"Lucia de Lammermoor"	4	0
"Les Huguenots"	4	0
"La Traviata"	4	0
BRISSAC (JULES).
"Rigoletto" (transcription of the Quartet)	4	0
BRUNNER (C. T.)
"Martha"	3	0
CUNIO (ANGELO).
"La Sonnambula"	5	0
LEFEBURE (WELY).
"Hommage à Sa Majesté Napoleon III." (caprice militaire)	6	0
"Le retour de l'armee" (Marche triomphale)	6	0
LOUIS (N.)
"Fleurs Venitiennes." Trois mélodies Italiennes variées. No. 1 in G. 2 in C. 3 in B flat (each)	4	0
MAYER (CHARLES).
"The Royal Saxe-Coburg March"	4	0
ROUBIER (HENRI).
"Le depart du Zouave." (Grand Quadrille militaire)	4	0
RUMMEL (J.)
"La Favorita"	4	0
"I Lombardi"	4	0
SCHLOESSER (ADOLPHE).
"Don Juan" (Grand Duo)	6	0
"Terpsichore" (Duo de Salon)	6	0
WAGNER (R.)
March from Tannhauser, arranged by Theodore Maus	5	0

The above duets are of a pleasing and popular character, and are adapted for moderately advanced performers.
London: Ashdown and Parry, 18, Hanover Square.

"ALL AMONG THE BARLEY," arranged for Pianoforte Solo as a Galop, by ELIZABETH STIRLING, price 2s.
Also by the same composer, the above melody, arranged as a Waltz, price 3s. Both compositions may be had of Hammond, 214 Regent Street; Williams, 123 Cheapside; and Novello, 69 Dean Street, Soho.

ORCHESTRION.—(The grandest self-acting musical instrument ever made.)—Performance from 10 A.M. until 4 P.M., at No. 3 Hanover Square. Cards of admission to be had by letter, or on presentation of card at Messrs. Imhof and Mukle's, 547 Oxford Street. Manufacturers and importers of all kinds of self-acting and barrel musical instruments, pianofortes, Nicoll Freres musical boxes, and a new kind of organ for churches and schools.

ORGAN OPENING.—A Grand new Organ with four rows of keys, built for a gentleman, will be opened at King's Organ Factory, Bear Yard, Lincoln's inn-Fields, by Mr. Fowler, on Saturday, December 29th, and Saturday, January 5th, at 3 o'clock each day. The attention of the musical public is solicited to the above admission on presentation of cards.

LETTS' APPOINTMENT DIARY, price 2s. 6d. in roan tuck pocket-book. An hourly arrangement of each day, to enable Professors and Teachers of Music to regulate their engagements exactly. This book originated with one of the greatest Vocalists of the day.
Sold by all Booksellers. Descriptive catalogue, gratis.
Letts, Son & Co., Publishers, 8 Royal Exchange.

A YOUNG MAN desires a SITUATION as ORGANIST or Assistant to some professor. He would pay a small premium to any gentleman who would give him a salary and instruction, with board and lodging, for his services. Can tune and repair pianofortes, has been organist four years, and has a general knowledge of instruments. Can produce unexceptionable testimonials. —Apply to J. H. Jewell, Music Publisher, 104 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London.

BOOSEY & SONS' LIST OF POPULAR PIANOFORTE and DANCE MUSIC, by the most celebrated Composers.
N.B.—The Dance Music is all illustrated in Colours by BRANDARD and PACKER.

BRINLEY RICHARDS.
'Twas Me my only Thought, from Bianca.
Gold Rules the World, from Bianca.
What Sunshine Bright, from Bianca.
The Marriage of Georgette.
The Skipper and his Boy.
Come into the Garden Maud.
Santa Maria, from Dinorah.
The Shadow Air, from Dinorah.
The Power of Love, from Satanella.
Thou art so Near, (Reichardt).

KUHE.
Bianca, Fantaisie Brillante.
Bianca, Galop de Bravura.
Dinorah, Fantaisie de Concert.
Dinorah, Fantaisie Brillante.
Satanella, Valse de Concert.
Satanella, Fantaisie Brillante.
Zampa, Fantaisie Brillante.
Domino Noir, Fantaisie Brillante.
Robert le Diable, Fantaisie Brillante.
Rigoletto, Fantaisie Brillante.
Schubert's Ave Maria.
Schubert's Serenade.

ASCHER.
Toujours Gai, Galop Brillant.
Les Cloches du Village.
Thou art so Near (Reichardt).
Dinorah, Illustration.
Les Vepres Siciliennes, ditto.
Un Ballo in Maschera, (Nocturne).

T. MAUSS.
Merrily over the Snow (Schloesser).
De Corsaire Galop Brillant.
Nourmahal, (Nocturne).

EMILE BERGER.
Notre Dame Romance, Illustrated.
Campanella Mazurka.
Fantaisie on Balfe's Bianca.
Selection from Bianca, Illustrated.
Selection from Satanella, ditto.
Selection from Dinorah, ditto.
Selection from Martha, ditto.

MADAME OURY.
Bianca Fantaisie Brillante.
Santa Lucia.
Auld Robin Gray.
Souvenirs d'Ecosse.
Fantaisie on Jacobite Airs.

BENEDICT.
Albion, Fantaisie on English Airs.
Erin, Fantaisie on Irish Airs.
Caledonia, Fantaisie on Scotch Airs.

TALEXY.
Satanella Polka Mazurka.
Dinorah Polka Mazurka.
Eva Polka Mazurka.

NORDMANN.
Evening with Meyerbeer.
Evening with Balfe.
Evening with Christy's Minstrels.

LAURENT.
Bianca Waltz, Illustrated.
Bianca Quadrille, ditto.
Bianca Polka, ditto.
Bianca Galop, ditto.
Spring Buds Waltz, ditto.
Margaretta Waltz, ditto.
Daisy Waltz, ditto.
Christmas Waits Quadrille, ditto.
Lord Lovel's Waltz, ditto.
Beloved Star Waltz, on Thou art so near.

BURCKHARDT.
New Year's Quadrille, Illustrated.
Ramsgate Sands Quadrille, ditto.
Serpentine Quadrille, ditto.
Bal Masque Quadrille, ditto.
Knickerbocker's Polka, ditto.
Dream of the Rose Waltz.

MARRIOTT.
Colleen Bawn Waltz, Illustrated.
Woman in White Waltz, ditto.
Don Pasquale Waltz.
Waterfall Galop.

BALFE'S NEW OPERA,

BIANCA,

THE BRAVO'S BRIDE,

AS PERFORMED WITH IMMENSE SUCCESS AT THE ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"An unquestionable success."—Times.

"It contains melodies not only beautiful, but strikingly original."—Daily News.

"This last work is beyond comparison Mr. Balfe's best."—Daily Telegraph.

"It is clever, gay, full of motion, and, above all, full of melody."—Athenæum.

"Bianca is the most perfect and beautiful of all Balfe's operas."—News of the World.

VOCAL MUSIC.

	s.	d.
'TWAS HE MY ONLY THOUGHT. Ballad. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	0
"In vain I strove"
YES, I SHALL SEE HIM ONCE AGAIN (Song) with Cabaletta } AS TORRENT ROAMING O'ER THE HEIGHT } Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	3	0
WHAT SUNSHINE BRIGHT. Rondo Finale. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE	2	6
MY CHILDHOOD'S DAYS. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE.	2	0
ONE, TWO, THREE. Song from the Minuet Scene. Sung by MISS THIRLWALL	3	0
FROM MY CHILDHOOD DIDST THOU PRAY. Duettino. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE }	2	6
ALTHOUGH WITH COLD DISDAIN. Duet. Sung by MISS LOUISA PYNE and MR. WHARTON	3	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GLORIOUS WINE. Drinking Song (with Chorus). Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	3	0
ONCE MORE UPON THE PATH OF LIFE. Ballad. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	6
'TIS NOT PURPLE AND GOLD THAT ENNOBLE THE MAN. Sung by MR. W. HARRISON	2	0
GOLD RULES THE WORLD. Song. Sung by MR. WHARTON	2	0
OH! CROWN OF POWER. Song. Sung by MR. ALBERTO LAWRENCE.	2	0

 The Concerted and other remaining portion of the Vocal Music is nearly ready.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

	s.	d.
The Overture, arranged as a Duet by the Composer.	6	0
The Favourite Airs, arranged by NORDMANN as Solos and Duets, Three Books . . . each 5*s.* &	6	0
Brinley Richards' "'Twas He my only Thought" .	3	0
Brinley Richards' "Gold Rules the World" . .	3	0
Brinley Richards' "What Sunshine Bright" . .	3	0
Kuhe's Fantaisie Brillante	4	0
Kuhe's Bianca Galop	3	0
Oury's (Madame) Grande Fantaisie . . .	4	0
Berger's (E.) Fantaisie de Salon	3	0
Jules Brissac's Fantaisie on Bianca . . .	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Quadrille. Illustrated by Brandard	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Valse. Illustrated by Brandard .	4	0
Laurent's Bianca Polka. Illustrated in Colours .	3	0
Laurent's Bianca Galop. Illustrated in Colours .	3	0
Nordmann's Four Favourite Melodies (Arranged for Beginners on the Pianoforte) . . . each	1	0

 Numerous Arrangements for Pianoforte and other Instruments are in hand, and will be published immediately.

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

Printed by GEORGE ANDREW SPOTTISWOODE, of No. 10 Little New Street, in the Parish of St. Bride, in the City of London, at No. 5 New-street Square, in the said Parish. Published by JOHN BOOSEY, at the Office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28 Holles Street.—Saturday, December 29, 1860.

3 2044 043 849 926

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

EDA KUHN LOEB MUSIC LIBRARY
3 2044 043 849 926

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

EDA KUHN LOEB MUSIC LIBRARY
3 2044 043 849 926

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

EDA KUHN LOEB MUSIC LIBRARY
3 2044 043 849 926

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.